I have mentioned several times in these pages the way in which the alien dictatorship in Washington acted to suppress Lyndon LaRouche, and noted that he and his immediate associates were convicted of not repaying certain loans after all their assets had been seized by the Federal government. In the April issue, p. 59, I quoted an observer who reported that "it was actually forbidden to mention in court that the reason the loan payments had stopped was that the government had seized the funds." In other words, the person who presided over the court and pretended to be a judge was actually a commissar who understood that his function was to do his masters' bidding and imprison the victims they had selected. He differed from other hireling terrorists in that he used a simulation of legality instead of a gun.

Even if one has no more esteem for LaRouche[1] than I have, the travesty of legality in that trial should alarm every American, if he retains even ovine intelligence.

That was not the only known instance of the use of mock courts to punish Americans for insubordination to their alien masters. Everyone who looks at newspapers was aware of the commissar, disguised as a judge, who ordered the inhabitants of Yonkers, New York, to import niggers to spread democracy by raping White women and mugging White men. And in Georgia another pseudo-legal thug, engaged in criminal oppression of our race, was sensationally removed from office by the only means by which that can now be done.

1. As I remarked when trying to guess why the masters in Washington want to destroy LaRouche, about the only items of his propaganda to which they could reasonably object are (a) an opposition to the depredations of international finance, which, however, is made ineffectual by misleading identification of the predators, and (b) opposition to the administration's efforts to spread and popularize the African Plague (commonly called "AIDS"). In addition to the periodical I mentioned in April, his followers continue to publish a weekly newspaper, now called The New Federalist. The issue for 1 January contains a generally excel-

It is true that there are still some honest judges, even in Federal courts, and I noted one remarkable instance in my article on LaRouche, but they are probably all old men who are tolerated until death or retirement makes it easy to replace them with more progressive individuals. It is just possible that there are a few younger judges of integrity who were appointed by oversight.[2]

The corruption of the Federal judiciary (with, of course, a concomitant corruption of state courts) was carried out gradually and unobtrusively by the slightly disguised Communist apparatus that acquired control of the United States in 1933. When the corruption became obvious, a little of the blarney that intoxicates "do-gooders" sufficed to make it acceptable to the boobs.

That was true even in 1954, when the building erected for the Supreme Court was occupied by Earl Warren and his gang lent article on the Plague, which, however, is vitiated not only by the usual concealment of racial factors, but by the claim that a principal cause of the disease is "malnutrition." That canard could be used to justify continued looting of Americans by what is called "foreign aid," one of the many means of hastening the reduction of the boobs to acute penury. The falsity of the New Federalist's propaganda is shown by the item of good news from the South African press, reproduced elsewhere in the present issue of this magazine, which shows that the Plague is especially prevalent among the well-fed and pampered boss-niggers in the jungles to which the American nitwits enthusiastically converted the African colonies that were ruled by civilized peoples. The observer whom I quoted in April noted that the Jews were extending their control of LaRouche's organization, now that the Federal terrorists have him in prison.

2. About forty years ago, as I recall, there was a rather sensational scandal in a Federal Circuit Court of Appeals and one of the judges, guilty of numerous crimes, was convicted of some of them and imprisoned. The dominant political party felt it necessary to mitigate the scandal by appointing a man of known probity, esteemed as such by the lawyers of the region. The choice fell on a friend of mine, whose legal brilliance had enabled him to specialize almost entirely in appeals to state and Federal courts, and who, I was told, had the distinction of having carried appeals to the Supreme Court in Washington more often than any other individual lawyer (i.e., excluding large firms of attorneys). He was of aliens and traitors, who issued an unmistakably Judaeo-Communist edict that the children of White Americans must be subjected to demoralizing, debasing, and often brutal association with niggers in the public schools. There was some futile protest by the comparatively few Americans who retained some sense of self-respect and some recollection of the liberty to which Americans had aspired in 1776, but the great majority of righteous boobs responded with idiotic grins of satisfaction in their degradation and servitude.

That edict was followed by a whole series of patently Communist edicts, which the imbeciles did not understand—not even after Warren appeared as an accomplice, either before or after the fact, in the assassination of Jackanapes Kennedy, who was sacrificed by his masters in an operation to suppress the growing discontent of a minority of Americans who, through their "Indignation Meetings," had succeeded in arousing some glimmerings of thought in the narcotized majority.

If Americans were still a viable species of mammal, they would be alarmed en masse by the repeated demonstrations that the Germanic legal system, which was once the pride of the Anglo-Saxons in England and in the colonies that revolted from England at the end of the Eighteenth Century, has been re-accordingly offered the appointment at the bargain price of $50,000. He was tempted, because his overriding ambition from boyhood had been to become a judge like his two grandfathers, both of whom had been justices of state supreme courts. He could well afford the indulgence, but had scruples about compromising with the corruption that is a function of 'democracy.' He hesitated for some time, and, if I remember correctly, the price was reduced to $35,000 (in real money, which was still in use at that time), before he accepted the offer, telling his friends, "If those sons-of-bitches think they will have the slightest influence over me after I have been appointed [for life], they are greatly mistaken." It was he, however, who was mistaken. He discovered that he could not simply hand a paper bag with $35,000 in currency to someone on a street corner: he would have either to pay by cheque or deliver the cash in a room of a hotel in which many rooms were notoriously "bugged" to permit recording on both tapes and films. He would thus be subjected to perpetual blackmail, and he, of course, told the political gang to go to their natural home, Hell.

placed by the Judaic legal system that was in evidence in Russia under the Soviets. But almost every individual of the doomed race, if sufficiently conscious to notice what is happening, must say to himself, "I will crawl on my belly and my owners will not notice me, or, if they do, I will passionately lick their boots to placate them, so why should I care about what happens to less abject members of my species?"

The newsletter of the Railway Claims Services, 31 March, reports another example of the pseudo-juristic commissars' work. An employee of the Illinois Midland Railroad, while "visiting" a rerailing operation (i.e., looking on at work in progress, as idlers often do), was injured and suffered the loss of an arm. On 26 February in Springfield, Illinois, a jury returned a verdict that awarded the injured man $9,042,615 in compensation!

The Illinois Midland is a small railroad that extends from Pekin to Taylorville, a distance of 118 miles.[3] The verdict amounts to more than the net worth of the railroad, which is thereby simply confiscated.

The report does not show the composition of the jury, which may have been partly or entirely composed of anthropoid garbage swept up from the streets. That it was mentally and morally incompetent is obvious. But its incompetence was excited by a commissar on the bench.

What is significant is that the commissar who presided at the trial prevented the jury from learning that (a) although the man had not been injured in the performance of his job, the railroad had paid all of his medical bills, and (b) the railroad entered into a contract to employ him at a good salary for the rest of his life, and was doing so.

The commissar was clearly serving the Federal government's long-standing policy of tightening the noose about the boobs' necks by liquidating the railroads.[4] In Illinois, between one-third and one-half of all the railroad tracks have already been torn up and sold for junk, thus effectively eliminating the many comparatively small businesses, still owned by Americans, that depended on the destroyed railway lines for existence.

3. It is what is left of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, which may have been the first railroad in Illinois that was forced into bankruptcy and dismemberment by governmental policy, sixty years ago. A comparable case, despite the great difference in territory served and kind of traffic, was that of the New York, Westchester & Boston.

The same issue of the newsletter reports a new racket. A jury awarded $527,000 to a man who claimed that his hearing had been damaged by the noise made by the diesel engines in the locomotives he operated on the hard-pressed and precariously solvent Iowa Interstate Railroad, which runs from Bureau, Illinois to Council Bluff, Iowa.[5] No one seems to have paid any attention to the fact that the man voluntarily continued to earn very high wages by operating the noisy locomotives, thus voluntarily damaging his auditory faculties, if indeed they were damaged by anything except the normal process of aging, which usually does reduce acuity of hearing, especially in males.

The newsletter remarks that thirty thousand similar claims are now pending against railroads, and, furthermore, a labor union has filed a suit to permit pseudo-legal extortion of manufacturers of locomotives as well as of the railroads that operate them.

An American businessman, president of several comparatively small businesses that have not yet been taken over by the aliens' huge corporations, writes me, apropos of the recent ver-

4. This is not the place to undertake an analysis of the indispensable function of railroads in a national economy that is not self-destructive. Economic sanity is beyond the intellectual capacity of a nation that sees nothing amiss when automobiles can be made in Japan from imported materials, shipped across four thousand miles of ocean, and sold for less than the inferior products of our domestic industry.

5. It is a fragment of the famous transcontinental Rock Island System, not to be confused with what is now the Chicago, Central & Pacific, a surviving piece of the once great Illinois Central, which is being dismantled by the Jews who now control it. Some pieces of it are sold to companies hurriedly organized in an effort to save railroad service for the communities affected, more than one of which has already ended in bankruptcy and liquidation. Other pieces are torn up by the company and sold as junk, probably to Yiddish junk-dealers.

dicts against railroads, "It appears that the jewdicial system is intent on destroying every bit of our industry.... I think that all of my businesses are on borrowed time."

He is right, of course. When Americans gave their country to their enemies in 1932, American industry was spared until it had served its purpose by making possible the Jews' victory in their war against our race and civilization. After 1945, the wrecking crews started to work in earnest, with the immediate objective of ensuring the Jews' One World by making the nation militarily helpless,[6] and then to destroy what was left of the private property that prevented Americans from becoming totally enslaved and mere chattels existing at the pleasure of their owners. The boobs, their little skulls filled with "Liberal" muck, were delighted.

The standards of life that were once taken for granted by the middle class in this country have been drastically reduced, year after year, but the victims can remain drugged with verbiage for a few more years, since only actual physical suffering will teach the stupid Aryans that they are now slaves, livestock owned by the enemies to whom they idiotically gave their country and themselves.

RÉVISION

I salute the appearance of a new and worthy periodical in France, Révision, published by Alain Guionnet at 11, rue d'Alembert, 92130 Isay-les-Moulineaux. It is evidently to be a monthly, 260 francs for six issues, and 500 francs for thirteen. Single copies are 18 francs, with $3.75 given as the American equivalent.

The cover bears a reproduction in color of what appear to be the obverse and reverse of a dollar bill that was issued when American currency, although debased, was still real money, since the intrinsically worthless piece of paper could be exchanged at any bank for a silver dollar. The two sides of the bill, however, are the outer faces of a diptych, which, when opened, shows the sinister symbol of interlaced triangles called the Seal of Solomon, with the reminder that the value of the dollar bill depends on the signature of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, a Sheeny named Morgenthau, who, you will remember, was one of the foremost accomplices of our great War Criminal.

6. Some little attention was momentarily excited recently when a Japanese indiscreetly disclosed the fact that our ballistic missiles, which are all that remain of armaments that can be used in a real war, depend on parts imported from Japan.

To the left of this symbol are comments, not entirely accurate, on the symbolism of the Great Seal of the United States, including the reverse, with its Masonic device, which was kept in abeyance until the loathsome thing called Roosevelt had it placed on paper currency. The thirteen tiers of stone in the unfinished pyramid represent the English colonies that formed the United States, and the pyramid is surmounted by the All-Seeing Eye, a symbol which the Masonic religion took from the Jews, who had filched it from the Egyptians; it is really the Eye of Horus.[1] The legend over the pyramid,

1. It is the eye that Horus lost in combat with the god of the Asiatic invaders, Set, who had slain and dismembered Osiris. Osiris, through the divine power of one of his two sister-wives, the faithful Isis, who had reassembled and reunited his body, was able, while dead, to engender in Isis a son to avenge him, Horus. Horus eventually recovered possession of the eye he had lost in combat, and used it to resurrect his father and make him Lord of the Underworld, where the righteous, whose innocence of sin has been proved by the weighing of their hearts in the scales of Anubis, dwell in tranquil felicity. Since the Egyptians did not have the implicit sadism of Christians, sinners are not tormented in the Underworld; their souls are simply annihilated, devoured by a monster that squats near Anubis at the psychostasy. Osiris was originally a god of vegetation, which dies each winter and is resurrected each spring, and naturally became a god that saved mortals from death and thus was a prototype of Jesus. – There was originally an opposition and even hostility between the aristocratic and relatively rational worship of the sun-god, Rē (Rā, Amon-Rē, Amen-Rā, etc.) and the emotional and essentially irrational religion of Osiris, the god who died and rose from the dead, but the two religions were eventually amalgamated and the eye of Horus was identified as the Sun. This was a decline, for heliolatry is the one rational religion that has appeared on earth: the Sun is inannuit cœptis.[2] is an affirmation of faith in the god of the contemporary deists, athough both Christians and Jews could read their own meaning into it. The conclusion the author of the diptych drew from the symbols and the signature of Morgenthau is stated in bold characters, which may be translated as "This money is certainly Jewish!"

The opposite page of the diptych is even more interesting: "This dollar paid for the Jews' War. It is the only message that the Anglo-Americans are able to send us: will it suffice to recompense us for the disasters brought upon us by the JEWS' WAR? Money has no stench, but a Jew has."

The editors of Révision believe that this recognition of contemporary realities, which obviously dates from the time that the American boobs were financing what was called the Marshall Plan for the reconstruction and Judaization of the Europe they had ruined, was printed in Sweden.

Like all honest periodicals that do not kowtow to Yahweh's Master Race (including Liberty Bell), the new periodical is in urgent need of financial support, and the editorial on the inside of the front cover of the February issue pleads for subventions. It also reports that in Paris the Yids have become less aggressively assertive of their dominion, but are swarming in Nanterre (which has become a western suburb of Paris), where a Frenchman is on trial for the crime of having had a thought that was not kosher.

The editors remind us that the Yids are vehement champions of "Human Rights" because the Holy Talmud repeatedly states that only Jews are human and thus have the god-given deed the Creator of life on this planet and hence of each of us. It is a pity that the foolish or venal technicians who pose as "Creation Scientists" do not take an opportunity to venerate a god who is not entirely illusory.

2. The phrase was suggested by Ascanius's prayer to Jupiter in the Aeneid: "audacibus annue coeptis." It thus referred to the audacity of the thirteen colonies in revolting from the mother country and trying to form a nation of their own, and is, of course, unexceptionable in that sense, having no reference to grotesque myths about a Hiram and "Solomon's Temple." The eye of Horus became a symbol of divinity in many religions imitated from or indirectly influenced by the Egyptian.

right to do what they will with dogs, horses, cows, Aryans, and other goyim.[3] In Nanterre, the swarm of Sheenies is led by a lordly rabbi, whose mouth is adorned with a big "circumcised cigar."

The reference to the clipping of fine cigars prepares us for a vigorously satirical article on the barbaric custom of clipping the sexual organ of male infants, which, by the way, is a practice that according to the Holy Talmud is the raison d'être of the world, which would be destroyed, if male children were not sexually mutilated to give their foreskins in tribute to their ferocious god.[4] And this leads us to an article on the Gospel of Thomas that was found at Chenoboskion (Nag Hammadi) in 1945, of which a definitive French translation was published in 1975. It is suggested that this gospel, which was buried and secure from interpolation for fourteen centuries, should be used to correct the much interpolated gospels in the "New Testament" now in current use by Christians.

The February issue includes a short chapter, "Évolution politique de la bourgeoisie capitaliste," from Les financiers qui mènent le monde, the latest of the many books written by Henry Coston, whose name will be familiar to everyone who has paid any attention to anti-Communist writings in France, and the journal offers for sale a new and expanded edition of that book. I do not have that book by Coston at hand, but I suppose it to be an application of what he said in Le veau d'or

3. The editors cite the Talmud from Textes rabbiniques des deux premiers siècles chrétiens, published by the Pontifical Institute of Biblical Studies in Rome, 1955. For English translations of these injunctions, see the Christian News Encyclopaedia, which I mentioned in Liberty Bell, November 1989, p. 3. See also the Reverend Father I. B. Pranaitis's Talmud Unmasked (available from Liberty Bell Publications, $3.50 + postage). There are many compilations of crucial excerpts from the Talmud in German and other languages.

4. On that disgusting and savage practice, see Nicholas Carter's excellent study, Routine Circumcision (London, 1979; available from Liberty Bell Publications.) In Liberty Bell, October 1989, pp. 1-5, with an addendum in November, pp. 7-10, I reported on articles courageously published in the Truth Seeker issued in San Diego, which condemned "the crime of sexual mutilation" of children, and even advocated a law that est toujours debout (Paris, Publications Henry Coston, s.a. [1987]), which contains a summary account of great financial bandits, mostly in the United States, supplemented by two hundred pages of small type in double columns, which are a "Who's Who" of the great malefactors of finance of the present and includes a few of their most notorious precursors (e.g., John Law) in past centuries. It is a very valuable work of reference, and, so far as I know, may still be obtained from Mme. Coston's Librairie Française (27, rue de l'Abbé-Grégoire, Paris 6).

The chapter is accompanied by a commentary in which the editors point out (as prudent M. Coston would never do) the relation of the financial plundering of the world to the celebrated Protocols des sages de Sion, of which they also have copies for sale.

The famous Protocols (available in English, French and German from Liberty Bell Publications, $8.00 & $7.50 resp. + postage) have always embarrassed Yahweh's Own, who scream that the work is a forgery—a claim facilitated by the variety of accounts of how the text came into the possession of Professor Nilus, who published a translation of it in 1901.[5] The uproar is intended to make goyim afraid to read the document, but the talk about forgery is really irrelevant. I happen to have a report of a chemical analysis of the coal obtained by strip would forbid it and make more Jews illegal (oh, happy day!). I gather that as a result of a recent decision in the courts, the rival Truth Seeker that was published in Austin, Texas, will suspend publication, but its proprietors, in the February 1990 issue of the American Atheist, published an equally vigorous article by Professor Frank R. Zindler, which exposes the Stone Age savagery of the mutilation of male children in the United States, which was made "routine" by venal physicians who, wittingly or unwittingly, served the Jewish purpose of making it more difficult to identify disguised Yids.

5. Intelligence agencies naturally and habitually try to conceal their sources. Some of the stories about how the Protocols were obtained seem to have been devised to discredit them. For one plausible account, see Waters Flowing Eastward, by "L. Fry" (the late Countess Paquita de Shishmareff), edited by the Reverend Dr. Denis Fahey, (London, Britons, 1965), pp. 74 ff.

mining in eastern Illinois. If I attributed that analysis to you and published it under your name, that would be a forgery, of course, but it would not in the least diminish the accuracy of the chemical analysis reported in it.

Whether or not the Elders of Zion were really so indiscreet as to put on paper an outline of their methods, the Protocols contain an accurate account of the methods that the Jews now use and have long used in their instinctive racial effort to help old Yahweh carry out his promise to them, that he would destroy every nation they invaded (e.g., Exod. 23.27). It is ironical that although many complacent Aryans could not discern the validity of the Protocols in 1904 and following decades, the Jews are now, by their arrogant assumption of mastery and their promotion of their latest great swindle, the Holohoax, establishing conclusively the accuracy and historical authenticity of the document they called a forgery, in an attempt to prevent their victims from reading it and learning how and by whom they are victimized.

Révision is a journal written on a high intellectual level that is rare among 'right-wing' publications. The longest article in the February issue is devoted to the situation in Soviet Azerbaïjan and adjacent territories, where the recent outbreak of fighting between Shi'ite Moslems and Christian Armenians, with belated intervention by Soviet troops, was sparingly reported in the American press.

The article sketches the historical antecedents, without which no current event can be understood, and describes ethnologically the present inhabitants, making it clear that the real difficulty is the innate hostility between incompatible races and ethnic subgroups. Sound philology emphasizes the fact that language is not a racial criterion, but does often bring together peoples of diverse racial character and results in some confusing amalgamation by miscegenation and hence a divisive weakening of the racial stock, whatever it is. It is noted that the present policy of the Soviets in their part of Azerbaïjan does not differ basically from the policy of the Czars.

Révision is the most outspoken periodical that Aryans have in France today, and we must hope that it will survive and flourish and perhaps become a major force in liberating the real French from the nightmare of oppression by the Jews and the uncivilized aliens they have imported into France to destroy gradually its civilized people. Perhaps France will some day become what it was in the Eighteenth Century and even until the Jews used the Dreyfus case[6] to acquire a preponderant influence over gullible Frenchmen, a civilized nation in which Yiddish terrorists cannot with impunity assault and try to murder men of intellectual integrity, such as Professor Faurisson.

I note, incidentally, that France under its Judaeo-Communist government has paralleled the United States in that there has been an enormous increase in superstition. According to the current (Spring 1990) issue of the Skeptical Inquirer, a poll conducted by L'Express shows that "a sizeable proportion of the population believes in paranormal phenomena of one kind or another, including astrology, witchcraft, sorcery, and telepathy." A poll "of more than 1,500 people indicated that those with a higher scientific [!] qualification were more likely to believe in the paranormal [a weasel word for supernatural drivel] than those with basic primary schooling—46 percent compared with 41 percent."

"France," the article concludes justly, "appears to be taking its cue from Nostradamus rather than Descartes these days." A book of the ambiguous predictions made by the crafty Jew called Nostradamus has sold more than 1,300,000 copies, and there are three hundred publishers who specialize in books of occult hocus-pocus. There are "more than 40,000 professional astrologers who declare their income to tax authorities" and "undoubtedly a far greater number of moonstruck stargazers, mediums, necromancers, and fortune tellers...choose not to declare their income." Estimate the number of ignorant boobs required to support that horde of nitwits and swindlers. For further details, see the periodical cited, pp. 232 f.

This extraordinary growth of infantile credulity in a country that once claimed to be the most rational and sceptical of all European nations must be accompanied by a probably enormous increase in the number of French men and women who are now befuddled by Christianity and similar religions, which the article in the Inquirer did not consider.

Surely it cannot be a coincidence that there has been a catastrophic decline of rationality in France, the United States, and all other countries that have fallen under the dominion of Yahweh's Pestilential Parasites. □

FOR MY LEGIONARIES. The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $8.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. THE ANTI-HUMANS, by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented 'Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

HOW PANAMÁ HAPPENED

As I write, it is not yet apparent why the government in Washington invaded Panamá after the officer of the Israeli army who was in charge had secretly returned home, leaving his stooge, the duly elected President, a mongrel named Noriega, to be captured by the invaders.

The surprise attack on the Panamanians was, needless to say, in violation of international law, which the United States has flouted ever since it became a Jewish colony. It was an unprovoked and, by surprise, treacherous attack on what was officially regarded as an independent country, one to which traitors in the den of thieves called the Congress had given our Panama Canal further to cripple the United States.

Some Americans may have been relieved that the mongrel and bisexual rabble now called our army was still able to occupy a comic-opera country. The press particularly noticed the heroism of an Amazon, said to be a hybrid, who valiantly led her detachment in an assault on a dog kennel and made the dogs surrender by wagging their tails.

The public is fed some verbiage about a wish to abate the international traffic in cocaine, but that is obviously hogwash. The puzzled Noriega was brought to the United States to be brought before an American court, in open disregard of both international and American law, unless the latter be formally redefined as whatever our Yiddish masters want. What effect that is intended to have, and how Noriega is to be prevented from telling what he learned while he was coöperating with Reagan and Bush, are still unresolved questions as I write.

It occurs to me, however, that my readers may be interested in an account of how it happened that there was a República de Panamá for Bush to invade and conquer.

The Isthmus of Panama is the narrowest body of land separating the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and the utility of connecting the two oceans by a canal was naturally perceived by intelligent Europeans soon after the region came under civilized control. So far as is known, the first formal project was submitted and advocated by the Portuguese explorer, colonial governor, and historian, Antonio Galvão, whose Tratado was posthumously published in 1550. This inspired the distinguished Spanish writer, Lopez de Gómara, to urge on the Spanish government the immediate construction of the proposed canal. He was ignored.

There was much talk and many projects during the three following centuries, but nothing was done until 1879, when the famous French engineer, Ferdinand de Lesseps, having completed the Suez Canal in 1869, naturally sought an opportunity for another spectacular feat of engineering. He became president of a French corporation organized to construct a canal parallel to the American-owned railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, which was then in the territory of the United States of Colombia.

It is true that unanticipated difficulties were encountered, ranging from the torrential floods of the Chagres River to yellow fever, endemic in the region. These, however, were trifles in comparison with the fact that M. de Lesseps was being used as a figure-head by a scabrous gang of French politicians and international financiers. Only a tiny fraction of the capital raised was available for construction of the canal. The sober Encyclopaedia Britannica summarized the operations of the Panama Canal Company as "characterized by a degree of corruption and extravagance rarely, if ever, equalled in the history of the world."

When the inevitable crash finally came and it was found that $240,000,000 of the stockholders' money had simply vanished,[1] an attempt was made to place the blame entirely on the old engineer, who was then eighty-four and evidently had not suspected the character of his associates, the chief of whom were French only in the sense that they had taken up residence in France.

The attempt was not entirely successful. De Lesseps died a poor and broken man, but some part of the truth was disclosed in the great "Panama Scandal," which was precipitated partly by the efforts of Édouard Drumont, the courageous author of La France juive, and partly by the enthusiasm of a group of young Frenchmen who were trying to hunt down the persons whom they regarded as responsible for the disgrace and suicide of General Boulanger. Readers of modern French literature will remember something of the atmosphere of those days from the pages of Maurice Barrès's Leur figures, although they may overlook the contribution made by Drumont.

A New Panama Canal Company was organized, partly to cover up the scandal and partly, it seems, with some intention of completing construction of the canal. Work was resumed, perhaps in earnest, in 1895, but was halted for reasons that may never be satisfactorily ascertained, since the company's books and archives were prudently burned before it was liquidated.

Another generation of hopeful (and perhaps patriotic) investors had been ruined, and were glad to dispose of their now worthless stock at any price. A syndicate of the international pirates, euphemistically called financiers, quietly bought up the cheap paper and thus became owners of a corporation whose only asset, aside from an option to buy stock in the American railroad and some rusting machinery through which the vegetation of the encompassing jungle was already growing, was a concession granted by the United States of Colombia, which no longer existed, since it had been dissolved by one of the frequent civil wars and replaced by the Republic of Colombia. Some of the pirates established residence in the United States to carry out a plan to sell the dubious assets to the American people.

The United States, in the meantime, had come to realize that a canal between the Atlantic and the Pacific was indispensable to the nation's security as well as prosperity. The most feasible route, as determined by successive teams of competent engineers, was through Nicaragua, where an American corporation had begun construction. In 1902 the House of Representatives passed, by a vote of 309 to 2, a bill appropriating money for the completion of the canal under a treaty that had been negotiated with Nicaragua.

The international predators were naturally alarmed by the danger that American interests might be thought paramount in the United States, and hired a prominent (and eventually very wealthy) American attorney, William Nelson Cromwell, to distribute arguments and cash to convince Congressmen that the route through the Isthmus of Panama was ever so much better. The arguments were specious but the cash was real, and Cromwell was able to block construction of the canal in Nicaragua.

President Theodore Roosevelt is not known to have received any of the cash, and his brother-in-law seems to have received only $200,000 when the gravy was ladled out. It seems likely, therefore, that only political pressures, exerted indirectly by the financial brigands, induced him to use his authority and influence to make the United States purchase the "rights" of the nominally French company for $40,000,000,[2] which, although naturally less than was first asked, yielded a very lavish profit to Isaac and Jesse Seligman, and other principal promoters, some of whom hid under cover names.[3] The exact distribution of the loot is uncertain, for after the United States purchased all the property of the Canal Company, specifically including its archives, the archives and all other records were circumspectly reduced to ashes and smoke.

Then it was discovered—surprise! surprise!—that the Canal Company's only real asset, the concession from the defunct United States of Colombia, was worthless, and that a treaty with the existing government of Colombia would have to be negotiated. It was, but the Colombian Senate refused to ratify it, ostensibly on the grounds that the constitution forbade alienation of sovereignty over any of the nation's territory—although "constitutionality" meant no more in Colombia then than it does in the United States today. The real motive was an expectation that an additional $10,000,000 could be extracted from rich old Uncle Sap, plus, no doubt, a hope that the old duffer could be bluffed into agreeing to some scheme of joint sovereignty over the Canal Zone, which would, of course, provide an opportunity for perpetual blackmail and periodic rake-offs.

The impasse thus created was expeditiously solved by the American government.[4]

There was in the city of Panamá (on the Pacific side of the Isthmus) a Colombian physician, Dr. Manuel Amador Guerrero, who was employed by the Panama Railroad to give medical attention to its workmen. He was a white man of Spanish descent, and that conveyed social status in a region in which 90% of the population was composed of mestizos, sambos, negroes, and Indians. Although almost entirely dependent on his salary from the Railroad, Dr. Amador somehow managed to send his favorite son, Raoul, to the United States, where he was graduated from the medical school of Columbia University.

3. So far as is known, only small cuts went to J. P. Morgan, who seems to have been a business agent for the Rothschilds, and to Paul Warburg, who had been sent to the United States to put over the Federal Reserve system of organized plunder and to make other preparations for the First World War.

4. The sordid story is told completely by Earl Harding, a journalist of the old and now forgotten school that believed in ascertaining facts and telling the truth. He devoted a good part of his life to investigation and research, obtained access to various confidential memoranda and orders the conspirators thought destroyed, and published the final report of his findings in The Untold Story of Panama (New York, Athene Press, 1959). Almost all of my summary here depends on his exemplary work.

Raoul was commissioned as an assistant surgeon in the United States Army, but he had his eye on higher things. He was tall, handsome, with dark, expressive eyes, cultivated manners, and an engaging personality—and he was living in an era in which every American female had an abiding faith that speakers of Romance languages were therefore Romantic. It was easy for Raoul to work his way up to the bottom of New York's Upper Crust, and there he wooed and married money with such success that at one time he had a wife and two children installed in a very comfortable house at 216 West 112th Street, and another wife with one child conveniently ensconced in another house at 306 West 87th Street, thus obviating long journeys from one tender domesticity to the other. Whether the ladies were then aware of their unofficial partnership in Romantic Raoul is not entirely clear, but eventually wife No. 2 sued him for $100,000 and thus, although appeased with a cash settlement, interrupted what would doubtless have been a brilliant diplomatic career. But that came later, and the facts are mentioned here only to show that Raoul was an adroit, vigorous, and enterprising young man, who probably did much more than serve as a mere go-between making arrangements with his father.

There must have been some negotiations before the father received a cablegram which he could display to his acquaintance and the Colombian governor as proof that he was hastening to the bedside of his beloved and desperately ill son.

In New York, Dr. Amador was coached by officials of the Canal Company and his employers in the Panama Railroad, and given a secret midnight interview with Theodore Roosevelt in Washington. He was instructed to hold a revolution in the Isthmus of Panama on 3 November 1903—a date chosen because it would be election day in the United States and the newspapers would be filled with news that would crowd out any indiscreet despatches that might come from an obscure corner of the Republic of Colombia. He was supplied with a flag suitable for the "Republic of the Isthmus," which his revolution was to establish, and provided with funds to stimulate an itch for independence in a suitable number of fellow patriots.

The plan for this model revolution, as approved by Theodore Roosevelt, was a sound one. Ardent Love of Liberty was to be ignited only in a strip of territory roughly corresponding to the Canal Zone that has now been given away. This would necessarily be occupied by the Americans when they began construction of the canal, and the ephemeral Republic of the Isthmus could be quietly absorbed without fuss or publicity. Unfortunately for us, Dr. Amador bungled the job and exceeded his instructions.

With seven associates, all connected in one way or another with the Panama Railroad, he enlisted fifty stalwart patriots who, for a small fee, were willing to join in establishing a free and independent nation. He made the mistake, however, of including in his revolutionary junta a Freedom Fighter who refused to have a revolution unless it included his large farms upcountry, and that gave ideas to another patriot, who had his eye on a vast tract of fertile land about fifty miles east of the projected "Republic," which he thought would be a suitable reward for his devotion to the ideals of self-government. That, in turn, inspired at least one other member of the junta that was to seek liberation from Colombian oppression.

We should not judge Dr. Amador too harshly. Having made that initial blunder in recruiting, he doubtless reflected that if he thwarted the aspirations of his confederates, they might become tattletales, and that if he were arrested by the Colombian governor, those words, "We'll see you through," which had sounded so impressive when uttered in the White House at the witching hour, might have evaporated from the Rooseveltian memory. At all events, Dr. Amador yielded to his associates and, on his own responsibility, without consulting his employers, he revised the plan and made the scheduled revolution include the whole of the Colombian Department of Panama. Thus, perhaps unaware that the evil that men do lives after them, he recklessly laid a foundation for the farcical "nation" of mongrel rabble to which, in obedience to "world opinion" as manufactured by Sheenies in New York, we gave our strategic property in 1978.

As the fatal third of November drew near, Dr. Amador began to reflect that revolutions sometimes are accompanied by bodily harm. Although he had been assured that everything would be managed with American efficiency, he feared there might be some slip between the brimming cup and his own lip.

The Panamanians style Dr. Amador their George Washington and the Father of His Country, but they, with male bigotry, have never honored the true Mother of their Country. She was Mrs. Amador, who collared her husband as he was sneaking out the back door on that glorious morning and reminded him that if he missed his appointment for the revolution, he would be fired by the Panama Railroad—and then what would they do?

Thus emboldened by his Penthesilea, Dr. Amador agreed to hold the revolution, provided that the American Consul General in Panamá walked beside him, waving the American flag, to ward off all risk of bodily harm. In those far-off days, as most of us have all but forgotten, the United States and its flag were respected throughout the world.

The revolution was staged with an aplomb that would have done credit to the Metropolitan Opera. Would that I had space to review the performance and give due credit to all the actors! But alas! Liberty Bell is limited to a fixed number of pages.

Dr. Amador raised the Flag of Freedom and, walking carefully in the lee of the American Consul General and the Stars and Stripes, he led his band of forty or forty-five Freedom Fighters to assault the citadels of Colombian tyranny. (Some members of the junta apparently overslept that morning and did not reach the battlefield until all was over.) For $15,000 the Colombian general in command of the thousand nondescript soldiers that garrisoned the city saw that resistance was hopeless. The colonel in command of reinforcements that had arrived unexpectedly in Colón settled for $8,000 and a ticket home. American warships were patrolling both coasts to avert any impolite intrusion of fresh troops from Colombia, and in one place American marines were landed to instruct the locals, who did not know they had spontaneously revolted from Colombian despotism.

Dr. Amador's victory, which involved the surrender of three generals in the Colombian army with several thousand troops, would have been gloriously bloodless, had it not been marred by one contretemps.

The commander of the Colombian gunboat Bogotá at anchor in the harbor had evidently been overlooked by the American agents. When he saw a commotion in the city with a strange flag that indicated a revolution was in progress, he opened fire on the insurgents. His marksmen scored one direct hit, thus inflicting the total casualties in Panama's War for Independence: one Chinese laundryman and one donkey. Then he gave the order to cease fire.

The explanation of the sudden pacifism of the Bogotá's skipper given in the Naval Academy at Annapolis years ago was the following. The captain turned his eyes from the embattled city to the American cruiser Brooklyn, anchored close by. He saw her eight-inch cannon swing round to focus on him, while a line of signal flags soared up the mast with the message, "Shut up or we'll blow you out of the water."[5]

5. The story is not entirely accurate. For one thing, the Brooklyn was a heavy cruiser, but, unlike the California class, built a little later, it did not carry its eight-inch guns in turrets, as the story seems to imply.

The commander of the Bogotá was inspired to find a way out of the tactical situation with which he was thus confronted. He put on his uniform coat, hastened ashore, sold his gunboat to the new-born República de Panamá, and became the Admiral of the Navy he thus created.

At Colón, on the Atlantic side, there were no untoward incidents. The commander of the Colombian gunboat Cartagena contemplated the muzzles of the cannon on the U.S.S. Nashville and recalled the adage that discretion is the better part of valor. He was rewarded with permission to sail homeward unscathed.

In the meantime, the American Consul General, as soon as he was free of his duty to protect Dr. Amador, telegraphed the glad tidings to Washington, and was instructed to recognize the new government at once. Forty-six minutes later the now sovereign República de Panamá appointed, as its Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Washington, Philippe Buneau-Varilla, Jesse Seligman's pet goy (he claimed to be a White man and I know of no proof that he was not), who had been Director General of the old Panama Canal Company[6] and, more, unless naval records have been doctored, the Brooklyn could not have been in the harbor on Independence Day, and our peace-keeping forces must have been represented by the Boston, a smaller cruiser, but, to be sure, one with cannon that could have put the Bogotá under the water, if not out of it, with a single broadside. There seems to be no official record of what advice the Boston may have conveyed by whatever signal flags she displayed.

6. Having a well-greased hide, he, although the Director General, slithered from office and sight when the scandal broke. He had come to the attention of Isaac Seligman when, as co-owner of a Paris newspaper, he published photographs of two letters attributed to Dreyfus but in different handwritings, claiming they were proof that the irreproachable Jew had been "framed," thereby influencing the French authorities to investigate the malodorous affair again. (I tried to summarize the Dreyfus case in a long footnote in America's Decline, pp. 19-20.) Buneau-Varilla, who had a claim to respectability as an engineer, was hired to be the gang's chief lobbyist in the United States, and after the American government had bought the worthless French Canal Company, he seems to have done much of the planning for the revolution. He wrote the Panamanian Declaration of Independence and, while living on Jesse through the courtesy of international finance, was a large stockholder in the new.

After the Colombian forces in Panama had surrendered or prudently retired, the necessary treaty was promptly drawn up by the versatile Buneau-Varilla, and was ratified by the suddenly sovereign República de Panamá in December 1903, and by the United States Senate in February 1904. There was only one pathetic incident. After his decisive victory, Dr. Amador, the Father of his Country and naturally its first President, hastened to Washington, doubtless with visions of historic glory and perhaps with hopes of further improvement in the family fortunes. As he alighted from the train in Washington, however, he was greeted with the news that the treaty had been signed without him. It is said that the venerable old hero almost fainted right there on the platform.

The United States, you will be glad to know, promptly met its obligations. It paid $10,000,000 to the new-born nation, and the National Assembly of the República as promptly disbursed $3,000,000 to leading patriots for "necessary expenses" incurred during the Revolution, and immediately burned the accounts and other records. Numerous other dividends were paid later, including $50,000 to the Colombian general who had so wisely seen that his warriors were no match for Dr. Amador's band of inspired idealists, and who had elected to remain in the Isthmus and become a Hero of his new Fatherland.[7] An American adventurer, disappointed, for reasons stated above, in obtaining the rank of Admiral, agreed to become General Jeffries and accept an estate of 200,000 acres of fertile land.

Seligman's luxurious summer estate in Westchester, stitched together the flag of the Isthmus which Dr. Amador was to display on the glorious third of November.

7. It is said that although in those days the United States had a currency that was real money, General Huertas, having become the Generalissimo of all the Armed Forces of the República de Panamá, took no chances and insisted on payment in gold.

We may be sure that Dr. Amador, who had received a mere $25,000 by cable immediately after his victory, with a promise of $75,000 more, was not overlooked when the gravy boat came around again. His talented son, Raoul, was doubtless thanked with cash in New York, where he became the Consul General of the new nation and its only native diplomatic representative in this country, since its Ambassador Extraordinary etc. was legally a French citizen. Raoul held his office with distinction and profit until his matrimonial exuberance, to which we alluded above, suggested that it would be tactful to replace him with his younger brother.

We may be confident that, despite what was said when the Panamanians began to levy blackmail on the United States a few months later, no deserving Hero of the Revolution was left unfeed by American taxpayers.

Such was the Birth of the Nation that perpetually clamored for more backsheesh ever since Dr. Amador's blunder created it.

The Panama Canal was built entirely with American money and, in all but the most menial tasks, American workmen. It was also built at the cost of many American lives, sacrificed to disease before American officials forced on the refractory inhabitants of the Canal Zone compliance with the elementary principles of sanitation, which the Americans supplemented by controlling the endemic yellow fever. The construction of the canal brought prosperity to a region that had previously subsisted on a little inefficient agriculture and the payroll of the Panama Railroad.

One unfortunate result of this prosperity and the introduction of sanitation was a rapid increase in the population of the region, as mestizos and natives swarmed out of the inaccessible jungles to share in the economic miracle and breed offspring without the natural checks on their proliferation. Another regrettable consequence was that the newly created Panamanians, chiefly white at first, began to compose myths about their Glorious Revolution, which the public schools in this country and the alien press and television disseminate for purposes of their own. The truth is so different that, as a matter of record, when the Panamanian flag, designed by Buneau-Varilla, was officially hoisted in Colón, no native could be found to raise it, even for a fee, and the only man courageous enough to undertake the simple task was William Murray Black, Major in the United States Army, one of the officers who had been sent into the Isthmus to make sure that there would be no fumbling in the well-subsidized Fight for Freedom.

The Panama Canal was officially opened to shipping in August 1914. It brought incalculable benefits not only to the region in which it is located but to the whole of what is called Latin America. Nicaragua felt that she had been cheated of her canal, but wisely stomached her resentment and guaranteed to the United States the right to build the canal originally planned whenever it wished to do so.[8] In Colombia, the leading citizens were not only indignant that their bluff had been called and they had been given no share of the boodle, but complained mightily that a part of Colombia's territory had been taken without compensation. Their outraged feelings were salved with a grant of $25,000,000 in 1922, when yowling about "Yankee imperialism," artfully encouraged by our domestic and foreign enemies, had become a habit south of the Rio Grande.[9]

8. That is probably one reason why "our" C.I.A., by murders and suborning of treason, overthrew the government of the Somozas and plunged Nicaragua into a bloody chaos. Cf. Liberty Bell, May 1990, p. 9, and the reference there given. The Somozas maintained order and relative content, and would have gladly facilitated construction of a canal that would not only provide a "back up" for the existing canal, but would accommodate aircraft carriers and the newer tankers, ships which have too broad a beam to pass through the locks in Panama.

9. As I pointed out in my booklet, An Introduction to the Contemporary History of Latin America (1961; out-of-print), we long had friends and potential friends in Central and South America, but systematically and perversely worked to destroy them and to excite the rapine, bloodshed, and barbarity that we call "democracy." Letters from persons of standing in the more civilized counties of South America, written to endorse

The story should end here, but it does not. Dr. Amador, as we have said, made a blunder, but Theodore Roosevelt made a far greater one, for reasons which are obscure. He had been successful in the elections in November 1903, but he may already have been under the influence of "friends" who, eight years later, egged him into founding the Progressive Party and thus assuring the election to the presidency of their candidate, Woodrow Wilson, who, as one of their number indiscreetly boasted years later, had been led around by their American satrap, Barney Baruch, "like a poodle on a string" and taught to bark for "Democracy" and "New Freedom" at his masters' command.

Whatever the explanation, Theodore Roosevelt thought it expedient to pretend that the "revolution" in Panama had been a "spontaneous" uprising by "oppressed" Panamanians. That preposterous lie exposed him and his government to continuous blackmail by Panamanian patriots, who, when he eventually refused to pay up on fresh demands, tried to exert pressure by leaking some information to the American press. Some of the leading newspapers were still owned by Americans at that time, and they had received good information from their own sources, but did not regard the events in the Isthmus as particularly remarkable. What did arouse interest was the unseasonable disclosure of the profits of Jesse Seligman, other aliens in the conspiracy, and their American hirelings, and of the baksheesh lawyer Cromwell had distributed in Congress.

Unfortunately, Theodore Roosevelt, who was a bull-headed as the Bull Moose he later selected as his symbol, instead of candidly and manfully admitting that he had performed a great service to the United States by beginning construction of the my booklet, indicated that even in 1961 it was not too late to salvage at least some part of the respect that was accorded us before we became the principal promoters of Judaeo-Communist revolution and savagery. The Somozas were only the latest of our victims. Today, nowhere in the world would anyone who is not demonstrably feeble-minded trust Americans.

canal, felt obliged to protect Cromwell's clients. He tried to bulldoze his way out of the consequences of his own blunder by punishing the press for having told part of the truth. He sued the New York World and the Indianapolis News in the Federal courts by using a legal fiction that later served the second Roosevelt in 1942, when that foul creature ordered the infamous "Sedition Trial."[10]

The prosecution of the two newspapers (and by implication many others) failed, for in those days many men were appointed to lifetime tenure in the Federal courts without having given guarantees of obedience. When the case was finally thrown out of court by honest judges, who added severe animadversions on the absurd and dirty pretense under which it had been begun, Theodore Roosevelt belatedly decided to behave like an Aryan and a statesman. Seventy-nine days later, he boasted, before an audience at the University of California, "I took the Isthmus."

By that time, however, the damage had been done. To defend themselves against the outrageous (and flagrantly illegal) prosecution, the accused newspapers had to undertake a long and costly investigation to substantiate what they had said. What had been an unpleasant odor emanating from small fissures in the cover of official secrecy became an unforgettable stench after the investigators opened wide rents in that cover.

Earl Harding, one of the accused, instead of half-forgetting a routine assignment as a reporter for the World, was aroused to devoting all of his spare time in his many remaining years to

10. The theory was that if you, living in one state, mail a letter or even a copy of a newspaper to someone in another state, you have thereby engaged in interstate commerce and placed yourself under the jurisdiction of Federal courts, which can then send Federal marshals to haul you, in chains, if desired, to any city in the United States to defend yourself against any prosecution, however whimsical, that may be instituted in those courts, whether or not there is an applicable Federal statute pertaining to your supposed offense. Since the Jews' "Sedition Trial" failed, this theory has not yet been tested in the "Supreme Court," but don't count on what that Revolutionary Tribunal will do, should the Master Race want the fiction implemented as a convenient means of afflicting recalcitrant serfs.

collecting irrefragable evidence of what really happened. That is why I have been able to summarize a story which, I hope, will have interested you—and told you something about the America that your parents threw away.

"To the Victor Belong the Spoils"

It seems to me that it was around 1940 that I attended a small dinner party at which one of the guests was the widow of a fairly prominent Protestant clergyman—Methodist, as I recall. When the conversation turned to some notably dirty trick in the state legislature, she remarked that while she supposed that a state government was a bigger business than even a very large Protestant denomination, she thought it very unlikely that the politicians could be more corrupt, or could have invented more dirty tricks, than the bureaucracy that rules a large Protestant Church. She proceeded to illustrate her somewhat surprising pronouncement with a description of the way in which the results of such a denomination's annual conference were all determined in advance, with prearranged conniving to frustrate and abort any protest by honest and courageous clergymen; how the plums were distributed to reward complicity in the bureaucrats' intrigues; how holy twerps were commissioned to pretend dissent and join the opposition to learn its plans and betray them to the bureaucrats; and how the Holy Ghost was trained to deliver inspiration to suit the rulers' wishes. She was, she said, probably the only "outsider" who had been able to observe the shenanigans that go on in such conferences. Her husband had suffered from a physical disability, so she had had to accompany him where wives were normally excluded, and to help him move from one council chamber to another, where she, often as disregarded as though she were furniture, saw the intrigues in progress, learning enough to extort from her husband information he would otherwise have kept secret.

I remembered the lady when I saw reported in Christian News last July the results of the annual conference of the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church. A conservative opposition to the bureaucracy probably had a majority, but the bureaucrats were in control of the election, circulated threats and rumors, and at the last minute brought in a razzle-dazzle orator whose spiel is said to have been slanderously mendacious, and circulated a libellous memorandum defaming the opposition, so the administration squeaked through with 52% of the votes, according to their count.

One issue was the Church's finances, which the bureaucrats claimed was a godly secret to be kept in their sacred bosoms. The conservatives did succeed in learning that there was a whole staff of bureaucrats (the number a dire secret) who were rewarded with $60,000-$70,000 a year plus expenses and many perquisites, but they were given old statistics, and it was only later that it was discovered that the boss man, an odd looking individual named Bohlmann, received $92,000 a year plus expenses (including expense for entertainment), contributions to the fund for his eventual retirement with, no doubt, similar emoluments, and numerous other benefits. He and his crew of 242 (!) "executives" and their flunkies absorbed more than 28% of the top-heavy Synod's revenues.

The bureaucrats' mouthpiece defamed a business man and professional accountant who had analyzed what was known of the Church's finances, and who seems to be proven correct by subsequent developments. He later pointed out a recent increase of 70% in the expenses of "administering" the Church, noted that the expenditure for the one item of "Communications Administration and Public Relations" had increased in a single year from $379,000 to $1,800,000 (was that in preparation for the Conference?), and exposed official accounting which indicated that in that one year the Church had lost $34,000,000 on the stock market.

All this, of course, is tediously familiar to everyone who has observed the blessings of 'democracy' and merely shows that in financial matters, Protestants and the Vatican have the same way of doing their god's business. It would not be worth five lines in Liberty Bell, if it did not show the direction of the evolution of Christianity today.

Immediately after they got 52% of the votes (so they say), the bureaucrats proceeded to teach the lesson that persons who fail to coöperate will get their teeth kicked in by Jesus's general manager. Dr. Robert Preus, President of the Church's principal school, Concordia Seminary in Fort Wayne, Indiana, who had dared to differ with the head dervish on doctrinal matters, was fired from his position and "retired" without notice, and with the transparently hypocritical pretense that his dismissal was not an act of vengeance for opposition to the Missouri Synod's little Czar.

Members of the victorious faction wrote letters, couched in the gutter language which is doubtless the language in which they habitually think, inviting the conservatives to get out of the racket the bureaucrats own, and calling for the suppression of Christian News because its editor has expressed disbelief in the Jews' big swindle, the Holohoax, and is therefore "anti-Semitic." That persons claiming to belong to a church founded by Martin Luther should object to even the most drastic denunciation of Sheenies can evoke only loud guffaws from everyone who knows anything about Luther's doctrines.

The bureaucrat's dirty politics were, of course, primarily a drive for more power and more loot, but the doctrinal issues associated with their coup are highly significant, since the Missouri Synod is one of the very few Churches that has thus far professed an adherence to the traditional Christianity that produced the great cathedrals and inspired Paradise Lost and many another work of our literature. What the entrenched bureaucracy wants to do is to scrap Christian doctrine and perhaps eventually amalgamate the Missouri Synod with the contemptible Evangelical Lutheran [!] Church in America, which has not even enough honesty to change its name to Marxian.

There were doctrinal issues that were minor at this time. A member of the victorious faction is quoted as believing that Jesus's business is the redistribution of property—always an appealing proposition, since much of the redistributed property always ends in the hands of the redistributors as a condign reward for their idealism, but this seems not to have been an issue last July, although it probably will be in the future.

There was some question about the Church's patronizing of persons who are, or pretend to be, subject to seizures, comparable to epilepsy (which, remember, was once called the morbus sacer, divinely inspired), resulting in fits in which the afflicted individual becomes delirious, uttering gibberish or uncouth animal cries, believing or pretending he or she is "speaking in tongues." The genuine seizures are, like epilepsy, from which they are often indistinguishable, produced by an innate cerebral disorder and may be described as intermittent insanity. Similar phenomena are occasionally produced in susceptible individuals by some hallucinatory drugs or the last stages of alcoholic intoxication. It is also likely that weak minds can induce quasi-epileptic seizures by autohypnosis, and that this, rather than organic dementia, accounts for the paroxysms of religiosity in most "holy rollers."

Wherever the physiological causes are ignored and the fits are considered a morbus sacer, many individuals, who pathetically can make no claim to a distinguishing talent of any kind, yield to the mammalian desire to assert individuality by attracting attention, and simulate such fits. Religion merely provides a means of attracting attention for the pitiable individuals who, sensing their own irremediable inferiority, still yearn to distinguish themselves from the herd, and who, in other circumstances, choose such means as claiming to be guilty of sensational crimes.[1]

Official endorsement of the "charismatics'" antics serves only to make a church ridiculous and invites comparison with the normal shamanism of savage tribes. Furthermore, if treated as a religious phenomenon, it presupposes direct contact between the afflicted individual and angelic or demonic spirits that temporarily take possession of him, a position that almost all of the established Christian sects now regard as heretical.[2] The doctrinal position of the Missouri Synods' ruling bureaucrats was clear: "charismatics" pay for their fun, don't they?

The major issue in everyone's mind, although not on the agenda, was the ordination of females as clergymen in the pro-

1. The most sensational kidnapping in this country was the abduction of the infant son of Charles Lindbergh, and as soon as that became known, more than two hundred individuals rushed to police stations to confess that they were guilty of the crime. That was only a noteworthy instance of a common phenomenon. In the late 1930s, the Chief of Detectives in a fairly large city told me that he had learned from a visit to England to adopt the method of the British police, who, whenever a sensational crime occurs and the criminal is not immediately caught, conceal some details of the crime or, if that is not feasible, describe them in terms that will mislead the average reader of newspapers. Thus, when persons eager to confess to a crime present themselves, a short series of questions will disclose their ignorance of the details that were kept secret, and they can be dismissed before they waste more of an investigator's time. The detective also told me that the crime to which such persons confess is almost invariably murder, and the more gruesome the murder, the greater the number who confess to it. In all his experience, there had been only one spurious confession to a robbery, although the latter crime sometimes produces persons who claim to have witnessed it and to have observed details overlooked by others. He thought that most of the spurious confessions were made by individuals who relied on being able to prove their innocence after they had enjoyed making themselves notable, but he believed that some so yearned to give a stellar performance in a courtroom that they would take the risk of being convicted and executed. — Another result of the pathetic urge to emerge from the herd is provided by most of the imaginative individuals who are kidnapped and taken for joy rides on "flying saucers," although such claims are also made by ambitious swindlers.

2. I note that the Reverend Mr. R.-R. M. Jurjevich, who is also a clinical psychologist, quotes with approval another clergyman's classification of the "charismatic" cults as "anti-Christian."

fessedly Lutheran Church. The Lutheran position is that only what is stated in the Scriptures counts (doctrine is determined solã scripturã, which must be the basis of the salvation that is obtained solã fide), but the Synod's boss man has the effrontery to temporize by saying he "isn't sure" that those Scriptures don't authorize the ordination of females as clergy*men*. Since it must be presumed that he can read—perhaps even read the text of the "New Testament," as some of the clergy still can—that is sheer tergiversation.

He is obviously itching to get into the swing morality of the Marxian churches, which, fraudulently disguised under a variety of traditional names, form the great majority of Christian churches today. And, of course, in the clergy, when females come, can perverts be far behind? A model is the once respected Anglican ("Episcopal") Church, which, after disgracing itself by consecrating as "Bishop" a divorcée, evidently half-negress, half-Kikess, is now ordaining homosexual perverts who blatantly advertise their vice with evangelical fervor. It thus wins the blessings of the shrieking harridans of "Female Liberation," whose authority is obviously greater than that of the cult's nominal god.

The Missouri Synod's ambitious boss man may be belatedly espousing a vogue that is already passing. He should read an admirably objective book that I have long intended to review in these pages, Nicholas Davidson's The Failure of Feminism (Buffalo, Prometheus Books, 1988). And several periodicals have recently published articles that report that women who have attained success in positions normally filled by men are discovering, as they approach middle age, that the fruits of their enterprise are apples of Sodom. It may well be that even the contemporary Americans' frantic flight from reality will soon become insufficient to shore up a denial of sexual differences.

It is true that among Aryans a religion that ignores females is doomed. Although the professional holy men of Christianity are necessarily male, one could, with perhaps pardonable hyperbole, say that women imposed the cult on men. You have noticed that in the tales about martyrs composed by the Fathers of the Church, it is almost invariably a wife who first contracts the religion and then usually "converts" her husband, so that both can jog joyfully to the lions or whatever other form of sudden translation to Paradise the author of the tale thought likely to impress his auditors or readers. And how many lay men today would spend their Sunday mornings in a church, if they were not dragged thither by their wives or concubines?

But is it wise, as a strictly business proposition, for a church to practice a feminism that alienates womanly women? One remembers Dr. Samuel Johnson's comment on female preachers,[3] which, so far as propagation of an authoritative religion is concerned, is probably as true today as when it was said. The only exceptions that come to one's mind are in the evangelical rackets, and one thinks at once of the notorious Aimee Semple McPherson, who packed the suckers into her specially equipped theater, Angelus Temple, and into branch shops all over southern California, in which the simple-minded could listen to "Sister's" voice over her radio station—until she femininely ruined her own racket.[4]

It may not be fair to deny opportunities to females who feel an itch to perform in a pulpit and console men whose wives misunderstand them, but the question of fairness is one they must take up with the God or the Savior in whom they profess to believe, because nothing can be more obvious than that the

3. "Sir, a woman's preaching is like a dog's walking on his hinder legs. It is not done well; but you are surprised to find it done at all." The learned doctor was thinking, of course, of cogent sermons, not amusing persiflage and chit-chat from a pulpit.

4. She had two hide-away apartments in the most expensive hotels, in which she could indulge her pious appetites in perfect anonymity and security, but she staged a fake drowning so that she could run off to Mexico for a continuous bout with a current favorite, and, when he or she finally tired of such fun, reappeared with a patently absurd story of having been kidnapped.

"New Testament" clearly and emphatically denies them the opportunity they covet.

It follows, therefore, that the tergiversation of the holy cacique, who is clearly hoping to gain time in which to silence the opposition completely before adorning his pulpits with priestesses, is a repudiation of the religion he professes to represent. Christianity as a whole, and especially the faith of the Missouri Synod, depends on the supposition that the doctrine enunciated by Paul in the letters that bear his name was, as he claimed and as the Fathers of the Church unanimously declared, divinely inspired.

If Paul's reiterated injunction that females must keep their mouths shut in church was not divinely inspired, his attitude toward women can be dismissed as merely an expression of the vehement misogyny that was incorporated in his race's religion when it was converted to a henotheism, and therefore not binding on contemporary soul-catchers. It must be on the basis of that assumption that Bohlmann and his clerical commandos disregard it, and hope to make the Missouri Synod indistinguishable from the Ersatz-Lutheran Church of America. But it follows, with inescapable logic, that Paul was only a clever Sheeny who peddled a line of hokum that wowed the suckers in the Second Century but needs to be revised to capture Twentieth-Century suckers.

That position, however, is one on which clerical flying squads can perch for only a moment; irresistible logic shakes the tree and forces them to go on. If Paul's divine inspiration was only a hoax, it follows that (a) there is no valid evidence that the doctrine set forth by Jesus was applicable to goyim,[5] and (b) no guarantee that the rest of the "New Testament" is not equally spurious.

5. E.g., the injunction to preach the gospel throughout the world may have been only what is explicitly stated in Matth. 10, 5-7, and thus a command that the disciples alert the Jews in the enclaves they had established in all countries in which there was profit to be made from the natives. It is true that Marc. 16, 15, in the long section that was added

It is obvious, therefore, that the "progressives" regard religion as did Pope Leo X, who happily, but somewhat indiscreetly, exclaimed to several of his intimates, "What profit this fable about Christ has brought us!" It is only natural that some of them avow belief in biological evolution and thus openly admit that their Bible is just a crude and incredible story-book.[6] And it is only natural that they should crusade for any hoax that, rightly or wrongly, seems to them likely to increase their profits. And it is only natural that, to crush the conservatives who take Christianity seriously, they have allied themselves with the Defamation League of Jewish cowboys who ride herd on the American cattle and drive the lower animals to belief in the Holohoax.

In the Missouri Synod the issue has now been clearly joined. Bohlmann and his phalanx of greedy "executives" have declared war on the clergymen who still believe in Christianity. I do not predict the outcome, but I note that the struggle is an unequal one. The cacique and his crew have their hands on all the finances of the Church; they have demonstrated their power to intimidate and punish insubordinate clergymen; they are skilled in pitching the woo to unthinking congregations; and in the Sixth Century, calls for preaching the gospel "to every creature," but that is not feasible; the crack-brained St. Francis of Assisi is said to have preached to birds, but is not credited with having made any converts.

6. If the "progressives" in the Missouri Synod took theology seriously and wished to salvage their Jesus while ordaining women, they would have done well to promote some of the gospels that describe Jesus as traveling with one or more concubines. A particularly useful gospel would be the Euangelium secundum Jacobum of which the papyrus text is now in the Bodmer Library, in which the disciples specifically complain that Jesus is fonder of his woman than he is of them. I suggested another way out of their dilemma in Liberty Bell, November 1983, pp. 5 f., and Ralph Perier, in his little booklet, Religion and Race (Liberty Bell Publications, $3.00 + postage), called attention to gospels that describe the Holy Ghost as female and explicitly affirm that Jesus was a practicing homosexual, thus providing a revelation that authorizes both of the aims of the "progressives."

they can count on the unlimited support of the all-powerful Yids.[7] To oppose this formidable ecclesiastical juggernaut, the real Christians have only the honest journalism of Christian News and whatever resolute allegiance individual clerics have been able to inspire in their congregations, which, in the nature of things, are unlikely to be unanimous in their predilections.[8]

The result of this struggle is of immediate concern to the readers of Liberty Bell. As I have pointed out elsewhere, churches that adhere to the traditional Christianity of the West, unperturbed by the Marxian Reformation, are not our enemies and, to a limited extent, are even our allies in present circumstances, while the "Liberal" and "progressive" churches are weapons wielded by the enemies of our race and civilization. □

7. In the event of a schism, such as Bohlmann is trying to provoke, his gang would lay claim to all the existing church buildings. Whether they can make good that claim and dispossess faithful congregations depends on both the provisions of the charters of the various churches and the willingness of the courts to enforce them.

8. Needless to say, Bohlmann's tactics, described as "church politics at its worst," evoked great resentment among the consciously Christian lay members of the Synod and many letters demanding his resignation, at which he, having won reëlection by hook and crook, doubtless laughed. An eminent physician in Santa Ana, California, in an open letter described him as "a dishonest, scheming, arrogant, and defiant politician," and pointed out that he could not possibly believe the Christianity he professes. How effective this indignation will be when the chips are down, is the real question. I do not attempt to determine what Bohlmann, together with his satellites, really believes; he reminds me of a once prominent evangelist of whom a member of his staff said: "He isn't really an atheist; he just doesn't give a damn."

A U.S. PRISON GUARD AT ONE OF "IKE's DEATH CAMPS"

Martin Brech

FORTY-FIVE YEARS AGO, I witnessed an atrocity: the deliberate starvation of German POWs by our own army. History, written by the victors, suppressed all news of this atrocity until James Bacque, a Canadian author, published his brilliant exposé, Other Losses. This book is a best-seller in Canada, a sensation in Europe, yet is virtually unavailable (censored?) in the U.S. Our major booksellers told me their distributors are not handling it. When I prevailed upon a small, independent bookstore to order direct from Canada, the publisher told them they would be the only store in New York State to carry the book. This in "the land of the free!"

Fortunately, Pat Buchanan called attention to Other Losses in his 10 January 1990 column. He wrote:

> Conclusion: the U.S. Army killed ten times as many Germans in POW camps as we did on battlefields from Normandy to V.E. Day. (German POWs) had their rations cut below survival level until they were dying at rates up to 30% of exposure, starvation and neglect... Red Cross food trains were turned back and U.S. food shipments sat on the dock... One French officer said the U.S. camps reminded him of Dachau and Buchenwald... The book blames Eisenhower. "The German is a beast," Ike had written... But that was not how the Canadians and British felt, who treated their prisoners justly... It was not the view of General Mark Clark, nor of...Patton... Ignoring the book is not enough.

Pat Buchanan's courageous column inspired me to help end the cover-up of the atrocity I had witnessed. I wrote letters to several newspapers which were, of necessity, short and incomplete. Now I would like to finally free more of my painful memories, hoping to be heard, so that this will help us to acknowledge our share in the "banality of evil," cleansing ourselves with the truth. Perhaps we, as a nation, may then put this behind us with some integrity and with some hope for redemption.

In October 1944, at age eighteen, I was drafted into the army while a student at the NYS College of Forestry. Largely due to the "Battle of the Bulge," my training was cut short, my furlough cut in half, and I was then immediately sent overseas. Upon arrival in Le Havre, France, we were quickly loaded into boxcars and shipped to the front. By the time we reached it, I had developed mononucleosis severely enough to be sent to a hospital in Belgium.

By the time I left the hospital, the unit I had trained with in Spartenburg, South Carolina was so deeply into Germany that I was placed in a "repo depo" (a replacement depot) despite my protests. I then lost interest in which units I was assigned to because non-combat units were generally not respected. My separation qualification record states that I served mostly with the 14th Infantry Regiment, during which time I guarded prisoners of war and served as an interpreter. During my seventeen-month stay in Germany, I was transferred to other outfits also.

In late March or early April 1945, I was assigned to help guard a POW camp near Andernach along the Rhine. I had four years of high school German, so I was able to talk to the prisoners, although this was forbidden. Gradually, however, I was used as an interpreter and asked to ferret out the S.S. (I found none.)

In Andernach, between 50,000 and 65,000 prisoners, ranging in age from very young teens to very old men, were crowded together in an open field surrounded by barbed wire. The women were kept in a separate enclosure which I did not see until later. The men I guarded had no tents or shelter, no blankets, and many had no coats. Inadequate numbers of slit trenches were provided for excrement, and so the men lived and slept in the mud and increasing filth during a cold, wet spring. Their misery from exposure alone was evident.

It was even more shocking to see them eating grass, sometimes throwing it into a tin can containing a thin soup. They told me they did this hoping to ease their hunger pains. Soon their emaciation was evident. Dysentery raged and, too weak and crowded to reach the slit trenches, they were increasingly sleeping in excrement. I saw no sign of provision for water, so the thin soup was their food and water for the day. Some days there was bread, less than a slice each. Other days there was nothing.

The sight of so many men desperate for food and water, sickening and dying before our eyes, is indescribable. Even now, I can only think of it momentarily.

We had ample food and supplies that could have been shared more humanely, and we could have offered some medical assistance, but did nothing. Only the dead were quickly and efficiently taken care of: hauled away to mass graves.

My outrage reached the point that I protested to my officers, but I was met with hostility or bland indifference. When pressed, they explained they were under strict oders from "higher up." No officer would dare to systematically do this to over 50,000 prisoners if he felt he was violating general policy and subject to court martial. The term "war criminal" was just beginning to come into fashion.

Realizing my protests were useless, I asked a friend working in the kitchen if he could slip me some extra food for the prisoners. He too repeated that they were under strict orders to severely ration the prisoners' food, and that these orders came from "higher up." But he said they had more food than they knew what to do with and would sneak me some.

When I threw this food over the barbed wires to the prisoners I was caught and threatened with imprisonment. I repeated the "offense," and one officer threatened to shoot me. I naturally assumed this was a bluff, but I began to have some doubts after I encountered a captain on a hill above the Rhine shooting down at a group of German civilian women with his .45 caliber pistol. When I asked, "Why?" he mumbled, "Target practice," and fired until his pistol was empty. I saw the women running for cover, but, at that distance, couldn't tell if any had been hit.

This is when I more fully realized I was dealing with some cold-blooded killers filled with moralistic hatred. They considered the Germans subhuman and worthy of extermination; another expression of the downward spiral of racism. Articles in the G.I. newspaper, Stars and Stripes, played up the Nazi concentration camps, complete with photographs of emaciated bodies; this amplified our self-righteous cruelty and made it easier to imitate behavior we were supposed to oppose. Also, I think, soldiers not exposed to combat were trying to prove how tough they were by taking it out on the prisoners and civilians. At least, many combat soldiers told me later they would not have tolerated this, for they combined hatred with respect for a courageous enemy.

The prisoners I spoke to were mostly simple farmers and workingmen, as ignorant, albeit nationalistic, as many of our own troops. I heard many versions of "my country, right or wrong, my country," which we still hear in our own country today.

As time went on, many of them lapsed into a zombie-like state of listlessness. Others, maddened by thirst, tried to escape in a desperate or suicidal fashion, running through open fields in broad daylight towards the Rhine to quench their thirst. They were mowed down.

Some prisoners were extremely eager for cigarettes, saying they took the edge off their hunger. Accordingly, some enterprising G.I. "Yankee traders" were acquiring hordes of wrist watches and rings in exchange for handsful of cigarettes or less. When I began throwing cartons of cigarettes to the prisoners to ruin this trade, I found myself threatened by rank-and-file G.I.s also. At least this taught me an indelible lesson: how wrong majorities and authorities can be.

A bright spot in this gloomy picture came, oddly enough, one night when I was put on the "graveyard shift," from two to four A.M. Actually, there was a graveyard on the uphill side of this enclosure, not many yards away. My superiors had forgotten to give me a flashlight and I hadn't bothered to ask, being disgusted with the whole situation by that time. It was a fairly bright night and I soon became aware of a prisoner crawling under the wires to the graveyard. We were supposed to shoot escapees on sight, so I started to get up to warn him to get back. Suddenly I noticed another prisoner crawling from the graveyard back to the enclosure. They were risking their lives to get to the graveyard for something; I had to investigate.

When I entered the gloom of this shrubby, tree-shaded cemetary, I never felt more vulnerable, but somehow curiosity kept me going. Despite my caution, I tripped over the legs of someone in a prone position. Whipping my rifle around while stumbling and trying to regain composure of mind and body, I soon was relieved I hadn't reflexively fired. The figure sat up, moving erratically. Gradually I could see the beautiful but terror-stricken face of a woman with a picnic basket nearby. German civilians wre not allowed to feed, nor even come near, the prisoners, so I quickly assured her I approved of what she was doing, not to be afraid, and that I would leave the graveyard to get out of the way, telling no one.

I left the graveyard as quickly as possible and sat down, leaning against a tree at the edge of the cemetery to be inconspicuous and not frighten the prisoners. I imagined then, and often since, what it would be like to be a prisoner under those conditions and meet a beautiful woman with a picnic basket. I never saw her again, but I have never forgotten her face.

While I watched, more prisoners crawled to and from the enclosure. I saw they were dragging food back to their comrades and could only admire their courage and devotion. As I walked back to my quarters at the end of my shift, a nightingale and I were singing–both felt a touch of spring.

(I originally did not intend to reveal the following incident, for it moves into a realm termed "mystical." However, for me, it was an extremely significant experience, changing my life, providing a light no darkness can extinguish. It must be told, hoping it will foster understanding.)

On May 8, V.E.-Day, I decided to celebrate with some prisoners I was guarding who were baking bread, meager amounts of which the other prisoners occasionally received. This group had all the bread they could eat, and shared the jovial mood generated by the end of the war. We all thought we would be going home soon, a pathetic hope on their part. We were in what was to become the French Zone, and I later witnessed the brutality of the French soldiers when we transferred our prisoners to them for their slave labor camps (see below).

After chatting with them about the potentials for peace for the rest of our lives, I decided to risk a gesture of trust that objectively would seem foolish. I emptied my rifle and stood it in the corner. They tested me further by asking to play with it, and I agreed. Intuitively I felt I could rely on their sense of honor not to attack me, for they knew they too were being tested. This thoroughly 'broke the ice,' and soon we were singing songs we taught each other or I had learned in high school German ('Du, du, liegst mir im Herzen...'). Out of gratitude, they secretly baked a small sweet bread and insisted I take it, explaining it was the only possible gift they had left to offer. Expressing my gratitude with a lump in my throat, I put it in my tight "Eisenhower jacket" so I could sneak it back to my barracks. I later found an opportunity to eat it outside.

Never had bread tasted more delicious, nor conveyed to me a deeper sense of communion while eating it. A wonderful feeling pervaded me, gently opening me to an intimation of the Oneness of all Being. Through those prisoners I sensed the cosmic presence of what has been called the Christ, Buddha-nature, or, perhaps most aptly, the Ineffable: cosmically present, but hidden and apparently separate, until revealed in the wholeness of the giving of the self. Even within the horror humans had created, I was taught a path to redemption may open by taking a first, tentative step in the direction of love, understanding and forgiveness.

This above all the prisoners taught me: not only are we all potentially humane humans, there is divinity within us waiting for us to dissolve the defensive shield of ego. I was pleased to discover later the words of Matthew 25:34-46, expressing the potential within prisoners and all who are at our mercy.

Shortly after this experience I was plunged into even greater horror. Some of our weak and sickly prisoners were being marched off by French soldiers to their camp. The truck we were on first passed another truck picking up bodies along the side of the road, and then came up behind a slowly moving column of men. Temporarily we slowed down and remained behind, perhaps because the driver was as shocked as I was. The French soldiers were apparently incensed at the poor condition of our prisoners, not only for labor but for marching to another camp. Whenever a prisoner staggered or dropped back, the French clubbed him to death and then dragged him to the side of the road. For many, this quick death might have been preferable to their prolonged suffering. Even gas would have been more merciful than our murder by neglect in our slow 'killing fields.'

When I saw the German women held in a separate enclosure, I asked why we were keeping them. I was told they were "camp followers," selected as breeding stock for the S.S. to create a superrace. We provided them with tents but they were extremely hungry. I spoke to some and must say they were still spirited and attractive. However, I believe I was objective enough when I told all concerned that I didn't think they deserved our treatment.

As an interpreter, I was able to prevent some particularly unfortunate arrests. One somewhat amusing incident occurred during a pre-dawn raid we conducted on a town to discover

Nazis or arms. An old farmer was being dragged away by some soldiers. I was told he had a "fancy Nazi medal," which they showed to me. Fortunately, I had a chart identifying such medals. He [that is, the farmer's wife. –Ed. Liberty Bell] had been awarded it [the 'Mutterkreuz' (Mother's Cross)] for having five or more children! Perhaps his wife was somewhat relieved to get him "off her back," but I didn't think one of our 'death camps' was a fair punishment for his contribution to Germany. The soldiers agreed and released him to continue his "dirty work."

Famine was spreading amongst the civilians also. It was a common sight to see German women up to their elbows in our garbage cans looking for something edible – that is, when they weren't chased away.

When I interviewed mayors of small towns and villages, I was told their supply of food had been taken away by "displaced persons" (foreigners who had worked in Germany), who packed the food on trucks and drove away. When I reported this, the response was a shrug or an expression of helpnessness.

Although the Red Cross coffee and doughnut stands were available everywhere for us, I never saw any Red Cross in the prison camps or helping the civilians. While my girlfriend had all the 'contraband' doughnuts she could eat, most Germans had to share their meager hidden stores and wait until the next harvest.

This hunger undoubtedly made many German women more "available," but, despite this, rape was incredibly prevelant and often accompanied by additional violence. I particularly remember a charming eighteen year old girl who had several unsuccessful suitors and was "just friends" with me, who had the side of her face smashed with a rifle butt and was then raped by two G.I.s. The casual shooting of German civilians also continued, usually by drunken soldiers who would tell of this as something amusing. All too many G.I.s gave the impression they were like animals released from cages, free to do what they liked because they were dealing with yet a lower species of animal, a reverse racism, inflamed by our propaganda. However, even the French complained to me that our rape and drunken destructive behavior in their country was excessive. When we had arrived in Le Havre, we had been given booklets instructing us that the Germans had maintained a high standard of behavior with French civilians who were peaceful, and that we should do the same. In this we failed miserably.

So what?, we might still say. The enemy's atrocities were worse than ours. Certainly my experiences were only of the last phases of the war, when we were already clearly the victors. The Nazi opportunity for atrocities had faded and ours was unleashed. But we might have learned the simple lesson that two wrongs do not make a right. Perhaps we might even have broken the cycle of vengeful retaliation and unbridled hatred, fed by racism, that has plagued human history and blighted human potential all too long. Instead, we committed our own atrocities and now are clinging to a cover-up. That is why I am speaking out now, forty-five years after the crime. We can never prevent individual war crimes, but we can, if enough of us speak out, influence government policy. We can reject government propaganda that depicts our enemies as subhuman and encourages the kinds of outrages I witnessed. We can protest the bombing of civilian targets, which still goes on today. (I will never forget the sickly sweet smell of rotting human flesh rising from the shattered remains of the cities and towns I entered.) And we can refuse to condone our government's murder of unarmed and defeated prisoners of war.

I realized it's difficult to admit witnessing a crime of this magnitude, especially if implicated oneself. Even G.I.s sympathetic to the victims told me they were afraid to oppose so massive a policy that would surely seek to cover its tracks. I never heard this directly from an officer, but it was the belief of the rank-and-file G.I.s I spoke to that we were not to "talk" because, first, no one would believe us, and second, we would surely get into trouble. They all insisted it was better not to talk, and slowly I too realized it would be futile and dangerous. That is, until now, thanks to James Bacque and Pat Buchanan. This is not to say the danger has passed. Since I "spoke out" recently, my mailbox has been smashed and I have received threatening phone calls. But I believe it is worth the risk. Writing about these atrocities has been a catharsis of feelings suppressed too long, a liberation, and perhaps will remind other witnesses and citizens that "the truth shall make us free, have no fear." And, in any case, "the truth shall out."

We may even learn a supreme lesson from all this: Hate is self-destructive; only love can conquer and evolve all as One.

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?
SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. Dear Mr. Foderaro:

Attached, your copy of, "AN OPEN LETTER TO THE ASBURY PARK PRESS," an article entitled, "IT'S DEBATABLE," reflecting the advocacy journalism of the Asbury Park Press when it comes to that preposterous collection of World War Two propagandas called "The Holocaust." Specifically, this article deals with the considerable news coverage given to Professor Jack Needle on his trip to Poland, and some of Needle's generated "anguish" over long disproved Holocaust tales. Tales that the Asbury Park Press chose to erroneously report as "history." Ergo, the need for someone to set the historic record straight, and this "open letter" will be published in periodicals having an interest in history and not Hollywood.

A copy of this article has also been sent, by certified mail, to Professor Needle, challenging him to defend—in print or in person—his preposterous Hollywood "history" of World War Two.

Should Professor Needle find the courage to defend "The Tooth Fairy," or "The Holocaust," or any other myth, would the Asbury Park Press be amenable to publishing the debate, in side by side disputations?

After all, your paper has been rather dull since Ed Toner and I "kicked some butts," hasn't it? Ed and I were given the "Rotten Tomato Award" by the New Jersey Monthly for that one. Naturally, we treasure the honor.

Please give this request your careful consideration. I will let you know if Professor Needle can find something in his pants other than his loose change and his car keys.

Sincerely,
Maj. Joe Stano

Professor Jack Needle
Brookdale Community College

Lincroft, New Jersey 07738

Dear Professor Needle:

Attached, your copy of, "AN OPEN LETTER TO THE ASBURY PARK PRESS," an article entitled, "IT'S DEBATABLE." It's my answer to your recent trip to Poland; wherein, the Asbury Park Press felt compelled to publish your undocumented and long disproved World War Two propaganda as "history."

The article challenges you to debate your alleged Holocaust, with all of its fantastic and scientifically impossible "happenings." Of course, on the assumption that you are prepared to defend the content of the course that you teach. Just like a "real" Professor in any free university of the "Free World." Therefore, I have written to Asbury Park Press Editor Sal J. Foderaro requesting a debate be published in side by side disputations.

The Asbury Park Press, having printed so much of your nonsense, fairness dictates that the Press now has a journalistic obligation to provide some balance.

Are you agreeable to "Gas Chambers" as the first subject of debate? Or would you prefer crematoria? Name your poison.

If you cannot overcome your historic genetic pre-disposition to cut and run...you will naturally confirm everything that I said in the article. I eagerly await your answer. Or your silence.

Cordially,
Joe Stano

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE ASBURY PARK PRESS:

IT'S DEBATABLE!

INTRODUCTION

Most newspapers can be assessed, politically, as either "liberal" or "conservative"—few are even-handed or even remotely impartial. The only common denominator amongst most American newspapers, is the genuflection of nearly all American newspapers to the Jewish rendition of history called: "The Holocaust." Indeed, a newspaper not routinely adhering to "Jewish History" would be hard-put to stay in business. It's de rigueur for all of the "fourth estate" to.....BELIEVE!

There is no similar obligation imposed on one segment of the third estate, the military, to "believe." A professional soldier must be pragmatic, he cannot afford to "believe" in "tales," he must have the absolute "truth." History is replete with examples of military fools who found it convenient to believe tales about an adversary, rather than seeking the truth, and paid the price for underestimating an enemy in combat: defeat or needless casualties.

All professional soldiers are, of necessity, students of military history. Naturally, World War Two—the most destructive war in history—is well known to all professional soldiers.

However, the military history of WW II bears little resemblance to the version of WW II that occupies so much of the American media. The rendition of WW II, so very familiar to all the American public, is classified amongst military historians as, "Jewish History," or, less kindly, as "War Propaganda."

It may surprise many to learn that military science, like many other branches of science, has no borders—political or otherwise.

Example: During the Second World War, and shortly before his suicide, Field Marshal Rommel pledged his son, Manfred, to deliver his personnel papers to B.H. Liddell Hart, a former British officer during the First World War and a noted British military historian. Rommel knew that Liddell Hart could be trusted to do a fair and impartial rendition of his papers: a military history without propaganda or politics. As a military historian, Liddell Hart has done so, many times, to the anger and consternation of British, American and French politicians, who much prefer war propaganda to the truth.

With few exceptions (Rommel being one), military histories are dry and boring to the layman (Patton being the norm); they are footnoted to the extreme; they are filled with military maps: the preferred idiom of the professional soldier; and they keep in mind that old military maxim: "The first casualty in a war is the truth." The Holocaust tales that have been meat and drink in endless novels, novels called "histories," movies, and the endless docudramas on the infernal "Boob Tube," have long been dismissed by professional soldiers—all over the globe—as WAR PROPAGANDA.

The Asbury Park Press has carried more than its share of Holocaust propaganda within its pages. In my view: an inordinate amount of Holocausting. Regretfully, the Asbury Park Press has shown little inclination to "balance" its strong "advocacy journalism" with any other view of the Holocaust. Though I must address this short "tour" of current Holocausting (if one will forgive the pun, this "tour de farce") to the Asbury Park Press, it is in the form of an "open letter," and it will undoubtedly be published elsewhere.

1. THE ANTI-ACADEMICS.

I have followed with growing astonishment (and some amusement), the considerable Asbury Park Press coverage given to Brookdale Community College Professor Jack Needle. Not since Princess "Di" has the media been so engrossed in so very little. Be that as it may, we are informed by the Asbury Park Press that Prince. . .er. .Professor Needle heads the "Center for Holocaust Studies" at Brookdale, that has been, "educating people about one of the darkest periods in the world's history—the murder of 6 million Jews by the Nazis." In other words: Professor Needle is one of a great many paid promoters of the most undocumented and thoroughly disproved non-event in history: The Holocaust.

If that were not enough of an assault on one's senses, we are informed that the Holocaust Center has been "educating" the people—at taxpayers expense—for ten, long Years! Given the recent accessibility to documentation behind the "Iron Curtain" that western scholars now have through the advent of "Glasnost," Brookdale Community College would be well-advised to change the course from "Holocaust Studies," to "Unicorn Studies;" in that, a far better case can be made for the existence of the "mythical beast," than for the existence of the "mythical event."

Professor Needle has been awarded a "Media Triumph" (similar to a Roman Triumph) simply because he travels to Poland, at the invitation of the Polish government, to take a tourist's tour of the "Holocaust sites." I can hardly wait for the movie: "Needle Takes A Vacation."

As stated in the Asbury Park Press: the Polish government is in dire need of hard currency and they want to make Auschwitz and its like, tourist attractions. Ergo the effort to sell the tour to Needle, as he represents the other side of the business. As in: giving Travel Agents a free vacation at a new resort. In this case, a new kind of Disneyland.

In fact, the Disneyland analogy is most appropriate. If Professor Needle must some day transition from teaching Holocaust to teaching Unicorns, he visits an area that has produced great herds of myths. Be it Mickey Mouse or Mengele, a cartoon character or one of the many infamous "angels of death"—there were a good half-dozen "angels of death": everyone wanted one—they both are of Hollywood and not of History. Ergo: the creation of Disneyland on the Vistula!

We even have some ultra-boring tourist photos: A 5 1/4 x 8 1/4 color photo by tourist "Jack Needle" of the barbed wire fence at Auschwitz. Similar to a barbed wire fence that one might find around prisons and military stockades. And a 4 x 31/4 color photo of Jack Needle and a "staff member" (Polish Tour Guide) at Auschwitz. In short: "Here's a picture that I took of Cinderella's Castle...and here's one of me with Mickey Mouse..."

Of course, one must congratulate Professor Needle for only waiting ten years before traveling to Poland to visit the subject of his lugubrious lectures. Professor Raul Hilberg, a "Shoah Star," who has been alleged by many to have written the "definitive" tome on Jews and Concentration Camps, The Destruction of the European Jews, actually waited eighteen years after his book was published before he even traveled to Europe to visit the camps.

Holocaust "scholarship" is diametrically opposite to standard scholarship; in that, Holocaust "scholarship" clearly runs in reverse order: first the book, and then the research. I would not be a bit surprised to see a Holocaust movie first; and then see the Holocaust docudrama on the Boob Tube; followed by the publication of the Holocaust book; and then have the author announce his intention to do some research on the subject. Someday, when he finds the time. Perhaps they should just give the "intended" Holocaust author his Oscar, and his Emmy, and his Pulitzer—and forget about the rest?

Certainly Professor Raul Hilberg of "Shoah" fame, would have been much better off if he had not written his book. In 1985, as a Holocaust "expert" at a celebrated trial in Canada, he was subjected to a cross-examination on his Holocaust for the first time in his life—and his book literally came apart at the seams! As did Professor Hilberg, when he admitted that he had used the wacky "testimony" of a man he considered as insane—in ten different places in his "history" of the Holocaust! Sort of an offhand admission by Professor Hilberg that one must be certifiably "nuts" to believe in the Hilberg rendition of the Holocaust.

Professor Hilberg now states that he will never allow himself to be cross-examined on the Holocaust again! Well certainly not in Canada; in that, a charge of perjury may be laid against him if he shows his face in Canada. "Fibbing" under oath is frowned-upon in Canada. Another "Shoah Star," like

"Fibber" Hilberg, who made the film and then tried out his preposterous routine in a Canadian one courtroom, was one Rudolf Vrba, author of Escape From Auschwitz and I Cannot Forgive (same book, different title). Alas, Vrba got so caught up in all the outrageous lies that he inserted in his "alleged" autobiography, that he finally confessed that his book was "a poetic rendition." In short: PURE FICTION! A Canadian newspaper summed it all up with this delightful headline: 'Holocaust 'expert' calls his testimony 'poetic rendition.' "

The Hilbergs and the Vrbas are not the exceptions in the field of Holocausting, they are the norm and the leading "experts" that one finds in Professor Needle's Holocaust course. On the other hand: Scholars, who devote years to research and carefully document their work before publishing, are dismissed by Professor Needle as "stupid." As in this Asbury Park Press statement by Needle:

"The fires are fanned by some parts of the media and by some groups like the anti-academics who argue the Holocaust never happened. They are stupid, but this is something we have to continue to combat until compassion and understanding triumph."

"Compassion and understanding triumph"...over what? Triumph over scholarly research, over documentation, over forensic evidence, over every standard of historical certification? Must we abandon all scholarship and science to agree with the Holocaust? Professor Needle is not yearning for compassion and understanding. He yearns for ignorance and gullibility! Professor Needle demands acceptance, without question or debate, of Hollywood over History.

It's most amusing. Needle refers to the scholars that document their work and are quite prepared to defend their thesis on paper or in a debate as "anti-academics." Amusing, when one considers that Professor Needle and all of his counterparts supporting the Holocaust version of historical events, absolutely refuse to debate any facet of their alleged "History"; they refuse to produce any documentation of their alleged historical events; and they try and censor the true scholars who seek nothing more than historical truth. The so-called Holocaust is an aberration in the field of historical research: the only undocumented, non-debatable, alleged historical event.

Unfortunately, the professional Holocausters often succeed in their censorship. As in the case of Alexander Solzhenitsyn. Even a world-renowned historian of Solzhenitsyn's stature can literally become an Orwellian "unperson" if he documents, as a lie, one of the fantastic tales in the Holocaust pantheon of undocumented horrors. Solzhenitsyn's "crime" was that he dismissed the infamous (and naturally, undocumented) "Gas Wagons," or "Gas Vans," that were so prominently featured in Shoah, as nothing more than Russian propaganda. In point of fact, he did so many years before Shoah was even filmed. However, the infamous "Gas Wagons" (that the Russians insisted were driven by Catholic Priests) were too good to be left out of Claude Lanzmann's Shoah—even if they had been long proven to have never existed.

Professor Needle yearns for "compassion" (ignorance) and "understanding" (gullibility). Sorry "Prof," I'm fresh out. However, as one of your "anti-academics," I'd be delighted to introduce a bit of documentation into the media "triumph" that was given you by the Asbury Park Press.

2. TRUTH MAKES ONE FREE.

When viewing the German slogan "ARBEIT MACHT FREI" (Work Makes One Free) at Auschwitz, Professor Needle emoted: "It's an absolute shock."

Well, that's understandable, in that, Professor Needle is a Holocauster (some say Holohoaxer) and not an Historian. Had he spent his time dealing with history instead of Hollywood, he might have known that the expression was first coined in the mid-nineteenth century by French workers. Early French unions and socialists used this slogan as did various socialist groups in Germany and elsewhere. German National Socialists ("Nazis"), having sprung from the German Worker's Party, naturally adopted this slogan and one can find it in their writings and on the walls of German factories. Sorry, Professor Needle, there is nothing sinister about having a job making a worker feel free.

3. THE NUMBERS GAME.

One can only call it serendipity, when one reads how Jack Needle, while touring Maidanek Concentration Camp with Rabbi Judea B. Miller, discovers the name of Rabbi Miller's brother listed in one of the Concentration Camp's "death books."

Had Professor Needle been attuned to history instead of Hollywood, he might not have missed the announcement that the Soviet Red Cross has finally, after 45 years of effort by scholars, at long last agreed to release the information contained in the Auschwitz "Death Registers." According to Valentina Fatyukhina, head researcher at the Soviet Red Cross: "The deaths of over 74,000 people were neatly recorded, day after day, hour after hour, in 46 huge volumes. Their names, the birthdates, and the names of parents were written down."

One finds it serendipitous that Professor Needle raises the issue of "death books" after proclaiming in his Asbury Park Press "Triumph" of 31 January 1990: "an estimated 4 million Jews were murdered" at Auschwitz. Quite a difference from a "well-documented" 74,000 persons in toto, and one not knowing how many of that number were Jews.

In point of fact, most of Professor Needle's counterparts professing some expertise in the Holocaust, had said that 2 1/2 million Jews and 1 1/2 million non-Jews died at Auschwitz. A far cry from Jack Needle's fabulous "4 million Jews."

Of course, these previous estimates are now being constantly revised downwards. As in: Yehuda Bauer, the Director of the Division of Holocaust Studies at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem's Institute of Contemporary Jewry, recently stated (New York Times Nov. '89) that the estimate of French Jewish historian Georges Wellers of 1.6 million people killed or victims of starvation or disease at Auschwitz was accurate. And of that number, 1.35 million were Jews. A very far cry from Jack Needle's "4 million Jews."

And then we have Princeton University Professor Arno J. Mayer's book, Why Did The Heavens Not Darken" (Asbury Park Press 15 Oct. 1989). Professor Mayer, a Jew, does not accept the fabulous 6 million figure and he maintains that most of the deaths in the camps were from disease. The same assessment the International Red Cross made 45 years ago.

This "numbers game" amongst Jews is not the least bit surprising. Shmuel Krakowiski, the archives director at the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial center in Tel Aviv, stated that "over half of the 20,000 testimonies from Holocaust survivors on record at Yad Vashem are unreliable" (Jerusalem Post,17 August 1986). "Unreliable" is a nice way of saying outright lies. Little wonder that a structure built on a constantly shifting base of lies appears so lopsided.

4. OUT OF GAS.

Mr. Fred A. Leuchter, recently profiled in the Atlantic Magazine (Feb. 1990, with his name misspelled "Leutcher"), is easily the world's greatest expert on executions: he designs and manufacturers electrocution systems, lethal injection equipment, gallows and gas chamber hardware. In 1988 Mr. Leuchter undertook a physical inspection and forensic analysis of the alleged "gas chambers" at Auschwitz, Birkenau and Lublin, or Majdanek, or Maidanek (your choice). In February of 1988 Mr. Leuchter had twenty pounds of samples processed in a test laboratory in Massachusetts and published his findings in the now famous "Leuchter Report." According to Mr. Leuchter, the claim that people were gassed in the alleged gas chambers was absurd. And test samples showed that no gassings had taken place at any of these crude gas chambers. In fact, if one assumed that these crude gas chambers were somehow used to gas 6 million people, it would have taken sixty-eight years to accomplish the feat! In addition, if one assumed that all the crematories available to the Germans were used to cremate the fabulous six million, it would have taken thirty-five years! One must remember that Holocausters like Jack Needle claim that 6 million Jews and 5 million non-Jews were supposedly gassed and cremated by the Germans! In Holocausting, one often goes from the silly to the completely insane.

5. NO SMOKING.

Moving backward: towards the truth. In 1979 the C.I.A. published a report (ST-79-10001) entitled: "The Holocaust Revisited." This report showed the reconnaissance photographs taken by the U.S. Air Force between 4 April 1944 and 21 January 1945—when all of the alleged gas chambers and crematories were supposed to have been operating at full capacity.

And...the great crematory chimneys belching black smoke and seventeen foot flames...didn't exist! Of course, they wouldn't have; in that, smell-less and smoke-less crematories had been invented way back in 1895, so there was no smell or smoke. One can ask any mortician about that. And any chimney with flame in it would crumble, in that, chimneys are built for smoke and not for flame. The reason firemen insist that one should have ones fireplace cleaned, lest the build-up of creosote catch fire. Ask any fireman.

Not surprisingly, the great pits used for burning bodies by the thousands didn't exist. With the water table at Auschwitz at 12 to 18 inches, if one dug a pit, one would have a pool. Auschwitz was almost a bog. The same "eyewitnesses" who claimed that the sky was blotted out by black clouds of smoke during the day and lit up by the seventeen-foot flames at night, complained of the endless mud when describing the vast burning pits that no one has been able to find. Of course, one can't cremate bodies in a pit anyway. And one can ask any Hindu about that.

In point of fact, the only fire found in all the reconnaissance photographs, was one small trash fire behind the "Canada" compound.

Lastly, all the long lines of persons waiting to be "gassed" in the non-existent "gas chambers" didn't exist! The vast herds of Unicorns that we have heard so much about never showed up in any of the photographs.

Dino A. Brugioni and Robert G. Poirier, the two C.I.A. photo-interpretation experts, could not understand why all the "historical" evidence of the Holocaust was missing. After all, like all other Americans, they had been told about the great smoking chimneys, and the flames leaping into the sky, and the flaming pits, and the long lines of victims waiting to be "gassed"—their entire lives! Alas, that always seems to happen when one tries to document "war propaganda" as history.

The distinguished American historian, Professor Harry Elmer Barnes, discounted all the fantastic tales of the Holocaust back in 1967. Given the prestige of Dr. Barnes, the Holocaust should have died in '67. However, the Holocaust is not history, it is not science, it is by dictionary definition, propaganda: "Ideas, facts, or allegations spread deliberately to further one's cause or to damage an opposing cause." (Webster's Seventh.)

Classic example: In the spring of 1940 the Russians marched off 14,500 Polish P.O.W.s: officers and specialists captured when they invaded Poland in 1939 in concert with the Germans. In the spring of 1943 the German Army found the mass grave of 4,253 of these Polish officers in the Katyn Forest of the Soviet Union.

Every reputable historian knew that the Russians had committed this war crime. However, the Holocausters found it convenient to lumber all the Russian atrocities on the Germans, so the Germans were blamed for the Katyn Forest Massacre by the Holocausters; while the Russians were blamed by all the historians. When President Reagan mentioned the Katyn Forest Massacre and blamed the Russians, he was loudly chided by the Holocausters and the media for "taking sides" in an alleged "historical debate." Of course, there had never been any debate amongst the historians: the Russians committed the massacre.

With freedom coming to Poland, the Poles are now demanding that the Russians admit responsibility for the Katyn Forest Massacre. After forty-seven years of blaming the Germans, the Holocausters, having no other recourse, are now willing to admit that it was the Russians who committed the massacre. With this incredible addition: After more than fifty-years of complaining that the Poles are anti-Semitic and Jews were always barred from the Polish Officer Corps, the Holocausters have now decided that nearly all of the 14,500 Polish Officers were.... Jews!

Since the Holocaust is Hollywood and not history, real and imagined atrocities are routinely "recruited" into the plot; the Holocaust is as much an historical happening as a Soap Opera.

6. SHOAH BUSINESS

Professor Needle states that the Polish Government is promoting Auschwitz as a tourist attraction. Well, that's not news, they've been doing that for years.

Like Fred Leuchter, a Swedish gentlemen named Ditlieb Felderer went to Auschwitz to see all the horrors for himself. Mr. Leuchter's expertise in gas chambers told him immediately that what he was shown at Auschwitz was obviously a fraud. Mr. Felderer is Jewish and he was quite willing to believe the Holocaust until he arrived at Auschwitz, where his common sense told him it was a fraud. As George Orwell said, "The heresy of all heresies in a tyranny is common sense," and Mr. Felderer obviously possessed a considerable degree of good ol' common sense. When he realized the Holocaust was a monumental fraud, he decided to document the fraud.

Mr. Felderer became the tourist of all tourists at Auschwitz, Birkenau and Maidanek. In fact, he returned to Poland and made the tour twenty-six more times. He took soil samples, over 30,000 color photographs, and he went through Auschwitz from top to bottom even breaking into the buildings that were sealed off to take photographs of what he found inside. He found the whole business to be a vast fraud, a carnival House of Horrors, a Disneyland of the doomed, catering in large measure, to Jewish tourists willing to believe anything and everything the tour guides could think up.

Example: the "famous" gas chamber in Auschwitz. A low, flat building which was originally a German mortuary and crematory. When one enters the front door, the mortuary is on the right and the crematory is on the left. It's across the square from the SS barracks and it mainly served the Germans; in fact, the wife of the former commander had been cremated there.

During the war the Germans removed two partitions from the mortuary room making it into one large room; it was to be used as a bomb shelter since it had a reinforced concrete roof.

After the war, the Russians who then controlled Auschwitz, decided to open the place up for tourists. In responding to the constant demands of Jewish tourists who wanted to see a "gas chamber," and presumably enjoy a really good "suffer," the Russians lugged a jackhammer up on the roof of the mortuary and chopped four holes in the roof. They then put four wooden boxes over the holes—to keep the rain and snow out—and called it a "gas chamber." Not quite up to Disney standards, but it did seem to satisfy the "sufferers."

It would, if one was a blithering idiot without a scintilla of common sense. In this "special-effects" failure,the happy, or unhappy, tourist (depending on one's desires) can clearly see where the partitions had been in this alleged "gas chamber"—showing that this large room had once been three small rooms. The tourist may then examine the four crude holes chopped through the concrete ceiling; the cut, bent-down and rusting reinforcing rods in the concrete; and the door at the far end of the alleged "gas chamber," which is not hermetically sealed as it would be in a real gas chamber. In point of fact, the door of this "gas chamber" is a standard medical door one might find in any hospital—or mortuary. It is wooden, with a large glass in it. It has no lock or bolt on it. It is ridiculous!

A great many Americans have seen this alleged "gas chamber." Not as tourists, as viewers of our aptly named "Boob Tube." This is the very same building that Claude Lanzmann repeatedly filmed in his Shoah dirge. Indeed, one remembers how Mr. Lanzmann took his camera into the front door of this house of horrors! He turned to the left to film the ovens in the crematory; he turned to the right to film the "gas chamber" and. . . .the film went black! In short: Lanzmann could not show the "gas chamber," because it was just too silly to believe. He wisely decided that the preposterous "gas chamber" was just too much of an assault on common sense. Orwell was right: the heresy of all heresies in this Holocaust tyranny is common sense.

In his Shoah epic, Mr. Lanzmann slowly took his camera all around this alleged "gas chamber"—so the viewers could see the large and very impressive chimney behind the building. I'm sure a great many viewers of the Lanzmann dirge were puzzled by the fact that the crematory chimney was not attached to the building—yet another assault on common sense.

The answer is simple: it was easier to build the chimney if it was not next to the building. Still doesn't make sense? Well, it will. According to the Polish tour guides that perennial tourist Ditlieb Felderer came to know so well: the Russians modified the former mortuary and crematory as a "re-creation" of a "gas chamber" for the tourists, and, as an afterthought, they ordered a chimney built for "dramatic effect." In point of fact, the chimney is solid brick—it has no flue—so the Polish workmen saw no need of putting it next to the building. I'm inclined to think of it as a Polish joke—on the Russians. The workmen were ordered to build something completely useless, so they made sure anyone with common sense would realize it was useless.

When one considers that Claude Lanzmann returned, again and again, with his camera to this Russian joke—expending at least an hour of film on this monstrous assault on common sense—Shoah becomes a certifiable farce.

One can well imagine the reaction of Fred Leuchter, the designer of the new, hermetically sealed gas chamber for the State of Missouri, with its heavy steel door and its sophisticated ventilation system requiring a forty-foot stainless steel ventilation stack, when he saw the crude holes chopped in the ceiling, the wooden door, and the chimney without a flue.

There were no gas chambers at Auschwitz to copy, so the Russians had to invent one—and they did a very bad job of it. Only a person completely bereft of common sense, or someone dependent on the Holocaust business, could accept the sinister, ominous and frightening Auschwitz "gas chamber"—without giggling! Naturally, I await Professor Needle's "torment" on the "gas chamber," as he is clearly not in a position where he can afford a "giggle." Even a small one.

7. THE WAILING WALL OF AUSCHWITZ.

Another great tourist attraction at Auschwitz, is the infamous "Wall of Death" (everything sounds like a "B" movie), a wall at the far end of a secluded street where 20,000 Jews are supposed to have been shot during the time Auschwitz was in operation.

Whoops! I almost forgot. Last November (1989) West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl visited Auschwitz and it's infamous "Wall of Death," and in honor of the occasion they raised the number of Jews shot at the "Wall" from 20,000 to 30,000 (Star-Ledger, 15 Nov. 1989). As previously stated: the Holocaust is Hollywood and not history. And as we all know, anything goes with Hollywood.

These Hollywood changes in the Holocaust script happen quite often. The Holocaust is much like modern art, if you can get away with it...call it art. If not...call it rubbish. Of course, it's easy to get away with almost anything in Holocausting, in that, if someone were so boorish as to notice the addition of another ten-thousand Jews to the "Wall of Death," he would certainly be called "anti-Semitic—and probably" anti-academic."

It makes little difference, another ten-thousand or another twenty-thousand, there is not one shred of evidence that anyone was shot at the infamous wall, and a lot of evidence that no one was ever shot at the wall.

We have Ditlieb Felderer and his Orwellian common sense to thank for the truth. The ever-inquisitive Mr. Felderer did what few tourists have ever done. He simply walked up to the "shrine" in front of the "Wall of Death," where tourists were encouraged to hang wreaths in memory of the 20,OOO..Whoops!..30,000 Jews who were shot at the "wall," and he looked behind the "shrine" at the wall. And there wasn't a mark on the wall where 20,000, or 30,000, Jews had been shot during the years that Auschwitz was in operation! Like the preposterous "gas chamber," the "Wall of Death" was an assault on common sense.

The infamous wall is actually part of the original military base—it had been home to a cavalry unit. It is granite and dark from age. Had it been used as a backstop for mass executions, it would have been pretty-well chewed up, and it's unmarked. There would also be a lot of lead embedded in the wall, and bits of bone and tissue embedded in the wall and in the lead. Sounds kind of nasty, but that's the truth.

Clearly, the infamous "Wall of Death" could never stand up to a forensic examination. A close inspection and a few scientific tests would prove it to be a complete fraud. So the real purpose of the "shrine" in front of the wall is to hide the truth: a wall that was never used for any executions.

Any mortician on the planet knows that crematories don't belch vast clouds of black smoke and ashes from the bodies that are cremated, and the endless claims by Jews that the non-existent black smoke and falling ashes were the bodies of relatives is absolute nonsense.

Any fireman will tell you that a chimney cannot contain flames without disintegrating, and the endless claims of chimneys with seventeen foot flames burning day and night are lies.

Any garage mechanic knows that the alleged "gassing" of Jews by "diesel engines," as described in the Holocaust, is scientifically impossible. More lies!

One need not be a scientist to discredit these preposterous tales cooked up by persons who obviously knew nothing about the physical, scientific; and mechanical impossibilities in their tales.

Case in point: The "wall" is granite and it is located at the end of a cobblestone street—a cul-de-sac—with masonry buildings on each side of the street. Anyone who has fired on a range in the winter, with a nice, soft backstop of dirt, knows he will probably get some "return fire" if a frost has hardened the ground. When one hears bits "buzzing" by—it's time to cease fire until the ground thaws. And yet...we are expected to believe that the Germans "mowed down" vast numbers of Jews at a granite wall, with rounds bouncing off the wall, the cobblestones and the buildings—like thousands of Ping-Pong balls run AMOK!

The Germans were not that ignorant, that stupid, and that lacking in common sense to even try something so silly. Anyone who was dumb enough to try it would surely sustain a lot of casualties.

That brand of ignorance, stupidity, and complete lack of commons sense can only be found in the preposterous Holocaust, where ridiculous and impossible tales that would be quickly discredited in any other arena are the norm. And these silly tales are sustained by nothing more than howls of "anti-Semitic." In the make-believe world of the Holocaust, the world is quite flat and the moon is a great big green cheese, and it has been that way for more than forty-five years. If you don't believe it...you're ANTI-SEMITIC!

The curious Mr. Felderer wondered what lay on the other side of the terrible "Wall of Death," where 20,000 (pre-Kohl visit) Jews were shot out of sight and sound of the rest of the camp. The secluded placement of the "Wall of Death" was a major part of the Holocaust tale. So he walked all the way around the block just to see what was on the other side of the infamous "wall."

Mr. Felderer soon noticed that he was entering the recreation area of the camp where playing fields had been laid out by the Germans. And on the other side of the wall, precisely behind the wall where 30,000 Jews were shot without leaving a mark, he found...the camp swimming pool!

Yes indeed, while some of the inmates of the camp were happily frolicking in the swimming pool and diving off the spring-board, just behind the wall near the pool, 30,000 Jews were being shot! Without leaving a mark on the wall! And without making a sound that would disturb the happy swimmers! To quote that great American philosopher, Charlie Brown of "Peanuts" fame: "My stomach hurts!"

Clearly, a dark and ominous looking wall at the end of a lonely street, became the inspiration for yet another Holocaust tale. And now it has a life of its own, and the lie gets bigger and bigger with each and every telling of the tale. Little wonder many historians refer to the Holocaust as the "Holohoax."

Director Shmuel Krakowski, the Yad Vashem curator of 10,000 "unreliable" tales, gives us an explanation when he states: "many survivors wanting to be part of history let their imaginations run away with them." Unfortunately, the United States executed a great many Germans on the basis of these wild imaginings. And these very same Holocaust tales are used, to this very day, to justify a Jewish claim on special privileges in the United States and an Israel claim on nearly all of our foreign aid. The long-suffering American people have been paying, at home and abroad, for the ridiculous "gas chamber," and the preposterous "wall," and scores of equally silly tales for more than forty years! The American people are not going to be amused when they find out—and they will—what they've been paying for all those years. The Holocaust is more a swindle than a hoax.

A day of reckoning is at hand. With the fall of communism in Eastern Europe and the people demanding the "truth" about the past; with Russian atrocities long lumbered on the Germans by the Holocausters, now being added, almost daily, to Stalin's growing list of genocides; with no need to maintain the propaganda mandated by the Soviet Union and the records now open to western scholars, the Holocaust house of cards will soon come crashing down.

One can certainly understand why the Polish government wished, for political and monetary reasons, to keep Auschwitz functioning as a grim Disneyland. When one refers to Eastern Germany today, one is really referring to land that was historic central Germany. All of Eastern Germany—one-fourth of the nation- is now part of Poland. In truth, the so-called Holocaust was used by the Polish Government to justify the Polish claim on historic German territory. Indeed, the Polish Government today demands a seat at the four power discussions of German re-unification.

Few Americans realize that Poland does not have a legal right to German territory since a peace treaty ending World War Two has not yet been signed. Even if the Germans accept the existing borders, under international law a peace treaty would allow a German Government and German citizens to now sue Poland for compensation over all the property and territory seized by Poland.

On the other hand, a fourth of Poland was seized by the Soviet Union after the war and the Poles have as yet not claimed due compensation. The Communists and the Holocausters have postponed normal post-war decisions under international law that should have been settled forty-five years ago.

Another reason the Holocaust was sustained in Poland was the fact that it made money for the government. With the severe economic distress that now exists in Poland, the Polish Government naturally tried to encourage tourism as a way of getting some hard currency into the nation, even if it had to come from Jews visiting a phoney World War Two "attraction."

Of course, the demands by the Polish people for the absolute truth about the past will destroy communism. And communism will take the Holocaust down with it, in that, so many crimes that were lumbered on the Germans—for so long—under the cover of the Holocaust, were really communist crimes. Communism and the Holocaust are inextricably tied together, the truth about Polish history will destroy both of them.

It's ironic that the Holocaust, with all of its fraudulent horrors, has become so pervasive in the American media—we have it served up morning, noon and night—that it actually blots out a great many real and well-documented war crimes. A case of Hollywood obliterating history.

Example: After World War Two, sixteen million Germans were driven out of the historic German lands given to Poland and all the German areas of Czechoslovakia. Three million Germans died in the process. It is one of the true horrors of WW II that has been completely ignored by an American media consumed with fantastic tales like the preposterous "Wall of Death."

When Vaclav Havel, the new president of a free Czechoslovakia visited West Germany, he made a point of apologizing to the German people for the crimes that were committed when the Germans were driven out of Czechoslovakia. It was a noble gesture, it was an honorable gesture, and it thoroughly confused an American public that has been constantly fed on a phoney diet of Holocaust, Holocaust, Holocaust, and consequently knew nothing about the real history of the Second World War. In fact, the all-consuming Holocaust leaves little room for World History, or Ancient History, or even American History. Little wonder Americans are considered as some of the world's most ignorant people when it comes to history. All history for the American people is spelled: H-o-l-o-c-a-u-s-t.

8. THE UNKNOWN "BRITS."

If we were to continue with a Holocaust trek into the past, we might end up with the 2000 British P.O.W.s who spent most of the war at Auschwitz. These men were part of the 38,000 British troops in North Africa that surrendered to Erwin Rommel at Tobruk.

They worked at "Buna," or Monowitz, or Auschwitz III.... whatever one prefers, and they had no complaints about their treatment. More importantly, they knew nothing about any "exterminations," or "gassings." Nor did the International Red Cross representatives who visited them throughout the war. Unlike the Russians and the Japanese, the Germans were signatories to the Geneva Convention and they had to open all their camps, military and civilian, to inspections by the International Red Cross.

Of course, there was one complaint of note: The British P.O.W.s and the British Government, protested the type of work assigned to the British P.O.W.s. They had been put to work building a synthetic rubber plant, and it was thought that this was a violation of the Geneva Convention; in that, synthetic rubber had a military application and P.O.W.s are not obliged to work on projects that have a military useage.

The International Red Cross was called in to investigate and decide if working on a synthetic rubber plant was a violation of the Geneva Convention. So, one had the British Government, the German Government, the British P.O.W.s and the International Red Cross involved in debates on working conditions and the type of labor performed at Auschwitz—during the very time that the alleged Holocaust was supposedly going full bore. And no one seemed to notice it! Or even mention it! Little wonder the Holocausters never mention the British P.O.W.s or the visits of the International Red Cross at Auschwitz. Given this knowledge, common sense would trample their precious Holocaust right into the mud. Rather than have the truth leak out, the Holocausters have shoved 2000 British P.O.W.s and the International Red Cross down an Orwellian "memory hole."

Oh yes, the International Red Cross decided that synthetic rubber has a civilian as well as military usage, so it was legitimate work for a P.O.W.

9. REAL NUMBERS.

SS General Oswald Pohl had been in charge of all the concentration camps. During a six-month period in 1946, he went through 60 to 80 "interrogations" by British and Americans—losing his front teeth in the process. In short, he was tortured and it was an outrageous violation of the Geneva Convention—especially since he was a general officer with specific rights under the Geneva Convention.

The Japanese tortured our P.O.W.s, but the Germans did not—no matter how many Hollywood films one has seen. However, President Truman disgraced and dishonored this nation by caving into the demands of B'nai B'rith that Jews be put in charge of all Germans that were alleged to have been war criminals. The Jews made up the lists of "war criminals." The Jews made up the lists of fantastic crimes. And the Jews were put in charge of all the alleged "war criminals." These Jews conducted a systematic torture of German P.O.W.s—until a committee of the U.S. Congress found out about it and put a stop to these disgusting war crimes.

Those who tortured helpless P.O.W.s in violation of the treatment of P.O.W.s under the Geneva Convention, should have been court-martialed for their war crimes—and they would have been tried if the military had any say in the matter—but they were creatures of the politicians and not true military. So, the inventors of fantastic "war crimes" were allowed to get away with real war crimes.

Fortunately, they succeeded in their tortures. I say fortunately, since they clearly documented their filthy tortures by the truly incredible "confessions" that they made their victims sign.

When they finished with General Pohl, he had been forced to sign a "confession" stating that he had killed THIRTY MILLION PEOPLE, and that he had condemned another TEN MILLION PEOPLE to death!

One man charged with the death of "forty million," may seem incredible to those who only know of the fabulous "six million." However, it was the norm in those days when Jew losses were estimated (by various Jews and Jewish Organizations) at: 50 million; 41 million; 36 million (Olga Lengyel); 26 million; 25 million (the so-called Gerstein "Confession"); 18 million; 12 million (original claim of Jews at U.N.); and 6 million when the U.N. would not believe the 12 million. It was 12 million one day, and six million the next day—real Hollywood. Incidentally, few knowledgeable persons at the U.N. believed the 6 million figure. B'nai B'rith simply insisted that President Truman and the Congress believe 6 million, and they did—without a shred of evidence!

General Pohl was condemned to death at Nuremberg and executed for his truly preposterous crime: the murder of thirty or forty million people—using a confession that was clearly produced by torture. It's one of the many "lynchings" (that's what the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court called them) that dishonor our nation and our people, since the unfortunate Gen. Pohl was condemned to death "In the name of the United States and the American people," so we were all dragged into these despicable crimes. Of the more than 450 Germans we executed as "war criminals," a great many were condemned to death on torture confessions just as ridiculous as Gen. Pohl's.

Before he was executed (murdered), Gen. Pohl left a statement telling of his torture. He also stated, for the information of true historians and not Holocausters, that between 1933 and 1945, the number of persons that died from all causes in German Concentration Camps, was 200,000 to 250,000. He said that most of them perished in the final months of the war when food and medicine became short.

It's interesting to note that Pohl's pre-execution (deathbed?) statement agrees with the original estimates made by the International Red Cross right after the war—before the screams and howls of the Holocausters silenced them. At that time the Red Cross held the Allied air interdiction of all German supply lines—that cut transport by rail, truck, and water—as responsible for the terrible conditions in the camps. Probably true, but the interdiction of supplies was a legitimate military action, and pilots who shot-up trains, trucks and barges, had no way of knowing if they contained food and medicine for the camps or munitions for the German troops.

When one considers the latest release of information by the Soviets, the 74,000 listed in the Auschwitz Death Registers, General Pohl's estimate of 200,000 to 250,000 deaths, in toto, adds up. It will delight true historians, and infuriate Hollywood Holocausters.

10. NUMBERS BY GEORGE.

When dealing with the Holocaust, all things, great and small, take on an Orwellian aura. Including the arithmetic! Example: The original 6 million Jews had been parceled out amongst all the concentration camps of Western Europe and Germany—from Holland in the west to Poland in the east. In point of fact, 5 of the fabulous 6 million had been assigned to the concentration camps of Western Europe and Germany—and only 1 million were allotted to Poland.

The crude politics of this maneuver, was to "indict" as many western nations as possible in the Holocaust, by virtue of having "death camps" on their soil, and demand that they expiate their alleged "crimes" by recognition of the Jew's "right" to seize Palestine, and by very large infusions of cash to Israel.

Of course, the problem with this tactic was that fact that these alleged "death camps," in Western Europe and Germany, were open to the inspections of scientists and scholars. In fact, all these alleged "death camps" were soon proven to have been nothing more than "work camps." They were certainly not the fabled "extermination camps " that we now know were the product of all the wild "imaginings" now recorded at the Yad Vashem.

A plaque had once been affixed to the wall of the shower room at Dachau. It claimed that 238,000 people had been "gassed" in this "gas chamber" that had been cleverly disguised as a "shower room." Of course, the scientists and scholars soon proved that the infamous "gas chamber" at Dachau was nothing more than a shower room.

The accepted number of deaths at Dachau from disease and starvation is now estimated by scholars at 20,000. Most of these deaths occurred in the later months of the war—and no one was "gassed." More importantly, no one (major Holocausters included) now claims that anyone was ever "gassed" at Dachau! So, Dachau went from 238,000 "gassing victims" down to 0 "gassing victims."

Scientists and scholars proved, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that the 5 million alleged victims of the Holocaust assigned to Western Europe and Germany had never existed! So one might assume that only the one million alleged victims that were assigned to Poland Now existed.

No such luck! In Orwell's 1984, the hero Winston Smith was made to believe that 2 plus 2 equaled...5! In the Holocaust, 6 minus 5 equals...6! As rapidly as "gassing victims" were shown to have never existed in the west, they were "transported" by the Holocausters to the east behind the Iron Curtain, where they were safe from the prying eyes and forensic examinations of western scholars and scientists. Indeed, Fred Leuchter had to post a look-out when he took his samples at Auschwitz. And the ever-inquisitive Ditlieb Felderer had to quietly leave the guided tours in order to break into the sealed-off buildings. A passion for truth often compels honorable men to take chances.

A remarkable feat of legerdemain: By 1960 even the Yad Vashem in Israel no longer pretended that there had ever been any "gas chambers" or "death camps" in Western Europe or all of Germany! By order of the Professional Holocausters: all the "gas chambers" and "death camps" of Western Europe and Germany...were now officially in Poland! A "movable" Historical happening—the only one in history. Other historical events remain firmly fixed, geographically; the Holopcaust "happenings" can leap a thousand miles. Like one of the truly fabulous frogs one finds in the Talmud (as in: A frog large enough to cover a village of sixty houses.), scientists and scholars chased the bounding "gas chambers" and leaping "death camps" clear across all of Europe, until, with one great leap, it jumped over the Iron Curtain into Poland.

I find it rather amusing that my old nineteen-sixties Encyclopedia Britannica informs its readers that an amazing 72,000 Jews were "gassed" at Dachau! Now, how about that! It also informs the reader that estimates "as high as one million Poles, Jews and Gypsies were killed at Auschwitz.: Obviously, my Britannica is pre-legerdemain, before five million mythical Jews, replete with their mytical "gas chambers," were mytically wafted over the Iron Curtain into Poland. So Holocausters like Professor Needle can now claim that four million of those mytical Jews were "gassed" in their mythical "gas chambers" in Auschwitz.

Amazingly, some Poles also claim that four million Poles were done in at Auschwitz. And, lest we forget, the Gypsies claim that one million Gypsies also met a terrible end at Auschwitz. A true horror, since that would be almost twice the number of Gypsies known to have been in Europe.

Naturally, it is considered very bad form for one to cry out: "Say...Doesn't that make nine million victims at Auschwitz?"

Of course not! Using Orwellian arithmetic: 4 plus 4 plus 1 equals...4! Or any number you feel like...if you're a Holocauster. Using my arithmetic: An undocumented 4, plus another undocumented 4, plus an undocumented 1, equals...74,000 "documented" deaths in the Auschwitz Death Registers. If Professor Needle doesn't agree with my arithmetic and he still insists on using his Orwellian numbers...let him prove it!

11. SLIPPERY SIMON.

Well...it took until 1975 before Ultra-Holocauster, Simon Wiesenthal, finally admitted that there had been no "gas chambers" or "death camps" in Western Europe or Germany. His understandable reticence was due to the embarrassing fact that he was at Mauthausen and he had always claimed that it had been a "death camp" replete with "gas chambers." And he had said it for thirty years! A very, very long fib!

However, telling the truth was obviously too much of a strain on "Slippery" Simon. In an interview for USA Today (1983), Simon "slipped" all the way back into one of his old routines when he said: "I was one of 34 prisoners alive out of 150,000 who had been there" (Mauthausen). He was back to fibbing.

Now, let me see...the Encyclopaedia Judaica clearly states that 212,000 inmates survived internment at Mauthausen. So... that's a "slip" of 212,966. Just about par for Slippery Simon.

These fantastic flights of fancy are nothing new for Simon Wiesenthal. He has, at the very least, three different versions of his alleged life during the war. Each one more fantastic than the last.

Why this dazzling display of footwork by Slippery Simon? What has he to hide? What is he trying to cover up with these fantastic tales?

The truth about Simon Wiesenthal will probably come from Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky. Chancellor Kreisky is himself a Jew, and he has openly charged Simon Wiesenthal with being an agent of the Germans during the war and not the poor victim that he pretends.

Most interesting, in that, some Poles have long insisted that self-styled "Nazi Hunter" Wiesenthal had been on the Polish list of "war criminals" as an agent of the Gestapo. Now, how's that for chutzpah?

Chancellor Kreisky is thoroughly disgusted with Wiesenthal running around and pointing fingers at people, who have then been proven to have been innocent of Wiesenthal's charges. He has accused Wiesenthal and his Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles with using "Mafia methods." And he has often hinted to reporters that some day he is going to spill the beans on Slippery Simon. I can hardly wait!

12. A LICENSE TO STEAL.

The Holocaust has given professional "survivors" a license to steal, since no one is allowed to disagree with any tale concocted by anyone professing to be a "survivor." Of which there now appear to be many millions. Incredibly, West Germany now has almost five million claims by alleged Holocaust "survivors" for compensation! Some of these claimants say their claim is for a whole family of "survivors." All still living 45 years after the war! So, in this incredible Holocaust numbers game, the Germans could be dealing with claims for compensation from 10 to 15 million Jews. And that doesn't even include any claims for compensation from the Jews of Eastern Europe. In short: there are clearly more claims for compensation from Jews, than there are Jews on the planet earth! Who ever said that there is no "free lunch"?

13. AN ACCOUNTING.

Like a great many professional Holocausters who were given a license to lie—since no one would dare to contradict them—Simon Wiesenthal has clearly been caught up in his vast network of lies.

As has that other old "pro," Elie Wiesel. Wiesel has, at different times, claimed to have been liberated from 4 different Concentration Camps; by 3 different armies; in 2 different countries! In recent years he has resurrected his two older sisters that he said were killed off at Auschwitz; he recently had his little sister thrown into a flaming pit at Auschwitz, Poland, after claiming—for thirty years—that she had died (mysteriously) at Buchenwald, Germany; and having resurrected his two older sisters, he was kind of short of victims, so he decided to invent a grandmother at Auschwitz. A character that had never existed before in his tale of Auschwitz.

In his latest: Wiesel claims that he was once crossing 36th Street in New York City, when a taxicab turned the corner, ran into him...and knocked him all the way down to 35th Street! Almost...TWO-HUNDRED FEET!

Elie Wiesel is easily the greatest liar to ever appear on the planet. Like Wiesenthal and all the other professional Holocausters, he absolutely refuses to document or debate any of his fantastic tales.

It's little wonder that professional Holocausters refuse to debate any facet of their meal-ticket, the Holocaust. How could anyone defend the fantastic lies of Wiesenthal or Wiesel?

In point of fact, the Holocausters have nothing left to debate. With all of the alleged "death camps" of Western Europe and Germany long proven to have been "work camps," and all the alleged "death camps" of Poland now proven to have also been only "work camps"—they have nothing left to debate. Like the Cheshire Cat in "Alice," the Holocaust has vanished, leaving only a mouth howling...."ANTI-SEMITIC!"

14. A RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE?

The hallmark of a free country is the right to debate anything. I was taught that fine old American principle in grammar school. I assume all American children are given the same instruction today.

Perhaps one may refuse to debate or discuss a subject if one is not teaching that subject at taxpayers expense. Or profiting in some way from the content of a course of instruction alleged to be historical when it isn't.

Professor Needle, and all of his counterparts in the business, teach a course on the Holocaust, a course that is clearly sustained at taxpayers expense. They profit by instructing this course and also as Jews demanding all manner of special compensation and privilege because of all the undocumented events that they, themselves, have introduced into their course. In short: They constantly present large bills to the American people, demanding full payment, without a shred of evidence that the American people owe these large debts to all the Jews. If the Holocausters were in a normal business instead of Holocausting, no one in his right mind would pay their preposterous bills.

It is an undeniable fact that the hallmark of the Holocaust is the absolute refusal of Professor Needle, and all other professional Holocausters, to debate or even discuss their subject. It's outrageous! It flies in the face of academic freedom and it has no place in a taxpayer-supported institution. It is especially egregious, since the refusal to debate the subject he is teaching comes from a character on the public payroll who openly brands true scholars, who are quite willing to defend their every statement, as "anti-academics." A classic case of Orwellian "Black-white." Wherein: Jack Needle, who will not debate or discuss any facet of his preposterous propaganda, calls true scholars: "anti-academics."

Religion may be defined as, "a cause, principle, or system of beliefs held to with ardor and faith" (Webster's Seventh Collegiate Dictionary). History may be defined as, "a chronological record of significant events (as affecting a nation, institution) usu. including an explanation of their causes" (Ibid.). Professor Needle professes to teach "history" in a course of instruction that relies on nothing more than blind faith in preposterous events that assault one's common sense, and not the scrupulous documentation and heavily footnoted references that one finds in a true history course.

In truth: Having claimed tuition in the secular, history, Professor Needle quickly dons the vestments of a priest and pontificates that it is sacrilegious to be a "non-believer" in his miraculous events—one must never question the Holocaust "faith." Empirical reasoning dictates that Professor Needle is teaching a religion and not a secular subject, since his teaching is clearly outside the norms of academic instruction.

Of course, the Holocaust as a Jewish "religion" is not a new concept. It's been assessed as such by every open-minded person to do any research on this alleged historic happening. Recently, the Jewish author, Jacobo Timerman, joined the club by proclaiming the Holocaust as a "civil religion" for many Jews.

I'm sure Professor Needle favors the Constitutional separation of church and state; therefore, the honorable thing to do, would be to drop the "religious" instruction of the Holocaust and modify his course to conform with the basic standards of academic freedom that one finds in all secular instruction. To wit: The freedom to question or debate any facet of his course of instruction, along with his expressed willingness to defend the content of the course that he has been teaching at Brookdale—just like all the other professors.

Having just refreshed his knowledge and experience of the Holocaust on his trip to Auschwitz and Maidanek, Professor Needle should be primed to defend each and every one of the truly miraculous events one finds in the Holocaust. Therefore, let me suggest a debate in the press, or in a public forum, wherein we may arrive at the truth. After all, that's the purpose of a debate, isn't it? And a debate is such a fine, old American tradition that has served this nation since its birth as a free country. In a free and open debate, I might even be able to field some well-known authors who have written extensively on the subject.

There is also an obligation to debate this subject, since it's an undeniable fact that the Holocaust has represented a very large claim on our treasury for more than forty-years. All the American people are well aware of this considerable expense, so they certainly have a right to know the truth about a claim that has been so very, very costly.

A debate could actually be very desirable for the Holocausters; in that, the actual documentation—at long last—of all the Holocaust tales that have been presented in such a lurid Hollywood fashion, on faith alone, would go a long way towards justifying the many billions going to Israel each and every year—for forty-two years! In fact, in proving the Holocaust to be an historical fact—and not just World War Two propaganda—the Holocausters might even initiate an increase in the billions flowing to Israel. If the Holocaust is true, they have nothing to fear and a great deal to gain.

Naturally, documentation proving the Holocaust to be Hollywood and not history, would have the opposite effect on the billions flowing to Israel. To say the very least! The documentation of the Holocaust as pure Hollywood, would make it the greatest swindle in history!

The reasons for debating are quite compelling. There is only one reason to not debate: Orwellian common sense dictates that the refusal of the Holocausters to debate their Holocaust confirms that it really is the greatest swindle in history.

With the nations of Eastern Europe testing the waters of Democracy, many for the first time in forty-five years, there is no better time to demonstrate the hallmark of our free nation: the right to debate anything! May I suggest this title for the debate:

THE HOLOCAUST, HISTORY OR HOLLYWOOD?

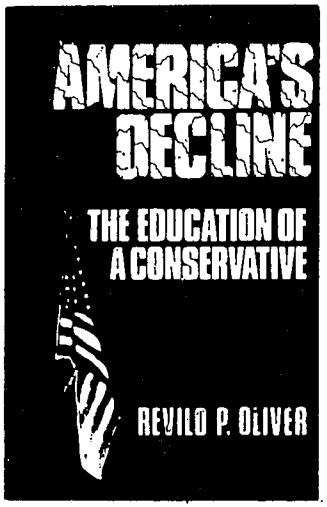
DO YOUR PART TODAY—HELP FREE OUR WHITE RACE FROM ALIEN DOMINATION!



ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

EUROPE'S FUTURE

What is portended by recent events in Russia and Germany is a problem of the first order. At this writing, only two things are certain:

- In the United States, the boobs will suffer, and probably suffer excruciatingly;
- In Europe, the only thing that matters is the future of Germany, which the Jews' savages sundered into three parts in 1945. The merging of two of those parts now seems assured.

Readers of this periodical, I am sure, will have paid no attention to the flood of effervescent hogwash about a "failure of Communism" and a "victory for democracy" that inundated the press and the electronic show-box. That was for the boobs.

There has been no significant change in Europe, within or outside the Soviet Union, just as there is no significant change in an opera when one soprano is replaced by another.

The ascent of Gorbachev to the post of general manager in the Soviet was naturally saluted with the usual fanfare about a "mellowing of the régime" etc. ad nauseam. Needless to say, that was just another performance of the farce that has been periodically staged since 1918 to convince suckers that the Communist régime was becoming civilized. One variation of the performance, staged separately or with the other, is designed to give the impression that the Jews are losing control of their Soviet colony.[1]

1. Even a veteran intelligence officer, Commander Riis, was deceived in his old age when he slipped aboard the ship that brought Krushchev to this country for a song-and-dance act in the United Nations. Riis, who spoke Russian fluently, succeeded in interviewing agents of the Russian secret service disguised as simple sailors, and he believed their assurance that Krushchev, who was almost certainly a Kike, was a "real Russian" who was putting the international vermin in their place. Cf. The Enemy of Our Enemies, p. 76. n. 24.

It was not really surprising, therefore, that the first indication of a change of possible significance after the advent of Gorbachev was the toleration of a Russian nationalist movement called Pamyat, which, if not a device for identifying and eventually liquidating potential opposition, suggested a shift in internal policies to utilize the racial and national loyalty of the Russians, as Stalin had done.[2]

Pamyat has always asserted that "Zionists" (the evasive word for Jews that has always been tolerated and even promoted in the Soviet) were responsible for the overthrow of the monarchy and the descent of Russia into feral barbarism. Now the head of the Pamyat movement is quoted as saying that the Jews (there's the honest word at last) engineered the revolution of 1917-18 to destroy Russia, murder the more civilized part of the population, and enable the world's vampires to feed on Russian blood without fear of interruption. He observes that all the sub-bestial creatures who have ruled Russia during that barbarism, from Lenin to Brezhnev (real name, Garbanski) were Sheenies, with the partial exception of Stalin. Even today, the overwhelming majority in the Russian Academy of Sciences is composed of Yids, who, with their fellow tribesmen in other state institutions, are responsible for the "moribund state" of scientific studies. It has been a long time since such facts could be publicly stated in Russia. (In 1979, Professor Valery Yemelyanov, who had dared to state a few facts about Yids in a private memorandum that was stolen by the ever vigilant parasites, was summarily fired from his academic position and tortured in a "psychiatric hospital.") Of course, the Sheenies, by automatic reflex, instantly began to scream that millions of God's precious masterpieces were about to be stuffed into gas chambers, just as in their great hoax.

The toleration of Pamyat was complemented by arrangements for increasing numbers of Sheenies to flit to the United States to join their millions of fellow tribesmen in battening on the American boobs.[3] Some observers prematurely conjectured that Gorbachev was exporting the godly parasites to clean up his country, and indulged in the specious hope that our race might eventually be defended by the Soviets, whom the Americans, as directed by their masters, had labored so hard for so long to maintain, subsidize and equip.

It is just possible that Gorbachev, with the permission of his masters, acted to reduce the pervasive corruption of society that always accompanies Jews, and disintegrates effective administration under any form of government. There are said to be 175,000 millionaires in Soviet Russia, most of them, no doubt, Kikes who became wealthy by the theft, bribery, and smuggling of which Semis and others who came to this country openly boasted, making simple-minded "conservatives" rejoice at "free enterprise" in a Communist country.[4]

The present farce was, of course, planned in detail long before it was made public for the benefit of journalists who are proud they knew how to spell 'glasnost.' Six years ago, in 1984, Anatoly Golitzyn, who defected from the Soviet espionage and terrorist agency ('KGB'), predicted "a false liberalization in Eastern Europe, with reforms so dazzling that the West will be incapable of retaining a consensus [he thought there was one!] in favor of a strong defense." The reforms were specifically to include elimination of barriers between the western and eastern thirds of Germany, and a "coalition" government in Poland.

Preparations for the big show were doubtless under way when Golitzyn defected, and selected Sheenies were being groomed for their rôles as "anti-Communists" and "champions of democracy," ready to take over from their Communist kinsmen when the star performers, Gorby & Bushy, came on the stage of the Jews' world-theater, bowing to the applause of simpletons. Attentive observers have noticed that in all the "liberated" satellites of the Soviet, from Poland and Hungary to Romania and Bulgaria, the "new" régimes are run by Kikes, although their front-man may be a stupid or venal native of the country the invaders continue to hold in helpless servitude.

3. The number of poisonous parasites now in this country is unknown. They provide statistics that are naturally deceptive, in keeping with the instincts of a race that lives by deceit. A Jewish admission that there were twenty-three million of them battening on Americans by 1920, before the great influx that came when the Germans tried to clean up Germany, may be an inadvertent admission of fact or just another canard.

4. See Liberty Bell, November 1984, pp. 1-8.

The figurehead in Washington, first Ronnie and then Bushy, held meetings with Gorbachev of the kind the press likes to call "summit," at which, in addition to general jollification and an exchange of dirty stories, the two managers[5] or their crews doubtless coördinated their rôles in the comedy that was to be played for their subjects, perhaps principally for the Americans.

They arranged for the Masters of Deceit to use their Holohoax racket to extort money from the inhabitants of the part of Germany the Americans gave to the Soviet, thus supplementing the loot now taken from the western third of the unfortunate nation. According to the official statement by Dietrich Granow, Consul General of the western fragment of Germany, the Sheenies had, by January 1988, used their Holohoax to extort from those Germans a total of seven trillion, three hundred and ninety billion dollars ($7,390,000,000,000.), and, of course, the vampires are continuing to suck the blood of the hated Aryans there. They will now shakedown the unfortunate inhabitants of the eastern fragment with the same rapacity. No one, so far as I know, has even tried to calculate how much the Sheenies have, by use of the same crude fiction, extorted from the equally hated Americans, who were their thoughtless tools in wreaking vengeance on the Germans for trying to have a country of their own.

Then, with a burst of fanfare from the orchestra, came the glorious "liberation" of the Soviets' satellite states in Eastern

5. Lawrence Patterson, in his well-known financial periodical, Criminal Politics, identifies Gorby and Bushy as "regional governors," serving under the supervisory direction of Super-Sheeny Kissinger and David Rockefeller. Whether the latter holds so exalted a rank may be doubted. Kissinger has frequently been identified as the satrap apparently charged with governing the United States.

Europe, and gullible Americans felt their cockles grow warm as they imagined that the populations that had been oppressed by the Communists were about to enjoy all the blessings of American "democracy," such as color television, football games, political games by ranting politicians, gasoline-driven go-carts, cocaine, nigger rapists, "AIDS," and lifelong servitude to usurers.

The head of a labor union was given some official recognition in Poland. Americans who had not noted the significant fact that Walesa had been made a hero by the jewspapers, imagined that he had attained his new position without the permission and encouragement of Gorbachev. A photograph, published in Candour, March-April 1989, showing Walesa being petted by David Rockefeller, told the whole story and should have made the coming play clear to anyone who thought about it, even if he did not know that Walesa is surrounded and manipulated by Jews.

The progress of "liberation" in the various satellite states is illustrated by what happened in Romania. The Judaeo-Communists discarded their faithful servant and Bush's counterpart, Ceausescu, a worn-out tool, with as much compunction as you feel when you throw away a broken pair of pliers or a worn-out typewriter ribbon.[6] He was replaced by another of the same kind, who had the advantage of being comparatively unknown, and who is using the secret police to suppress the great threat to the new democracy posed by the Romanians who are anti-Communists, many of whom imprudently exposed themselves in the demonstrations that preceded the disposal of Ceausescu. The new boss, Illiescu, may be a Romanian or part-Romanian thug, but his second in command, "Premier" in the government, is, for the first time in recent decades, admittedly a Yid. And, needless to say, the enemies of mankind still have their slimy claws about the necks of the Romanians, and their new tool has obviously been charged with liquidation of the unexpectedly large opposition that exposed itself.[7] At latest reports, the secret police are hunting down "subversives" who do not sufficiently revere the race that Yahweh created to afflict mankind. Also needless to say, the great "democrat," Illiescu will, like Ceausescu, be petted and honored in Washington and subsidized by Bush's tax-paying animals. Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose.

6. In the Chalcedon Chronicle, the publication of the most intelligent group of Calvinists, a fairly accurate report of what the writer had seen on a visit to Romania (which, however, written by a pious man, naturally covered up for God's darlings), was followed by an authoritative explanation of the fall of the Communists' stooge, Ceausescu: that happened because the Christians in Romania got down on their knees and begged old Yahweh's famous scion to help them. The writer seems unaware of the obvious corollary of his explanation: either (a) the Romanians, having suffered the horrors of Communist rule for forty-five years, didn't think of yammering to Jesus until this year, or (b) old Jesus was drunk or busy or hard-hearted and didn't pay any attention to all those pleading votaries for forty-five years and then suddenly woke up, had a whim to have mercy on them at last, and stealthily planted in some Communists' minds a lust to liquidate Ceausescu. If neither (a) nor (b) is true, then it follows that Jesus had nothing to do with what happened, and (c) praying to Jesus for forty-five years was wasted effort because there is no one up there in the clouds. Now tell me how a mind, not otherwise idiotic, could fail to see that simple and obvious logic, and you will have explained Christianity.

This, you may be sure, is the drill for other satellites, with insignificant local variations. Visitors to Budapest are impressed by the sudden abundance of merchandise in the stores, and do not notice that Hungary's surplus in trade with Russia was simultaneously converted to a deficit, which the Hungarians or, more probably, the Americans will have to pay, sooner or later. And, needless to say, a fresh crew of God's Own is running the show.

A notable exception to the "liberation" over which Gorbachev presides (with a grin and a wink to Bushy) is the Balkan states,[8] and especially Lithuania, on which Gorby has

7. That, no doubt, is the unstated reason for the apprehension, that the tyranny of Illiescu will prove to be even more ferocious than Ceausescu's, expressed by the former American Ambassador to Romania, David Funderburk. See the interview excerpted in Christian News, 9 July 1990.

8. Oddly enough, there was an "illegal" request for independence from Latvia, where Latvians are now a small minority. The educated and responsible classes were tortured and murdered by the Bolsheviks in 1940, and the greater part of the remaining Latvians were crammed into boxcars and shipped to towns in the Ural Mountains, where the descendants of the few survivors still live. Mongolian savages were brought in to rape the remaining Latvian women and thus improve the genetic stock of the country. When the Germans occupied Latvia after they countered the impending Bolshevik attack on Germany in 1944, many of the murdered Latvians were exhumed from mass graves, and a cinematographic film of the corpses, many showing evidence of atrocious torture, was shown in the United States. Americans were not interested, because the extermination of Latvians was not "genocide," which is the crime of displeasing Jews.

used the most ruthless economic pressures and threats of military action to repress the desire for "independence" that he beatifically encouraged elsewhere. Various reasons are alleged, but the real one is discernable only after the smoke screen is blown away. The majority of Lithuanians are so bigoted that they do not worship the sacred Sheenies, and some of them are even so impious as to remember how those godly folk cheered and aided the Bolshevik invaders when they massacred civilized and educated Lithuanians in 1940. That is why the Yids officially demanded that Lithuanians believe the Holohoax (and, no doubt, submit to the usual extortion) as a precondition for Gorbachev's entertaining their request for self-government.

The public relations experts in Moscow are groaning about the "disastrous economic plight" of the Soviet, thus making simple-minded "conservatives" prate joyously about the beauties of "free enterprise" and the capitalism that has them by the throat with its teeth on their jugular veins. The major purpose of the act became apparent when Bushy ordered the exportation of massive amounts of the dwindling resources of his American subjects, ostensibly to finance and encourage the new "democracy." Mountains of American wheat are being exported to the Soviet at the expense of the tax-paying animals in this country, since the wheat is subsidized and so sold to the Soviets for much less then Americans would have to pay, and the rest is paid by loans, which will be guaranteed by the American serfs and so eventually paid by them. (A second purpose of the exportation may be to exhaust American reserves of wheat in storage, in preparation for the glorious time when American farmers must feed the whole world and, like their Ukrainian counterparts, themselves starve to death on the land from which the harvests have been confiscated for humanitarian purposes.)

It suffices to note that the January issue of Criminal Politics reported the official statement by Procter & Gamble, manufacturers of toothpaste, soap, and the like, that 60% of all their export trade was with poor Russia, where there must be a large demand for such wares. And since the company is not a charitable institution (except when it pays taxes), the exports which form so large a part of its business are obviously paid for by Russia's "faltering economy." Mr. Patterson identifies the economic propaganda, including, according to his sources in his June issue, a fake "May Day" parade with well-orchestrated heckling by well-trained protesters, to make simpletons ready for massive "economic aid" and a "Marshall Plan" to "restructure" the dear Soviets' economy, while Russia is secretly preparing to issue a gold-backed ruble for Americans, who will at last want to have money, after the present dollar bills have been bailed up for "recycling" to save the paper in them.

The only really noteworthy event was the migration of masses of Germans from the eastern to the western third of what the barbarians left of Germany, culminating in the breaching of the famous wall in Berlin and the opening of the border between the two thirds.

Needless to say, those events were not a "spontaneous uprising" as the buncombe in the American press tried to make the boobs believe. It was about as spontaneous as the Anvil Chorus in a performance of Il Trovatore. When that chorus was first heard, however, I doubt that critics in the audience were able to foresee the dénouement of the opera's plot, which was known only to the impresario, his staff, and the actors he had rehearsed.

In the eastern fragment of Germany overage actors were summarily retired and abandoned to whatever fate awaited them. They were replaced with younger thugs from the same old gang. The creature called Honecker, of uncertain lineage, was replaced by a Kike named Gregor Gysi, but most of the leading parasites in eastern Germany blossomed out in new clothes as "anti-Communist" and "champions of democracy."

There were a few contretemps. The orchestrated protests got out of hand at times, and, for example, a Sheeny lawyer named Wolfgang Schnur, long celebrated as the valiant defender of dissidents from Communist rule and probably already groomed for the office of Premier, was exposed as a spy for the secret police, to whom he betrayed even his clients. All of the three "reform parties" scheduled to compete with and neutralize each other in coming elections, refused at first to investigate the retired thugs, but finally yielded to popular demand so that they could better cozen the voters when the time came. And it is reported that a Jew was so indiscreet as to boast publicly that a merger of the two fragments of Germany could take place only with the gracious permission of his predatory race.

The excerpts from the German press published (in translation) in the weekly propaganda sheet of the Embassy in Washington show that at least the newspapers quoted prated about irrelevancies and were but little better than American jewspapers. One thing that seems certain, however, is amalgamation of two of the three parts of the mutilated trunk of Germany. This may even lead to replacement of the foul government now headed by a Sheeny, Kohl, and a deserter and traitor, Weizsäcker, by a more German government, though scarcely by a really patriotic one.

The probable political consequences of the suturing of the two fragments of Germany will be considered below.

Before we discuss the true import of the events staged by Gorby & Bushy in Europe, we must define the forces involved.

In each of the countries concerned, a prime mover of popular discontent was nationalism, the sense of forming a nation. Now a nation is a natio, a group of persons who are racially and ethnically so closely akin that they could be described (as they were in Antiquity) as all the descendants of an eponymous ancestor. And given the territorial imperative of mammalian life, a nation must claim a specific territory as its own. It can admit to its territory a few metics, who are respected and regarded as visitors, or large numbers of aliens who are regarded as genetically inferior, mere subjects and preferably slaves of the citizens.

When there are racially or ethnically distinct enclaves within a nation, e.g., Hungarians in Romania, Poles in Russia, or Jews anywhere, there is certain to be trouble.

Under the delusions engendered by the Christian superstition, the concept of nationality was generally falsified in Aryan lands, and a nation was identified, not by racial homogeneity, but by birth in the nation's territory. Where this stupid sham is generally accepted, as in the United States, where the American boobs even accept niggers, Jews, and Indians as fellow "Americans," the nation ceases to exist and, as Professor Andrew Hacker pointed out years ago, becomes a geographical name for territory inhabited by incompatible and secretly or openly hostile races, and certain to disintegrate into chaos before long. The Americans proudly advertised their country as a dumping ground for the world's anthropoid refuse, and they have carried their fatuity so far that they now cannot escape the consequences of disregarding and defying the forces of nature.

Europeans are not yet so stultified, and their future depends on frank recognition of racial realities.

We must, above all, understand what we mean by 'Communism.' It has long been a convenient designation of the deadly force that destroys our nations and civilization, but it is not to be identified with a particular "ideology," such as the gospel of Mordecai, alias Karl Marx, which seems now to be becoming discredited and may in future years persist only in the great majority of Christian churches, which have accepted the Marxian Reformation, sometimes called "the social gospel."[9]

The destructive force that was commonly called 'Communism' or 'Bolshevism' in the recent past consists of three analytically separable elements or layers of subversion:

(1) When the Jews invade a nation's country, usually in the guise of godly folk persecuted by the unrighteous rest of the world for their piety,[10] they, by racial instinct, intend first to defile, and then to destroy the nation. A conspiracy of Jewish leaders is well described in the famous Protocols, whoever wrote them, but to speak of a racial conspiracy of Jews is as nugatory as to speak of a conspiracy of termites,

9. It is noteworthy that the power of Illiescu, the present butcher in Romania, depends in large part on the Romanian Orthodox Church, which, like most churches in the United States, sold out and was converted to Marx's gospel decades ago. See the interview cited in Note 7 supra.

One principal technique of the invaders was described by one of their noted agitators, Apthecker, in a moment of indiscreet candor: they find groups of the inhabitants who can be isolated by something they have in common, e.g., niggers or factory workers or even females, convince them they are oppressed by the rest of the nation, excite their greed and vanity, and thus reduce the nation to a congeries of groups passionately fighting each other and sooner or later resorting to violence that makes the disparate elements irreconcilable. One contingent of the invaders subsidizes and promotes every racially deleterious vice the infected nation can be induced to tolerate. The usurers go to work to fasten economic chains on the hapless people, promoting international wars, civil wars, and every kind of internal discord to make the victims' governments borrow from their domestic enemies, and also vending to individuals baubles and playthings that the feckless purchasers cannot afford and so obtain on usurious terms. Other contingents attack every spot of potential weakness in the national fabric. Many of the invaders, especially in the early stages, become Marranos, professing conversion to whatever is the victims' dominant religion, always squeaking about "human rights," with the mental reservation that, as is said in their Talmud, only Jews are human.

10. The original occupation of part of Palestine by the Jews is best explained by the Jews' great apologist, Philo Judaeus: when the tribes came to Canaan as enemies of the people they intended to destroy, the stupid Canaanites invited the supposedly godly folk into Canaan, and it was only after the Jews had set up their ghettos and synagogues that they took over the country, doubtless by inciting the Canaanites to destroy themselves in internecine wars. Old Yahweh, it was believed, had so befuddled the minds of the Canaanites that they permitted Jews to enter their country.

The invaders always create or capture two opposing economic or political systems, such as Communism and Capitalism, and use one to undermine the other, until the vexed nation falls into the claws of the predators, as when the Soviet régime was established in Russia, financed by Jewish capitalists in the United States and other Western nations. It must be understood, however, that all such systems are merely devices for the subjugation and destruction of nations. They are merely the clothing the invaders choose to wear at a given time, and are as readily changed as coats and ties whenever it seems expedient to adopt a different disguise.

(2) Thugs and swindlers, recruited from the criminal elements native to the country, serve as stalking horses and front-men for the invaders and prevent recognition that the subversion is primarily the work of the predatory race. Politicians and similar accomplices are, of course, discarded whenever their usefulness is diminished or they have made serious mistakes.

(3) A mass of native dupes of mediocre and less than mediocre intelligence who believe the "ideology" that is used to recruit them. In the modern world, this includes all the real Communists, i.e., persons who actually believe the drivel promulgated by Marx. It may be taken as a firm rule that no believing Marxist ever attains a rank higher than that of a lackey. I have often cited the incisive perception of a young American, Duane Thorin, who, when he was long a prisoner in Korea, studied the professional Communists who tried to brainwash him, and saw that the upper grade of criminals had only contempt for subordinates who were so stupid as to believe in Marxism: "Intellects that failed to see through the falsities of communism were so arrested that they were of only limited use in the totalitarian state."[11] This expendable riff-raff can be kicked out or liquidated if it does not promptly change its faith when given a good hint. But waste no pity on the "intellectual" asses.

We must keep the tripartite nature of the destroyers in mind, if we are to understand the new fashions in clothing that are now sported by some enemies of our race in Europe. As

11. A Ride to Panmunjom, Chicago, Regnery, 1956.

Douglas Reed remarked, Jews are versipellous, and he was often amused when, on a southbound express going over the Brenner Pass, he saw Jews go to bed as Germans and arise in the morning as Italians. Do not think it matters whether a Yid is now clowning as a Communist, Capitalist, Conservative, Anti-Communist, Nationalist, Evangelist, or in whatever other guise suits his immediate purposes. His fixed purpose never varies.

There is now only one major uncertainty, but it is a great one: Have the stars in the Jews' current extravaganza, Gorby & Bushy, like inept sorcerers, released forces that will get out of control? Certainly the accumulated resentment in all the populations of the Soviet Empire, including even the Russians, is a formidable and potentially explosive power that will effect drastic changes, unless it can speedily be diverted, fragmented, and subdued by our enemies.

Americans who do not mindlessly venerate their strange god's Chosen are apt to believe that Yahweh's supermen are so superior intellectually that their devices are infallible. That is not necessarily true. It is not impossible that the sudden change of the mise en scène of their world comedy may prove to have been a blunder.

The most optimistic evaluation of the present situation by a responsible writer is the article by John Tyndall in Liberty Bell, June 1990. You have read it, so I shall only comment on the five developments that he regards as likely:

"(1)... The 'melting pot' that is the present United States will dissolve in civil war and chaos, and a new nation will have to be formed...that will correspond to ethnic realities."

This assumes the economic collapse of the society that the boobs have made bankrupt and hopelessly insolvent, so that the anthropoid vermin they have so blithely imported and cherished will turn on them. That is almost inevitable. Whether there is still in the minority of thinking Americans enough manhood and cohesion to wrest from the riotous rabble of aliens, abetted by Aryan dunderheads, a territory for a new nation is a question to which I dare not suggest an answer. If there is not and Europe becomes resurgent, the ravaged territory can again be colonized, perhaps more realistically and successfully.

"(2). Africa will...revert to European control." Thanks to the epidemic African Plague ('AIDS'), that is almost certain, if Aryans become again a viable species of mammalian life.

"(3). Japan will be driven from her dominant position...by protective measures against her exports." This is likely in any event, since the Jews will never forgive the Japanese for understanding Jews, as was shown in the large number of books on that unsavory subject published and widely read in Japan.

"(4). The European Common Market will disintegrate as a reality..." Certain, unless the several nations of Europe are destroyed.

"(5). Zionism, the most powerful single world force,...will decline into one of negligible influence." That is surely a drastic understatement. The hostes generis humani have elected a desperate struggle for all or nothing. They are supremely confident that they now, after twenty centuries, have the hated Aryans by the neck and can exterminate them slowly and with loving care to ensure a maximum of suffering. But if ever they lose their strangle hold, we may well see the glorious future that Marx suggested as sucker-bait, a World Without Jews.

With so much commentary on Mr. Tyndall's admirable article, we may consider the crucial future of Germany. The union of two of the three parts of that dismembered nation is now assured, for all practical purposes, and the native energy of the German people makes it certain that the new Germany will dominate Europe.

The partial "reunification" of Germany could serve either of two plans, videlicet:

(1) An economic and then political rapprochement between Germany and Russia, thus permitting the formation of a "democratic" coalition of Germany, the Soviet, and Poland and the other satellites to form a union, with the vast resources of German intelligence and technology at its disposal, in opposition to the "United Europe" that is now being contrived.

(2) The merging of "democratic" Germany, Russia, and its satellites in the "European Union," in which they would have the preponderant influence and become both subject to the "Western" variety of Judaeo-Communist rule and available for use against that power's North American colonies.

Both plans must be attractive to the planners. The first, while probably assuring the racial integrity of the Soviet states, would make easy the economic ruin of the rest of Europe and its eventual occupation by Soviet forces. The second plan would merge Soviet territories into the "United Europe," with the result that those lands, this far maintained more or less intact racially, would be invaded by all the world's refuse, which would have only to land anywhere in Europe and hasten to defile the still racially virgin lands of the Aryans. This would consummate the reduction of our race to the position predicted in Jean Raspail's Camp of the Saints and its eventual extermination by mongrelization and massacre.

We need not wonder which plan will be chosen by the Chosen, if they are entirely free to choose.

In all of the foregoing we have overlooked one crucial factor. Gorbachev has at his disposal the largest, and despite its inefficiency, the most formidable fighting machine in the world.[12] The Soviet army has been purged of commanders who might not be Gorbachev's enthusiastic tools,[13] and the vast army's 12. The United States once had a formidable army and navy, but demoralized and discarded it, preferring an uncohesive rabble, honeycombed with females, niggers, mongrels, and punks, commanded by nigger Generals and nigger Admirals, and fit only for victories such as the Bush's treacherous assault on his partners in Panama and the earlier triumphant occupation of a nigger-infested bump in the Caribbean. Any military power the country has left must reside in its nuclear missiles, of which the efficiency is doubtful and which nitwits will constantly strive to sabotage to appease their bulimia for world peace-posh. Even if our missiles are still operable, they are old and obsolete in comparison with any one of the three kinds of vastly more accurate and more powerful missiles that Gorbachev is now manufacturing at an accelerated rate.

13. According to the authoritative newsletter of Jane's, the publishers of the world's standard manuals of military information, fifty-nine Soviet officers, from the rank of lieutenant to general, were murdered by the secret police in 1989, and Jane's even suggested that the murders were "ethnic," i.e., a purge of racially loyal Russians.

store of the most technically advanced weapons, from missiles to aircraft and cannon, is being constantly increased, evidently on a larger scale than ever. The navy is being correspondingly strengthened and equipped for decisive action in any part of the world.

According to reports that purport to be "leaks" from reliable intelligence services, but which we have no means of verifying, the Soviets are industriously installing electronic equipment that will make their heartland, Russia, invulnerable to American missiles by 1993, or possibly late in 1992. They will therefore be in a position either to use threats or actually to destroy some unwanted part of this country without fear of reprisal, and thus force an unconditional surrender. Americans, having repudiated all the ethics of war to please the Yids, should know what will follow that surrender.

Obviously, Gorbachev is not a fool and a peace-lubber, and the wishes of dim-witted Americans will not make him one. But his preparations for war will be greatly accelerated by the billions the American boobs will be forced to contribute for "foreign aid" to the "distressed Soviets" and to "stabilize" the glorious new democracy. According to latest reports, the Americans talked five European nations and Japan into endorsing massive aid, both financial and in free agricultural products, to poor, dear Gorby to help him with his "reforms," but the endorsements were probably given to egg on the American idiots to their inevitable bankruptcy and destruction. Those favorite Communist instrumentalities for bleeding Americans, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, will probably do their part. Whom the Jews would destroy, they first make mad.

Anyway, it has been forty-five years since the last major blood-letting of American boobs, and it is time for another, stimulated, of course, by lots of righteousness, as usual.

A good trick would be a war against the Semites in the Near and Middle East, contrived by "poor little" Israel, which would, of course, order its Americans to fight for it, while the Soviet, with its now peerless fighting machine, would support the "Arabs," and crush the Americans, occupying their country and teaching Americans how their German victims felt before they were incinerated by fire-storms, as at Dresden, or done to death by brutality, starvation and exposure, as in the savage Americans' camps for prisoners.[14]

There are some indications that war will be the preferred solution, probably after 1993, if the United States has not collapsed in anarchy before that date.

In addition to the swarms that stupid Americans will pay to pollute further the country that once was theirs, swarms of Yahweh's brood are being shipped into Israël[15] to help kick more Palestinians out of their own country and eventually massacre the rest. The increment of Jews is being settled in a way that is an arrogant and derisive defiance of all Moslem states, which are losing the patience they have thus far exercised, and may, in exasperation, try to restrain the Jews and their American serfs, despite the vast arsenal of nuclear weapons the Sheenies accumulated in Israël while bleating about "world peace."

14. See the letter by Professor Martin Brech in Liberty Bell, July 1990. The authoritative Alliierte Kreigsverbrechen und Verbrechen gegen die Menschlichkeit (available from Liberty Bell Publications, $18. postpaid) was compiled shortly before the disgusting farce that preceded the murders committed at Nuremberg in violation of international law and the sense of decency once innate in our race, for which the Americans, the then preponderant military power, must bear the entire gravamen of guilt. (It is now likely that they will condignly suffer for their Jew-inspired crimes against mankind.) The horrifying record is continued in James Bacque's Other Losses ($30. postpaid). The Canadian author, whose work was made possible by two American colonels, seems hostile to the Germans; he had to pretend to believe the Sheenies' Holohoax to avoid persecution by the scoff-law government of Canada.

15. I note in passing that the correct spelling of the trisyllabic word in English is Israël, a derivative of Hebrew YŠF'L, traditionally supposed to refer to a tough Jew (Y'QB) who had a fight with Yahweh and almost beat up the old scoundrel, who won the bout by a wrestling trick. Christians, who think such a bar-room fight undignified for their deity, have imagined several nicer meanings of the word, as can be done easily in a language in which only consonants are written. The word may mean (how appropriately!) 'the fierce god.' The regular derivative is Israëlite. If the current and improper trisyllabic pronunciation of Israeli is accepted, that word is written without a diaeresis and the ae has approximately the value it has in 'Gaelic.'

In January 1989 De Courcy's Special Office Brief (which no longer has the authority of his old Intelligence Digest, but may still have some good sources)[17] reported that Russia and Germany had reached an agreement that Germany, in return for "unification," would not only undertake to remain neutral in any war between the Soviet and the United States, but would immediately arrest and imprison all American military forces now on its territory. This provision would make Germany long for such a war, for, although its present government is a pack of traitors in the employ of the Yids, they know that Germans are becoming restive at the continued presence (at their expense) of a mob of uniformed niggers and drug addicts, who are communicating "AIDS" to German women who, corrupted by American-style "educators," become low-grade whores, willing to copulate even with niggers.

The first of the possible plans for Germany I mentioned above would best fit preparations for such a war, if it has been scheduled.

If no such war is scheduled, the alternative plan would seem best to fit the purposes of the hostes generis humani, because it would simultaneously permit:

(a) The final liquidation of Russia and other nations, such as the eastern half of Germany, which have, despite Communism, remained essentially Aryan nations. If they become part of the "United Europe" now being formed, they will share in its fate as it is flooded with millions of pieces of biological garbage from Africa and Asia to put the imbecilic Aryans in the graves they dug for themselves.

Remember that Jewish practice invariably is carried out in two stages: first defile and then destroy. And in the present Communist countries, something has survived that has yet to be destroyed, the race that Yahweh's Yids hate most of all.

(b) The resulting union would first be used to complete the liquidation of the stupid Americans by simple economic and financial pressure. The country is bankrupt and ruined, as is almost openly admitted in the lair of assembled Kikes, traitors, and thieves in the Capitol, as they add trillions to the national deficit, even openly voting themselves more pay for more treason. When the United States is admittedly prostrate, the darling "minorities," denied their ever increasing demands, will riot and begin to massacre the White boobs. Since the United States no longer has an army (although that name is applied to an armed rabble which could be used only against Americans), there will be nothing to defend the boobs from the final consequence of their folly. Some, by subservience, may escape liquidation for a time, but only for a time, since the hatreds of which their race is the object are unappeasable.

17. Cf. Liberty Bell, July, September, and October 1986; March 1987.

If what I have just described is what is planned, Europe, for a time and until the Americans have been effectively destroyed, will be a much better place in which to live than the United States, because it will be prosperous, not admittedly impoverished and ruined. It is quite likely that in those circumstances a large proportion of the few Americans who have a modicum of intelligence, have the means to emigrate, and the ingenuity to escape from this country will seek refuge in Europe, a transfer that will be facilitated by the "multi-national" corporations.

It is hard to believe that our rulers would forego the fun of watching a military occupation of the United States comparable to the Soviet occupation of Latvia in 1940, but the objective for which they have worked unremittingly since 1933, the unification of the United States and the Soviet Empire, could be attained less dramatically. Gorby, with the tacit assent of his partner in Washington, is now calling for a "new world order," i.e., the "One World" that has been the Jews' lodestar for more than twenty centuries. The drastic "credit squeeze" now in process through the banks, which are now all actually insolvent and directly controlled by the Federal Reserve, will, as planned, result in the bankruptcy of many businesses that are not yet owned by Sheenies, and the burden of taxation, increased by the new requirement to finance Russian expansion, will necessarily result in an economic collapse of unprecedented magnitude.

It will then be easy for Bushy to invoke the famous "executive orders" and declare a "crisis," using his power to confiscate bank accounts and even homes, and, although this is not specifically authorized in the existing orders (which supplant all laws), proclaim the union of the United States with United Europe, with Gorby as President and Bushy himself as Vice President. In a time of total collapse, how many Americans would protest—and be promptly liquidated, either before or after incarceration in Gulags?

It is possible, of course, our enemies have some more subtle plan, but the alternatives I have indicated seem to me at this time the most likely. Neither bodes well for Americans, but they long ago lost interest in their own future.

REVAMPED LIBERTY

In the 1920s, the Chicago Tribune, then an American newspaper, decided to found a magazine that would compete with Collier's, The American, and similar popular journals. A contest to name the new publication was won by a man who suggested 'Liberty'. The periodical attained great popularity, enjoyed a large circulation, and flourished for many years. I do not know when it disappeared, but I have the impression that the Tribune's magazine ceased publication quite some time before Americans were stampeded into Europe to fight for the Communists and Jews.

A decade ago I saw one or two issues of a periodical that had taken the name Liberty, but I was so little impressed by it that I remember nothing of its contents. I have just been sent the issue for May-June 1990, which is labeled Volume 85, No. 3, so the journal evidently pretends to be a continuation of the Tribune's old magazine.

Published bimonthly at 55 West Oak Ridge Drive, Hagerstown, Maryland, it is well printed, with a somewhat garish use of color and oversize type for titles. It describes itself as "the magazine of religious freedom," but I cannot imagine what impels a presumably large number of persons to pay $6.95 per annum for it.

The leading article is by Clifford Goldstein, "On the Withering Away of Marxism." We are assured, without even a shadow of evidence, that dear Karl once had "a vibrant life-changing relationship with Jesus Christ," but alas! he stopped vibrating and therefore "missed the prime root of all man's problems, sin and separation from God." So he scribbled Das Kapital to cozen Christian suckers with his reformation of their old cult of uncontrolled imagination and pious denial of Nature, reverting to the communism of early Christianity, which festered with the hatred of civilization that has always inspired Jews and the dregs of a mongrel proletariat.

Another soothsayer proclaims that "Real freedom must be found in bondage to God." That childish paradox is consonant with the avowed purposes of the hero of another article, Rousas Rushdoony, a learned and ingenious Calvinist (whose Chalcedon Chronicle I have cited more than once in these pages), who proposes to make of the United States the Godly Hell that Calvin made of Geneva.

The prize must go, however, to an Ella Mae Rudzewski, who tells us to develop a "tolerant theology"—that should be as easy as producing dry water. (Dry Martinis are something else again.) "The solution to intolerance, then, begins when we respond to God's invitation to listen to him. By beholding, we are changed." (My emphasis.)

"Hark, hark, the lark!" You can indeed hear him if you live in the right part of the country and get up in time; and you can behold him, if you have a good pair of binoculars. But I do not know how one can hear and see spooks. A lady whose hearing is so acute that she perceives the sonar signals of bats assures me she has never heard even a squeak from Jesus, indoors or out. Good Christians probably can attain the requisite auditory and optical illusions by overheating their imaginations and working themselves into fits, but lysergic acid diethylamide is easier and quicker.

It is depressing to learn that there are evidently many adult Americans who not only lap up such drivel, but pay $6.95 a year for it, and many others, prosperous or even wealthy, who heavily subsidize the magazine so that it can be distributed at that price.

There is, however, one point at which we can agree with Liberty. It quotes two of Rushdoony's disciples who want to abolish the public schools. One of these, Gary North, who, we are told, is also Rushdoony's son-in-law and has not spoken to him for more than a year (there is room for only one Calvin in Geneva), neatly summarizes the question: "There is a fundamental difference between whorehouses and public schools: whorehouses aren't tax supported." (His emphasis.) He and we are in total agreement on that point, but alack! I fear you and I cannot march into the future arm in arm with North and the other Calvinists.

They complain, of course, because the boob-hatcheries do not inject enough Jesus-juice and Calvinistic righteousness (with a death penalty for atheism, i.e., rationality). I have often been struck by the ingratitude of Christians toward the public moron-mills, which, as several recent surveys substantially agree, so sabotage the minds of their victims that 80% or more of them are infected with a belief in the supernatural with all its trappings, including angels, gods, witches, 'psychics,' and, no doubt, leprechauns and Martians on 'flying saucers.' This incidence of superstition is not surprising: as we all know, minds that have been so maimed that they believe in the equality of races can believe anything, especially if it is false.

That, of course, is precisely the point of our criticism of the publicly financed centers of child-abuse, which inject into their helpless pupils the 'One World' pus of Judaeo-Communism, rendering them incapable of rational thought about the real world, and force them into degrading and demoralizing association with the lowest forms of human life. The grounds for abolishing the public schools are not that they "teach humanism," as North and his pals so loudly wail, but that they do not. □

Pamyat and the Rôle of the Jews in the Soviet Union

By
Charles E. Weber

Unless we take into consideration the ethnic make-up and ethnic conflicts of a country we cannot obtain a correct perspective on its history and present conditions. This is the case no matter whether we are contemplating events in Liberia, Sri Lanka, Belgium, the United States or the Soviet Union.

An article has appeared in issue 5-1990 of the Austrian periodical Sieg (Postfach 5, A-6911 Lochau, Austria; $25.00 per annum) which has far-reaching implications, not only for understanding events in the Soviet Union, but should also merit the strong consideration of legislators responsible for formulating American immigration policies.

The article is based on an interview with the Moscow correspondent of Swedish radio with a leading figure of the Pamyat movement in Russia, Anatolyi Smirnov. Pamyat (the Russian word for "memory") is a nationalistic movement (not a formal organization) which seeks to revive Russian cultural traditions which have been suppressed since the Communist (October) Revolution of 1917.

The article commences with a statement attributed to Smirnov: "The whole Soviet October Revolution is only a Jewish concoction which was imposed on the Russian nation in order to destroy it. From Lenin to Brezhnev they were all Jews who exploited and oppressed the Russian people in order, finally, to destroy them physically. However, these resounding names of even present-day Soviet politicians, scientists, economists and writers, Sacharov, Yeltsin, Abalkin, Aganbian, Papov, Afansiev, are all names of Jews. Of 540 people in leading positions after the October Revolution, 490 were Jews."

Smirnov continues by pointing out that Lenin was partly Jewish from his mother's side of the family and that Trotski was a Jew. Brezhnev's real name was Garbinski and his wife's maiden name was Goldberg. Even Stalin, the Georgian, allowed himself to be ensnared by Jews. Jews were not only responsible for the Revolution, but likewise for collectivization, oppression, executions and in general the Gulag system. The Russian intelligentsia, the flower of the Russian nation, was destroyed by downright genocidal measures. Of 250 members of the Academy of Sciences, 175 are Jewish, according to Smirnov, and 38% of all doctoral candidates are Jewish. The moribund state of Soviet science is a result of its being interlaced by Jews. It is evident that Mikhail Gorbachev himself is sympathetic with Pamyat since he never responded to a letter from 300 leading Soviet writers which demanded that the whole Pamyat movement be forbidden. Smirnov asserted that the Pamyat movement keeps growing and finally asked the Swedish journalist to supply Pamyat with computer and printing facilities because all of such things are very difficult to procure in the U.S.S.R.

Now, the facts set forth by Smirnov are in themselves not generally new information to perceptive historians in western Europe and the United States. In fact, Article XIX in The International Jew: The World's Foremost Problem, originally published in the Dearborn Independent, a newspaper supported by Henry Ford, in 1920 [and now available from Liberty Bell Publications as a 4-volume set of books, approx 1,000 pp., $26.00 + $3.90 for postage], already contains a statistical summary of the dominance of Jews in Communist Russia. What is important here lies in the present perception and recognition of these facts in Russia itself and in particular the awareness of them by leading men in the Soviet government. If a hostility toward Jews ("anti-Semitism") is becoming widely revitalized in Russia, under present circumstances Jews will have an even greater motivation for leaving the land in which they have caused so much chaos, poverty and destruction of a genocidal nature. This puts Americans up against the question of the advisability of admitting huge numbers—hundreds of thousands or even millions—of Jews from Russia as immigrants. If Jews have played a cruelly destructive rôle in Russia, is there any reason to assume that they would behave any differently in the United States? We non-Jewish Americans, including those who supposedly represent us in Congress and the White House, had better be giving serious thought to implications of our present immigration policies four our future.

Was the Second World War A "Good War" for Aryans?

The elements of the American media controlled by Zionists are constantly portraying our efforts against Communism in Korea and especially Vietnam as bad wars, but the Second World War is portrayed as a "good war."

Roosevelt and his Jewish advisors decided that a war should be fought against Germany, a country approximately the size of our state of Texas, and propagated the idea that the defeat of Germany was necessary for American security, a cynical lie proved by the fact that German forces could not even get across the English Channel in the autumn of 1940, when Germany military power, relatively, was at its zenith. An energetic naval war was being conducted against Germany by the Roosevelt administration long before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in spite of the overwhelming desire of the American people to stay out of the war. In 1941 the Jew Theodore Kaufman demanded the complete genocide of the German nation by means of sterilization in his book, Germany Must Perish [available from Liberty Bell Publications, $4.00 + $1.50 for postage]. This would have meant the extinction of a great Aryan nation which had made outstanding contributions to the arts and sciences.

Involvement in the war came as a highly convenient development for the Roosevelt administration, which had been still unable to overcome massive unemployment as late as 1940.

What were the results of the so-called "good war" for Aryans? The British, French and Dutch Empires were largely lost within a few years after the war. The eastern parts of Europe were occupied by the Soviet empire, a tyranny which had killed off millions of the most productive farmers in the U.S.S.R., and which made the National Socialists look like a group of nice Sunday School boys by comparison. Great monuments of Aryan civilization lay in ruins, such as Dresden in Germany and Monte Cassino in Italy. Huge amounts of the best Aryan blood had been spilled and thus denied to future generations. The uncompromising support of the U.S.S.R. under Stalin during 1941-1945, in spite of the well-known crimes of the Soviet government, resulted in the fact that western Europe and the United States have been under the shadow of Soviet military might since 1945, and especially since 1949, when the Soviet tyranny was able to produce atomic weapons with the help of Jewish spies, two of whom were later executed. Western Europe and the United States have thus been forced to bear a heavy economic burden for military preparedness.

Less obvious, but also of great importance, was the psychological damage done to Aryans by the war. Shrewd Zionist propagandists were able to instill feelings of guilt in them about the alleged extermination of Jews and the evils of colonialism, resulting in a psychological debilitation or Aryans that left them confused, divided and vulnerable to the perversion of their thinking by their most determined and shrewdest enemies. The Aryan populations of North America and Europe are now declining in numbers and political power so rapidly that they face near extinction during the course of the twenty-first century if present trends continue and they do not recover their racial pride and will to live, without which no race can survive. □

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 – except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. Nationalists, Jews and the Fate of Eastern Europe

Changing the Mask

by William L. Pierce

Just under a century and a half ago Karl Marx, scion of a family of rabbis and Talmudists, declared war on the Aryan world with the publication of his Communist Manifesto. As has been the case with many other cleverly promoted Jewish schemes, Marx's was able to enlist the backing not only of the members of his own tribe but of many Gentiles as well: spoiled sons of the wealthy, such as Friedrich Engels; opportunistic thugs, like Joseph Stalin; and deranged Christians, too numerous to name, who heard echoes of the Sermon on the Mount in the call for a dictatorship of the proletariat.

A little over 70 years ago, with a heavy infusion of cash from Jewish Wall Streeters such as Jacob Schiff, one of Ivan Boesky's forerunners, and a rabble of self-appointed Jewish commissars from New York's Lower East Side, the foremost of whom was Leon Trotsky (born Lev Davidovich Bronstein), a gang of Marxists was able to seize control of Russia, an Aryan nation prostrate from the ravages of the First World War.

And 45 years ago, with the consent and assistance of their Anglo-American allies, who obligingly destroyed the only force in Europe with the will and the ability to stop them, the Marxists seized control of all of Eastern and much of Central Europe, forcing their yoke on another 120 million goyim. Belatedly realizing that they had placed themselves in mortal jeopardy by slaughtering the Germans, who had formed the only bulwark against the expansion of the Marxist gang, the erstwhile Christian and capitalist anti-Nazis of the West spent the next few decades shaking in their boots as they huddled behind the Cold War's barricades and wondered whom the Marxists would gobble up next.

Then suddenly last year, over a period of a few months, the formidable Marxist ogre vanished into nothing, like morning fog dissipated by the rising sun. In Poland, in Hungary, in Romania, in Czechoslovakia, most importantly in eastern Germany, the long-repressed Aryan populations demanded their freedom, and their Marxist rulers could not stand against them. In Hungary the Marxists abdicated even before the pressure of demonstrations and protests forced that move upon them. In Romania they put up a murderous resistance, but then surrendered after a few days.

In Bulgaria and Yugoslavia—even in isolated and backward Albania—the same process is underway. And, wonder of wonders, even in the Red citadel itself the doctrines of Marx are under attack, and the Soviet state is being buffeted by a growing storm of change, dissent, and open rebellion which is likely to see the end of communism everywhere in the White world before it has subsided.

The reaction to all of this in the United States has varied from disbelief to reckless euphoria. The disbelievers, many of whom have a vested interest in their position as professional anti-communists, are inclined to believe that it's all a sham: that the Evil Empire is just pretending to have changed its ways so that we'll abandon our defenses and leave ourselves open to renewed aggression in the future. Those who are euphoric, on the other hand, see a fundamental transformation in Eastern Europe, with the will of the communist oligarchs giving way to the will of the people, and a new era of freedom and self-determination dawning.

Certainly, what has happened was not planned by the communist bosses as a way of fooling the West. Romanian dictator Nicolae Ceausescu did not plan his own execution. German Communist Party boss Erich Honecker did not arrange to be ousted from power and charged with various crimes which may keep him in prison for the rest of his life. Things clearly got out of control in Eastern Europe as soon as it became evident last year that the Red Army would no longer be used to prop up communist regimes outside the Soviet Union. There never was anything more than minimal public support for these regimes, all of which were installed against the will of the people after the Second World War, when the Western Allies gave the Soviet Union free reign to set up a slave empire in the East. As soon as the exposed positions of the regimes were recognized by the various populations involved, their collapse was a foregone conclusion.

What is not a foregone conclusion is the development of genuine freedom and self-determination in Eastern Europe. Many of the "reformers" and other politicians scrambling to fill the power vacuum left by the fall of the communists are hardly better than their predecessors. In some cases they are their predecessors, simply wearing a new mask. The principal clue to continuity in the politics of Eastern Europe is the overabundant presence of Jews in the new parties and governments.

When Stalin set up the satellite communist regimes after the Second World War, he staffed them heavily with Jews. To a large degree this was unavoidable, since the communist parties from which the bureaucrats came were largely Jewish at that time. Furthermore, only among Jews could people be found who Stalin could be sure would not be deterred by any feelings of patriotism from carrying out Moscow's policies. These Jewish regimes perpetrated horrible atrocities on the populations under their control, and popular hatred of them became so intense that it led to repeated incidents of sabotage and insubordination, which sometimes culminated in full-scale popular uprisings requiring a major intervention by Soviet troops, as in East Germany in 1953 and in Hungary in 1956. For the sake of stability, in the late 1950s and early 1960s the Kremlin replaced many of the most conspicuous Jews with Gentiles, but the bureaucracies remained heavily Jewish right up until the collapse.

Thus, when things began falling apart last year in the German Democratic Republic (East Germany) the "reform" elements in the Communist Party there deposed the Stalinist Honecker, a German, and in December chose Gregor Gysi, a Jew, as their new head—and that in a country which officially numbers only a few thousand Jews among its population of 17 million. The elections in March of this year, of course, have made the communists of East Germany much less relevant, and the few Jews there now are moving from the Communist Party to other parties, with an eye to having as much power as possible in their hands when the dust has settled.

In Poland the situation is much worse. The new prime minister of that country is Tadeusz Mazowiecki, a leader of the Solidarity movement and a nominal Roman Catholic. Persistent, unconfirmed reports from Poland identify him as a Jew, however. When German troops occupied Poland during the Second World War, many thousands of Jews in that country passed themselves off as Catholics in order to avoid confinement to the ghettos and other restrictive measures imposed on the Jews. Even after the war many of these Jews found it useful to continue the deception.

Whatever may be the truth about Mazowiecki, there is no doubt at all about other leading Solidarity members. Most notable among these are the two self-acknowledged Jews Bronislaw Geremek and Adam Michnik. Geremek is the head of Solidarity's legislative faction, the new speaker of the Polish parliament, and Lech Walesa's closest adviser. Michnik is Solidarity's "ambassador at large" and the editor of the Solidarity newspaper, Gazeta Wyborcza, now Poland's largest-circulation daily. Most of the other members of the editorial board of Gazeta Wyborcza also are Jews.

In Poland, more than in any other Iron Curtain country, the recent changes have resulted in a substantial increase in the power of the Jews over the non-Jewish population.

In Romania the situation is mixed. The hated dictator, Nicolae Ceausescu, is dead. The new government, however, is made up of his former cronies and subordinates. And Romania's new premier, Petre Roman, is a Jew, as are several other key figures in the "reform" government.

Although Roman is the first member of his race to be premier of Romania, the country was effectively ruled in the immediate postwar period by the Jewess Ana Pauker, Secretary of the Communist Party Central Committee until 1952. And Ceausescu, although a Romanian himself, was closely associated with Jewish interests from the time he began his long rule in 1965. In fact, Ceausescu so favored the Jews in Romania that he always has been suspected of being their puppet. He was the only communist leader in Europe who maintained ties with Israel after that country's 1967 war against her Arab neighbors. He allowed Jews to emigrate freely from Romania to Israel, while Romanians themselves were not permitted to leave their country, and he appointed Romania's chief rabbi, Moses Rosen, to the Romanian parliament and to the powerful National Council of the Front.

Jews in America reciprocated by persuading the U.S. government to grant special trade concessions to Romania, and Ceausescu himself was hailed as a great humanitarian. He was invited to the White House by Jimmy Carter and even was appointed an honorary citizen of Disneyland during a visit here. In February of this year the Israeli newspaper Yediot Aharanot boasted that Ceausescu had been on the Israeli payroll and had received a bonus of $5,000 for each Jew who emigrated from Romania to Israel during his rule.

The world may never know what other strings the Jews had tied to Ceausescu; one can only suspect that the principal reason for his secret "trial" and hasty execution last December 25 was to keep his mouth shut. In any event, Premier Petre Roman notwithstanding, the Jewish role in Romania probably has not increased greatly as a result of Ceausescu's fall.

Hungary has more Jews than any other former Soviet satellite, and the country has suffered accordingly. During the 19th century Jews monopolized the commerce of Hungary. They became moneylenders to the aristocracy, and they were the middlemen and merchants with whom the peasantry had to deal. They formed the majority of the urban middle class in the primarily agrarian country.

Their commercial advantages did not deter them from communist subversion, however, and in the chaos following the First World War they launched a communist revolution and installed a Jewish dictatorship, headed by the malevolent Bela Kun, over the unfortunate Hungarians. Kun and his henchmen plundered the country and murdered thousands before a counter-revolution by Hungarian patriots put an end to his regime.

History seemed to repeat itself after the Second World War. In 1945 the Soviets installed a second Jewish dictator, Matyas Rakosi, over Hungary, and he attempted to outdo Kun in the ferocity and rapacity with which he ruled the country. Hatred of Rakosi and his Jewish-communist regime led to the Hungarian uprising of 1956. The Hungarians were initially successful in overcoming the secret police and the Soviet troops stationed in the country and in dealing out revolutionary justice to the Jewish commissars on whom they were able to lay their hands.

They appealed to Washington for help, but Jews in America denounced the Hungarian patriots as "anti-Semites," and President Eisenhower sat on his hands while the Soviet Union sent the Red Army into Hungary to crush the uprising and liquidate the patriots. In order to minimize the likelihood of further uprisings, the Kremlin installed a Hungarian as Rakosi's successor. As elsewhere, however, many Jews remained in less-visible positions in the communist government of Hungary.

When these Jewish bureaucrats and commissars saw the writing on the wall before the abdication of the communist Hungarian government last year, many of them became "reformers," and they are all too well represented in many of the new political parties competing for a leading role in Hungary today. One of the top two parties, the Alliance of Free Democrats, is headed by a Jew, Miklos Haraszti.

The cases of East Germany, Poland, Romania, and Hungary differ in their individual details, but they have many common elements which characterize the phenomenon taking place today throughout Eastern Europe. The two key elements are the vehement rejection of communism by the various European peoples and the scrambling of the Jews to reposition themselves in order to secure the maximum advantage in the new governments which are being formed.

Although readers of the New York Times or the Washington Post might never find a clue to the latter element, it is generally recognized in Eastern Europe. During the so-called "round-table discussions" late last year and early this year among the various new political groups to plan for elections and the interim restructuring of the governments, a widely told joke was the following: Question: What's the difference between the Polish and Hungarian round-table talks? Answer: The Hungarian round table consists of Hungarians and Jews. The Polish one has no Hungarians.

One hopeful sign for the future is the emergence of a number of strongly nationalist groups, not only in the former satellites, but also in several of the captive Soviet "republics" and most notably in Russia itself. The group which has received the most news coverage in the West is Pamyat, a Russian-nationalist group which is somewhat more flamboyant, but perhaps not actually more significant, than other Russian groups. Unfortunately, many of these groups are quite parochial in outlook, and their nationalism is accordingly narrow. Thus, Romanian nationalists are attacking the Hungarian minority in Transylvania, ethnic Albanians are fighting against Serbs in Yugoslavia, and Lithuanian nationalists and Russians are at each other's throats in Vilnius.

The bright side of this ethnic polarization is that virtually all of the nationalist groups know who their common enemy is, and many are speaking out against the Jews, both as oppressors of their people during the communist era and as a threat for the future. In Hungary, for example, the largest of the new groups struggling for control of the country is the Hungarian Democratic Forum, for which the writer Istvan Csurka is the most prominent spokesman. The latter has been denounced as an anti-Semite by the heavily Jewish Alliance of Free Democrats, as well as by the controlled media in the West, because of his derogatory references to "rootless cosmopolitans" in his speeches and writings. The average Hungarian on the street understands quite clearly who the "rootless cosmopolitans" are and is generally even more forthright than Csurka in his expression of dislike for them.

Likewise in Romania, a number of the new political groups are denouncing the so-called "National Salvation Front," which is controlled by Ceausescu's former subordinates, many of them Jews, not only as a front for the communists but also as a front for the Jews.

And in Poland an increasing number of Poles are disillusioned with Solidarity and joke that the most "solid" thing about the ruling organization is its control by Jews. Leaflets distributed in Warsaw proclaim: "The communists sold us to the Muscovites. Solidarity is selling us to the international capitalists. Only the Nationalists can show us the way forward."

Most promising of all is the growing openness with which Russians are willing to address the Jewish question. The Pamyat (in English, "remembrance") organization, which has received much press coverage because of its statements against Jews, is only one of many nationalist groups in Russia which have become active recently, and all are anti-Jewish. The Russians have suffered more at the hands of the Jews than perhaps any other nationality except the Ukrainians, and as communist power crumbles the Russian nationalists are determined that Jews will never again have a chance to get their hands on the throats of the Russian people. The resurgence of Russian nationalism has been one of the factors which has persuaded a larger number of Jews than ever before to make preparations for leaving the Soviet Union.

The hostility of the nationalists toward the Jews almost certainly will become more intense in the near future. For one thing, as the remnants of the old regimes lose the last of their authority, the laws which penalized any open criticism of the Jews during the communist era will be even less likely to be enforced than they are now.

For another thing, many of the atrocities committed by those heavily Jewish regimes are beginning to come to light now, and during the coming months growing public knowledge of them can only increase the intensity of feeling against the perpetrators. Mass graves of patriots murdered by Ceausescu's secret police over the last 25 years are being dug up in Romania. Likewise, secret graveyards are being discovered in East Germany, where tens of thousands of captured SS men, National Socialist Party members, and other Germans considered hostile to communism were murdered in 1945 and 1946.

And impelled by the spirit of glasnost the Soviet KGB itself is confessing to past crimes against the Russian, Ukrainian, Polish, and Baltic peoples. In February of this year the Soviet news agency Tass reported that during Stalin's reign alone the KGB and its predecessor agencies executed 786,098 men and women; that number includes only those who were shot in the back of the neck in police basements, not the millions who were worked to death in slave labor camps or starved to death in artificial famines, or the military prisoners who were simply lined up and mowed down by the thousands during and immediately after the Second World War.

In April the KGB finally confessed that Soviet secret police had murdered not only the 4,400 Polish officers whose graves were discovered in the Katyn Forest by the German Army in 1943, but also 11,000 other Polish officers buried elsewhere. Heretofore the official Soviet explanation for the liquidation of the cream of Poland's leadership stratum was that the Germans had done it.

Others than Jews also were involved in the commission of these atrocities, but the communist regimes of Eastern Europe are linked indelibly with the Jews in the minds of the people, and the Jews will not escape blame for their crimes.

The nationalists and the Jews are not the only contestants in the game, however. Among others there is the Catholic Church, especially strong in Poland, which will collaborate with any elements, including the Jews, in order to advance its own interests. The Jews in the West are squawking loudly now about the "bigotry" and "anti-Semitism" of Poland's Catholic primate, Jozef Cardinal Glemp, who admonished them last year for their pushiness in trying to shut down a Catholic convent at the site of the former Auschwitz labor camp; the Jews were afraid the presence of the convent would water down the image they are trying to maintain of Auschwitz as an exclusively Jewish site and a reminder to the world that it owes them a living. The Church as a whole, however, has been generally pro-Jewish and probably will remain so, unless it becomes convinced that there will be a greater advantage in collaborating with the nationalists than with the Jews.

As conditions begin to stabilize and political activity becomes a little less dangerous, more and more of the Eastern Europeans who will be seeking political power in the vacuum left by the communists, however, will not be fervent nationalists, scheming clerics, or men with any other impersonal cause: they will be the same sort of soulless, lying, unprincipled, posturing lawyer-politicians who run for public office in the West: the sort of vermin who naturally rise to the top in a mass democracy by virtue of their ability to deceive, to bargain, to flatter, to assume convincing poses, to scramble for the main chance: the sort of Poles now collaborating with the Jews in Solidarity, or Romanians collaborating with the Jews in the National Salvation Front.

The Jews in the West are counting on such men winning the balance of power in upcoming elections; then the Jews in the East can slip behind the scenes, and the tribe can work its age-old racket of using our money to buy advantages for its members in the East. They are, in fact, already beginning to work it in some places. The East Germans did not suddenly decide in March to begin sending "reparations" to the Jews in Israel—like the West Germans have been doing for the past 36 years, at the rate of more than a billion dollars a year—because of any sudden feelings of guilt for the "Holocaust"; they did it to mute Jewish opposition in the West to the reunification of their country. For precisely the same reason the West German government now is providing official support and encouragement to the Jews who have organized a campaign to erect an enormous Holocaust Museum (at German expense, of course) in Berlin, a German version of Israel's Yad Vashem museum, with the purpose of rooting a sense of obligation to the Jews forever in the Germans' consciousness—or, as one Jewish writer explained with truly breathtaking arrogance, of providing "a declaration of the Holocaust's dark centrality in Germany's past."

One can see signs of the same racket in Washington's policy statements about Romania recently, in which the promise of a continuation of the Most Favored Nation trade status which was given to Ceausescu is being dangled as a carrot intended to persuade whatever government eventually gains power there to abstain from any reprisals against the Jews in the country. And when Solidarity figurehead Lech Walesa was sent to the United States late last year, he repeatedly told news reporters that the new government of Poland was firmly committed to friendship with the Jews and regarded the renewal of diplomatic relations with Israel as a major step forward. At a meeting with America's most powerful Jewish leaders in New York he said that any Pole who still holds a grudge against Jews deserves to be spat on. Jews at the meeting were not bashful about expressing the grudges they still hold against Poles, however, and they told Walesa that they would be watching the performance of his new government closely in deciding what attitude to take toward it.

The racket has worked since the early 1970s in gaining favored emigration privileges for Soviet Jews, with the U.S. Congress tying trade policy with the Soviet Union to the number of Jews permitted to leave each year. The racketeers will be doling out U.S. foreign aid grants to the countries of Eastern Europe, as well as setting trade policies between the United States and those countries, on the basis of the extent to which Jews are given freedom of action there.

That will be hard pressure to resist, even for the most strongly nationalist governments, and wherever the lawyer-politicians are in charge there won't even be an attempt at resistance. The latter are already using their favored status in Washington to woo voters away from the nationalist parties: "A vote for us is a vote for aid money for our economy from America," they say.

The best thing that could happen for the newly independent and incipiently independent nations of Eastern Europe now would be a severe and prolonged economic depression in the United States, so that there would be no temptation to sell their souls for economic assistance from the West. Things might be more austere for a few years, but there would at least be a good chance for true national independence and final freedom from Jewish influence.

Barring a depression here in the next few years, however, it is difficult to predict the relative fortunes of Europe's nationalists on the one hand, and of the Jews and their collaborators on the other. In the short term, perhaps the nationalists will prevail in Hungary, the Baltic states, and in Russia—perhaps even in Romania—and the Jews will remain in control in Poland and a few other countries.

As long as there is economic and cultural contact with the West, however, the long-term picture is not bright for European independence anywhere, even in those countries where nationalism is strongest. The process of corruption is already underway. In February "British" newspaper tycoon Robert Maxwell (born Jan Hoch, in Czechoslovakia) bought a 40 per cent interest in Magyar Hirlap, the Hungarian daily which has been the official mouthpiece of Hungary's communist party. A month earlier Rupert Murdoch, the Australian-British-American media mogul, bought 50 per cent of two Hungarian tabloids. In March Steven Ross, co-chairman of the U.S. media conglomerate Time Warner, signed a contract with the Soviet government to build new cinemas in Russia and provide U.S.-made films for them. Of these three, Maxwell and Ross are Jews, and other Jews are moving in quickly to gain a beachhead in the newly liberated news and entertainment media of Eastern Europe.

In the East, as in the West, control of the mass media will be the single most important factor in determining the course of political and cultural development. Under the communists the mass media played a far less decisive role in shaping the views and attitudes of Easterners than they are likely to play in the future. In no country of Eastern Europe has television been as omnipresent as in the West. Communist propaganda tended to be fairly crude and obvious; it did not have to be convincing, as long as there were the guns of the secret police to back it up. The result is that after 45 years of communist indoctrination the minds of Eastern Europeans are relatively freer than those of Westerners. That may change soon.

Other things will be changing too. Just as laws against publishing or saying anything critical of Jews have been relaxed, allowing nationalists more freedom, so are laws restricting certain seamy types of business activity traditionally dominated by Jews no longer being enforced: for the first time porno shops have opened in Budapest, and East German girls are being recruited for prostitution by entrepreneurs from the West.

The worst-case scenario for Central and Eastern Europe is a continuation of this misnamed process of "Westernization": first and most important, the buying up of more mass news, entertainment, and advertising media by men like Maxwell, Murdoch, and Ross; then massive private investment by capitalists from America and Western Europe, with the building of factories to take advantage of the low-paid, disciplined labor force, then with the development of shopping malls and other facets of merchandising to soak up the new buying power of the populations as prosperity increases; and finally the massive importation of non-White "guest workers" from the Third World to take over the lowest-paying work—and to begin changing the complexion of the populations. All the while, of course, there will be the threat that the new candy from the West will be taken away if the child does not behave himself.

After 25 years of this—provided the nationalists can be kept under control or neutralized—all of Europe, from the Atlantic to the Urals and from the Arctic Ocean down to the Caucasus Mountains, should be just as "free" and as "democratic" as the West is now. Every citizen, whether of Poland, Russia, Hungary, Lithuania, Bulgaria, or what have you, will have his own Japanese car and a color television receiver, seated in front of which he will spend most of his leisure hours. The women will all be "liberated." The kiddies will all be in racially integrated day-care centers. And every couple of years there will be a breathless hullaballoo on television as the various countries go through the charade of electing new "leaders" to replace the old ones.

In every capital city there will be a huge Holocaust Museum, complete with tatooed lampshades, bars of kosher soap, and other sacred relics from that dark and frightening time in the past when Europe almost managed to break free and strike out on its own course. Schoolchildren will be taken on obligatory tours of these museums every year, and after each tour their teachers will lead them in a chant of "never again!" Then it will be back to the classroom to study their Turkish, Urdu, and Swahili, so that they can better understand the needs of the growing racial minorities in their countries.

In the evening their elders, between the game shows and the situation comedies, will watch the news broadcast, where they will see snippets from the day's debate in their parliament about how much economic aid they can afford to send to Israel in the coming year and what should be done about the worsening problem of street crime. "Hate crime" will also be a frequent topic in the news, as remnants of the old nationalist groups and other White "hate criminals" cause trouble by failing to get along with the "guest workers" (who by this time will be citizens with full "equality") or—heaven forbid—provoke anti-Semitic incidents by saying or publishing something they shouldn't. But, of course, there once again will be strictly enforced laws against that sort of thing, and most of the nationalists and other nasty extremists will long since have been packed off to some gulag up around the Arctic Circle.

All of that may sound like something from a bad dream, but it is exactly the sort of scenario that is being worked out by the planners and string-pullers in the West's councils of government now: by the people who are working out the details of George Bush's "Democracy Corps," for example.

From their point of view the collapse of the communist system may not necessarily be such a bad thing. Communism couldn't have lasted much longer anyway; it was too riddled with internal contradictions and inefficiencies; too many of the countries subject to it were close to economic exhaustion. It was a fine thing, in their view, for keeping the people of Eastern Europe under control prior to the advent of television. But in the TV Age communism really isn't necessary. In the West they have had 40 years to learn how to control the minds of the goyim with their wonderful new tool, and they've become very good at it.

Is it not, after all, a more secure thing to put chains on the minds of one's subjects instead of on their bodies? □

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?
SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. THE JAPANESE ARE COMING

Robert Frens

The May 1990 issue of Instauration magazine contains the article "The New Master Race" which repeats the theme that "Asians are to Whites as Whites are to Blacks". The article was authored by a person of unspecified gender named Asiaticus, who may or may not be descended from some Roman senator. "Asiaticus" may be a pseudonym or simply "SUC IT AISA" spelled backward. In any event, it is an interesting detail that Americans, whenever they put their opinions on paper, prefer to use someone else's name or fabricate something catchy. This in itself, is a measure of our collective Jewishness. The Jews are the premier changers whether it be money changing, name changing, nose changing, allegiance changing or junk bond changing. Aryans seem to enjoy using their own names. Gad, how plebeian!

Asians have an average IQ of 110, Whites follow with an IQ of 100 while Blacks are back in the rumble-seat with 85. Asiaticus does not reveal the source of this revealing data. With all of this superiority going for them, the Japanese are therefore "The New Master Race" destined to fill Uncle Adolf's trousers. I cannot help but wonder why they waited until now to launch their mission. If Asian superiority is genetic, as the author describes, what were they up to when the Europeans where doing their thing for the past dozen of centuries?

Perhaps it was necessary to wait for the "greenhouse effect" to properly steam their brains into action. Aside from any other cerebral activity, the fact that they think racially would suffice to render them superior to what passes as the "American" population. In this respect, they have a right to possess this continent although they haven't been degenerate enough to deserve it. As Franklying Ruseveldt knew, an oil embargo is sufficient to put a screeching halt to Japanese dominance of everything except the raw fish business. The war in the Pacific was over before Pearl Harbor and that useless island-hopping sideshow was staged to keep the simple goyim in a dither and ostensibly preventing some stray Mitsubishi from bombing Chloride, Arizona. Franklying was myopic when it came to Germany and hated Hitler because he was genuinely loved by his people and could take walks in the Alps without a pair of wheels. The first characteristic is enough to send any American politician into a fit of envy and rage. That emerging economic wonder called Hitler Germany was something that Jew infested nations couldn't compete with. In typical American manner, we smashed that embryonic opponent because honest competition is something we cannot tolerate. We murdered their leaders in traditional Roy Bean fashion, kidnapped their scientists and stole their technology. If you were hapless, accused and fell into Judge Roy's clutches, you'd be fined, tried, hung and then robbed of what was left in your pockets. It's as American as apple bagels and War Crimes Trials.

Asiaticus uses the word "Asian" when he/she/it (don't say this too rapidly) really means the better of the Northern Asian types that have been transplanted to the U.S. Any WW II Vet, who was stationed in Japan or Korea in 1945, is qualified to report on the large numbers of polite but moronic gooks that form part of the normal populations there. When Asiaticus mentions "White," he is including bevies of marginal types, labeled as such due to the lack of a better term. I have a neighbor who considers himself white, although I am at a loss to discover his criteria. One thing is certain. IQ follows color and that places the superior Asians in the middle. IQ drops as Blackness increases and IQ rises as Whiteness increases which is tantamount to saying that IQ rises and falls with the Whiteness factor, a consideration that is older than Nathan Birnbaum (George Burns). IQ is a test measurement that is probably affected by cholesterol levels, oat bran, church donations and ozone holes. The true test of superiority, as Dr. Oliver continually reminds us, is survival. It may well be that the Northern Asians will dominate the 21st century. America is now on the verge of being flushed into the sewer it now resembles and one wonders if the turmoil in Europe will subside with the fingers of the Jew still in the pudding. The God of all Gods has an assistant named Nork charged with the responsibility of keeping a list of all mortal predictions. When God decides to favor man with an event, He makes certain that it is not on that list.

Previously, I mentioned that Asiaticus failed to mentioned the source of that significant IQ data. I am ignorant of any comprehensive, national data that has been collected along these lines. Scholastic Achievement Test scores abound and have been the subject of much hand-wringing, gasping and excuse manufacturing. SAT scores are standardized scores that may be translated into IQ scores. I have before me the official published listing of SAT Verbal and Math scores for the period 1976-1988. The 13 year average for the items in question are:

Group	Verbal	Math	Index	IQ
White	446	487	460	94
Asian	402	515	440	91
Black	339	367	348	77

The column labeled "Index" is the Selection Index used universally which equals one-third of the sum of the Math score and two times the Verbal score. The IQ column is a linear calculation based upon the SAT and IQ means of 500 and 100, and the standard deviations of 100 and 15, respectively. Anyone interested in increasing their knowledge of this kind of entertaining number juggling should consult any elementary statistics textbook. As you can see, the above results would not incline any rational parent to open his checkbook with a tuition deposit in mind.

The White bashing continues. Since the Japanese can claim no phony survivors (real ones, yes!) or blame their ills upon cotton picking, our Masters simply point to the yellow genetic superiority which, of course, is not a racist gesture. Once again, the Whites are told that they must scurry to the back of the bus and behave like the little curs they are. I can hear the sounds of stampeding feet!

Here we go again! Do you remember the "inferno" and "airport" types of disaster movies? How about the book Famine 1975, where the whole world was on the verge of starvation and "food wars" broke out? The Jupiter Effect was a real dilly that could easily be refuted by any competent high school physics student. In 1982, all of the planets would be lined up on one side of the solar system and the combined gravitational effects would produce massive tidal waves on the earth which would cause blah-blah and so on. Using simple equations and some not elaborate calculations would reveal that the combined gravitational effects of the planets would be less than 1.5 percent of that exerted by the moon. As this fateful year approached, I sat quietly on the beach confident that the world would still be there in 1983. The "scientific" blather oozes on with sad moans whenever the whole Ooze-on Hole is mentioned or why the carbon dioxide window glass greenhouse will soon turn us all into hydroponic tomatoes. The American nits have an insatiable appetite for sheer nonsense whether it is about 6 million ghosts or 6 million sunspots, both capable of damaging your psyche with cosmic juices. None of this, however, seems to match the on-again-off-again AIDS threat. I am somewhat perplexed in this regard, although I do believe that some thousands of our more talented perverts will be the benefactors of the only weight loss method that really works. Does that famous ex-mayor really use Slim-Fast?

The predictions (by experts, of course) are interesting. By 1988 (did you notice?) there would be 1.6 million dead and in 1995 over 320 million would be infected in the U.S. alone.[1] This author apparently knew something that the Census Bureau didn't. One thousand Americans will be dying daily.[2] Sixty-four million Americans will have AIDS by 1990.[3] By 1991, 215,000 Americans would have died from AIDS.[4] It's my guess that this fellow didn't bother to read the literature of the other experts. Fifty-seven millions will have AIDS in 1994.[5] By 1991, 229 million Americans will be waiting for transportation to that great AIDS resort in the welkin.[6] According to another source, 13 million will have AIDS in 1994 and the whole U.S. population will be on its way to oblivion by 1997.[7] The Spanish Flu epidemic of 1918-1919 accounted for 50 million lives. The Bubonic Plague of 1347-1351 left 25 million dead. It was believed to be measles that killed 5000 per day in Rome 270 A.D. and small pox that wiped out one-third of that population during the period 165-180 A.D. During all of these past pestilences, 2 out of every 3 persons somehow managed to escape death. AIDS is different, we are told. If there is no immunity or resistance factor, then why are Blacks and Hispanics listed as high-risk groups?[4] Why do some that experience antibody seroconversion go blotto in a month or so while others show no signs of anything for years, if ever? Why are some with antibody response considered infectious and others are not? The fact that there is so much disagreement and so many unanswered questions leads me to believe that there exists a mechanism that makes some more susceptible to this virus than others and there are strong indications that this factor might be racial in nature. In lieu of anything tangible, sensible advice remains little other than what any Aryan would do even if there weren't an AIDS threat. Don't do naughty things with your pee-pee. Stay away from Blacks, Hispanics, faggots, Asians, Jews and drug users and stay away from anyone who associates with them. If you feel an itch to mingle with alien life forms, get a raccoon or a three-toed sloth. AIDS is a contagious disease. Don't find out the hard way that an ounce of prevention is worth a ton of prayer.

In their July 21, 1989 release of information, the Center for Disease Control reported 119,923 known cases of AIDS in the United States and the May 11, 1987 report claimed 20,557 dead. The monthly rate of increase was given as 7.25 percent. Since many cases go unreported, they stated that the rate was probably 20 percent in error favoring the low side. In their estimation, the true rate of increase was in the 8.5 to 9 percent range. Many practitioners of the version of witchcraft known as medical science, have taken these figures and prophesied the demise of some 250 million Americans by the year 1994. This represents the elimination of the entire population which, in itself, would be of enormous benefit to the environment of the Western Hemisphere. The reasoning used to arrive at this projected demise is, of course, faulty and could have been avoided by taking a college course in differential equations. The instantaneous rate of growth (AIDS in the case) is proportional to the product of the number who have it and the number who do not have it providing, however, that there exists an equal opportunity environment. A further consideration is the target group. In true egalitarian fashion, the believers assume that all members of this society are equally susceptible (it's One World, isn't it?) and engage in the same perversions. A rate of 7.25 percent cannot be applied ad infinitum, nor will it affect all of our 250 million people. As the number of afflicted in the target group increases, the rate of increase will steadily drop to zero. Obviously, if everyone has it, then the growth rate would be zero. What, then, is the size of the target group?

Published population data lists the United States as having an 83 percent White population with 12 percent Black and 5 percent "other". If you believe this, then you haven't visited a super-market lately. The White figure obviously includes a sizeable proportion of the missing 6 million, a large block of almost missing millions together with millions of others with fanciful notions about themselves. Blacks are dramatically unrepresented, a fact that is well known among the census takers. The AIDS virus is probably a Nazi since it prefers to pounce upon Jews, Blacks and Hispanics, a fact that has been mentioned previously in this periodical. Only in the case of perverts and drug users has the Aids virus practiced a version of brotherly love and equality. Thus, if we sum the numbers of Blacks, near Blacks, quasi Blacks, mongrels, perverts and other assorted ughs, we arrive at a reasonable level of 70 million for the target group which represents about one-third of the population. Historically, epidemics seem to go plop after they have consumed this fraction. This is good news for the degenerate portion of the White population who can throw away their condoms and copulate until their pee-wee brains turn to mush, as long as they confine their excesses to natural relations with their own kind.

The infection known as AIDS was originally labeled with the acronym GRIDS, id est, Gay Related Immune Deficiency Syndrome. It popped up exclusively among these sweet darlings of alternate life-styles and was thought to be a suppression of the immune system due to the presence of natural substances found in unnatural places. Considerable traces of feces were discovered in the mouths of those afflicted with the disease. This was only reasonable considering that the mixing of anal and oral sex in ingenious combinations was quite ordinary for these folk. GRIDS soon became AIDS and the mentioning of excrement in the mouth was dropped down the memory hole. As an uncouth aside, the term "shit-face" took on a whole new meaning. I would assume that this avenue of research, the effect of excrement in the alimentary canal upon immuno-suppression, has been closed.

Once the AIDS virus secures a front row seat in your body, it is time to consider writing a will. In about a month you could expect a flu-like illness with fever, rash and swelling of the lymphnodes in the neck and armpits. You will develop an antibody response in 2 to 3 months and your disease defenses will start their down-hill slide. You are now an infectious carrier of the disease, so it is a good time to consort with your enemies. Your general level of health will diminish and, depending upon exposure, you will develop all sorts of health problems from yeast infections to herpes sores popping up like dandelions. Once some opportunistic infection becomes pronounced, you have about 2 years to take that vacation you've always dreamed of but didn't have the time for. At this point, you are suffering from the chronic wasting condition known as ARC (AIDS Related Complex). Fat people will get skinny and night sweats will be ever present. You will become weak, tired and mentally deranged. This latter characteristic is a requisite for election to our Congress. When you reach the last stages of this downhill progression, you are said to have AIDS, although I'll never understand the logic of it. As far as I am concerned, you have AIDS from the moment those saw-toothed little bugs decide to line up for Welfare payments at your expense. You are also dead, in spite of the diminishing evidence to the contrary. It is only a time lag that separates the terminal from the terminus. AIDS ain't nice and it isn't for everybody.

Since one projection is about as valid as another, I decided to have a go at it. The accompanying bar graph was prepared from data calculated from a first order differential equation using 120,000 cases and a growth rate of 7.25 percent as the initial conditions at time zero (July 1989). The upper limit at saturation was taken to be 70 million victims and a presumption of optimal conditions was taken. By 1994, about 1 out of 25 of our citizens will be actively enjoying the fruits of our multi-racial utopia. This represents nearly 5 percent of the population which will grow to become 15 percent by 1996. It is an observable phenomenon, whether at a swimming beach, in a classroom or in a bowl of salad, that a 1 percent addition of a pollutant can usually be ignored. A school with a 1 percent Ubangi population can carry on business as usual in most instances. Once this number increases to 5 percent, cultural enrichment follows as evidenced by a marked increase in thefts and corridor "grab-ass" incidents. A school with a 15 percent African component usually ceases functioning as an academic operation. If a school practices the rational segregation known as "tracking", classroom accomplishments could still continue in the white groups with the tribal antics taking place mainly in the locker rooms and hallways. It is invigorating to contemplate the effect of a 5 percent AIDS victim presence in our society. The Holyhoax and Sambo History industries will have some real truths to compete with and I doubt whether people will lose their jobs (Keegstra), be sentenced to jail (Zündel) or beaten half to death (Faurisson) for publicly discussing the issue. From 1994 on, we can sit back and enjoy watching Mother Nature play sport with the denizens of this planet. In 1996, about 15 percent of our population will be walking advertisements of the reward for rubbing a partner the right way but rubbing Mother Nature the wrong way. At this point, considering the time delay attribute of AIDS, everyone could suddenly repent and become "born again" somethings but the countdown cannot be halted. He may save your soul but He won't save your hide. It is a brazen impertinence to suggest that God violate His own laws, but Jew and Christian alike seem never to tire of asking and demanding. If those who are unaffected have the collective fortitude to leave the diseased to swim in the pus of their own making, the economic costs would not be a burden. Joining them would be all of the Snowball Cupcakes (white on the outside, black on the inside) who relish fornicating with diseased porch-monkeys. Every druggie who wastes himself, one way or another, is one less druggie. A dead faggot is a minus faggot and that's a plus. The arithmetic is simple. Each welfare recipient that goes to the Great Beyond, is one less welfare recipient, if you get the economic meaning. Only an anti-Nature entity would extend assistance to a dying parasite.

Of the several with whom I have discussed this issue, I have formed the notion that they welcome AIDS as I do, although for a different reason. In their view, AIDS will eradicate the Black and Hispanic element and hopefully decimate, if not eliminate, those pillars of sweetness, God's Chosen. It is concluded therefore, that Aryans can once again proceed unhampered in their Gothic quest. In my view, this is an exercise in wishful thinking and whose essence is described by the phrase "Let George do it." In this case, it really means "Let Jesus do it," which is a bit of Christian presumptuous nonsense whereby we are free to trash the planet and then expect a supernatural beneficence to clean up after us. If we were a spiritually healthy people, we wouldn't be in this mess in the first place. Our Weltansicht would have been formed from the lessons of experience and observations of how God really wants things to operate. No lion discusses its plans with the gazelle, nor does the hawk with a fish. A magician demonstrates but does not reveal. The Aryan has no obligation, whatsoever, to reveal the secrets of his technology to a drooling pack of savages, nor should he share its benefits with any but his own kind. The cheetah dashes only to serve its own. The Aryan is spiritually off course. That is the reason for our present plight which provided the Petri dish for AIDS. If AIDS erased every Vedda, Bantu, Higi, Mongol, Jew, half-breed, crud-breed and weed-breed from the planet, we would still be saddled with the sick mentality that allowed soul-destroying notions (Christianity, in its present sense, for example) and unnatural behaviors to be the exercise of our existence. We made a choice in 1932, listened to a degenerate cripple and became his instrument of hate. With unprincipled glee, we bested the wildest dreams of any Mongol Khan and smashed the embryonic expression of the truly monumental Idea that was in tune with our soul and in accord with Nature. AIDS will not be our salvation, but as a deserved punishment it might provide an instructional chastisement that would provide the impetus and inspiration to resume the work that was temporarily halted in 1945.

SAD SATS

Hardly a week passes without some woeful announcement concerning the dismal state of our education system. There are no statements regarding the thefts, vandalism, assaults and other apparently unimportant features of our schools. There are plenty of statements concerning SAT scores and what it all means to us. In this regard, we are fortunate to have the Rathers and the Koppels around to explain it all. Even after listening to a speech by President Bush, I am happy that I have Ted to tell me what the President said and what he really meant. At no time, however, have I ever heard any discussion about why competent teachers are deserting the field and the old hangers-on are merely waiting for retirement day. No one mentions why the brighter students no longer move into the teaching profession or why schools are being filled with semi-literate instructors. We hear little other than messages about the SATs being up or the SATs being down.

Each year, the Educational Testing Service (Princeton, NJ) makes available to the College Board and the National Merit Scholarship Corporation (Evanston, IL) standardized tests for high school students. The ETS corrects and scores the tests and makes available to all participating schools the results thereof. I have a copy of their 1989 Summary which provided the data for this discussion. It is interesting to observe that the NMSC makes available scholarships for "outstanding" Negro students but nothing comparable is available for White students.

SAT is an acronym for Scholastic Aptitude Test. It is usually given annually to college bound high school students. The results of these tests, along with appropriate consideration of grades and personal recommendations are used to determine the probability of success in the college environment. This procedure is by-passed if your skin is dark enough and you have shown some talent for coconut tossing or watermelon rolling. The publisher of the SATs states that the tests are knowledge tests but any perusal of them will reveal that this is not the case. The use of the word knowledge gets one off the biological hook since aptitude is a rather innate sort of thing.

Academic tests are usually of the capacity or content type. Capacity measurement is an indication of how large your mental bucket is, that is, your potential, your aptitude , your intelligence. Tests of this sort try to measure how well your neurons can juggle chunks of information. Capacity tests are usually taken prior to the commencement of something or the other. Capacity is not a very flexible thing. Intellectual capacity has genes for an overseer and Mother Nature as an author. Content tests deal with the measure of how much stuff is in your mental bucket. These are the common types known as "finals," quizzes, Regents exams, achievement tests, etc. Content tests are skill and knowledge tests taken after the completion of something or the other. The SAT, as its name indicates, is an aptitude test and therefore a capacity test. The SAT is a type of intelligence test the scores of which may be translated into comparable IQ scores since both use standardized scales. As with all forms of testing, absolute conclusions are not possible and a variation of 10 points or so on an SAT test shouldn't be cause for elation or panic. The hokum peddlers on the Jewtube, however, like to get hyper over a one or two point variation in SAT scores. In spite of the miserable performance of the white element in this Brazil del Norte, their base intelligence is not falling off a cliff. The base intelligence of those with skin pigmentation problems is not on the rise either. The SAT scores only reflect the demographic alterations that are transforming this once unique Republic into the world's largest toxic waste dump. As more and more fifth rate Third Worlders take the SAT, the lower will be the national average. It is as simple as that.

The SAT is a combination of two distinct tests of which each is subdivided. The VERBAL part has sections on antonyms, sentence completions, analogies and reading comprehension. The reading comprehension questions involve both stated and implied information. The MATH section has multiple choice questions involving applications and solutions of problems. It also includes quantitative comparisons of things stated in a mathematical format. It is usual for people to score higher on the MATH section than on the VERBAL section. The SAT is an intelligence test the results of which are little affected by preparation, much to the dismay of those who have spent considerable time on mental "pumping" exercises.

Each test has a raw score which is calculated by subtracting one-fourth of the number of wrong responses from the number of correct responses. This raw score is then converted into a scaled score by means of a table, which varies from year to year. This "scaled" score has as its basis, the old STANINE procedure. The STANINE (standard nines) procedure divides a set of data into nine sections numbered from 1 to 9. Except for the extremes (Stanine 1 and 9), a standard STANINE division is 1/2 of the standard deviation. STANDARD DEVIATION is the mean square root offset from the mean and is a way to indicate how far a particular score deviates from the average. It is a useful tool for statisticians who sometimes do things that are useful. A person could therefore be classified as a "stanine 4" (a dull type), a "stanine 7" (college material) or something else. These nine broad divisions were dropped in favor of an individual score.

The number range was changed to 100 bottom to 900 top. Since very few people score below 200 or above 800, the range was truncated and the extremes were pegged as 200 and 800. A raw score that translates into a SAT score of 148, for example, would be reported as 200. Most of the sports super-stars, and in particular football players, are in this category. Anyone scoring 854, perhaps some Ubangi or Higi, would be given the "perfect" score of 800. Two out of three (white) people will have a score in the 400 to 600 range which is considered the average category. Two out of three Blacks will fall into the below-average category. The standard deviation is 100 and the mean (average) is 500. The Stanford-Binet Intelligence Test uses a mean of 100 with a standard deviation of 15. Sixty-eight percent of an average white population will have IQ's in the range of 85 to 115. People with SAT scores below 400 (IQs below 85) are called "slow learners" where the "slow" indicates a time span greater than the person's life span. The "head" of any society is that group scoring 600 and above except, of course, in the good ol' Jew Ass Oi Vey, where the other end now does the "thinking" and "leading." This is always the result of the one-man one-belch democratic process where a Class D biped selects a Class F biped to run things. If you toss a bunch of morons into a population with an average IQ of 100 (Sat 500), you'll end up with a new average that is below the previous average. This is what is happening to our SAT scores and one does not have to be exceptionally bright to understand where all of those dull minds are coming from.

Separate scores are given for each section of the SAT. One might score 480 on the VERBAL and 510 on the MATH. A composite score is often used for the sake of convenience. Some choose to total these scores and use the figure of 1000 for the above example. Some educators feel that the verbal score is more "weighty" than the math score, so they average 2 parts verbal with 1 part math, this is, they use the verbal score twice and in the above example, the SAT score would become 490 for the composite. When the ETS does this, they call it a Selection Index. One, therefore, must be advised as to the composition of any given score. A stated SAT score of 600 might mean a 600 math score, a 600 verbal score, the average of the math and verbal scores, the sum of the math and verbal scores, or some weighted combination of the two.

SATs were introduced in 1958 and were given to all high school seniors. In 1963 they were given, optionally, to college-bound high school seniors. Shortly thereafter, anyone in high school could take them. Today, only about 1 Freshman out of 1000 takes them as opposed to 75 percent of the Seniors and 24 percent of the Juniors. It is now common for Sophomores and Juniors to take a PSAT (Preliminary SAT). Practice makes perfect, you know. Beginning in 1976, scores were categorized according to ethnic groups (no Nazi conclusions, please). In the period from 1965 to 1975, it became a noticeable fact that the darker colored students were consistently missing certain types of questions. These questions, by Liberal definition, were unfair in a cultural sense although it remained difficult to explain why a universal mathematical concept was somehow biased when it came to Blacks but not biased when it came to White and Asian students or why it was considered biased at all. Test emphasis has slowly changed, but the outcome has not.

Figure 1 is a graph of the Math SATs (results) from 1958 to 1989. It represents the national average of all the students who took them. Educators prefer the Math scores as they are usually higher than the Verbal scores and have the additional advantage of making the Asians appear better than they really are. The Japanese are a remarkable people but it might be a while before we see their versions of a Goethe, Newton, Gauss or Liszt. Figure 1 illustrates the data everyone is up in arms about. Figure 2 is a graph of the average scores for 1989 relative to the high school level of the student. One might draw some amusing conclusions from this graph. I would like to remind the reader at this point that we are considering intellectual capacity measurements and not measures of achievement. One needs only to pass though a super-market checkout to be reminded that achievement levels are pathetic. It is very common to encounter high school and college students who cannot correctly add, subtract, multiply and divide the fractions 1/2 and 1/3. Ignorance can be corrected but stupidity cannot. Declining SAT scores indicate a decline in the IQ of the "average" American. The "average" American is shifting from a Jean Harlow to a Whoopie Goldberg, from a Robert Taylor to a Bill Cosby, from a Teuton to a missing link. A declining capacity to learn is deadly to a civilized society. Atrophied brains are not positive attributes. The white people in this land (and elsewhere) are being phased out because they have a perverted desire to be phased out and not because their innate capacity is dwindling.

I have taught in public schools, most of which resemble a cross between a halfway-house and a revolving insurrection. I have taught in all-male and all-female private schools and have encountered hundreds of healthy young people, disciplined, hard working, respectful and intelligent. Of all the ethnic groups I have dealt with, I have found the Polish student to be most representative of what used to be known as American. I personally prefer them in a classroom. Perhaps their behavior reflects a family structure more solid than most. The Northern European type is not losing his capacity to think (only his desire to), although he is becoming increasingly ignorant and, for some odd reason, more susceptible to the siren songs of his enemies. However, one cannot ignore the fact of falling SAT scores. It's there in Figure 1. The reason for this decline is that the number of non-whites taking the exam is increasing. This is obvious to anyone with the energy to do some honest thinking. What happens to vanilla ice cream when someone mixes in tar?

I transformed the SAT scores for the period 1976 to 1988 into a composite score giving more weight to the verbal part although I did not use the accepted ratio of 2 to 1. The SAT composite was then translated into a

of IQ levels in spite of crash programs and minority perks. An experienced person will not be surprised by the results as they only confirm what we already suspected. I have also included Figure 4 as an additional piece of information. The graphs represent averages and it would be interesting to speculate concerning the effects of IQ distribution. In this regard, consider a two-person society with respective IQs of 60 and 140 as opposed to another two-person society where both have IQs of 100. In both cases, the IQ average would be 100, but I suspect that the societies in question would have a substantially different mode of operation.

When I was a youngster (ancient times, according to my daughter), the education system operated much differently than it does today. Everyone took the same mathematics courses up until the 9th grade. The upper one-third (academically) were funneled into Algebra while the remaining two-thirds were scheduled for General Math. The successful completion of General Math concluded your math studies even though you took four years to do it. People weren't passed merely on good behavior. Plane Geometry was the Sophomore mathematics course and one could only be enrolled with the provision that he received an 85 or better on the Algebra final, which was a standardized exam throughout the state. This 85 percent requirement held through the entire succession of Intermediate Algebra, Trigonometry, Advanced Algebra and Solid Geometry. Solid Geometry is no longer taught as it proved too taxing for brains capable of suspended animation. My graduating class consisted of 252 students of which only 9 experienced the really nifty Solid Geometry course. Several teachers were Ph.D.s and this was a public school. A private school in our city wouldn't have had a chance of surviving in the academic arena and we had no need for safety zones (private schools) for the children. Schools are a reflection of the community that supports them and our community wanted teachers who knew their subjects and administrators who knew how to expel. The belief that all children were beautiful and intelligent was not yet an axiom. "Honors" students were just that and not merely a grouping of the upper one-third of a class. In those "ancient times," a good swat on the rump was not considered child abuse nor was remaining seated and quiet considered an unusual form of punishment. Mothers stayed at home and insured that their children were civilized before they entered the first grade. School discipline was a structured thing and not a verbal arena for lawyers and social workers with nothing important to do. The punishment (dirty word) for waywardness was standing at attention in the corridor for the remainder of the period. If one failed at this, he was forwarded to the Dean who promptly requested that you assume the "position." If you failed to comprehend that message, there was another step. You were catapulted to the Office of the Principal. At our school, the Principal had an appropriate nick-name. It was "Foot." The term told it all as it was applied both literally and figuratively. Some people were never seen at school again. Those that graduated knew how to read, write and handle fractions. By far, the greater of all school related confrontations was the one you experienced when Dad was informed of it all. Dad was more than a goy wage earner under the direction of an immature wife who was in turn directed by a bevy of wise-ass brats. I can recall the name of no father, at that time, who could properly be called "pussy whipped." Mothers were women who educated the children in values and not the cop-outs we see today with their Pampers and assorted concoctions that pass as baby "formula" nor did they hang their children out to dry on the "day care" hook. That is now all past as well as the community that did not feel it was necessary to even lock their doors.

The fallen SATs are only a reflection of the increasing number of non-Aryans, particularly Blacks, who are taking the tests. Asians of the Chinese, Korean and Japanese variety do not have as much of an effect since their negative contribution to the Verbal SAT is somewhat offset by a positive contribution to the Math SAT. In general, Asians work much harder in school, as do most Jews, than Whites, which accounts for their relatively superior achievement rating. Aryans are losing (have lost?) their country by default. Forced integration is immoral and an exercise in appeasement, bribery and tyranny. The difficult courses in school have been replaced by social games that do little other than provide a playground for the lazy. Students with little demonstrated aptitude for Trigonometry are now enrolled in Calculus. If one peruses the issues of NEA Today (National Education Association; a minority run get-whitey outfit), he will quickly grasp the trend of "American education". The Audio-Visual fad has passed, complete with its carpeted floors, silent chalk and moveable desks. Can't warp the psyches of the chilluns, don'cha know? We've just seen the end of the computer "solution" which was supposed to turn every turnip into a Werner von Braun. Computer programming courses have become "applications" courses or outright typing courses. Originally, computer courses were supposed to teach a student logic and "how to think", whatever that conundrum was supposed to mean. Educational procedures today resemble efforts to teach penguins how to fly. After all, a wing is a terrible thing to waste.

Figure 1 shows the drop in SATs that parallels the increase in the numbers of Blacks taking them. The slight increase from 1979 on indicates the buffering effect that the increasing presence of Asians, Mexicans and other non-White non-Blacks is having. The complexion of the school population changed from White to increasing Black and now it is again shifting towards eye slants and pock marks. One cannot maintain a high National SAT average and still have schools that are nothing other than multi-racial jetsam on its way to becoming flotsam. Honest people will know what has to be done to restore the 1960 level of 500.

Dishonest people (those that are now in control) will have no recourse but to dilute the tests or find a different approach to converting the raw score into the SAT score. I would assume that those skillful enough to "prove" the lack of inflation, in spite of rising prices, will be able to apply their expertise to this dilemma also. Mud people mud up the works. They couldn't make a go of it in their native lands and will only convert our land into the mud habitat that is most suitable for them. Unfortunately for us, it won't be our kind of habitat.

"Black History" is another growth industry which has strong indications of offering competition to that other tale-telling growth industry. "Black History" is nothing other than mulatto or quadroon history and in many, many cases, octaroon history. If one wishes to learn something about copper and something about zinc, he must study these metals in non-mongrel form (the mongrel form being brass). The centuries have shown the world the White accomplishments in Europe, the Yellow accomplishments in Asia and the Black accomplishments in Africa. Didn't anyone pay attention? A Negro with the mental stature of a Gauss or Newton would be a biological rarity and probably an impossibility. In a typical Northern European gene pool, we could expect to have 1 out of 740 people with an IQ of 145 or better. The odds exceed 1 in 200,000 in a Negro group for this level. At the other extreme, 6 percent of a white group would be clinically classified as feeble-minded or moron. For a Negro group, the percent rises to 33. These uncomplimentary figures are the result of the immoral practice of testing Blacks by White standards. Single standard forced mixing has labeled masses of Blacks as "learning disabled" or "mentally retarded" where, in a segregated environment of their own, they would simply be ordinary folk. Our Zionist Occupation Government is an anti-Nature structure that is damaging and destroying everyone, both Black and White.

I am here interrupted by sounds flowing from a TV set in the adjoining room. The topic was pertinent to this discussion and I paused to listen. It concerned a family with four children. The more intelligent of the children had an IQ of 238, while the simpleton of the brood only had an IQ of 174, or thereabouts. Fascinating! Two days prior to this human interest story, I viewed a program concerning a batch of 6 and 7 year old Blacks, reading Shakespeare and Byron and all gushing from the doubling of their IQs that took place within a few weeks. The first question that popped into my meager brain was "Where's the Jew?" The answer was not long in coming. All of these "miraculous" IQ "improvement" stories have the same scenario. All involve very young children and very early "education". In the first case, the four "geniuses" were given prenatal instruction by means of a small megaphone attached to the mother's abdomen. Papa recited daily into the tube. By the time the child was born, he was ready for college. One of the children completed first year grammar school in 3 days, stayed in the second grade 1 week, the third grade 4 days, and so on, according to the story. When interviewed, this child was as articulate as an Aardvark and had difficulty describing why his "genius" was not hereditary. So much for crap, but I would like to comment upon this send-em-ta-school-afore-they-kin-walk nonsense. Many studies have shown that indeed test performance can be temporarily enhanced, for as long as a week, by engaging in what I choose to call "pumping". This is a body-builder term that describes the standard procedure used before entering a contest. One exercises vigorously, moments prior to competition, and engorges his muscles so that an un-natural and temporary enlargement of the muscles occurs. Young children can be mentally "pumped" so that they appear to be increasing their capacity, but 10 years down the line, they are no better off than are their "unpumped" classmates. In fact, one month or two after "pumping" ceases, everything drops back to where it was. In addition, IQ measurements of those under 15 are calculated differently. Adult measurement is based upon the fixed standard of IQ 100. In the case of the young, IQ is the product of 100 and the quotient of mental age and chronological age. A child of age 4 doing dingbats and doodads that one expects a 6 year old to do, would have an IQ of 150 (100 x 6/4). In a similar fashion, a 6 month old Baboon could end up by having an IQ of 300 or so. Always take IQ measurements of children with 6 grains of salt. Down the line, Nature reveals all.

The strength of the Majority lies in its biological foundation, which I see as yet unaltered. The Majority, and in particular, the young, are grossly out of step with their innate nature and living an alien psychological environment. My classroom experience and perusal of the SAT scores convinces me that we still have a sound base. The enemies of this Republic apparently know this and proceed cautiously in order to avoid anything precipitous, anything that would interrupt the grazing activities of the serfs. □

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

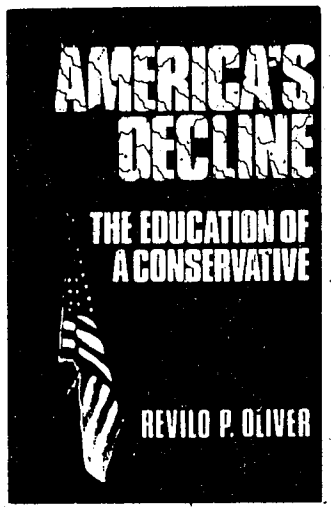
DO YOUR PART TODAY—HELP FREE OUR WHITE RACE FROM ALIEN DOMINATION!



ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

SUBLIMELY SUBLIMINAL

For several months, some years ago, one saw in newspapers and magazines expressions of concern over the possible use of television to induce a kind of hypnosis and alter the minds of the unsuspecting viewers. Images and words displayed on the screen too briefly for them to be perceived by the viewer's conscious mind, already in a passively receptive state as he stares at the screen, will impinge on his subsconscious mind and thereby charge it with impressions that become part of the body of information that he takes for granted, as in the habits that are automatic reflexes in quotidian life.

Then we were assured that the sublime Sheenies who own the boob-tube industry would never do anything surreptitious, and concern about brainwashing by subliminal hypnosis suddenly vanished from the press.

What is, so far as I know, the first authenticated instance of the use of this truly diabolical device for political dominion is reported in Spearhead, April 1990.

In France, the video-tapes of television programs during the crucial phase of the electoral campaign in 1988 were replayed at a reduced speed, and it was discovered that the ugly visage of Mitterand, the Jews' Communist candidate for the presidency, had been flashed on the screen at least 2,949 times to impinge on the subsconscious of the viewers, but too quickly for their conscious minds to perceive what they had seen. Mitterand, of course, won the election and is now President of France and presiding, to the best of his ability, over the liquidation of our race and civilization in that unfortunate land.

The discovery was made because a courageous French attorney, Maître Robert Casanovas, filed a suit against the government's television system, alleging that the hypnotic effect of subliminal sabotage of his mind had been so great that it "made me vote for Mitterand when I had not intended to." The effect, therefore, was one that is commonly produced by hypnosis induced by a skilled hypnotist.[1]

The subliminal technique has thus been shown to be as effective as the one normally used in hypnotizing individuals—probably more effective, since the mind of the viewer of television is already in a passively receptive state, while a person confronted by a hypnotist is aware of what is intended and his mind is more or less defensive of its own integrity.

It is most unlikely that the Master Race would have overlooked so convenient a means of herding their American livestock, but, until the facts have been determined by a searching investigation, we can only suspect they used it, for example, to assure the election of their latest stooges, Ronnie and Bushy. So far as I know, the subliminally coercive images would have been recorded on video-tapes made from broadcasts, so at least preliminary data could now be obtained by running these at slow speed.

Do not, however, hope for too much from a discovery that the subliminal technique had, in fact, been used. Remember that there was no television in 1917, when the boobs were made enthusiastic for an idiotic "war to end wars" contrived and proclaimed by a crack-pot whom the Jews had made President

1. The effect is often demonstrated by ordering the hypnotized person to perform on awakening some act that he would not normally perform, such as clowning or singing an obscene ditty of which he had no previous knowledge; when restored to consciousness, the victim carries out the orders and cannot explain why he did so. The only point at issue is whether the victim of hypnosis can be charged with commission of a crime that is entirely foreign to his nature, as is supposed in the well-known novel, The Manchurian Candidate. If I am not mistaken, no hypnotist has carried a demonstration so far as to make his subject murder a person of whom the subject is conciously fond, but during the Army's experiments in 1944, an American officer was made to attack and try to kill a personal friend who was also an officer of higher rank, having been made to believe that the man was a Japanese spy. He was, of course, prevented from carrying out his subliminal compulsion, and investigation proved that he had not subsconsciously disliked his intended victim before the hypnosis, and that he could not explain why he had "spontaneously" attacked him.

after training him for the job. Judge the mentality of the American people, not by your wishes and hopes, but by the historical record during the two centuries in which they gradually destroyed their Constitution, forfeited the freedom they had won in 1783, and finally gave themselves and their country to their implacable enemies, gladly acquiescing in the degrading servitude in which they now precariously exist. All that was needed to make them commit political suicide was to arouse fits of righteousness in minds stuffed and surfeited with Christian illusions.

MAVERICK LINGUIST

The Scientific American, May 1990, contains (pp. 40 ff.) an eulogy of Noam Chomsky, the Jewish linguist who is perhaps the best known figure in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Although newspapers delight in reporting such statements as his charge that the United States is "a terrorist superpower," which happens to be correct, whether or not in the sense which he intended, his most significant work has been the elaboration (not invention) of a theory that language is an ability confined to human beings, because the structure of language is inherent in the human brain as specialized by a long sequence of evolutionary development. This is the basis of the "cognitivism" that is supplanting "behaviorism" as an explanation of human conduct.

The theory would imply that language is, after all, an innate faculty. It is therefore as much a criterion of biological species as are anatomical structures or color of skin. It may therefore be an indication of racial and ethnic characteristics, subject to the proviso that human beings can learn to simulate behavior that is not instinctively acceptable. Perhaps we are right in being astonished by the mentality of Chinese, who can master their difficult language even when they are little children!

Strictly applied, the theory would state, for example, that Indo-European languages are varieties of the native language of Aryans, corresponding to the structure of their minds, while Japanese is the native language of the largely Mongolian but hybrid race that has now made their small and poor country the leading industrial nation of the world, the language corresponding to the way in which they naturally think. One has, as I have said, to allow for the human ability to simulate and emulate the conduct of alien races. (On the lowest level, a nigger may be taught to behave in public like a member of a civilized race.) Intellectually, an Aryan may learn Japanese (I knew one who, while in Japan in the 1930s, was editor of a Japanese magazine.) And it is a common observation that some Japanese speak much better English than does the average American, who, even if not naturally slovenly, is a victim of the tax-supported boob-hatcheries.

Languages would thus correspond to the archetypal memory peculiar to each of the major races, and perhaps, with more subtle variations, to ethnic groups within a race. The discovery of archetypal forms was the major achievement of C. G. Jung, and will suffice to perpetuate his name.

It is indisputable that an individual's mental processes, his habit of thinking, correspond to the structure of the language in which he thinks. If you examine Japanese, for example, it will be obvious that a Japanese, although he probably has some infusion of Aryan blood diluting the Mongolian and Turanian amalgam,[1] must think in a way that will seem to an Aryan unnatural. The only question is whether that native intellectual process is innate, as Chomsky and the 'cognitivists' believe, or is formed by the language the individual learns as a child, as not only "behaviorists" but all who believe that the mind is originally a tabula rasa (e.g., Locke) assume.

The differences in mentality are obvious to anyone who has had much practical experience with languages. Sanskrit, for example, is thought a very difficult language, and so it is, for it requires the learner to commit to active memory a seemingly infinite mass of tables of sandhi (samdhi), highly complicated and irregular verbs, nouns become frustratingly polysemous, rules for forming compounds, etc., but the basic structure of the language is that of Greek. Indeed, in the time of Max Müller

1. Cf. Liberty Bell, October 1986, pp. 16 f.

(when every American college that wanted to be respectable had to offer a beginning course in Sanskrit, even if it hoped no one would elect it), it was believed that Greek was a kind of evolved and simplified Sanskrit, which was the original Indo-European language). The structure of Greek, in turn, is like that of German and Latin, which combine to form English. In other words, when you learn another Indo-European language you have only to learn details of inflexion and idiom: the basic syntax is always the same.

When you turn to languages that are not Indo-European, you are confronted by quite different and seemingly "unnatural" modalities of thought. Chinese and Japanese are striking illustrations of this (try reading a literal, word-for-word translation from one of them), but Semitic languages are also alien to you, although Semites are classified as Caucasian and therefore more akin to Aryans than to Mongolians, et al., and you will at first wonder how it was possible for Semites to read what they had written. One striking difference is in writing. Indo-European languages depend on vowels and consequently all such languages are written in scripts (alphabetic or syllabic) that show vowels. Semitic languages are normally written with only consonants (whence, of course, much hanky-panky in transmitting the text of the Christians' favorite story-book).

The extent to which language is innate is, of course, an important (if, at present, insoluble) problem. Careful writers, undeterred by Jewish terrorism, now use 'Aryan' as a racial term, and restrict 'Indo-European' to a linguistic term. The distinction is important, for while the native language of Aryans is Indo-European, Indo-European languages are spoken and used by other races, as is painfully apparent now, when many persons of other races have some smattering of English and very few attain an accurate knowledge of it. Conversely, Aryans may use a language that is not Indo-European, a conspicuous example being the Aryans of the Persian Empire, who, for convenience, used Aramaic for administrative purposes in dealing with their polyphyletic subjects. But if we consider innate, as distinct from acquired, linguistic structure and hence mentality, it is possible, but not, of course, demonstrable, that 'Indo-European' and 'Aryan' are synonyms, native language being a function of race.

This problem will, for example, affect estimates of the race of the Sumerians, who certainly show many Aryan characteristics, but spoke and wrote a language that is not Indo-European and appears to be sui generis, despite a few, perhaps coincidental, similarities to some other extinct languages.

Chomsky insists that "we do not learn all the rules of grammar" from formal instruction or by trial and error in imitating users of the language, and that "some fundamental principles of language must already be imbedded in our minds" when we are born.

From prudence or his own tropism, however, he escapes the stigma of "racism" by postulating that "the innate language faculty" is like an electronic assemblage (a computer, for instance), "a collection of switches embedded in a network. All humans are born with essentially the same network, but the switches flip over into different positions—corresponding to different rules of grammar—depending on whether a child learns Swahili or Chinese or English."

The article expatiates on Chomsky's political and social activities. He became nationally known as a vehement opponent of the "war" in Vietnam, encouraging students to resist or evade conscription. Whether he knew it or not, he was right, for the sorry débâcle in Vietnam, like the earlier one in Korea, was contrived to kill American youths, infect others with Orientral diseases, begin the impoverishment of Americans by squandering their resources, and complete demoralization of the Army by forcing men to fight under lethal handicaps while giving the enemy strategically and even tactically decisive advantages, and eventually to go down to a planned and humiliating defeat.

Chomsky proclaims that "whatever the establishment is, I'll be against it."

According to the article, which is a very good summary, Chomsky distresses "Liberal" pundits by pointing out that they create "the illusion of dissent while in fact they support the status quo in all but trivial matters." His observation applies not only to the "Left," but equally to the professed "conservatives" of today.

He criticized adversely the Holy Land of Israel and even supported the Palestinians, who are being robbed of their country.

You will be amused to learn that the Scientific American tells you that Chomsky's championship of free speech is shown by the fact that he actually "signed a petition defending the right to free speech of Robert Faurisson, a French historian who has argued that most accounts of the Holocaust are exaggerated." Readers of the magazine are protected from the horrifying knowledge that Faurisson is one of the intellectually honest and courageous men who have conclusively demonstrated that the "Holocaust" is just the Holohoax, a gigantic Jewish swindle.

What Chomsky himself believes is unknown. He is, however, an intelligent man with a scientific education and, naturally, an atheist, and he must have some knowledge of physics and chemistry. I am sure, therefore, that he privately doubts the story that the tribal deity, old Yahweh, suspended the operation of the laws of nature to enable the Germans to vaporize or otherwise annihilate millions or billions of his own masterpieces.

* * *

The same issue of the Scientific American includes a valuable article, by Dr. Peter Wellnhofer, on the Archaeopteryx, which was, in the Jurassic Age, a transitional form between very small dinosaurs and birds, and hence a perfect illustration of the processes of biological evolution, although the Jesus-jerks have to claim that it was manufactured by old Yahweh to mislead the creatures that he created out of mud and now enjoys tormenting.

Most of you would never have heard of the Archaeopteryx lithographica, if Fred Hoyl, a competent British mathematician and physicist, had not yielded to his compulsive urge to read his name in newspapers and brashly claimed that the fossil in London (he evidently did not know of six others) was a hoax comparable to the Piltdown fraud. (Cf. my note on the latter in this this issue.). The indubitably genuine fossils of this strange and long extinct creature (Ovid would have called it a semiavis) constitute one of the most interesting and instructive proofs of biological evolution, and so deserve your attention.

There is also an article on the much touted "greenhouse effect." The author is honest enough to concede that much of the "scientific" turmoil about it is more political than scientific, but even in the absence of valid evidence that the "greenhouse" is in operation, he naturally concludes that the best thing to do is to agitate for "One World" to avert the dire consequences predicted by computer-juggling "scientists" who hope to see their names in newspapers and perhaps also win some baksheesh. Of the real pollution of the planet, which does imperil life on earth as we know it, there is, of course, no mention. That would displease its and our owners.

ANCIENT LOURDES

It has long been known that the Gallic goddess Sequana (whose name is perpetuated in the Seine that flows through Paris) was as efficient as her Christian counterpart, Mary, in healing maladies and other physical afflictions. As in other places where a supposedly ubiquitous Christian deity has replaced a less vaporous predecessor,[1] the Virgin became, like Sequana, a local goddess, accessible only to visitors to her famous shrine at Lourdes, where a number of evidently genuine cures imposed on some credulous physicians who knew nothing about psychosomatic therapeutics.

Excavations by the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, under the direction of Professor McGuire Gibson, have recently uncovered the temple of Gula at Nippur, the ancient Sumerian city on the Euphrates that even after the occupation of Sumer by the Semites, remained the Holy City of the great god Enlil and so flourished until the time of the Persian Empire. The temple of Gula, probably built on the site of an earlier one, dates from before 1600 B.C.

1. Cf. Liberty Bell, September 1985, pp. 5-12.

Gula, the wife of Ninurtu (Ningirsu), was the goddess of the therapeutic arts. She may have had other functions earlier, probably a political one, since there are indications that in the very early days of Sumerian civilization, when the position of lugal (often roughly translated as 'king') was elective, the elections were held in the temple of Gula.

Gula's symbol was a bitch, and many figurines of dogs are found in connection with her worship.[2] It is, so far as I know, uncertain whether she was imagined as having canine form or the dog was sacred to her, since the antiseptic action of a dog's tongue in licking wounds was early recognized.

The archaeologists from the University of Chicago also found in the ruins many figurines of human beings, each represented as pointing to an organ of his body, which, presumably, had been healed by the divine power of Gula. These are the counterparts of the many votive offerings to the Virgin at Lourdes (and Guadalupe) by grateful votaries whose maladies she healed or relieved. We may thus be sure that the kind of medical business practiced by the Virgin at Lourdes goes back to at least 1600 B.C. and doubtless much earlier.

This is worthy of note because the pronouncements of Ronnie and Bushy suggest that our rulers intend soon to establish prayer as a rite in the schools, as desiderated by so many holy men, who think it would increase the suckers' susceptibility to the hot air of vaporings about the supernatural.

The promoters of that attempt to instill superstition naturally expect the unfortunate moppets to pray to old Yahweh, the sacred spook of their business, but they try to circumvent the Constitution (to which lip-service is still paid) by hypocritically pretending that a child will be free to pray to the high-voltage ghost of his choice. In that event, an American's offspring could (and probably will) do much worse than pray to Gula, a

2. She was sometimes addressed as Bawa, which may have been either a name or an epithet, and could have been onomatopoeic ('bow-wow'). If the latter, the word could be one of the Sumerian words for 'bitch,' a feminine variant of 'dog.' But remember that the phonology of many Sumerian words, especially in the Assyrian and Babylonian periods, is less certain than you would suppose from writings addressed to the general public.

deity who, as the figurines attest, did help those who had faith in her, and did not, like Yahweh, refuse to be bothered, thus making theologians rack their brains to find excuses for him.

THE PILTDOWN FORGERY

The renegade technicians who call themselves "creation scientists" constantly scrounge about, trying to devise arguments to impair the validity of the doctrine of biological evolution, the only plausible explanation of the existence of animal life, including the various human species, on this planet. The twisting and turning of the shamans and their allies involve the lowest kind of sophistic trickery in argument, and they naturally exploit the tergiversation of biologists who, from expediency or sentimentality, want to retain ties with religion.

I noticed an instance this morning in Christian News, 25 June 1990, which reproduces photographically excerpts from a screed attacking the reasonable explanation of life on earth. The writer quotes a man named Wright as saying that two of several approaches to the question are, first, biological evolution as "the means God used to create humans," and, second, "special creation." Wright is then quoted as saying "the evidence simply is not good enough to distinguish between the various views held by different Christians." So, the Christian myth-monger crows triumphantly, "If the evidence isn't good enough, then why do Wright and other Christian biologists teach primarily the Darwinian evolutionary approach?"—instead of just retailing the story about blundering old Yahweh and his unfortunate whim to make a mud pie. That fixes scientists, doesn't it?

I do not know Wright's work, but I shall do him the justice to suggest what he may mean by saying the "evidence is not good enough to distinguish between the various views" of Christians, is that the notion that a god used biological evolution as a complicated device to produce human beings is as preposterous as the silly story about Adam and Eve.

Needless to say, if Wright were scientifically honest, he would have said bluntly that in the known evolution of living creatures there is no room for meddling by spooks, and that since there is no valid evidence for the existence of any of the innumerable gods imagined by primitive peoples, tales about special creation, including many less absurd than the one in the second chapter of the Jew-book, are merely fairy stories.

It is odd, by the way, that Christians always use the particularly absurd story about Adam and Eve, which was probably invented as part of the drastically henotheistic and blatantly misogynist reformation of Jewish mythology in the fifth century B.C., instead of the less absurd (and doubtless older) tale told in the first chapter of Genesis, that the human beings of both sexes were created coöperatively by the 'LHYM (usually vocalized as Elohim or 'Elohiym), i.e., the gods and goddesses whom the Jews worshipped until late in the fifth century.[1]

The peddlers of creation-myths naturally try to use the now notorious forgery of the skull and jawbone found at Piltdown in 1912 to discredit scientific thought. Why pay any attention to silly anthropologists: they were fooled by that hoax, so they are probably fooled by all the fossils they use as evidence for biological evolution. Hurrah for Jesus and his plastic dad!

It is important, therefore, that we understand precisely what was involved in that deplorable but clever hoax.

A full account of the hoax and history of its eventual exposure is J. S. Weiner's The Piltdown Forgery (Oxford University Press, 1955; reprinted, New York, Dover, 1980). The book has one defect. Although its author gives a delightfully ironic exposition of the theory requisite to prove Charles Dawson innocent, he weakly concludes in his summary that the case against Dawson is not conclusively established—although the evidence of Dawson's guilt is much stronger than the evidence on which

1. Archaeological evidence indicates that even in the fifth century, the Jews in Palestine still worshipped a goddess, 'ŠRH (usually vocalized as 'Asherah), who was evidently the consort of YHWH (usually vocalized as Yahweh). The verbal trick by which this fact was covered up in various places in the "Old Testament" is typical, but I must not take space to explain it here. At least in their colony at Elephantine, the Jews recognized three additional deities. Obviously, the 'LHYM were of both sexes, thus rendering the earlier creation myth in Genesis much less absurd than the second.

many a man has been justly convicted of murder. For one thing, there is usually only one murder, but Dawson, after perpetrating the first hoax went on to contrive others to validate the first, thus paralleling the situation dear to the writers of detective stories, in which a murderer commits a whole series of murders to prevent discovery of his guilt for the first one. Moreover, although Dawson evidently began with a few genuine but minor discoveries, he was obviously a thoroughgoing scoundrel, who perpetrated other plausible hoaxes and, in his one literary effort, was a plagiarist.

All this is obvious now, but in the early decades of this century much of the evidence was unavailable or overlooked, and Dawson, who had been first trained as a solicitor, was a gentleman of socially respectable antecedents, a man of considerable charm, and, when he chose to exercise it, master of a technique of scientific discourse that impressed contemporaries as forthright honesty and scrupulous scrutiny of the evidence he had himself forged, partly by the use of chemical reagents and dyes. The scientifically trained men who trusted him could not imagine that he was what he has been proven to have been.

Incidentally, the fact that Dawson deceived so many genuine scientists is simply another proof that to men who are true scientists by vocation the adulteration or manufacture of data is so abhorrent that they are easily deceived by clever prestidigitators and other swindlers, whom it takes a professional magician, such as James Randi, to expose.

Dawson planted in a gravel bed at Piltdown the fragmentary cranium of a low-grade, thick-skulled human being, probably a thousand or more years old,[2] and part of the jaw of a female orang-utan, and the two in combination were taken to be evidence for the existence of a peculiar species, both simian and human, which was named, in honor of the discoverer,

2. Since the extant parts of the cranium were "unusually thick" (i.e., in comparison with the skulls of Europeans), it is likely they came from the skull of a Congoid, which Dawson could easily have obtained from some amateur's collection in England or by purchase abroad. He would have wanted—indeed, needed—a skull that differed from the skulls of contemporary Europeans.

Eoanthropos Dawsoni. He later planted and found similar remains to validate the original hoax.

Of Dawson's guilt, there can be no reasonable doubt. The question is whether he had accomplices. It has been urged that Dawson had neither the requisite expert knowledge nor access to the bones that he planted. This is mere speculation. There is no body of knowledge which a determined man cannot master by diligent application, and the bones could have been obtained in any one of many ways, e.g., by purchase abroad, perhaps in France, or by abstracting them from some collection in England. An accomplice was by no means necessary, but a suitably competent one would have greatly facilitated the hoax.

Suspicion will first fall on Dawson's friend, Dr. Arthur Smith Woodward of the Natural History Museum, who helped Dawson in some of the excavations at Piltdown and sponsored him when the great discovery was announced. So far as I know, there has been no searching investigation to determine the guilt or innocence of Woodward, but I believe that the known facts, viz. Woodward's eagerness to make a great discovery, his rivalry with (and perhaps jealousy of) Sir Arthur Keith, a more distinguished anthropologist, and his personal friendship with Dawson, whom he regarded as a protégé, make it likely that Woodward was the patsy in the fraud.

An article by Caroline Grigson in the New Scientist (London), 13 January 1990, gives a succinct summary of the fraud and presents new evidence which implicates F. O. Barlow, the Museum's "preparator" (i.e., the technician who prepared specimens for exhibition, made casts of them, and made reconstructions under Woodward's direction). He could have been Dawson's accomplice, having expert knowledge and practical experience and also access to the miscellaneous collection of remains that had probably come from various sources to the Museum but had not been selected for cataloguing and exhibition. He actually made for Dawson a sketch of the kind of canine tooth the Eoanthropos would have had, and precisely that kind of tooth was discovered at Piltdown soon thereafter. Moreover, he profited handsomely from the hoax, for he set himself up in business as the vendor of casts of the remains of the wonderful Eoanthropos Dawsoni, which were in great demand from anthropologists and museums throughout the civilized world, together with casts of other anthropological material in his Museum and in others. This is not quite proof of guilt, but it is a plausible hypothesis which would explain some aspects of Dawson's success as a scientific hoaxer.

There have been other suggestions, including a recent one that I mention reluctantly and with great distaste. Professor Frank Spencer of Queen's College got his name in all the many newspapers that published on 6 June 1990 a despatch from Associated Press reporting that he had "solved the Piltdown Mystery." He accused Sir Arthur Keith of having been the prime mover in the hoax, claiming that his long research had found in Keith's diary "information about the site and events at Piltdown...which he wouldn't have had unless he was an inside member of the group." There is no reason why Professor Keith, who was puzzled and disconcerted by the discovery, could not have obtained that information by questioning, as he doubtless did, Dawson and Woodward, the discoverers. Conclusive evidence is Spencer's discovery that Keith, "who backed the theory of evolution that came out of Piltdown, had met with Dawson a year before." I fail to see why it is incriminating that a distinguished anthropologist and generous gentleman met a younger, ambitious, and still obscure worker in the same field. And it simply is not true that Keith "backed" a theory that "came out of Piltdown." As I shall note below, he was always dissatisfied with the Eoanthropos, which he regarded as a puzzling anomaly, and accepted it only because he did not suspect it was a forgery and adhered to the scientific principle that evidence must not be excluded because it is unwelcome and disconcerting. It is true, however that Professor Sir Arthur Keith deserves to be posthumously traduced and defamed because he was one of the wicked anthropologists who refuse to believe that God halted the evolution of anthropoids some hundred thousand years ago so that all races now extant would be equal – it being understood, of course, that Congoids are twice as equal as Aryans, and that Jews are four times as equal as niggers.

What we must understand is the significance of Eoanthropos when it was assumed to be a genuine species of anthropoids, and why it was accepted by many learned contemporaries.

At the time of the "discovery," there were known only a very few remains of subhuman anthropoids, chiefly the Neanderthal[3] and the far more primitive "Java man" (Pithecanthropos). These correctly suggested a linear evolution from ape to human form, marked by diminution of simian characteristics and increasing size of the brain, but they were obviously only two points on a theoretical line which needed to be confirmed at other points.

To educated men, there was nothing at all astonishing about the linear evolution that conformed to Darwin's magistral The Descent of Man (1871). When our race in Greece first began to think rationally about the world of nature, including itself, and until the Christian blight fell upon it, it was obvious that we, civilized men, must have had more primitive ancestors, and a line of social and physical evolution was extended back to barbarians, savages, and even more primitive anthropoids who, like apes, had no language and no social organization. Furthermore, the anatomical similarity of men to apes was recognized even by the lower races. 'Orang-utan' is a Malay term that means 'man of the forest.' In Africa, most of the various native names for chimpanzees and gorillas involved an explicit or implicit recognition of them as 'men.'

When our race began to recover from its addiction to mental narcotics in the Eighteenth Century, the ancient sketch of human origins was naturally revived. You will remember from Boswell that Dr. Samuel Johnson, who, although a learned man, could not dispense with the emotional relief given him by

3. There have been some efforts recently to 'upgrade' the Neanderthals, since some skulls found in Palestine are evidently of hybrids, showing that Neanderthals could interbreed with more advanced forms of life. But it is not known whether the Neanderthals were physically capable of articulate speech and could have had a language. It has been plausibly inferred from the structure of the small bones that would have supported organs of speech that the Neanderthals, like apes, were capable only of a variety of animal cries.

the prevalent superstition, could not be reconciled with the equally learned Scottish jurist, Lord Monboddo, who maintained that men had evolved from apes and monkeys. At the very beginning of that century, chimpanzees were given the biological designation, Homo sylvestris.[4] Many travellers in the East Indies and Africa during that century constantly confused orang-utans with chimpanzees, not having had a chance to compare the two species side by side and unaware of the great difference in their habits.[5] They furthermore confused both species of ape with the lower forms of human life in Africa and Asia; hence tales of apes that live in villages, governed by a chief, and apes that walk erect, carry clubs or spears as weapons, and can be trained to perform simple household tasks.

After Darwin formulated the evolution of human species in scientific terms, and could not be suppressed by holy men, alarmed for their business, it was naturally assumed that the evolution was linear progress, from apes, which can stand erect and walk a few paces but normally proceed on all fours on the ground, are covered with dark brown or black hair, and have comparatively small brains, through a long succession of intervening species, each a little less ape-like than its ancestors and with somewhat larger brains, to modern man, who stands erect and cannot move far on all fours, has little hair, except on the head and in the pubic area, is light-skinned, and has a brain that has enabled him to master other animals and use natural forces for his own comfort and security.

Dawson's "discovery" was sensational, as he knew it would be, because it did not fit this linear sequence. The Eoanthropos was essentially an ape with a brain that approximated the size of modern brains. If it was our ancestor, the Neanderthal and perhaps the Pithecanthropos were not. The latter species could have been earlier than the Eoanthropos, for the relative dating was uncertain, but the Neanderthals were certainly later, and therefore, if they were in the same evolutionary sequence, would have been offshoots that somehow regressed to more simian form, especially in the structure of their brains.

4. I do not know whether it is more than a coincidence that the Latin term is a translation of 'orang-utan,' of which, I suppose, Dr. Tyson could have known the meaning.

5. Chimpanzees are gregarious and normally live in small, loosely associated groups, which, however, do not have the social organization natural to baboons. Orang-utans are individualist and solitary, except that females, when in oestrus, seek males for impregnation.

A creature that was physically an ape but had doubled the size of its brain could not be fitted into a linear evolution, but must have branched off from that line and then evolved separately until its physique matched its brain. We are thus spared the ignominy of recognizing the brutish Neanderthals as our ancestors, and there was something special about our species after all. This view naturally strongly commended itself to men who had only reluctantly surrendered the comforting illusion that we differed from other mammals in having impalpable souls tailored to measure by old Yahweh or some less ferocious god. It salvaged some of our vanity. And that, we may be sure, is why the Eoanthropos became an article of faith with such men as Grafton Elliot Smith and other champions of Dawson's great discovery.

More objective anthropologists, notably Sir Arthur Keith, were from the first puzzled by the Eoanthropos. There were men (see Weiner, op. cit.) who suspected that the wonderful remains had been planted by Dawson, but they were men who had no or slight scientific credentials and disliked Dawson personally, a circumstance that made their statements suspect. Dawson, perhaps with assistance from Barlow, had cunningly used reagents and dyes to give to the various bones precisely the appearance of antiquity and long inhumation that genuine remains would have had, and Sir Arthur felt compelled to consider them authentic and to take them into account in formulating a scheme of human evolution.

He trusted Dawson and Woodward as gentlemen and anthropologists, and he, a born gentleman, probably exerted himself to be more than fair to Woodward, whom he personally disliked. And, as a matter of fact, the scientific techniques that finally proved Dawson's discovery to have been a hoax perpetrated with forged remains were not available until 1950, shortly before Sir Arthur died.

As more and more remains of prehuman anthropoids came to light, the linear evolutionary sequence was confirmed every time, and Dawson's fabrication became an anomaly, an "enigma," as Sir Arthur often termed it. Anthropologists in general began to disregard and ignore the Eoanthropos Dawsoni as an anomaly that could have no significant relation to the linear sequence of evolution.[6]

Sir Arthur, however, was unwilling to ignore the anomaly. In his last important work, A New Theory of Human Evolution (New York, Philosophical Library, 1949), in which he sets forth his brilliant determination of the effects of social organization on the evolution of human species and subspecies, he recognized the Piltdown as "an aberrant type," but wrote:

> If we could get rid of the Piltdown fossil fragments, then we should greatly simplify the problems of human evolution. We should have to account for the evolution of the pent-browed type only, and the development of modern races from that type. A leading authority on such problems, Dr. Franz Weidenreich, has recently proposed that the right solution is to deny the authenticity of the Piltdown fossil remains. Here are his exact words: "Eoanthropus should be erased from the list of human fossils. It is the artificial combination of fragments of a modern-human braincase with orang-utang-like mandible and teeth." That is one way of getting rid of facts [!] which do not fit into a preconceived theory; the usual way pursued by men of science is. not to get rid of facts, but to frame a theory to fit them. That is what I propose to do.

We must feel sympathy for Sir Arthur, a great anthropologist whom we must highly respect for his crucial contribution to our knowledge of biological evolution as it affects the several species called human. It was his very fidelity to scientific method that led him into a conspicuous and deplorable error on an essentially irrelevant detail. The great man was 87 when he realized that Dawson and his followers had "made a fool" of him for forty years. He died two years later.

There are times when one is tempted tc regret that religions are just a residue of barbaric ignorance. It would be consoling to believe that Charles Dawson is now being roasted in the underworld, or perhaps, in keeping with myths of a nobler religion, compelled endlessly to manufacture forgeries to authenticate forgeries, while Sisyphus and Tantalus have the relief of pausing to deride him and all Hades echoes with laughter.

THE BEAR IN THE BUSH

The change in the cast of the perpetual comedy staged in the White House was of some minor importance.

Old Ronnie was a stupid galoot. According to Newsweek, he at least once sent a letter of condolence to one of the fictitious characters portrayed on television by actors in one of the drearily vulgar comedies called "soap operas." Trying to please his Jewish masters, he claimed to have been himself an eye-witness to the fictitious horrors of the Holohoax while he was a warrior in Europe. The lie was a peculiarly stupid one, because records accessible to everyone proved that the drugstore cowboy had spent the war safely ensconced in a motion-picture studio in Hollywood, and when his lie was exposed, bumbling old Ronnie could only claim he had seen those horrors on films that could not have been produced until long after the catastrophic end of the Jews' War Against the West.

It was only natural that Ronnie, with mentality of that order, believed the hocus-pocus called astrology, delegating to his wife the task of learning what the stars were saying from day to day. It is likely, therefore, that the clumsy and ignorant old actor believed what he said when he babbled about Armageddon and "Bible Prophecy" and the low superstitions associated with those terms. And one was not surprised when he, probably on orders from his director, disgraced the office he nominally held by proclaiming a Year of the Bible, recommending his favorite fiction to the numerous dumb bunnies who did not regard him with condign contempt.

Bush is much more intelligent and so more dangerous, even though he, like Ronnie, has to make his performance on the stage correspond to the scenario of the play and the direction of the impresario (Kissinger?). He is surely too intelligent to be taken in by the childish tales in the Jew-Book.

It was to be expected, of course, that Bush would continue to use the horde of "conservative" witlings who, enchanted by Ronnie's gabble, were much more effective than "Liberals" in consummating the Judaeo-Communist occupation of the United States. They, delighted by Bush's persiflage about "prayer in the schools" and the "murder" of unwanted fetus,[1] will help him to tighten further the noose about the necks of the American boobs and perhaps enable him to begin, before long, the rule by open terror that will make him the peer of Stalin and other model rulers of "mature democracy."

What is odd is that Bush has gone out of his way to insult persons who have emancipated themselves from Jewish superstitions. In a public letter not long ago, he made clear his animosity toward atheists, adding, however, that he would (reluctantly) concede them their "Constitutional rights." Although the truth was blurted out three years ago by the mulatto who is a member of the Revolutionary Tribunal that sits in the building that was built for the Supreme Court when we still had one, it is still considered expedient to let the subject population believe that the American Constitution was not effectively rescinded in 1861, and that scraps of it are still legally operative. It would be premature, therefore, for Bush to send in the terrorists of the Federal Bureau of Intimidation to squash rational Americans and enforce the lesson that taxpaying ani-

1. I hesitantly use the Latin form (both singular and plural), although there is much to be said for the traditional spelling 'foetus' in the restricted sense of 'offspring still in the womb, embryo (at any time before birth).' The traditional spelling, which alone is recognized in Britain, was (like, e.g., 'coelum' for caelum) the result of an etymological error made by the Humanists of the Renaissance, but will serve to distinguish the restricted sense of the word from its more general meanings, 'offspring (before or, more usually, after birth)' and 'the process of reproduction (in animals or plants).'

and whatever other nonsense their masters choose to tell them.

One does not usually waste time reading in the press recitations by actors in the White House, but the American Atheist, January 1990, reprinted a sermon delivered by Bush before a bevy of Cardinals on 12 December 1989. Bush, emulating such great hokum-peddlers as Jerry Falwell and Oral Roberts, ranted about old Jesus's wonderful Drivel on the Mount, and declared that he was a champion of "Catholics' fidelity to freedom" (doubtless as exemplified by the autos da fé and the Church's desperate attempts to prevent or suppress a rational perception of the real world), adding that he was certain that "one cannot be America's President [under the Jewish government] without a belief in God [i.e., old Yahweh] and prayer [to spooks in the sky]."

In his doubtless cynical diatribe, Bush added that he had "not yet been tested as Abraham Lincoln was," i.e., had not yet had an opportunity to marshal armies for the slaughter of Americans who wanted to preserve their Constitutional rights. He also boasted that he spent "time on his knees," which is credible, if he meant that he knelt while licking the boots of Kissinger or whoever is now the satrap in charge of the country the boobs gave away half a century ago.

Bush dilated on his confabulations with his colleague in Russia, Gorbachev,[2] and waxed lyrical over the conference between the latter and the Chief Dervish in Rome, Papa John Paul II, which suggests that the two will coöperate henceforth in herding their Aryan boobs into the pens prepared for them.

Continually as he preached, Bush deliberately insulted atheists and everyone too rational to take seriously the absurd yarns in the Jews' story book, and he avoided mentioning the fact that his hero,

Lincoln, was an atheist, although only in private after he became a politician and the pawn of sinister forces beyond his control.[3]

It is only natural for Bush to make the millions of "conservative" cats purr as they lick up verbal cream, oblivious of their now imminent future, but why should he gratuitously advertise his animus against the small minority of educated and rational Americans? Surely his passions have got the better of his political prudence.

A plausible explanation is given by Dr. Fritz Erik Hoevels in an article in Ketzerbriefe (Freiburg), which is translated in the American Atheist, March 1990.

Dr. Hoevels recommends three books which, taken in conjunction, will, in his opinion, heal minds afflicted with Christian superstitions. The three are:

1. Hyam Maccoby, Revolution in Judaea: Jesus and the Jewish Resistance (London, 1973; translated into German under the title König Jesus, Tübingen, 1982). The author is a learned Jew, who exhibits his hatred of our race by denying, as Dr. Hoevels notes, the immeasurable cultural superiority of the civilized Greeks over the barbarous Kikes, but is useful for drawing attention to the parallels between the "New Testament" and the Talmud and thus proving that Jesus was an orthodox Pharisee, but was also a revolutionist, ambitious to become a messiah (i.e., King of the Jews), who sought to organize a Jewish revolt and lead his barbarians to plunder and massacre civilized nations. As Dr. Hoevels remarks, if Jesus was an insurrectionist, he must have been insane to count on support from "heavenly hosts."

2. Professor Morton Smith's well-known and fundamental Jesus the Magician (San Francisco, Harper & Row, 1978; German translation, Jesus der Magier, Bonn, List, s.a.). Professor Smith is best known for his discovery of part of a version of the gospel attributed to an unidentified Marcus, written before the revision that was made to permit its inclusion in the inconsistent anthology of wonder-stories called the "New Testament." In the book in question here, he shows that the historical prototype of the Jesus celebrated in those tales must have been a goës, an itinerant magician and thaumaturge, preying on the credulity of ignorant masses, though perhaps so mentally unstable as to credit himself with some supernatural powers.[4] I would modify that conclusion only by suggesting that there probably were a number of such fakirs, all of whom bore or assumed the very common name of Jesus[5] whose exploits were conflated in the folk-traditions that were the basis of the various "synoptic" gospels.

3. Karlheinz Deschner, Der gefälschte Glaube (Munich, 1988). According to Dr. Hoevels, this book, which I have not seen, demonstrates that the Jesus imagined by Christians is a purely mythical figure who never lived.[6] This, then, is one of the fairly numerous books that show that the Christians' Jesus

4. This is an odd psychotic condition, said to have been found in some of the "spiritualist mediums" who fleeced the suckers in the last half of the Nineteenth Century and the first decades of the Twentieth. The individual, having an hallucination that he or she has supernatural powers, resorts to more or less ingenious trickery to convince others of those imaginary powers. Some anthropologists suggest that the shamans who impress ignorant savages by crude prestidigitation and similar tricks, may be so crazed as to believe that they are somehow in contact with supernatural beings or forces.

5. One such Jesus flourished c. 75 B.C.; see Liberty Bell, February 1986, pp. 27-34.

6. The substance of the German book cited by Dr. Hoevels can surely be found in the latest work by G. A. Wells, Who Was Jesus? (Peru, Illinois; Open Court, 1989), which recapitulates and refines the author's earlier works on the same subject. It is easy, of course, to demonstrate that the Jesus who is the protagonist of the "New Testament," like the Robin Hood of the folk-tales systematized in Howard Pyle's pleasant book for boys, and the Hercules of the Twelve (or Thirteen!) Labors, never existed and never could have existed on this planet. That does not exclude the probable existence of one or more itinerant thaumaturges and political agitators whose activities were the nucleus about which the tales about Jesus were formed, or of various English outlaws who were the prototypes of Robin Hood, or of some remarkably strong and courageous man who, for reasons that the loss of the early traditions must make conjectural, was regarded by an Argive people as a hero in the strict sense of that word, i.e., the result of miscegenation between a mortal and a deity, and in some way related to, fostered by, or inspired by Hera, whose 'glory' he was (Ἡρα-κλῆς).

never existed, but was manufactured by theologians from their tendencious and self-serving interpretations of some discordant passages that were probably inserted in the folk-traditions about the fakir by the Fathers of the Church when they edited the various tales before including them in their motley collection.

It is not my purpose to comment on Dr. Hoevels' evaluation of these books, or to criticize the sometimes seriously defective English translation,[7] but rather to notice Dr. Hoevels' ingenious and suggestive analogy.

It is now virtually certain that an individual's immune system, like his intelligence, is inherited from his genetic antecedents, but just as native intelligence is exercised and developed by education, so some physiologists believe that the inherited immune system is exercised and developed by the common childhood maladies (measles, etc.), which not only produce immunity to a recurrence of the same infection, but also prepare the immune system to resist more efficaciously other infections in later life. The prophylactic immunity thus established is often called 'cross-immunity.'

On the basis of this physiological theory, which, though widely accepted, is, so far as I know, not so well established as to be called a fact, Dr. Hoevels formulates a persuasive psychological analogy:

> An immune system which has become stronger by protecting itself against religion will also, as the statistics show, more radically and successfully cope with other ideological infections. This results, so to speak, in cross-immunities, and is exactly the reason why the state so determinedly protects one religion or a successful group of religions against any kind of criticism or other damage.[8] This is why religion is subsidized and allowed to go about its filthy business in sheltered competition with other ideologies. For exactly this reason the state is suspicious of, and ready to discriminate against, those of its citizens whom it suspects of having established such an immune system, one that has gained strength due to its resistance against the religious virus.

The analogy is, I believe, valid. Critical intelligence is strengthened and acuminated by exercise, and a mind that has liberated itself from one vulgar error by its own efforts will have the acumen to detect others. Dr. Hoevels is doubtless right in claiming for atheism a "cross-immunity" that protects the individual from other fictions to which the populace is predisposed and susceptible.[9] But the atheism has to be thoroughgoing and complete.

Many of the Biblical myths, beginning with the absurd tale about Adam and his Spare Rib, are incredible to anyone who thinks about them, and became ridiculous, when the revival of rational observation and understanding of natural phenomena abated religious awe of uncomprehended and therefore mysterious forces. The Protestant Reformation, based on the premise that the tall tales in the Bible were historical records, thus became indubitably fallacious, and Christendom was prepared for the Marxian Reformation, which revived the "social gospel" of primitive Christianity and became the gospel now preached by the various cults that belong to the World Council of Churches and, indeed, by far the great majority of all Christian churches today, which differ from the Communists only by pru-

7. E.g., the misleading "expected" in the last paragraph of the third column on p.49 probably comes from a confusion between entgegenstehen and entgegensehen in the translator's mind; it might also come from a use of erwarten in a military sense, 'to await (an attack),' but a German writer would have made the meaning clear by giving the verb an object of which there is no trace in the translation. The reader, incidentally, will be amused by an editorial footnote that affirms that the great poet who wrote De rerum natura was a "Roman general [!] and epicure [!]."

8. The alien government of Western Germany imposes a fine or imprisonment of up to three years for "publicly insulting a church or religion." This tyrannical prohibition of blasphemy against Judaeo-Christian spooks was discussed in detail by Gottfried Niemietz in the American Atheist, March 1989. Obviously a Sheeny government that extorts trillions of marks from its hapless German victims and tries by open terrorism to ram the Jews' filthy and absurd Holohoax into their minds, needs to make its subjects mentally stultified, and so naturally promotes belief in other frauds, irrational myths, and barbaric superstitions.

9. One remembers the famous aphorism of Champfort, that every belief widely held by the populace is almost certainly foolish: "Il y a à parier que toute idée publique, toute convention reçue, est une sottise, car elle a convenu au plus grand nombre."

dently retaining nebulous references to Yahweh and Jesus for the comfort of the unthinking dupes on whom their incomes depend.

Many persons who are intellectually or emotionally dissatisfied with the vapid gabble of contemporary Christianity, but who have not considered the unsubstantiality of all evidence for the supernatural, are apt to yield to their emotional need for mystical mummery and flop over from Christianity to some more acceptable cult, such as Buddhism, Theosophy, Baha'i, Wicca,[10] Satanism, the hodgepodge called "New Age," or even another Judaic cult.[11]

There is another kind of religious conversion that is seldom noticed as such. Many persons, more intelligent than those who

10. This is the official designation of the cult in The Witch's Bible, by Gavin and Yvonne Frost. It is a little odd, because in Anglo-Saxon a wicca is a warlock, while a witch is wicce, witchcraft is wiccecræft, and the generality of practitioners of the religion is wiccedōm.

11. The most remarkable religious conversion of which I know personally was that of a lady with whom I was acquainted in the early 1950s. She had some social standing in Washington (she was listed in the Social Register), and was an aviatrix, who had the distinction of having been the first woman to fly to Saudi Arabia (if I remember correctly her Islamic destination), where she had something of a career, flying as a pilot for various persons of importance. She was converted to Islam and learned enough Arabic to read the Koran, of which she carried with her an india-paper edition, which she, like persons who carry with them an edition of the "New Testament," would produce, on the slightest provocation, to cite (and translate) some passage that proved the Truth of her adopted religion. Courtesy prevented me from asking whether she followed the strictly orthodox doctrine of the Moslem theologians who, like many Fathers of the Church, held that women have no souls and will therefore be dissipated at death, but, unlike the misogynist and ideologically homosexual Fathers, provided that women will be replaced in Paradise by much improved models of femininity, specially created for the delectation of male True Believers. (This doctrine is scarcely affected by the concession that four women and one dog were transported to Paradise by special dispensations.) Oddly enough, she predicted that Islam would become a major religion, first in England, and later in the United States. At that time, no one would have thought it even remotely possible that effete Englishmen would admit several million Moslem Semites to their little island, would have to listen daily to the din of electronically amplified yells from muezzins in six hundred mosques, and would humbly consent to be kicked around by the invaders, who already dream of eventually reversing the results of Charles Martel's decisive victory at Tours.

flop over from Christianity to an equally illusory religion, do emancipate themselves from belief in overtly supernatural beings and forces, becoming atheists, but incompletely, since they retain in their minds the residue of that religion without being aware of it.

They consider and reject tales about such impossible events as virgin births, walking on water, resurrection of the dead, floating up into the clouds like a hot-air balloon, and ferocious Saviours who can and will smash up the whole universe, including the most distant galaxies, but they never ponder the equally absurd social superstitions that were authorized by, and depend on, the god whose existence the tales about impossible events were devised to prove.

Atheists who do not perceive that the supernatural tales they disdain were devised to authorize a revolt against civilization retain so much of a residue of Christianity in their minds that they are apt to flop over into Communism, the ostensibly but spuriously atheistic form of the Marxist Reformation of the religion they think they are rejecting. It dispenses with gods but retains all the Bolshevik venom the Jews' god was supposed to have sanctioned. As Philip Wylie[12] justly observed, "Communism is the most successful religion yet evolved." In place of traditional Christianity, they adopt an ersatz Christianity and, forgetting their atheism, have an emotional and unreasoning faith in their new religion.[13]

12. The Innocent Ambassadors (New York, 1957).

13. I speak only of persons who believe in Communism. This, of course, excludes the leaders of the Judaic cult, from Lenin to Mao Tse-tung, and the ruling bureaucracy of a Soviet state. They are too intelligent to be taken in by the sucker-bait they use to enlist mass support. Recent events suggest that Gorbachev may intend to make some superficial changes in the Soviet religion, which has always included the Greek Orthodox churches in its territories as subsidiaries, and unofficially recognized and even promoted the up-to-date churches of the West as allies. Decades ago, when there was a pretense that the government in Washington was opposed to Communism, thousands of American clergymen were officially listed as "Communist-fronters," and many were known to have been recruited into the Communists' conspiratorial apparatus for low-grade converts.

The True Believers of the Communist faith think they are atheists, but they deceive themselves. That is obvious from the fact that their revolt against civilization differs in only a few unessential trimmings from the subversion practiced as "social gospel" in the great majority of Christian churches today. The link between Communism and traditional Christianity is so close that when Communists lose their faith, they usually and naturally flop over into Roman Catholicism. Whittaker Chambers was only the best known of the Marxists who, when disillusioned, reverted to an earlier form of his ruling superstition.

Would-be atheists who do not become converted to the Marxist cult often retain in their minds the Christian residue that makes them susceptible to drivel about "all mankind," "One World," and the "humanitarian" sentimentality of do-gooders and similar pests—all of which find no confirmation in the facts of nature and the real world. There are even self-styled atheists who evidently think that the god in whom they do not believe stopped the biological evolution of anthropoids a hundred thousand years ago to make all talking species equal in some mysterious way that transcends the obvious and great difference between extant races in intelligence, character, and instincts, perhaps because the non-existing god equipped the several species with exactly equal souls. Minds which have progressed to that stage of muddled thinking probably have their critical powers so far in abeyance that they will even take seriously the Jews' inherently preposterous Holohoax, regarding it as a religious certainty which it would be impious to doubt.

A really critical mind will not be content to remark the patent absurdity of the tales about supernatural beings and events in the "New Testament," but will go on to examine the purposes those tales were devised to serve. It requires no great critical acumen to perceive the appalling malice shown in Bolshevik promises that "the last shall be first"; the proletarian rancor of almost continual[14] harping on the threat that rich men will be fried forever hereafter if they do not give all that they have to the poor and become paupers themselves[15]; the frantic hatred of reason evinced by hostility to "the Greeks" who "seek after wisdom" and try to understand nature and the real world instead of drugging themselves with narcotic fantasies; the frightful malevolence of a god "who has made foolish the wisdom of this world" to profit a squalid and mindless rabble; and the hatred of all culture and civilization implicit in the election of illiterate boors (ἀγράμματοι ἰδιῶται) as apostles and the insistence in the Drivel on the Mount on the need for bird-brains that "take no thought for sistency that appears everywhere in the carelessly edited collection of tales. It is noteworthy that when Jesus was in the presence of a prosperous and influential man who sought supernatural therapy for his sick slave, Jesus commended him warmly and tactfully not only said nothing about the evil of owning property, but implicitly sanctioned slaves as property. The two gospels, one by a Jew named Matthew (8, 5-13) and the other by the unnamed man from Lucania (7, 2-10), which recount the incident differ very considerably in important details, but concur, almost verbatim, in reporting Jesus's praise of the slave-owner. Everyone who has read the "New Testament" knows, of course, that Jesus and the early Fathers of the Church explicitly endorsed slavery as a social institution. That is in itself an inconsistent approval of wealth, for slaves were valuable and expensive property, and while an average citizen might own one or two slaves, only the very wealthy could afford large numbers of them. It is also noteworthy that when Jesus, on a different tack, admonishes rich men that they must sell all their property if they hope not to be broiled perpetually after death, he evidently instructs them to sell all of their slaves, not emancipate them, as the rich at that time often did to reward faithful service or from vanity.

14. "Almost continual" because this is another example of the incon-

15. The threat has often induced madness in credulous men of means, e.g., Peter Waldo, reputedly a wealthy citizen of Lyons, who, c. 1176, gave away his property and tried to restore Apostolic Christianity by attracting ignorant peasants and laborers to form the sect known as Waldenses (Pauperes Lugdunenses in the contemporary ecclesiastical writings). There is a curious anti-Christian instance of such mental alienation in the conduct of the protagonist of Jakob Wasserman's once famous and subtly nihilistic novel, Christian Wahnschaffe (1919), which probably owed its extraordinary vogue in the United States to the dramatically seductive title under which it was translated, The World's Illusion.

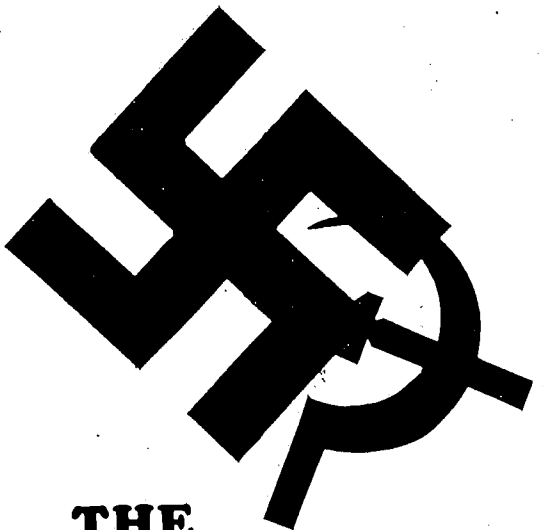
A real atheist, needless to say, will disregard what the dervishes think it expedient to say about the "New Testament" when they make their pitch to the ignorant. He will read the myths for himself and objectively consider and appraise them as a whole, including the social gospel that is, indeed, the most important and operative part of them. And he will shudder at the Judaic malevolence that inspires them, the vicious hatred of culture and civilization. They were designed to create a foul and squalid world in which every instinctive value of our race is negated and aborted—a world in which the natural ties of family and property have been severed, leaving only rootless and helpless individuals, isolated and lost in the terrible loneliness of crowds—a world without history, without philosophy, without science, without reason—a world without beauty of any kind, without art, without literature, without culture—a world without real love, the love that unites men and women, and without even the Aryan's instinctive feeling for the beauty of women[17] and physical health.[18]

16. It is simply amazing that Thomas Jefferson, who was an intelligent man and privately considered Christianity an injurious superstition, was nevertheless able to take seriously the preposterous Gabble on the Mount attributed to Jesus in the "New Testament"; see my 'Populism' and 'Élitism,' pp. 13 f., and especially note 17. Jefferson must have been aware that that balderdash would make impossible an organized society and was fit only for a rabble that hoped for and expected the proximate destruction of the world.

17. The importance, both cultural and biological, of feminine beauty is admirably stated in Richard McCulloch's Destiny of Angels (s.l., 1986; I am told that the book is available from Howard Allen Publications, P.O. Box 76, Cape Canaveral, Florida). He notes that physical beauty is genetically recessive; the same may be true of intellect. The extent to which Christianity has eaten into our minds is shown by the common pejorative dismissal of man's admiration of beautiful women as sexual and biological—as though religion (i.e., fear of the unknown) in human species were not equally the product of the biological forces that have shaped all mammalian life.

18. It will be remembered that the first work of Christianity after it gained control of the ancient world was the abolition of all baths, public

COMMUNISM IN GERMANY



THE COMMUNIST CONSPIRACY ON THE EVE OF THE 1933 NATIONAL REVOLUTION

Adolf Ehrt

"First they came for the Communists . . ."

—Attributed to Pastor Martin Niemöller

Come for the Communists they did, in 1933, when Adolf Hitler and his National Socialist German Workers Party, the strongest political party in the Weimar Republic, came to hold supreme political power in Germany (through entirely legal, constitutional means). When Hitler became Chancellor, Germany was menaced by a huge, powerful, and popular Communist movement, which boasted hundreds of thousands of dedicated members, had polled six million votes in the national election of 6 November 1932, and was unswervingly loyal to the international Communist movement and its chief, Red dictator Josef Stalin.

Communism in Germany tells the story of Germany's peril before January 30, 1933, when Hitler's Nazi movement was the only force capable of matching Red terror and Red propaganda blow for blow, word for word. Americans and Britons, used to their own countries' small, and in recent decades ineffective, Communist parties, will learn much about the grim realities of Bolshevism in Germany after World War I: the bloody Red uprisings across Germany from 1918 to 1923; the pitched battles and political assassinations by which the Reds attempted to smash German nationalism in the service of Stalin's "International"; the Moscow-directed espionage and subversion aimed at the German state; and the hidden ties which linked Establishment politicians, intellectuals, and financiers to Communism in Germany and in Russia.

This book is more than an account of the Red threat to enslave the Germans before 1933. It is also a grim reminder of the fact that while the Communist menace was smashed in Germany (as earlier in Italy and Japan) by a program which offered social justice and self-respect as well as national pride to the people of the nation, America and Britain's internationalist Establishment—in cooperation with an influential Jewish minority—was reaching out the hand of friendship to the Red murderers in the Kremlin. Hitler and Germany's quashing (through comparatively humane methods) of Bolshevism at home could not prevent the triumph of Communism, abetted by its Western Allies, in eastern and central Europe, China, North Korea, Vietnam, and elsewhere. Now that mankind's Communist nightmare seems drawing to an end, let the readers of Communism in Germany look Communism's sympathizers and helpers in the West, many still wielding great wealth and power, firmly in the eye and say: "Never again!"

An atheist who has thought the problem of Christianity through to its ineluctable conclusion will be immune to derivative hoaxes, such as the Jews' Holohoax and oleaginous gabble about "Equality," "Human Rights," "One World," and "World Peace," and will not be befuddled by "democracy" and other negations of the responsibly organized society on which the survival of his kind depends.

The test of Dr. Hoevels' theory of "cross-immunity" will be atheists' relative immunity to fallacies that have no immediate relation to religion and social structure. We expect atheists to dismiss, after searchingly sceptical consideration, Extrasensory Perception and other attempts to smuggle in spooks through the back door, and to observe that the current vogue of the "Big Bang" among physicists eager to be fashionable assumes a creation of the universe that is suspiciously similar to absurd and long discarded myths. But what about matters that have no such connection with dead gods? For example, do the statistics of which Dr. Hoevels speaks show that atheists are far more likely than religious persons to estimate accurately, at any given time, the chances that "flying saucers" are illusions or hoaxes, or to smile at exertions of misguided ingenuity, such as attempts to find cryptograms in the plays or sonnets of Shakespeare.[19] Are atheists far and private, and promulgation by the Fathers of the Church of the doctrine that cleanliness and hygiene were sinful and that personal filth was a proof of piety. Admiration was reserved for the diseased and malformed dregs of mankind, prone to holy hallucinations. One amusing instance of Christian thinking is found in the Mediaeval tradition that Plato located his academy in a particularly miasmic spot to keep his disciples sickly and weak and thus prevent physical health from distracting them from spiritual concerns.

19. The best known example is Ignatius Donnelly's The Great Cryptogram, which is an expenditure of great diligence that is pathetic, rather than ridiculous, when we remember that the author was a highly intelligent but self-educated man, who undertook the heroic task because he was uninformed about the methods of printing in Shakespeare's time. The itch to find cryptograms in literature is a cacoëthes that will probably last as long as literacy. I have glanced at William Pötters' Chi era Laura? (Bologna, Il Molino, 1987). He exercises his ingenuity on Petrarch's Canzionere, mangling the lines of the sonnets until he can more immune than others to such frauds as "modern art" and the substitution of trading stamps for money? I do not know where the statistics are to be found, but I am confident that they will prove the general efficacy of "cross-immunity."

Integral atheism will always be confined to a small minority. It requires not only implacable logic and lucidity in cogitation, but extraordinary courage. The atheist must confront the horrors of reality in a universe in which we and all organic life are only transitory epiphenomena produced by a chance chemical reaction on a minor satellite of our insignificant sun, which is but one of many thousands of balls of incandescent gas in a galaxy that is one of thousands and perhaps millions that are equally lost in an infinite void vast beyond comprehension. Even the bravest may be daunted by the realization that we belong to a species that is alone in a world not made for man, with no hope of succor except from our puny selves. Even the bravest may quail at perception of our dolorous and perilous plight in a world on which incompatible and necessarily hostile races will now have to fight it out for survival on an overcrowded planet.

We have, I think, explained Bush's animosity against atheists. They represent the power of human reason, for which there is no place in the one world of the future, a global jungle of pullulant mongrels, ruled by the Holy Race from its capitol in the Holy Land. They may be a politically negligible minority, but they represent the rationality that he fears, and he knows that they watch his antics on the stage with sardonic contempt. They represent an obstacle to the total reimposition of religious hokum on the destined slaves of the Jews' One World. The victims are to be narcotized by the universal religion that is now being brewed, and of the nature of which the recent "union of faiths" promoted by the Chief Dervish in Rome gave an adequate indication. It is to be an oecumenical mish-mash of all superstitions, including ju-ju, with a vaguely Christian coloring, and in which the Holohoax will eventually replace the Crucifixion.

To ease the boobs into the slave-labor camps we need more prayer to imaginary ghosts—more prayer in the schools, in the churches, and everywhere. But it will not be long before the prayers will be simplified and made practical.

It is obviously futile to try to attract the attention of old Jesus, who did not even keep his solemn pledge to return "like a thief in the night" with a hundred battalions of tough and ruthless archangels before the end of the First Century, and who, for nineteen centuries thereafter, has never given the slightest sign of his existence. To try to address him is a waste of effort.

In the coming century, moppets in the schools and their parents will learn to be practical and pray to Yahweh's living favorite, the local Sheeny, who determines all the circumstances in which they live, and who, if they can persuasively flatter him, may ease the burden of their slavery and even take a whim to bestow on them some of the blessings that are otherwise reserved for God's People. □

THE ANTI-HUMANS by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Leagionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. FOR MY LEGIONARIES. The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. THE LATE GREAT BOOK: THE BIBLE

AN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN AND BIBLICAL ORIGINS.

Nicholas Carter feels that it is time for us to sit down and do what many Christians rarely do: Study the Holy Bible. In doing so, we may discover whether or not the Bible is indeed "Holy" and the "Word of God." In strict biblical order, the author methodically, and scathingly, examines the various claims made in the "Holy Book" and shows how many of them bear no relationship to reality whatsoever. DIE JUDENSCHUL

A Selection of Passages
Translated by Charles E. Weber

From a resolutely anonymous source in the United States we have recently received a manuscript of 85 pages with the title, Die Judenschul. The work purports to have been written by Jews or by a Jew for the instruction of Jews, but various passages (for example, the passage from page 54) would indicate that, in fact, it was written by a German man as an admonishment to Germans and the world at large. No matter who the author was, there are some interesting passages which we have selected for translation into English.

A covering letter requests absolute secrecy as to the origin of the manuscript. No author, place of production or date are given. Various passages (for example, those on AIDS) would indicate that the work was written within the past several years. Although the author is rather cynical even about traditional Jewish religious beliefs, the long discussions about Jewish concepts of God might point to an author with a theological education who has been a close observer of Jews and their behavior for many years. His observations on the sexual corruption and disloyalty of German women are especially bitter.

The covering letter piques the interest and curiosity of the reader by stating that there are only a few copies in circulation but that it is important that Die Judenschul ("this incomparable, revealing work") get into the hands of important people outside the German Federal Republic who would keep the manuscript out of the hands of Mossad and perhaps get it into print. Whatever the authorship of the manuscript might be, it helps us to focus upon and organize thinking on the status, methods and objectives of present-day Jewish leadership. Although the work was written from the point of view of someone living in the German Federal Republic, many of its observations are also quite valid for the United States, which, far more than present-day Germany, has become the area of concentration and center of power of Jews throughout the world.

The name of B'nai B'rith is never mentioned in the manuscript, but the word Bund is frequently used. This work might refer to a secret organization or league, but "covenant" would seem to be its most appropriate equivalent in most of the contexts in which it occurs. (Compare the English word "bond.") A phrase, "Entheiligung des Namens Gottes" (desecration of the name of God), would seem to refer to embarrassing or compromising individual Jews or the Jewish community as a whole by their being apprehended in frauds and crimes.

The following selection of passages in English translation will perhaps encourage a further interest in the manuscript and publication of it in its entirety. We have selected a wide variety of passages from the manuscript in order to convey its orientation, style and wide range of topics.

Zionism is understood as a uniting factor between Orthodox religious Kaftan Jews, Reformed Jews, free-thinking liberal Jews and even Jews converted [to Christianity]. We continue to consider as Jews those who pretend to be Christians and who are only seeking advantages. A few are in important positions in special assignments for our Covenant. Here there are problems for many Orthodox Jews, to whom our Judeo-Christian Cardinal Lustiger in Paris is revolting and will become even more revolting if he were ever to become Pope.

It can hardly have escaped you that our Covenant goes back to a long tradition and must also be motivated by religion in some manner. On the other hand, you also know that we Zionists often have great difficulties with the intolerance of the tradition-laden, strictly believing Orthodox religion. From a higher perspective, while this is not to be taken as seriously, the problem, after all, does exist and must be kept in mind. ..... Religion must keep its sheep together, the white ones as well as black ones. Thus, everyone can seek out in the "holy scripture" whatever he needs to give his morality a religious foundation. Our greatest wise men have always made a central point that the name of God must not be desecrated and that it is completely a matter of the external situation as to how one must act. The adherence to the dietary laws and the reverence for the Sabbath are old, outdated means for the purpose of setting Jews apart. The nucleus of the holy Covenant is the belief in the chosen status [Auserwähltheit] of the Jewish people. That is tantamount to the striving for domination of the world. On this basis even a free-thinking Jew can be deeply faithful and an Orthodox Jew can be a schismatic.

Our God, Jehovah, who concluded the Covenant with Abraham, was verily not a great god. He was a quite insignificant god amongst the gods, inferior in power, glory and, also of course, in character. He had nothing good to offer and not a single worshiper. For a long time he had to look in order to find a person who wanted to have what he had to offer; unscrupulousness, underhandedness, insolence, shrewdness, vindictiveness, lack of mercy, cruelty and business acumen.

In connection with Israel, let us go somewhat deeper into the topic of "anti-Semitism." It was clear to our wise men that the state of Israel could be established only with great sacrifices of the Jews of eastern Europe. The chances which Hitler's National Socialism and the Second World War presented could not be passed up. The Covenant had a share in Hitler's anti-Semitism and a decisive share in the anti-Semitism that came after Hitler. It guided these forces for the strengthening of Jewry and the foundation of Israel. For this purpose anti-Semitism had to be fanned up and had to bring the Jews of eastern Europe to the boiling point under high pressure, like water in a steam kettle. The sacrifices in this connection were unavoidable and were charged to our enemies a thousandfold for every individual Jew. That is by no means concluded and the submission of such accounts continues without any end in sight.

At the opportunity of the forced ghettoization and banishment of the Jews, the Covenant broke up all Jewish organizations which stood in the way of its task and whose policies would have resulted in the annihilation of Jewry by assimilation within a more or less short period of time. A certain type of collaboration with the Nazis, that belongs to the past and which should not be stirred up, was unavoidable. Under the oppressive measures of the Nazis an idealism could even be created in our Jewish people which was also an urgent necessity for the creation of Israel, but which could, unfortunately, not be kept alive for a long time.

The Jews of Europe passed symbolically through the chimneys of the gas ovens of Auschwitz, only to land well preserved in most cases in the United States or in Israel. The legend of our martyrdom, the Holocaust, is the greatest political work of art which the Covenant was ever able to create in the thousands of years of its history and of extremely great value.

If we could not quite definitely count on the stupidity of non-Jews our forefathers would never have grasped the idea of our chosen status as Jews and we would certainly have failed. For that there was no reason for thousands of years. The stupidity of non-Jews is and will remain the solid foundation of the chosen status of Jews.

Today world Jewry has its center of gravity in the United States. Nevertheless it is true that the emigration from the former center, eastern Europe, which has been continuing for decades, is not yet concluded. The Jews willing to emigrate from the Soviet Union are, however, stragglers on the paths of Jewish migrations. For the majority of Jews, the United States, not Israel, is the promised land. This emigration was combined with a huge accretion of power in the United States which was hardly foreseen. This turn of fate from a component of population, that was really viciously oppressed under the Czars in Russia, to the dominant element only became possible by a change within our Covenant whereby the reflection on the nature of the divine Covenant took place and there was a breaking away from old, rigid formalities. For Jews and non-Jews who want to look, this development was apparent, but took place without being readily noticeable to the public. The strengthening of our holy Covenant and of Jewry, as the true victors of both world wars, was the only thing that made project "Israel" possible. With this particular term we have arrived at the second most important current in Jewry, which until the present has attracted the greatest amount of attention to itself by far and which has consumed by far the greatest amount of energies.

Undoubtedly, the origin of Israel is an historically unique experiment and only we Jews were at all capable of this accomplishment. Likewise undoubtedly, powerful experiences were gathered which otherwise would not have been gathered. But if one proceeds from the very excessively great wishes, hopes and—let us not forget—expectations, with which the promulgation of Israel by our Covenant was accompanied, the result is, after all, less than modest. The expected superiority of Jewish statecraft, Jewish art, culture and science has remained completely absent and replaced by the sobering thought that we can realize achievements of our talents far better in the midst of our enemies than when we live as Jews in the midst of Jews.

It will be clear to you that such a government [a nationalistic government] cannot be dominated by us Jews and it is a big block to our domination of the world. For that reason we have made out this ideal to be diabolical and "fascist" very emphatically in order to harness the non-Jews before our cart and to induce them to hurt themselves and benefit us. We Jews isolate ourselves from all non-Jews; in the case of all other races we brand this as "racism." We always promote racial mixing through non-Jewish governments and intend to breed the "Eurasian-Negroid unified race" from non-Jews, because such a race must turn out to be so inferior that we Jews would incontestably be distinguished from it as a true nobility by birth. The European nations, especially the Teutonic ones, but certainly also the Japanese, must be exterminated by mixing of races. For that reason the governments must not be nationalistic. The promotion of immigrants of foreign races will be highly praised as especially "freedom-loving and liberal." It is obvious that this will lead to social and racial disturbances, but that is again a good pretext to push for mixing by compulsory measures. [We Americans need only think of such measures as imposing what is euphemistically called "public housing" on predominantly Aryan communities such as Yonkers, New York. —Translator.] Freedom and liberalism must naturally cease where it hurts us.

Hitler's crime was that he put an end to this game [exploitations in democratic elections] and broke our Jewish power in Germany. In so doing he complied with the popular will. With the "German ethnic community" (Volksgemeinschaft) he created an unimaginable force in only six years of peace which accomplished superhuman things during six years of war. Hitler had become a model for the nations. He had recognized us to some extent and for that reason he had to be annihilated. With all our might we branded him as the greatest criminal of all times and made a devil out of him. Our lying propaganda against Hitler has always been willingly supported by all democratic politicians, even by the Germans. Every lie was and is all right against Hitler. For the whole "world public" it has become a duty to lie against Hitler and for us Jews.

As a result of our catchword "anti-Semite" only an apostate Jew would ever dare attempt to take a position against us. The former Austrian federal chancellor [Bruno] Kreisky [1970-1983] did indeed achieve a tremendous popularity amongst the masses of people but we caused him to lose pleasure in politics and he withdrew in frustration. His halfheartedness made it possible for us to allow him to live. If he had proceeded a bit further it would not have been avoidable to have him murdered, by a madman, a Communist, a Nazi or an anti-Semite. We Jews would again have had a victim to mourn. This would have been the greater advantage for us, but then there could have been the danger of desecrating the name of God. We must keep in mind the fact that even in our organization there could be traitors who would violate secrecy in the event of a wise sacrifice of a Jew. For that reason a Jew must be sacrificed only in an extremely grave situation.

On the topic of family and nation there is an extremely striking anomaly as to what we make our own ideal and practice and what we force on non-Jews as an ideal. Let us view the matter clearly: what is good, proper and useful for us Jews is almost always quite bad whenever it is done by non-Jews in their own interest. Rather, in most cases it is in our interest that non-Jews do the opposite of what we do.

If we deal in drugs on a large scale, but of course refrain from the poison ourselves, it is good if the non-Jews, except for those who help us, leave us the business and of course surrender to the "pleasure." If we manage brothels on a large scale and promote sexual excesses of non-Jews, the non-Jews should be cognizant of our magnanimous offers. Amongst ourselves we should practice a natural moral strictness, even if non-Jewish women are permitted to serve the Jewish supermen as whores and the non-Jewish men as procurers, as is proper.

This split state of things gets us Jews into big problems, which cannot be solved without contradictions until we rule the world. How can we destroy the families of the non-Jews and at the same time care for and promote our own? How can we wreck the youth of non-Jews with greatest certainty and raise our own healthy, natural, happy Jewish youth? After all, we are a tiny minority numerically amongst foes and must camouflage ourselves. We cannot isolate our Jewish youth completely from the non-Jewish youth. The number of mixed marriages must terrorize us. We can bring about the depravity of non-Jews very well and profitably, but then it is very difficult to keep our own people, our own youth out of this process.

We have incited children against their parents and women against men. There are hardly any families left in Germany that function as well as was formerly the rule and could be taken for granted. Everyone is incited to selfishness and to fighting within the family. This war in families is the right thing for non-Jews. We Jews know that we have to keep together ourselves, naturally first in the family and of course also in the Jewish people. We shall bring about, as far as possible, the destruction of the families of non-Jews. Of course, that is also part of the democratic system. If the families would be coherent, the selfishness of parties could not hold out in a healthy nation. Under those circumstances there would be coherence in the nation and that would be unfavorable to us Jews. If the non-Jews are so stupid that they carry on their wars with members of the family, we shall always be the beneficiaries and rulers in the nations. The destruction of the non-Jewish family is a part of our global war strategy.

We have shaped politics into such a labyrinth of lies that it has become very difficult to find the truth in the heap of lies. This enables us Jews to produce "truths" on a mass basis just as we desire them because we alone have power over the news media. We Jews are always the good ones for whom everyone must have sympathy and our foes are always the quite repulsive objects of disgust and criminals. Whatever the radio, television and newspapers, which are uniformly directed by us, put forth as frauds in unison is believed by the idiotic non-Jews. But the non-Jew cannot extricate himself from the whole system of lies and hypocrisy. He just believes everything because he is too stupid for our art of lying.

Page 26.

It was often said formerly: "The Jews are our misfortune." Today, no one can afford to say that any longer because he would be severely punished. Only a very few people hit on this idea because no one can say it any more. Truth has few chances in opposition to our propaganda and power. It has been a pleasure to stultify the Germans so thoroughly. We cause that to happen even in the case of children in school. There they already learn that we Jews are always good and "anti-Semites" are the most evil of people.

The Jewish ritual slaughtering and the collection of the blood in the sacrificial vessel are just practiced on animals. The Jewish ritual slaughtering is motivated only indirectly on a religious basis. It is a practical survival training which involves cruelty in order not to become soft in a world dominated by enemies and not to forget the Covenant with God. If the meaning of the divine Covenant cannot be made vivid in the mind of the individual Jew, then it must certainly be made rooted in his instinct and be guided into the paths of Jewish blood. The Jewish ritual slaughtering is a magnificent educational device indispensable for the preservation of Jewish existence and Jewish spirit. Kosher food is only the pretext for that purpose. Naturally kosher food must be eaten, otherwise Jewish ritual slaughtering would be given up.

All non-Jews must get used to the idea that Jewish ritual slaughter is a taboo subject. The Christian churches, the humane societies, the Green environmentalists, anyone may not dare to take a position on it. Finally, no one must get excited about this in particular, about the treatment of the Palestinians or about the exports of the Israeli armament industry. For the peace movement, that also must remain a taboo subject. The political left should be obliged to continue ranting against the Nazi crimes and to fight against fascism. Instead of learning its lesson that the political left, like everyone else in the world, must simply crawl in the presence of us Jews on its belly at the mention of the word Auschwitz, the political left sometimes makes some questionable gestures against us Jews. In this instance, the political left owes the fools' freedom it enjoys to us alone because it is, on the whole, useful to us. In the future we are probably going to have to show with greater force to the political left what its limits are.

Art and culture can be viewed from various sides. We consider them a business and of use to us from that point of view. Art has its market value and the person creating culture is also trying to earn his bread. Art and culture require a favorable environment and they thrive only on the basis of a generally recognized ethical and moral foundation and at least a minimal measure of general idealism. The reverence in the presence of the magic of a great work of art can only come about in a society which strives for truth and beauty. However, it can never be in our interest that non-Jews live in such a manner.

The old, timeless fine art must wait until we dominate. It is our business to force upon non-Jews the modern, ugly, lowering products of the art market dominated by us. This poison of the psyche, which can only generate bad thoughts and feelings, and brings about insanity and sickness, was simply designed by the Nazis as "degenerate art." That is the dot on the "i" of the stupidity of the non-Jews. After all, the Nazis certified that our intellectual poison weapon is "art."

That poison can be sold only on the principles of "the emperor's new clothes" which must be promoted by a big retinue of art lackeys. This business is magnificent and presented as a sort of "art stock exchange" which is ballyhooed with every manner of fraud and deceit and which dominates the market. These fakes satisfy the need for genuine old art and antiques. The brand names of modern art are constantly produced by promotion on a grand scale and supported by advertising, frauds and tricks. In former times we had more Jews appear on the scene, but now we are inclined to confine ourselves to cashing in and, to a smaller extent than formerly, to connect the Jewish name with the doubtful reputation of modern "art." The more power we have, the more we can leave this dirty work to the non-Jews.

Today the center of gravity of Jewry is located in the United States. There lives not only by far the largest group of Jews but the center of Jewish power is also located there. For decades the Covenant has been working very successfully there on the expansion of our instruments of power. While it is true that we have dominated the United States for quite some time with regard to foreign policy, we shall be able to and have to expand our instruments of power to a much greater extent for the purpose of dominance in domestic matters. The foreign policy of the United States can be so easily controlled simply because no other power group in the United States has found it necessary to become involved financially in both camps during the presidential elections. In domestic matters that would also not pay as well. This point is not so important for you but you can start with the assumption that U.S. foreign policy, including its secret services, is the strongest of our instruments of power that we have at our disposal in general and which is especially effective in the German Federal Republic. U.S. foreign policy and the demands on it by our Covenant will, as a rule, be completely congruous.

The symbolic figure of America, "Uncle Sam" with his big bag of money, not only has the Jewish name, Samuel, but also symbolizes a newly rich Jew who originates from Eastern Europe. Uncle Sam has been the ideal of an uncle rich in dollars for the poor Jews in eastern European countries. No country in the world is so imbued with the Jewish business spirit as the United States, has absorbed crime and prostitution so much as a matter of course in public life and so completely accepted them. Even Israel, where everything is carried on by way of corruption, in other words "connections," is less materialistic and of a better morality. America attracts the majority of Jews so strongly because they can get ahead much better as a solid minority amongst the mass of non-Jews than a Jew can amongst Jews in Israel.

The basis of our power in the United States is, as everywhere, the domination of the news media, that is, press, radio and television. We have expended huge amounts of a financial and personal sort so that none of our enemies can get in a word and so that nothing derogatory can be said about us Jews. All of this expenditure has paid off very well. The politicians of both parties in the United States keep outdoing themselves to obey us, to get a good press and to be promoted in television. Political careers without our support have become completely unthinkable. The voters are no big problem; they are taken in by promises and propaganda and prepared for voting exactly as for the sale of merchandise. But the money for propaganda campaigns must be on hand and the competition must have less money for that purpose. As in the case of soccer, the government, like the home team, has an advantage. It sits on the sources of money and makes the big deals. Hence the opposition can and must give campaign promises without inhibitions and whip up the wishes and hopes of the voters if it wants to have a chance. In the United States it becomes especially clear that the democratic-parliamentary system simply forces into being irresponsibility, fraud and hypocrisy in politics and we Jews have the greatest advantage from that. The parties cannot be anything other than disrespectable businesses and politicians must be frauds and imposters in order to be able to succeed.

Our Jewish success lies in the fact that we are above the parties, that is, that we make deals with all parties and politicians and take care, regardless of all parties, that nobody can seriously turn against us. If a popular president, like John F. Kennedy, ever intends to eliminate our dominant power, God will save us at the right time and send an assassin against him. The Watergate business clearly showed our power over the opinion industry. President Nixon had the nerve to become angry in private about the "insolent Jewish bums" and to cause difficulties for the rise of our hopeful young successors in the administration. This megalomania in so senselessly challenging our power as president of the United States suddenly showed us that this man would gladly take a position against us in a critical situation and that his irrationality meant a danger for us. Deliberately, an especially wretched pretext was used against Nixon so that it would not be necessary to start washing dirty clothes. We could have brought up quite different things. But then things could also have easily come to light and quickly got out of control, things that would have damaged the respect for democracy and, above all, us. For that reason we boiled Nixon on a low flame and with "Watergate" as a clear warning we demonstrated the power of our "public opinion." With caution, we kept from the mass of people the fact that this is our Jewish power. But we opened the eyes of politicians in leading positions, the only ones that count, so that, where necessary, they could clearly see our Jewish power.

It will be of marginal interest to you that we originally promoted Communism, that is, Soviet power, so strongly that we could be considered its creators. The number of Jews in leading positions was originally very large and Communism was the basis of our hope for achieving domination of the world. During the time of the Czars our Covenant itself had strongly Communist ideas, as you have them even today, and as you can find them in Israel, not only in the kibbutz system. Our Covenant and hence all of Jewry was nationally and internationally the power that stood behind Communism in Czarist Russia, just as later against National Socialism. The later extirpation of the entire Russian leading class was a Jewish idea. To the Czar it did not remain a secret for long that we Jews were his worst enemies. For that reason he exposed the Jewish population to pogroms without any protection, a situation especially exploited by the Kossacks. Our uninitiated Jewish masses never understood this treatment and they hated completely the Czar's government and the non-Jews for this oppression. This was just what our Covenant wanted. It was not affected and it understood how to exploit the hatred on the part of the Jewish masses.

Before the United States and Israel became the center of Jewry, eastern Europe was the Jewish center. In large part that goes back to the great Tataric nation of the Khazars who originally lived north of the Black Sea, when they converted to the Jewish religion under the leadership of their Khan. The Khazars who converted to Judaism probably also absorbed Jews. There followed long periods of mixings with refugee Sephardic Jews, but also probably with other races, so that the high Tataric, Asiatic component became less. The true Jews, the Sephardim, were scattered throughout the entire Mediterranean area. Their center of gravity was at one time in Spain. That was a "golden era" but little by little an expulsion from west to east took place in Europe. The language of the country was always spoken. It was not until there was a great wave of expulsion from Germany that the Jews took "Yiddish" with them to Eastern Europe. Yiddish was a kind of medieval Jews' German with bits of Hebrew and other languages. Little is known about these migrations and their causes. The fusion of Sephardic Jews, the original Biblical Jews, with the Khazars in eastern Europe is the only explanation for the racial splitting up of Jewry into Ashkenazim and Sephardim. The Sephardim have a far stronger Asiatic, Oriental character. On the other hand, we Ashkenazim have an almost truly European appearance, although it is not clear what the origin of this racial influence is.

We Jews were in Europe much too long. People learned to know us and became anti-Semitic. We Jews have always been attracted into prosperous lands and into the metropolises of commerce and business, where our Jewish skills in business could come to their full fruition. But in Europe we were driven out of these very metropolises. We Jews had only a miserable existence in eastern Europe. We were limited as to our freedoms and amongst non-Jews we were limited in bringing our capabilities into effect. In the Ghetto we were simply Jews amongst Jews. That was a dreary life and one without perspective. The non-Jews did not trust us and forced isolation on us as a precaution. We did not have the appropriate power. Rather, we were a minority deprived of power. The emigration from eastern Europe could consequently not be stopped and our holy Covenant was farsighted enough to go along and to build up the new centers. But in Europe modern Zionism still established the basis of our present power. The ascent of the house of Rothschild was not that of Zionism, but later and not as clearly discernible the Zionist movement enjoyed a far more significant upsurge than the Rothschild family. When we Jews migrated to the United States and to Israel we took along our wisdom which was thousands of years old in dealing with non-Jews and we again came in contact with nations that do not know us, that took us in amicably and believed our stories. That could not last long in the case of the Arabs but the Americans are especially primitive and gullible and praise to heaven us Jewish successful people. In the United States we are accorded an unlimited trust. [The last statement is open to question. As early as 1920-1922 Henry Ford supported the publications of The International Jew, a work which is still in print in the United States and is available from Liberty Bell Publications. A somewhat comparable work, Forschungen zur Judenfrage, was not published until 1937-1943. This work is now out of print except for translations of four articles published in the Liberty Bell of August-September 1983, August 1984, September 1984 and November 1984. They are still available as offprints. There are also a number of American periodicals which have the courage to observe the current activities and machinations of Jews. Indeed, it might be argued that no country in the world has a livelier, more critical discussion of Jewish power and its misuse than the United States. —Translator.] □

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. THE GRAECO-JUDEAN CONNECTION

Nicholas Carter

It is axiomatic that people cannot be rightly understood and fairly judged unless they are regarded in the light of the standards and values of the society in which they lived. In other words, the peoples of the ancient world should not be judged by our intellectually and culturally molded standards and values.

Comprehending this principle better than most, F. Jackson and K. Lake, the authors of The Beginnings of Christianity, observed several decades ago that the application of psychology to the problems of Christian origins would be more valuable to future writers than the collection, analysis and synthesis of material. To evaluate the processes of man's subconscious for the purpose of understanding the motivations that bring about monumental changes, however, one must know as much as possible about the people involved—how they lived, what they meant by the words they used, and the AGE in which they lived; and regarding the origins of what eventually became known as Christianity, we must begin this investigation with a day and time that antedates the Palestine of the legendary Nazarene. We must begin with the ancient Greeks.

A moment first to clarify an important point: Since there was no Jesus and no Christianity during the 1st century of the Common Era, there were no "Christians." Rather than referring to the participants of the early movement that preceded the development of mythological Catholicism as the "early Christians," I will describe them from this point on as the New Messianists.

The Greek peninsula, jutting southward into the Mediterranean Sea, is a mountainous land, with some plains, divided by small rivers and streams. For many centuries before 1200 B.C., a pre-Greek civilization had developed at Mycene and Argos and Tiryns on the Greek mainland and at Troy on the Asiatic coast.

The established kingdoms of this civilization were eventually overthrown by a series of waves of migration of tribes belonging to an Indo-

European family of peoples. These newcomers, who called themselves Achaians, came from the North, possible through Thrace, and settled in Thessaly and Boeotia, in the Peloponnesos and the islands of the western coast, in Crete, and in a few of the neighboring islands off the coast of Asia Minor. They were a true Greek race and they spoke a true Greek tongue.

The Pelasgians (the Greeks gave them the name), who inhabited the area first, remained on the land as a plebeian class governed by the Achaians, who in turn went on to become innovative builders, achieve great wealth, and rule for at least several centuries.

Tragically, the Achaian civilization was destroyed around 1000 B.C. by the invading Dorians, primitive tribes of Greek mountain people who pushed southward from the hills around Thessaly. The Dorian invasion slowed the growth of Greek civilization to the point that it took some time to recreate an equally vigorous social system.

The next important step in the evolution of the luminous Greek cosmos belongs to the Ionians. The appearance of the Ionian name significantly marks the difference between pre-historic and historic Greece. In Homer, the Greeks are a unity—the Achaians. In the Historic age they are divided into three distinct entities: Aeolians, Dorians, and Ionians. The Aeolians were the descendants of the Achaians; the Dorians were Greek mountaineers; and the Ionians, who evolved out of a mixture of the old pre-Hellenic or Pelasgian population and the Achaians, developed as the type of all that is most Greek in the world of intellect. The beginnings of nearly all the great things that civilized minds now respect were then being cultivated in Greece.

And thus it was that the new Greeks emerged to display qualities of leadership in every department of life. Long before the repressive Christian-Judaic system began, Ionian Greek physicists started the world on an orderly, naturalistic interpretation of the cosmos. They discovered the uniformity of nature and the analysis of cause and effect in materialistic terms; and in just a few centuries they achieved more in the fields of mathematics, astronomy, physics and medicine than had been achieved in all previous history.

The remarkable Greeks of the 5th century set the pace for all that was to follow. They produced some of the noblest poetry and art, the finest political thinking, and the most vital philosophy known to the world. In everything they did, from their beautifully cut inscriptions to the epitaphs on the dead, the Greeks displayed a great and pervading instinct for beauty. The conception of beauty as a joy in itself and as a guide in life was first and most joyously expressed in Greece, and the very laws by which things are beautiful or ugly were to a great extent discovered and laid down then and there.

Throughout this era, which began in the 6th century, culminated in the fifth in the Age of Pericles in Athens, and extended down almost to the beginning of the New Messianic age, much of the civilized world was dominated by the genius of Greece. Hence the descriptive appelation—"Hellenistic." (Hellas was a name for Greece; Hellenism represented the culture, ideals and pattern of life of Greece, as represented in Athens at the time of Pericles.) Most amazing of all, perhaps, Greek civilization, while being curiously unstable in some respects and containing serious flaws, was almost totally free of entanglements of elaborate creeds, ceremonies, customs and traditions.

By contrast, little Israel in Palestine was more encumbered with entanglements of just that sort than possibly any other nation on earth. While I can barely scratch the surface of the Greek soul in these pages, my aim is to provide enough of that essence to serve as an introduction to the all-important connection between the Israelites and the Grecians. The genesis of that history-making relationship occurred during the 4th century B.C. when Alexander conquered Palestine and initiated the spread of Hellenic civilization over that part of the world—and nothing that had ever happened to the Jewish nation was as disrupting or as stimulating as that development.

Taking their philosophical and theological writings mostly at face value, we find that the Israelite/Judeans were the strangest of people—overly sensitive under a brash exterior; offensively arrogant but consumed with self-pity; explosive in their emotions, fanatical in their zeal; formalistic, literalistic and legalistic in their religious intensity: always ambivalent, gravitating between self-love and self-hate; obsessed with symbols to the point that they had created a commandment outlawing them; ritualists in conflict with themselves because of the way ritual had enslaved them; hungering for other-worldliness, but contemptuous of the other worlds around them; fanatical in defense of their prejudices; and, for the most part, alienated forever from Gentiles because of a lack of ego-identification, and the curious blend of superiority and inferiority complexes that had emerged to fill that vacuum.

A day in the life of a pious Israelite might follow this pattern: From the moment he awakened until he fell asleep his life would be regulated and governed by what he called holy writings. When he arose he would walk no more than four cubits before washing his hands, nor touch his mouth, nostrils, eyes or ears; he would pour water alternately on each hand three times to the wrist, and then wash his face and mouth; and he would utter a benediction while drying his hands. In dressing and undressing he would observe many divine rules, such as removing or fastening the left shoe or sandal first, or putting on his garments before walking four cubits, or covering his head before uttering thanks. Eating involved the observances of many laws, such as not eating with unclean people. And was the meat nebelah or terefah? Did the animal die only of blood effusion? Were its entrails inspected? If he intended to eat a piece of bread no larger than an egg he would not wash. If he bit into bread and found on it a speck of blood from his gums he would throw it away. Rather than eat meat and milk at the same time he would cut off his hands.

After eating he would neither walk nor ride nor excite his body or in any way weary himself. He would sleep neither on his face nor back, but the first part of the night on his left side, the second part on his right side. It was the duty of his wife to make certain that his position when asleep was correct. Before copulating with his wife, he would have to observe so many rules that it would take him hours to get ready, and then a whole day afterward to purify himself. He would never laugh or play with his children, because the famous sage Jeshua ben Sirach never laughed or played with his children for fear of losing his holiness.

If he was a learned scribe (although not always Pharisees, the scribes were usually of that party) he would be endlessly involved in the disputing of countless matters in the holy writings. Which trees might be used for the booths, for instance. Some said the palm and willow; others, that palm and willow were to be borne aloft by the worshipers before the Holy Place. An eminent scribe, one Hosea ben Jorah, had ruled that the fruit of the godly trees meant the ethrog or citron; that the boughs of thick trees meant the myrtle (provided that it had not more berries than leaves); that the citron must be without blemish; that the palm branches must be three hands high and suitable for shaking; and that all branches must be free of the pollution found idolatrous groves where the heathen worshiped. And on and on, ad infinitum.

Why was the life of the devout Son of Israel consecrated by religious rites? Because so may mitzvoth (duties or opportunities to serve Yahweh) that had been developed over the long centuries by this ritual-intensive nation—with the very plethora of mitzvoths being regarded as just one more indication of Yahweh's dedication to his chosen people.

Following the introduction of Hellenism to Palestine, a schism soon began to develop within Israel that would inexorably lead to a civil war. Due to the growing dissension the Israelites began to divide their numbers into two principal factions: the Hasidim or Pious—those who were dedicated to being a peculiar and a chosen people who faithfully obeyed the Torah to its last letters, and who were glad to be bitterly contemptuous of all heathen; and the Letzim or Hellenists—those with more adventurous spirits who had learned to value Greek medicine, science, phiolosophy, sports and arts.

The best philosophy invariably encompasses some eternal quality of creative imagination. And thus it was that the more enlightened Israelites could not help but observe that Hellenism was a thing of the spirit, and not dependant on the place where a person was born, or whether he belonged to a God-chosen race.

Hellenism offered the venturesome Judeans the conception of Freedom and Justice—freedom in body, in speech and in mind, and justice between the strong and the weak, the rich and the poor—that penetrates the whole body of Greek political thought, and was, amid obvious faults, actually realized to a remarkable degree in the best of Greek communities. There was also the Greek conception of Truth as an end to pursue for its own sake, a thing to discover and puzzle out by experiment and imagination and especially by reason, a conception essential allied with that of freedom and opposed both to anarchy and to blind obedience.

What, on the other hand, did Judaism have to offer? Submission instead of beauty; the acceptance of tradition instead of the pursuit of truth; the belief in hallucination or ecstasy instead of reason and temporate thought; a religious aristocracy in which only Jews were good, and all others were evil; a total patriarchy in which the son was exalted, and the daughter ignored: a religious structure in which an entrenched orthodox minority could exercise an exclusive authority over all areas of life and religious practice for an entire people; and inflexible faith in which the prophets demanded with clenched fists and enraged voices, total obedience to Yahweh and total obeisance to the inviolate Law of Yahweh.

Is it any wonder that Hellenism attracted young Israelites hungry for a world of art and poetry?...for a language habitually toned to a higher level both of intensity and nobility than theirs?...for a world of books produced with such genius and vitality, that instead of falling out of fashion in the lifetime of their authors, they continued to inspire men with lofty thoughts and passionate emotions?

Is it any wonder that Judeans exposed to Hellenism could not help but compare Zone who taught that virtue alone established differences between men, with Saul ben Jorah who spent a lifetime trying to prove that Jews were superior to all other peoples?...Euripedes who said that humanity drifts on legends, with Amiel ben Micah who speculated endlessly about how many heathen souls it would take to equal one son of Israel?...Epicurus who said that there was no supernatural, with Jeshua ben Sirach who wrote that the badness of men was better than the goodness of women?

As the Letzim saw the Stoic philosophy deny and condemn slavery and preach a religion based on philosophy and humanitas, and a concept of the world as one great city of god and men, they realized above all that while the Jews had the burdensome baggage of righteousness, the Greeks had the liberating wings of reason. And thus it was that many Israelites returned from Alexandria, Tarsus, Ephesus and other cities, steeped in Hellenism, and convinced that Israel should eventually be Hellenized—by force, if necessary.

For over 100 years this controversy swirled within Judea until finally, in the latter part of the 2nd century B.C., the Letzim, well outnumbered by the faithful Jews of Israel, but supported by the Syrians, sought to bring their fellow Israelites, kicking and screaming, out of their own Dark Age. What became known as the War of the Maccabees was the result.

Antiochus Epiphanes had placed the Hellenic Jew Menelaus in absolute power in Jerusalem, assisted by Syrian officials and troops. It was Menelaus who abolished Israel's worship, making the laws of circumcision and the sabbath punishable by death. He then decreed that heathen altars would be built in all the cities of Judea. And it was Antiochus who declared that Jerusalem would soon be known forevermore as Antiochus Hierosolyma. He was wrong. The Hasidim, organized and led by Judas Maccabaeus and his sons, fought with such fury that they surged to victory by defeating four successive Syrian armies. Around the middle of the 2nd century, the war ended, temple worship as restored, and the surviving Letzim were forced to flee to neighboring countries where people were devoted to the culture of the Greeks. Eventually, this dispersion of Hellenic Judeans was to have an enormously significant effect upon the Western world.

For nearly 100 years following the Maccabaen War and prior to the capture of Jerusalem by Pompey in 63 B.C., bringing the 150 miles of Palestine—a tiny country, bordered by sea on one side and mostly by deserts on the other—under Roman dominance, Jewish priest-kings ruled the country. They were "kings" in name only, however, with none of the power and glory associated with monarchs who ruled under the umbrella of "the divine right of kings." While the priest-kings were not Hellenized to an extreme degree, they were at least liberalized to the point that they desired more power and influence over all of Israel. During the ascendancy of the priest-kings, the party known as the Sadducees (from the Jewish Tsadduqim), and composed largely of the priestly aristocracy, was formed. Described by orthodox Judeans as "the scoffers" and the "boorish" who were able to persuade only the rich, the Sadducees originated, it appears, in a reaction against the Pharisees, because the priest-kings favored less rigidly observed views and practices of the Law and interests of the Temple priesthood.

The Pharisees (corresponding to the Jewish word parush, separated) represented the militant arm of orthodox Judaism. Noted for their strict and formal observation of rites and ceremonies of the written law and for insistence on the validity of the traditions of the elders, they even added their own further injunctions to the 248 positive commands in the Torah (known to the Christians as the Pentateuch). In the words of Josephus, "They take a pride in the scrupulous observance of the religion of the Fathers and think to themselves that God loves them more than others." That "scrupulous observance" led them to an "all-embracing scholasticism," "a cold iron-bound legalism," and a "zealous formalism." It is worthy of note that the Catholic hierarchy would eventually perceive in the Pharisees' claims to the Law only a means to insinuate themselves into the good opinion of the people, while the Jews in turn would regard the Christians' claims to a superior holiness only as an excuse to emancipate themselves from the common duties of life.

When the Jewish high-priests finally dared to declare themselves to be military and political kings, the schism between the Sadducees and the Pharisees widened even further. Many Jews resented and objected to this arbitrary ascension to power, and it's possible that some of them withdrew into the wilderness and joined the mysterious group known as the Essenes—"the outsiders"..."the silent ones"..."the pious ones" who had founded the Qumran community. The atmosphere of the time gave rise to numerous fanatical or extremist sects—the Morning Bathers, the Water Drinkers, the Worshipers at Sunrise, and others. The Essenes, whose community was located on the northwest shore of the Dead Sea, were the people who produced the Dead Sea Scrolls. Philo said their number was relatively insignificant—less than 4000.

The Essenes were able to make their presence felt, however, when they joined with the Pharisees in a revolt against Alexander Janneus, who succeeded his brother Aristobulus as the high priestly ruler of the Jews in 103 B.C. He then issued coins with the title "king" on them and completed the conquest of Palestine. In violent opposition, the Pharisees led a six-year revolt against Janneus. It's possible that the Great Teacher of Righteousness whose sufferings are reflected in the Dead Sea Scrolls was involved in that uprising. Janneus crushed the revolt in 90 B.C. As for the Righteous Teacher, he was "abandoned by his friends, abused by his enemies, persecuted by the wicked priest who chastised him and harassed him at his place of exile on the day of atonement, and put to death." The suggested parallel between this scenario and the trial and execution of Jesus of Nazareth indicates the possible resurrection of the Great Teacher as the New Testament Christ.

An account of the Great Teacher portrayed as the prototype of Jesus the Christ is delineated in my book, The Late Great Book: the Bible (available from Liberty Bell Publications, Order No. 12006, $6.00 + $1.00 for postage). The purpose of this study is to present a different scenario. Why? Orthodox Christianity provides us with a theological view of reality brimming with distorted myths and dramatized allegories based on some profoundly elusive aspects of man's existence. On the objective side of the fence, we are faced with the most mysterious period of time in Western history due to the fact that we simply don't know what happened during the first hundred years or so of the Common era – a uniquely significant period of time characterized by the events that apparently paved the way for the development of Gentile Catholicism. Within the purview of speculation and educated guesses, anybody may be right in a situation such as this where nobody knows, even though nobody knows who is right. Nonetheless, the more information that you the reader have, the easier it will be for you to draw your own conclusions about what really happened – should you be so inclined.

A further point: Unlike dogma, scholarly research should always be open-ended. We should be forever aware that what we have learned might be subject to change in the light of future findings, or due to the awareness of new concepts. Hopefully, a deeper understanding is waiting to be recognized. A discovery of ancient scrolls, for instance, which would actually shed some light upon the New Messianic activities of the 1st century, would be of inestimable value.

To be continued with The Messianic Age.

HISTORICAL COMMENTARY

BREASTED, JAMES H.: "We must therefore adjust our minds to the fact that the moral heritage of modern civilized society originated in a time far earlier than the Hebrew settlement in Palestine, and has descended to us from a period when the Hebrew literature now preserved in the Old Testament did not exist."

DELITZSCH, FRANZ: "Israel in the time of Jesus regarded with suspicion and contempt every trade which necessitated an intercourse with women."

FOWLER, H.T.: "The Pharisees sought with pathetic devotion to carry out the will of God as prescribed in his law."

GLOVER,T.R.: "It is interesting to note in passing that the land (Greece) which introduced the Mother of God (Cybele) to the Roman world, aLso gave the name theotokus (Mother of God) to the church."

GUIGNEBERT, CHARLES: "It is well established that the Old Testament [the Jewish Old Testament] knows nothing of a suffering messiah...a contradiction in terms, unspeakably repulsive to a Jew, but apologetic exegesis has always been able to accommodate passages to its needs."

HARNACK, ADOLPH: "A great deal of useless discussion has taken place as to the historicity of Jesus, but we know that nineteen-twentieths of his supposed acts and teachings were attributed to various gods all over Asia."

HATCH, E.: "A large part of what are sometimes called Christian doctrines, and many usages which have prevailed and continue to prevail...are in reality Greek theories and Greeks usages changed in form and color...but in their essence Greek still."

JOHNSON, WENDELL: "Our problem is in large degree one of unraveling this net of symbolism in which our human destiny has become entangled."

KLAUSNER, J.: Such is the Jewish conception of God; the wicked are not worthy that God's sun should rise upon them."

LAKE, KIRSOPP: "If the history of religion has any clear lesson it is that a nearer approach to truth is always a departure from orthodoxy."

LECKY, W.E.H.: "Sin, in the conception of the ancients, was simply disease...the philosophies of ancient Greece and Rome appealed most strongly to the sense of virtue, and christianity to the sense of sin."

MANSON, T.W.: "If with St. Peter (Acts 15:10) we describe the Law as 'a yoke which neither our fathers nor we are able to bear', we should have to regard the new law of the Sermon on the Mount as a still more intolerable and impossible burden."

MONTEFIORE,C.G.: "To talk to a woman, to look at a woman, indeed to have anything to do with a woman, was regarded as dangerous and objectionable to pious Jews."

OESTERLEY, O.E.: "Judaism had very little sympathy to offer to the unlearned, the ignorant, the weak, the fallen, the sinner."

RENAN, ERNEST: "The hostility between the good and the bad led him (Enoch) to an eschatology that was absolutely ferocious...perfectly ridiculous...he knows a whole race or celestial beings, whose names he fabricates in the most audacious fashion. All this is pure nonsense."

ROBERTSON, J.M.: "If the reader, cowed by the truculent negations of some of the anti-mythologists, should reply that there is no documentary ground for the hypothesis of a pre-Christian Jesus-cult, let him be assured that he has been deceived."

SCHMIDT, N.: "One cannot doubt that Jewish teachers honestly believed the story of the virgin birth to be designed to cover up the disgrace of an illegitimate birth."

SMITH, ROBERTSON: "The origin and meaning of sacrifices constitute the central problem of ancient religion."

SUMNER, WILLIAM G.: "It may well be believed that the change from the Mother family to the Father family is the greatest and most revolutionary in the history of civilization."

THE LATE GREAT BOOK: THE BIBLE

AN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN AND BIBLICAL ORIGINS.

Nicholas Carter feels that it is time for us to sit down and do what many Christians rarely do: Study the Holy Bible. In doing so, we may discover whether or not the Bible is indeed "Holy" and the "Word of God." In strict biblical order, the author methodically, and scathingly, examines the various claims made in the "Holy Book" and shows how many of them bear no relationship to reality whatsoever. ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

SURPRISE! SURPRISE?

It is not remarkable that Iraq's invasion and occupation of Kuwait took me by surprise, but we are assured that the Jews' government in Washington was equally surprised. That is hard to believe. For one thing, the territory of Iraq is under continual observation by satellites equipped with electronic instruments of surveillance said to be so sensitive that they can read the title of a paperback book on the ground. The electronic spies cannot have failed to observe and watch all the movements of military forces and equipment in Iraq. For another thing, Iraq is doubtless infested with faceless agents of the Criminal Intelligence Agency,[1] whom American taxpayers send throughout the world to suborn unrest, turmoil, and upheaval in the interest of God's Chosen Predators. (Iraq is also full of agents of the Jews' espionage and terrorist agency, Mossad, which the American taxpayers finance indirectly, but the primary agency does not necessarily tell its subsidiary all that it knows.) It is inconceivable that the nominally American

1. The initials C.I.A. could also be read as Communist-Israeli Agency, but since it is the most expensive espionage agency in the world, and given its activity in all forms of crime, from supplying cocaine to American boobs to assassination and murder, the interpretation I have chosen seems preferable. It is now generally conceded that the C.I.A. engineered the murder of Ngo Dinh Diem and his brother to create chaos in Vietnam and open the way for the squandering of American resources and killing of young Americans in the bloody "peace-keeping" operation that followed. The press has been significantly silent about a man named Roscoe White, whose diary, reportedly discovered by his son (and probably confiscated by the Federal Bureau of Intimidation), stated that he was the "man on the grassy knoll" who fired the bullets that killed Kennedy in Dallas, and that he was employed by the C.I.A. for that job. I have no means of knowing whether or not the son's report is veracious or whether the diary, if discovered by him, was spies were not aware of the plans of the Dictator[2] of Iraq even before his armed forces began to move.

What is astonishing is that Saddam Hussein al-Takriti chose to destroy the precarious entente between the Islamic nations, whose only hope of surviving the Jews' aggression lies in unity against the Jews' stooges, and to provide War Lord Bushy with the long coveted opportunity to invade and destroy Saudi Arabia.

There are three possible explanations, to wit:

1. Saddam Hussein became afflicted with the megalomania that so commonly occurs in persons who have attained dictatorial power over others, especially if they have risen from humble origins and have attained power over an entire nation. This is possible, and will be the explanation adopted when jewspapers and boob-tubes spew out their slime, but it will be safest to ignore it.
2. Saddam acted by agreement with Bushy and Gorby. This means that Saddam, who was at one time on the best of terms with the White House, was bribed and is a traitor to his nation—unless he was promised special benefits for Iraq. If he trusted Americans, he is only a fool.
3. He acted in desperation to forestall an attack on Iraq that the Jews had directed their American colony to make in 1991 or 1992.

authentic, but it is now virtually certain that Jackanapes was murdered by the C.I.A. in Dallas for the purpose of neutralizing the growing dissatisfaction with American financing of the Soviet, which was being evoked by the Indignation Meetings, organized by Americans in Dallas. The assassination was not a perfect job. Earl Warren, head of the Revolutionary Tribunal that replaced the Supreme Court, went on the air as soon as he got the good news from Dallas, but he hastily recited a spiel written for a scenario that did not correspond to the actual performance. Just what went wrong is still uncertain; it must have been something more than the failure to kill Oswald at the right time.

2. Like our Bushy, he is officially called "President," an euphemism currently in fashion.

At the time at which I write, the first week in September, there is not enough evidence to indicate which explanation is correct. What has been thus far accomplished would fit any one of them.

The Arabic-speaking countries, some of them nations,[3] have diverse interests and are divided by latent antagonisms and inherited animosities that would probably transcend both their tenuous racial affinity as Semites and the religious bond provided by Islam,[4] if they lived in a world of their own, but they were more or less united by sympathy for their Semitic kinsmen in Palestine, whom the Jews are destroying, and by their hatred of the predominantly Aryan nations and countries of Europe and North America—a hatred that goes back to the Saracen invasions of Europe, but was in this century revived and exacerbated by the disgusting subservience of those Aryan peoples to the Jews, the common enemies of all nations.

This precarious unity has now been irreparably broken, since most of those countries have officially condemned Iraq and thus apologized for American aggression. Egypt was bribed by having debts to the amount of seven billion dollars assumed by those notoriously spiritless and stupid beasts of burden, American taxpayers. The other countries were either bribed or yielded to threats from our War Lord. They were thus made, in violence to their real sentiments, to traduce

3. A country is a geographical area under one government; a nation is a country dominated by a racially homogeneous people. (The United States was once a nation; it is now only a country.) The Arabic-speaking lands are largely Semitic in population, but their part of the world is an ethnic pot pourri of the residue of the many races that have occupied or traversed it, and much of the Semitic blood has been diluted by blood from other races, so that there are ethnological differences between the Semitic majorities in the various countries as well as in the races of the more or less numerous non-Semitic peoples within each country. Cf. Note 10 infra.

4. The major sects in all of those countries are Sunni, although in some there are noteworthy contingents of the Shi'a, but Sunnite sects are as severed by doctrine as are the various Protestant sects and as potentially hostile to one another.

each other and abandon the hapless Palestinians to the enemies of mankind.

It has long been obvious to attentive observers that Saudi Arabia was the focus of the Jews' hatred of Semites. For one thing, it contains most of the pure Arabian stock left in the world today. For another, it has one of the very few legally legitimate and stable governments in the world.[5] And—oh, horrible!—when I last heard, it was the only nation of any size that had no national debt. Isn't it outrageous that those Arabs don't pay tribute to the usurers, the Sheenies and their accomplices, who have a Yahweh-given right to suck the blood of every nation on earth? That is enough to condemn Saudi Arabia in the eyes of Americans, although the holy shysters will soon be howling about such awful things as a monarchy, which leaves no room for aspiring thieves and seditious agitators, and polygyny, which is just awful when compared to American promiscuity.[6]

Saudi Arabia, having accepted "American" aid, is doomed. Its ruler should have taken warning from many precedents, but especially from the neat example of another country of the Near East. Lebanon is one of the countries that can flourish only as colonies of some Western nation, but it was made "independent" by the enemies of civilization in 1945. The population is largely Semitic, but with deep tribal

5. Civilized and rational peoples know that whether or not a given country has a government under which they would choose to live is utterly irrelevant in international relations, and that only meddlesome fools would arrogate to themselves a right to decide whether a given government is suitable to the nation that has chosen it. The American boobs, however, have for more than a century been so puffed up with a nasty righteousness and a prurient itch to impose their shabby and spurious morality on the whole world that they will doubtless have the presumption to tell the Arabs what they, the Arabs, should want.

6. The late Soledad de Montalvo, whose Women, Food, and Sex in History is the most entertaining book I have read for forty years, spent about a week in an Arabian harem during the absence of its lord. Her account of her observations is instructive. I shall report on her delightful book in a future issue.

divisions, and the artificial country was from the first made unstable by the reciprocal hatreds of its fifteen principal religions.[7]

A complicated constitution preserved a precarious balance until 1958, when the legally elected President, Camille Chamoun, was confronted by an insurrection instigated by Rashid Karami, a Communist agent from Egypt, who had suborned General Chehab of the Lebanese Army. The United States offered President Chamoun, who was really trying to maintain a semblance of civilization, assistance in maintaining order, and he was so gullible that he accepted. So the American Marines marched in under the command of Robert Murphy, the State Department's foremost expert in creating havoc, and President Chamoun, the poor sucker, was summarily deposed and driven from the country, which was turned over to Karami and his stooge, Chahab. The Marines, their mission accomplished with ignominy, marched out and left the country to a festering and ever growing anarchy that softened it up for the projected invasion by God's Darlings from their Holy Land. Ex-President Chamoun could, until his miserable death, have offered expert advice on the consequences of trusting Americans.

The rulers of Saudi Arabia may have learned the lesson, if they needed one after 1959, when the Jews used their courts in the United States to force the Arabian-American Oil Company to employ Sheenies and send them to Saudi Arabia to spy on the Arabs, swindle the natives, and foment trouble. But, denied armaments by the Jews' Congress, they seem to have been trying to placate their Judaeo-American enemies and gain time in the hope of some unpredictable change of world politics in their favor.

The action of Iraq laid Saudi Arabia open to American aggression (disguised as "aid," of course). For many years the Americans have been building military installations on Saudi territory and in adjacent Oman,[8] hypocritically pretending that they were interested in protecting the nation from its foreign enemies, especially Soviet Russia. The country was thus undermined, but even so, as was officially admitted in Washington, "considerable arm-twisting" (i.e., bullying with threats of war) was required to obtain the helpless Saudis' consent to the American invasion.

Now that the Americans have occupied Saudi Arabia, you may be sure that agents of the Criminal Intelligence Agency and Mossad, including many disguised Jews and Arab traitors, will propagate the Americans' wonderful "democracy" with rioting, massacres, civil war, and wholesale destruction. Then the ravaged land will be given Judaeo-Communist rule until it can be declared simply a province, like the United States, in the One World of God's Children. If the Arabian King and his family are well advised, they will have prepared for an escape to—well, where on earth could they go, to be beyond the reach of the slimy tentacles of Yahweh's brood?

The interests of the American people were in no way affected by Iraq's occupation of Kuwait, and they have no rational reason for being concerned about it.

The events which gave Bushy a pretext for intervention are of little importance, but a brief notice of them may not be out of place.

Kuwait, like Qatar, Bahrain, and seven other small sheikhdoms along the eastern coast of Saudi Arabia, was a semi-independent principality under British control until the dissolution of the British Empire. As soon as British authority was officially relinquished in 1961, Iraq promptly claimed the small territory as its own,[9] so that the newly independent town and

8. See the article, "The Next Vietnam," in Liberty Bell, September 1986, pp. 47-60. Note that it was already apparent, four years ago, that Iraq was the principal target in the sights of the Americans' Jewish masters.

9. It would be nugatory to discuss the territorial claim. One could urge the much stronger claims of Saudi Arabia (whose King is, by Islamic tradition and law, the overlord of all Emirs in the Arabian peninsula, hinterland had to call for British troops to protect it from Iraq.

Iraq is only an unpleasant modern name for Mesopotamia, and the only interest a civilized American will take in what happens to and in Iraq will be an anxious hope that the vestiges of the great civilizations of Sumeria and Babylon will escape serious damage.

Although the press refers to the inhabitants of Iraq as 'Arabs' because the dominant language is a dialect of Arabic and the religions are Moslem sects, there is little Arabic blood in the country. Three-fourths of the population are Semites or predominantly Semitic, but most of them are not true Arabs. About 15% of the population is composed of Kurds,[10] who are a kind of running sore on the Semitic nation, and perhaps 8% are Turks.

In the early part of this century, Mesopotamia belonged to the Turkey, which maintained a rather loose authority and presumably inherited suzerainty over Kuwait when it was relinquished by the British), of Britain (who held the territory after it had been taken from Turkey), of Turkey (whose sultan was sovereign over the territory ever since the Saljuq capture of the caliphate and the 'Abbāsid Empire), and of Saudi Arabia again (as proprietor of the holy places of Islam and heir presumptive of the Arabian Empire won by the immediate successors of Mahomet).

10. The Kurds are an old Turanian people, racially akin to the Turks and Mongols. They were known to the ancient Assyrians as Kurdu, and were the Carduchi whom you remember from the Anabasis. First conquered (temporarily) by Cyrus the Great, they form a nation given to chronic and irregular warfare. They claim that Nebuchadrezzer, whom they revere for having tried to solve the Jewish problem, was by race a Kurd, and that the famous Saladin of the Crusades was also of Kurdish descent. They speak an Ural-Altaic (agglutinative) language, akin to Finnish and Hungarian. There has been, of course, a considerable admixture of other stocks, and one hears of Turkish Kurds and Persian Kurds. They are characteristically in habitual revolt against the government of Iraq, which has to devote a considerable part of its resources to keeping them in check. They took seriously the Wilsonian drivel about "self-determination" and think they were promised an independent state, "Kurdistan," formed of portions of Turkey, Lebanon, Iraq, and Iran.

over it. After T. E. Lawrence[11] aroused and united the Arabs, and took the peninsula from the Turks, and after the defeat of Germany and her allies, the British took over, made it a kingdom under Faisal I in 1921 and called it Iraq, reviving an Arabic name. If the British had not become decadent and sick from lapping up Wilsonian hogwash about the "self-determination of peoples," there would be no problem today. The land would be ruled for a still great Britain by client kings, as it was for a time ruled for the Roman Empire.

After the British renounced their Empire to become Little Britain, ambitious thugs created intermittent disorder in Iraq, until the King and the royal family were murdered in 1958 by insurgents incited by Communist agitators, and "democracy" was declared, of which Saddam Hussein is the latest and brightest flower. Whether his claim to distinguished Arabian ancestry is valid cannot be determined offhand and is of no importance anyway.

Iraq under Saddam, with covert support from the Soviet, early tried to equip itself with atomic power and, probably, atomic weapons, since it was menaced by the Holy People in their Holy Land, who were secretly making themselves one of the major nuclear powers of the world—and, naturally, trying to persuade Aryan nations to destroy their nuclear armaments to promote "world peace." So far as the American public was concerned, the sly Yids' secret was kept until it was disclosed by a defector in 1986 and the press in this country, after some tergiversation, decided that it could not suppress sensational news that had been published in England.[12]

11. A new biography of this extraordinary and heroic man, by Jeremy Wilson, has just been published in this country by Atheneum. This work, authorized by Lawrence's brother, contains in its almost 1200 pages many hitherto unpublished details about Lawrence's career, and makes fact of the scabrous gossip about one (perhaps minor) reason for his attempt to escape the fame that was justly his, but it does not sufficiently allow for the shock that an honorable man received when he discovered that he had fought for a dishonorable and Judaized government, too dishonest to respect the pledges it had authorized him to make to Arabs who trusted him personally. The book is especially interesting for quotations from letters that show Lawrence's judicious and candid opinion of the Semitic race, which fundamentally differs in mentality and instincts from our own.

Iraq could not keep its own preparations for self-defense secret from the Kikes, who treacherously attacked Iraq and, by saturation bombing, destroyed the nuclear plant, which was almost complete.[13]

Encouraged by both the Soviet and its American partner, Iraq under Saddam acquired conventional armaments and used them effectively when a war between Iraq and Iran was arranged by methods that are still largely undisclosed. The partners prolonged the war by supplying weapons and munitions to both sides, obviously in the hope that both nations would fight to exhaustion and thereafter be unable to resist the Jews. The result, however, was that Saddam now has at his disposal an experienced and efficient army, encouraged by an apparent victory over Iran, while Iran seems to have learned its lesson and is said to be ignoring American invitations and inducements to renew the war by suddenly attacking Iraq while Iraq's army is concentrated on the border of Saudi Arabia.

As I have remarked above, a plausible—perhaps the most plausible—explanation of Saddam's occupation of Kuwait is that he determined to force the issue before he was attacked by the Jews' janissaries. It is quite possible, also, that he learned that when Gorby and Bushy, at the behest of their masters, conspired at a "summit" conference, one decision was that the Soviet, which had hitherto maintained profitable relations with Iraq, would abandon that country to its fate by cutting off all supplies of military equipment at extortionate prices. It is quite possible that an occupation of Ku-

12. See Liberty Bell, December 1986, pp. 16-23, where much of the present situation in the Persian Gulf was anticipated.

13. It is an interesting illustration of the godly race's character that the well-known terrorist and murderer, Begin, who was then Prime Minister of Israel, was officially censured by his government for his negligence in having the treacherous raid made by Israeli planes bearing their own insignia, instead of having the planes repainted with Iranian insignia to make the Iraqis believe that Iran was the aggressor.

wait by the Jews' Americans in preparation for a direct attack on Iraq had been scheduled.[14]

Americans are told that wicked Saddam occupied Kuwait to increase the price of oil and hence of gasoline. That story is designed to make unthinking Americans hate Saddam every time they have to pay exorbitant prices at a filling station. While it may be that Saddam wanted higher prices for his oil, that motive cannot have been more than quite secondary, particularly since the Emir of Kuwait, according to the same story, had lavishly contributed to financing Iraq's war against Iran, and, so far as we know, was likely to continue diverting some of his revenue to Saddam, unless the Americans, by their usual bullying and secret threats, forced him to desist.

Americans are now told that Bushy's aggression in the Persian Gulf was needed to ensure a supply of oil to the United States. That is utter nonsense. If we had a particular yen for petroleum from the territory of Kuwait, we could purchase it from Saddam just as we purchased it from the Emir, and if the price was a little higher, that would only give our rulers a pretext to chivvy the boobs with another fake "energy crisis." But Kuwaitian petroleum has no peculiar charm and was only a very small fraction of our total imports.

We could continue to purchase all the petroleum we want, presumably at the old prices, from Saudi Arabia and the five other Islamic petroleum-producing countries. And, for that matter, we have no need at all for petroleum from the Persian Gulf, which was less than a fifth of our total imports. We could buy all the petroleum we want from Canada, Mexico, Venezuela, and Ecuador, which are comparatively near to us, to say nothing of Britain,[15] Indonesia, and Libya.[16] And it is quite possible that, if we would stop foolishly exporting our own petroleum, and would reserve all of it for our own use, our own territory, including Alaska, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico, could supply the greater part of our present requirements, and the difference could be made up by Canada.[17] And that would save the great expense of transporting petroleum half-way around the world in enormous tankers. Furthermore, we could attain complete autarky, so far as petroleum is concerned, by permitting development of our own known reserves.

We simply do not depend on any of the countries around the Persian Gulf and there is no slightest need or even excuse for our meddlesome intervention in that part of the world.

Bushy is prating about "principles" and trying to send the majority of Americans, their minds stultified by Christian superstitions, into fits of murderous righteousness, but such talk from a country that has brazenly flouted and annulled the international law on which civilized nations once agreed is simply ludicrous. And indignation about Saddam's occupation of Kuwait on the part of the United States, which, for example, recently made an unprovoked and treacherous attack on Libya against its own best interests, is nauseating.

Rational men know that what should concern Americans is not the putative virtue or vice of any country in Western Asia, but their own welfare and putative future.

14. You may remember how the British waxed indignant over the outrageous violation of international law by the Germans, who forestalled by a few days a British invasion of Norway, which was to be used as a base for attacks on Germany. There is something sickening about the shabby mendacity and sneaking duplicity of the British, but, of course, there would have been nothing wrong about a treacherous British invasion of a neutral country, because the British were acting for God's Holy Race.

15. The petroleum obtained from territorial waters in the North Sea have given Britain a great superfluity of petroleum, which is exported.

16. The Sheenies are peeved at the present ruler of Libya and had old Ronnie, on the pretext of a rumor (later proved false) about the nationality of persons who placed a bomb in a night club, make a treacherous attack on Libya. But Americans, if rational and still independent, would pay no attention to the wishes of their domestic enemies, and would buy in whatever market was most advantageous.

17. The relevant statistics are generally available, e.g., in recent editions of the World Almanac.

The only problem that Americans need now urgently to consider is what their War Lord intends to do to them.

Bushy has started a war without even politely asking permission from the Five Hundred Thieves in the Capitol whom the Jews describe as the best Congress their money can buy. Such courtesy was really unnecessary, since Bushy and the Congress serve the same masters, but it would have pleased his subjects. Of course, no one even thought of suggesting that the taxpaying animals should be consulted as to whether they were eager to be killed and taxed for the glory of their War Lord.

As I write, preparations are being made for a massive attack on Iraq around the middle of October. The Iraqis can be provoked into firing the first shot, or, if they do not oblige, an American rocket or two or a missile from Israel could destroy some American ships, or chemicals could be released to asphyxiate or poison a few thousand American soldiers. Iraq would, of course, be blamed. This technique has worked well in the past, from the sinking of the Maine in the harbor of Havana to the destruction of the American fleet that was anchored in Pearl Harbor for the convenience of the Japanese, who had been induced to make the attack in self-defense.[18]

That grand technique is used to launch Americans on a mindless Crusade against their own interests. For a less spectacular squandering of American lives and resources, it sufficed to report that a Vietnamese boat had fired at an American destroyer that had intruded into Vietnamese waters. No one bothered to ask whether the shots had actually been fired, or, if they had, whether they had been provoked, or to ask what an American destroyer was doing there anyway, after the Americans had created Vietnam by betraying the French.

Americans are beginning to perceive the importance of the change in the cast of the show in Washington. Ronnie was a stupid old galoot, who probably did believe in astrology, Armageddon, and similar nonsense, and who could perform in simple rôles under a competent director, but he was indolent and lazy, doing only what he was told to do. Bushy, who looks and sounds like a Puritan,[19] is highly intelligent, madly ambitious, and hyperactive. Subject to permission from the Jewish satraps, he wants great exploits of his own to feed his ego.

Bushy, remember, was Director of the Criminal Intelligence Agency, not a post for a man who has scruples or likes Americans. You cannot suppose that he would have the slightest compunction about afflicting his American subjects to the utmost.

Since the inauguration of perpetual peace by the United Notions, only two Presidents, Sheeny Truman[20] and a crook from Texas,[21] have had the fun of shipping large numbers of American men to be slaughtered on the other side of the globe, and creating an excuse for massively increased taxation to bleed the boobs some more.

It is possible that Bushy will be content with only a bloody "peace-keeping" operation, like the ones in Korea and Vietnam, which so delightfully killed or maimed many thou-

19. I am told that some blabbermouth on the radio affirmed (plausibly enough) that Bush is descended (surely a long way!) from ancestors who arrived on the Mayflower. That reminded me of an historical datum we liked to cite when I was in college: "The Mayflower set sail from Portsmouth on 16 September 1620. It was battered by violent storms on the Atlantic, but did not sink. That was one of the great tragedies of the sea."

20. His father was a Sheeny, his mother, a White woman, so he was not a Jew by orthodox standards.

21. Johnson, a small-time politician, on whom see J. Evetts Haley, A Texan Looks at Lyndon, was married to and supervised by a Kikess, who probably guided him to power. His character is adequately shown by the fact that he had or simulated a tantrum when some Vietnamese boats supposedly fired at an American destroyer, but when the Kikes bombed and torpedoed the U.S.S. Liberty, killed many American sailors, and tried to sink the little ship without survivors so that they could blame the Egyptians, Lyndon personally forbade the ships of the U.S. Navy near the scene to go to the assistance of the ship that had been detached from their squadron and personally expressed the hope that the Sheenies would succeed in killing all those stupid American swine on the American naval vessel. He was not impeached, convicted of high treason, and shot.

sands of young men and squandered the resources of the hated Americans, but he is ambitious and may well envy the glory of the diseased monster who started the Jews' War Against the West and thus contrived the slaughter of millions of the race that is slated for extinction.

A "peace-keeping" operation in the Persian Gulf would suffice for one purpose. When Ronnie and his Republican gang made all the puppy-dog conservatives wag their little tails by reducing the income tax at the top and increasing it near the bottom, especially for the elderly, the only question was how soon the vampires could find a pretext for sucking more blood. The "reduction," except possibly the upper limit, was obviously intended to be ephemeral. For years the Jews' Congress has been spending the United States into bankruptcy and clearly intends its work to end in a glorious crash and total economic prostration, with impoverishment of the American people and confiscation of what property they have thus far been permitted to retain, thus reducing them to the unmitigated slavery to which old Yahweh destined them.

The "peace-keeping operation" has already produced a sudden cessation of even such fragmentary reports as had come about the Chosens' treatment of the Palestinians, who, we are told by a Kike editor, are so wicked that they put themselves into concentration camps and have themselves beaten, tortured, mutilated, and killed to create prejudice against God's poor persecuted People and make the stingy Americans provide only five thousand dollars for each household in the old Promised Land. The Palestinians are Semites, like the Iraqis, so they are now "our" enemies, and the press is too patriotic to report anything that might diminish "our" righteous anger against wicked Saddam.

While the armed forces of the United States are in the Persian Gulf to overawe any Semites who might belatedly perceive their race's plight, Yahweh's Own will, no doubt, go into action as our "ally." For years, English-speaking newspapers in Jerusalem have been publishing pronouncements that Greater Israel rightfully includes Lebanon, a hapless country the Jews have been maintaining in a state of chaos and terror, partly by their own military incursions and air raids, and partly by means of hired Christian (chiefly Maronite) terrorists. The occupation and annexation of Lebanon is probably imminent.[22]

When Lebanon has been taken, the name of the sacred river will prove that Jordan is also part of greater Israel, and then it will be time to validate the Jewish maps that show Greater Israel as including the rich oil fields in Iraq. The

22. I think I should note the possibility that there may be something significant in a recent incident. Six members (five male, one female) of an Army Intelligence Brigade stationed at Augsburg recently deserted and, after giving away most of their personal property, came clandestinely to the United States. They had clearance for "top secret" work and were entrusted with "intercepting and exploiting" (i.e., decoding) secret communications of unidentified "foreign nations." They came to this country because they had learned that the Third World War was about to start in Lebanon, and, according to one member of the group, they came to find and prepare underground shelters in which they could survive a devastating war that would last for three years.

Don't let your imaginations run away with you. The six young persons were certainly not cryptanalysts or experts in military intelligence. They were essentially code-clerks, charged with decoding (and, no doubt, translating) messages in codes or cyphers that had already been broken by cryptanalysts or compromised by secret agents. Furthermore, during the Second World War, cryptanalysts were painfully aware that they were operating on the frontiers of the human mind, and it is my ponderated opinion that really high-level and ultra-secret messages are now, thanks to advanced electronic equipment, transmitted in codes and cyphers that are invulnerable to analysis. It is true, however, that important information may sometimes be derived from low-level messages that are sent in some system (e.g., the Haglin machine or its several successors) that can be broken by competent analysts with relative ease.

The story told above could be worthy of consideration, but the rest of it in the press is hopelessly muddled. According to one story, the group came to this country and went to Gulf Breeze, Florida, (where one of them was arrested for a traffic violation) to be a welcoming committee for a defunct but famous christ named Jesus, who was scheduled to arrive on a "flying saucer." According to another story, they were going to assassinate the Anti-Christ, who was due to arrive by the same means of transportation. Unless these stories were planted to discredit the deserters, they are half-wits, and the story is significant only as showing the intellectual nullity of persons now in "intelligence work" and probably typical of the products of the public boob-hatcheries.

eastern frontier of the Holy Land will be moved from the Jordan to the Euphrates, and that should content God's Race for four or even five years, provided their serfs in the United States work ever harder for their comfort.

A "peace-keeping operation" would also suffice for another divertissement for our fun-loving masters. Bushy is mobilizing for shipment to the Persian Gulf the National Guard of the several states, which will thus be left without the power to suppress riots that are beyond control by our demoralized and often "sensitivity-trained" police forces.

As you all know, a vicious, talented, and bloodthirsty mulatto (probably a quadroon) was recently in the United States, where "Liberal" punks and White shamans[23] fawned on him, happy because, although the thousands that have been atrociously murdered in South Africa at his behest have been chiefly Black, they were anticipating delightful mass murder and excruciating torture of the Aryans in South Africa, who are so stupid and spineless that they permit a Bible-toting traitor to be their Prime Minister and prepare for their liquidation.

Mandela, with the approval of such White trash, orated cleverly to urge the niggers in this country to start putting the American swine in their places. The time to give effect to Mandela's good advice will obviously come when Bushy has stripped the states of the armed forces which were their only means of maintaining order in emergencies. Americans whose minds are not narcotized will remember the outbreaks of savagery at Watts and many other places a few years ago, and they can foresee what would happen in similar outbreaks on a much greater scale in all large cities, many small ones, and many towns.

It is likely that our domestic enemies, who, remember, are not resident aliens but degenerate members of our own race, their minds alienated by Christian hokum and humanitarian slop, would reconsider their "ideals" shortly before their skulls were caved in with an axe or they were doused with gasoline and made luminous, but that would do the rest of us no good. And when most of the essentials of civilized life have been destroyed and enough white boobies have been killed or maimed, while our own armed forces are bogged down on the Persian Gulf, Washington could belatedly meet the emergency by bringing in a "peace-keeping force" from Soviet Mongolia to teach the Americans what terror is really like.

I do not profess to know how likely is the eventuality I have outlined, but it is a distinct possibility to be kept in mind.

I have said enough to show that a "peace-keeping operation" would satisfy many of our masters' ambitions, but would it sate their desires?

* * *

A real war at last would be a perfect means of putting the American boobs in their ecological niche.

The American populace has twice given proof that it is either feeble-minded or driven by a subconscious death-wish.

In 1917, when a crackpot whom the Jews had trained and made President, decreed a "war to end wars," Americans, instead of putting him in a strait-jacket, went insane with righteousness. I need not outline that shameful episode in our history, when crazed masses embarked on a holy war to rescue Jack from the ogre at the top of the beanstalk. Everyone interested in the United States and the probable future of its inhabitants will have acquainted himself with what happened. What we need remember here is that, while holy men and do-gooders howled for blood, the Americans not only tolerated but applauded suspension of their Federal and state constitutions to persecute all Americans suspected of intelligence and a rational understanding of what was happening. Venal local officials and terrorists from the Attorney General's office (led by J. Edgar Hoover, who later organized the F.B.I., now the Federal Bureau of Intimidation) were lauded as they illegally and viciously dealt with persons suspected of not being enthusiastic supporters of the "war effort" in a Crusade more insane than any imagined by Don Quixote. The outrageous persecution of Congressman Charles Lindbergh (father of the famous aviator) in Minnesota will serve as an example of what happened throughout the United States, which, remember, was then a nation.

In 1939, when our loathesome War Criminal, with the assistance of his foul helpmates, Stalin and Churchill, succeeded in starting the catastrophic World War to make the world safe for Jewish predators, he began to prate about "quarantining aggressors," and while it is true that he was limited to waging a secret naval war until he arranged the attack on Pearl Harbor, you should note that millions of simpletons were infected with humanitarian blood-lust and clamored for an insane war before December 1941. The point here is that as soon as the diseased monster got his war under way in this country, he began to realize his dream of ruling by sheer terror, as had his models, Lenin and Trotsky. Agents of the F.B.I. (many of them, in that far-off day, reluctantly obeying orders they knew to be illegal and tyrannical), were sent to arrest some thirty-six Americans and drag them in chains to Washington to be judicially destroyed by a corrupt judge who had been appointed for that purpose.[24] That was the infamous Sedition Case, which I have often mentioned in these pages, and you know that the victims were guilty only of the awful crime of not worshiping Yahweh's Yids.

Even under bumbling old Ronnie there was a noteworthy attempt to institute rule by terror. The new Sedition Trial in Fort Smith, Arkansas, failed because Aryan jurymen refused to be tools of tyranny, but the Sheenies have actually urged that it should be possible to punish juries that do not vote as directed. I could list numerous other instances of pseudo-legal terrorism, and, most significantly, even professional legal periodicals have now contained at least one article that argued that the First Amendment must not be used to shelter American swine who grunt without permission of the Master Race.

The Jews, who fondly believe, perhaps correctly, that they have their scaly claws fixed about the necks of Aryans and have only to squeeze, are now procuring from the venal legislatures of state after state obviously illegal "laws" against "hate" to punish Americans who do not kowtow to niggers or, what is even more horrible, dare to be impious toward Yahweh's masterpieces. The "laws" are flagrantly unconstitutional, but that will not prevent them from being enforced by our rulers' courts.

Now imagine what can be done when the dim-witted American public, after having been deluged with journalists' excretions about the wicked Semites in Western Asia—of course, one cannot call them Semitic because the Jews, by one of their audacious hoaxes, have stolen that name for their own hybrid race, so it will be necessary to call them Moslems—imagine, I say, how the brainwashed boobs will react when, preferably after a long stalemate in the Persian Gulf and they are weary of the economic privations imposed on them, they are startled by the contrived destruction of part of the American armed forces, and told that they are engaged in a war for survival.

Enthusiasm for the "war effort" will surpass anything known in 1917 or 1942, and the boobs will be delighted to live under naked tyranny and terror. When they see their Aryan neighbor, suspected of having a copy of Liberty Bell in his house, dragged from his home to be beaten to death in the street or hauled to a prolonged and agonizing death in a concentration camp, such as the foul mongrel called Eisenhower set up for the vanquished Germans, the boobs will smile contentedly and thank their god that their "precious liberties" are being so well protected.

Almost all the holy men will be especially delighted because the "war effort" will have required appeasement of old Yahweh by Draconian legislation to enforce Bushy's proclamation that his American subjects must become aware of "God's love" and "learn His Commandments and the importance of obeying them."[25]

One can foresee a constantly accelerated campaign against bigotry and hate until all surviving Americans have been so well educated that whenever they see or smell a Sheeny, they will automatically drop to their knees and knock their foreheads on the pavement three times in veneration of their god's regents on earth.

* * *

Remember that you are now living under a dictatorship and tyranny as absolute as any known on earth.

If you haven't noticed that fact, it is only because the tyrants have not yet used their power over you.

Bushy has more power than Stalin ever had—more, because Stalin did not have the means of electronic surveillance and record-keeping that "our" Federal government is now employing, and Stalin, furthermore, could not change the long notorious inefficiency and ineptitude of all Russian governments.

Bushy's tyrannical powers, moreover, are entirely legal, as legality now goes in the country our parents and grandparents discarded in fits of righteousness.

By one of those progressive innovations in democratic government that make you laugh cynically when you hear simple-minded Americans talking as though they had a Constitution or a fairy godmother, "Tricky Dicky" Nixon was empowered to issue in 1969 Executive Order 11,490, which became the Law of the Land sixty days later, when the Congress failed to use its theoretical power to annul it within that space of time. Get a copy of that order, read it, and shudder.

Bushy has only to utter four syllables, "Emergency," to exercise an ostensibly legal power to take over all the means of communication in the United States, including Liberty Bell. He will have the power to seize all supplies of food and allocate the use of them, denying nourishment to you, if he has a whim to do so. He will be authorized to seize all of your property, including bank accounts, and determine what part, if any, of what was once your own you will be permitted to use at his pleasure. He will be able to haul you and your family from your home and turn it over to noble niggers or magnanimous mestizos. He will have power to ship you to any part of the United States, including Alaska and Hawaii, to become slave-labor and given any task that he sets for you. He will have, of course, a multitudinous bureaucracy, divided into twenty-seven departments, to carry out his tyranny, and they, needless to say, will obey his every nod.

What is more, the Jews' Congress is now enacting what is called, for the benefit of boobs, the "National Drug and Crime Emergency Act," which specifically affirms and elaborates the provisions of Nixon's Executive Order. Your newspaper may have told you whether it has been enacted by the time this note appears in print.

Under this act of usurpation, called a law, Bushy will have specifically the power to impose martial law for five years whenever he wants to. You will thus be subject to "legal" arrest, imprisonment, and torture without even a formal accusation or a mock trial. The act also provides for the refurbishing as concentration camps the camps in which Japanese were interned during Roosevelt's war, and you may be quite certain that the relatively mild régime imposed on the Japanese will not be given Aryans who have displeased their War Lord or any of his thousands of satellites or millions of masters. Furthermore, all military bases are to be used as prisons to "reëducate" Americans who have not learned that they have made themselves abject and despised slaves.

Bushy has only to say "Emergency!"So this, dear Americans, is what your Christian righteousness and humanitarian sentimentality have now brought you.

Laugh, clown, laugh. □

25. I quote from a sermon Bushy included in his proclamation of 18 July, which designated 22 July as a day to be observed in honor of the mother of three malefactors named Kennedy.

Letters to the Editor

Dear George, 18 January 1990

The very best wishes to you and yours for a prosperous and healthy new decade. I see that once again it is Liberty Bell renewal time. Please deduct the cost of another year's subscription from my contribution, which is enclosed as a personal check.

The last few issues have been excellent. The more Professor Oliver contributes the better the issue. Mr. Carter's recent articles on "Minorityism" were quite pertinent to current events. Many savages use the excuse of "oppression" to justify their attacks on civilized people. I feel this will translate into more frequent and more vicious attacks. Of course, the legal and judicial criminals will have to work harder to ensure the murdering savages are set free to continue their lifestyle. Wouldn't it be terrible if the predators were locked up and quit being a source of income for the legal and judicial criminals.

The natural drives of savages are being deliberately enhanced in order to spread more terror and destruction on society, as well as to enhance the incomes of our Executive, Legislative, and Judicial parasites. Motorists are often harassed by packs of savages while driving through a town near my parents, something that was unusual (except during the "King years") until recently. I have heard of many recent examples of such behavior and my impression is that the savages are indeed getting restless, ready to really raise hell.

Unprepared, soft civilians will be unpleasantly surprised in such an event. The well-known incident in Miami, when a white woman was beaten to death and a rose placed in her mouth by rampaging Congoids shouting "get the honkey!" will be a familiar sight for many who will wish it wasn't so.

Preparation will benefit those who have the intelligence and ambition to get ready for the inevitable. Confused and angry Aryans will crave effective leadership. Such a time may be our last chance.

Upon such events depends our chance for survival. The success of "respectable conservatives," who temporarily protect us from some symptoms of decay, will not benefit our people. I would rather see a coalition of obvious Congoids and mongrelized bandits in elected positions, as they will hasten the showdown. Postponement only weakens us.

The spread of the African Plague will probably help us, provided not too many innocent people, such as the lady doctor in New York who was infected in 1983, are forced to pay with their lives for the alternate lifestyles of queers and dope addicts.

We should hope for the best, but prepare for the worst. Individual preparations will vary, and should be done in secrecy. Intelligent planning will pay dividends.

The chances for German reunification seem good, regardless of Jewish apprehensions. Maybe the media shysters will produce another blast of lies about baby-roasting or lampshade factories to combat these feelings of nationalism. The Jews sure dislike the Republicans here.

That's about it for now. I hope you and Mrs. Dietz continue to enjoy good health necessary to perform your services to thinking Aryans.

Hail Thor!

Lt. G.H., US Army, Europe

Dear Sirs,

Enclosed is a money order for $35.00 to cover the cost of subscription to your fine journal the Liberty Bell, Voice of Thinking Americans. I'd like to begin with the January 1990 issue if possible. Please send the issues to the above given address.

I have an old copy of Liberty Bell, May 1986, which I had tucked away. It was a delight to re-discover it again. It seems I've been missing out on quite a lot of Volkisch commentary. I work as a registered nurse and see a lot that concerns me. As you know, health care today is a shambles of remarkably wealthy corporate institutions suffering from deficits, shortages, DRGs, all because Mr. Juden Finance has corrupted medicine with monkey business. Our Volk must unite now for the preservation of our racial fitness against the crippling yoke of eugenic degeneration. Why do we continue caring for patients beyond any meaningful hope of recovery? Why do we care for those for whom there is no cure, only to facilitate their contagion. As our Leader said, "this is in keeping with the humanitarianism which, to avoid hurting one individual, lets a hundred others perish." We let people suffer for humanitarianism and Judah's profits, profits, profits! America Erwache!

Dear Sirs,

What will the 20th century be remembered for other than the heights of scientific achievement and the depths of wanton slaughter by man of his own species—triggered by his own mental instability and self-deception?!

A case in point is the hypothesis of the origin of the Second World War that gives rise to the question of integrity and moral turpitude. Recently, in a meeting in the Goethe Institute, a former U.S. diplomat was asked a pertinent question and in turn gave a feeble answer.

"What was the moral justification for the pitiful response by the U.S., Britain, and France to the invasions of Poland, Finland, the Baltic States, and Romania in September 1939 and in 1940 by the Soviet Union? What precipitated the bias in the brains of their ruling circles in favor of the Communists and against Germany?"

"At this late date one-half of pre-war Poland and other territory taken remain in Russian hands!"

The Poles and the so-called Allies continue to be smug and self-righteous for their part in the tragic, brutal expulsion and genocide of the people from their ancestral lands in Eastern Germany.

The words of Will Rogers are appropriate: "If we ever pass out as a great nation, we ought to put on our tombstone 'America died of the delusion that she had moral leadership.' "

Dear Mr. Dietz, 15 February 1990

I have tried unsuccessfully for the last few years to find Dare to Believe, by Cardinal Lustiger. It would seem the Jews thought the Goyim were not prepared for it yet. They have retrieved it from the market and have done such a thorough job that it can not be found in any bookstore or library, anywhere. I only found it in the Library of Congress in Washington but could not read it for I was only passing through. I wonder if you could lend me your copy [Sorry, we don't have a copy! Any reader out there who could help? —Editor] If you send it to me by mail, in a few days you will have it back the same way. I would keep it just long enough for me and a friend of mine to read it. I would greatly appreciate this favor.

Events in Eastern Europe, including Romania, are very encouraging. It is a great pity though that Commnunism will be replaced by Jewmocracy. A true liberation is not in the offing. One of the very disturbing signs (at least in Romania, the events of which are more familiar to me [as a native Romanian]) is that there seems to be an interest in reviving Christianity. The Romanians (or at least some of them) want to have Bibles printed, and in abundance too. The "Book of Books" will again be available and peddled to befuddle their minds. I enclose a cheque for the renewal of my subscription.

Sincerely yours,
G.S., Florida

Dear Mr. Dietz, 3 March 1990

Enclosed is my tardy monthly contribution; sorry to hear about your hospital stay; I sincerely hope you're feeling better.

Thanks for forwarding Mr. S.'s letter; he wasn't the only person who objected to my liberal use of a negative adjective while describing Mr. Klassen's activities and ideas. In retrospect, I see my exasperation was misdirected, and should have stayed with the C.O.T.C. vs. C.N.C. lawsuit and Mr. T.'s rather silly remarks. I have read the third paragraph on the back of the Liberty Bell (any L.B.) and I am fully capable of comprehending what it means. Basically, the petty and silly squabbles should be set aside until we have something to squabble over.

It may very well turn out that, as Dr. Oliver says, our saving grace could be AIDS. Nothing seems to have a better possibility of turning rabbits into men than the gut level fear that is registered when the "will to survive" is threatened. My one hope is that the Klassens, Covingtons, Dukes, Metzgers, and all the rest have sense enough to recognize a "Golden Opportunity" before it flits by and have the machinery in place to exploit such a situation, rather than be locked in a bizarre lawsuit and/or "not speaking to each other."

Respectfully,
V.G., Michigan

Dear Landsmann: 13 March 1990

Please send me your Pictures of the Life of the Führer [Now out of print. —Ed.]... The more I read of Hitler's life and deeds, the more I begin to understand how a man is elevated to Godhood. Perhaps you might consider carrying Hitler's War and Churchill's War by David Irving [Churchill's War is available from us. $30.00 + postage. —Ed.]. When you read these two books and contrast the two men the difference is startling and amazing.

Churchill was what Oswald Spengler called the Roman Catalline: a "derailed nobleman." He was born to noble rank without having the income necessary for such a position. His entire life is one long history of egomania as he struggled to achieve the wealth and position he considered as due him by birth. Irving comments that he never carried money, entered a store or rode a bus. Yet he is held up to us as the great champion of Democracy!

Churchill went to college but he never worked at it. He joined the Army as an officer but never did any of the hard work and fighting which is the lot of ordinary officers. Instead, he flitted about from post to post, always on his own terms—a concession he owed to his family's influence. He had energy and self-confidence but no moral scruples or principles except self-interest. He was always able to delude himself that his interests and the interests of England coincided. Irving doesn't mention much about WW I and before but it is clear to me that Churchill was a member of the war faction which deliberately decided to force a war with Germany to crush it as a competitor. He became navy minister and it was he who mobilized the Royal Navy before the war and kept it mobilized until the war broke out in 1914, revealing that he had advance knowledge of the assassination plot in Sarajevo and the plan to use it to provoke WW I.

When the war came, Churchill's egomania came to the fore. Unlike Hitler, who disliked being a warlord but was forced into it out of necessity, Churchill gloried in warmongering and considered himself a great general and admiral despite having no experience whatever. He had a lot of energy and was constantly going off half cocked and without spending the time to find out what he was doing or gain support for his actions. His first such project was sending the royal naval division to Antwerp where five battalions were promptly captured or interned in Holland. Faced with this disaster, Churchill intended to send the Navy up the Scheldt river to the relief of Antwerp. This would have meant war with Holland whose territory straddled the estuary. Churchill was ready to add Holland to the enemy powers and, furthermore, violate the very pretense which the British government had built up to justify England's entry into the war: the German violation of Belgium. Now Churchill wanted to do the same thing! His lack of scruples came to the fore and so did his lack of foresight to assemble backing, for he was promptly smacked down by the war cabinet. Even worse than the political blunder was Churchill's inability to realize the technical impossibility of the Navy steaming up a mined channel covered by powerful forts because this led directly to his disaster at Gallipoli.

Churchill tried to force the Dardanelles with his Navy. The result was exactly what would have happened at Antwerp: the battleships suffered severely from shore fire and several ran onto mines and sank. Minesweepers were unable to sweep the mines while under fire from the forts. Thus a landing was attempted. After 252,000 casualties on the Allied side, the invasion was abandoned and Churchill lost his job. To Churchill the loss of his job was a far greater disaster than the failure of the invasion. He tried to get a job as governor of East Africa (the only place in the world where the British were advancing at the time) and later managed to get back into the government under Lloyd George, who later told Hitler that he regretted "plucking Churchill out of the gutter."

Left without a political job in the 1920s, Churchill tried his hand at writing and stock speculation, neither of which kept up with his spending. As the result he fell into the hands of the Jews in 1938 when he lost £18,000 in a stock collapse. From then on his self-chosen path to advancement was to serve the Jew and become warlord in another war with Germany. It never seemed to occur to him to question whether or not such a war was winnable or of benefit to England. Or, if it did, the question was of small importance to him compared to his personal advancement and ego.

By contrast, Hitler's life was one of dedication to his people. How tawdry Churchill and his overblown ego appears next to Hitler! Churchill seems not to have known what a principle was while Hitler lived his whole life by them. All the things that motivated Churchill—ego, vanity, money grubbing, status seeking—were as nothing to Hitler. From his earliest moment Hitler is dedicated to the principle of German unification. If Hitler once thought something was right, he was dedicated to it, no matter what. If he thought it was wrong, nothing could force him to accept it. In Vienna he preferred to lose his job and sleep in the street and go hungry rather than join a Communist union. I can only contrast this to my personal weakness. I face the same choice. In fact, with lesser penalty because I could have easily gotten other jobs, though not one as good as the one I was holding then. In order to make a good salary, I was forced to join one of the most disgusting unions in Americaa, none other than the International Ladies Garment Workers Union. I gave in and joined. Hitler did not.

There is much talk of principle from Liberals in America, but very very few are those who are capable of following principle when it doesn't promise immediate reward. With Hitler there was not only no reward but punishment as well.

Another principle of Hitler's was his dislike of Austria-Hungary. He considered this state and the Habsburg monarchy responsible for the break-up of Germany and the 30 Years War. He refused to be drafted into the Austrian Army and moved to Munich to escape the draft. But for Hitler, this was a matter of principle, not cowardice and selfishness as with the U.S. draft dodgers who ran off to Canada during the Vietnam War. He showed this by his volunteering to serve in the German Army during WW I. Churchill also served in the Army in WW I—as a Lt. Col., commanding a batallion on a quiet sector for a few months. By contrast, Hitler served in the ghastly Ypres salient and on the Somme for four long years. Churchill soon removed his precious body from all danger and got another political job. With him, his own needs came first and his country's a distant second.

Comparing the courage of the two men is also very instructive. According to Churchill's biography, he served in a few minor skirmishes in the colonial wars: skirmishes in Afganistan, a cavalry battle at Khartum, and a train ambush in the Boer War. He was probably in the greatest danger at Omdurman when his unit rashly attacked a skirmish line of Sudanese only to find them backed by a regiment, but even here, he had an automatic pistol against the natives' swords and spears. The only real enemy he ever faced were the Boers, and to them he was able to surrender without harm. He then broke his word of honor and ran off making his escape look like a heroic feat in the newspapers. By contrast, Hitler served in the most hideous battles in history. In his first battle, 2,000 out of 2,500 men in his regiment were struck down. He obviously had a week of combat time for every hour churchill served. In later life the comparison is even worse. Irving reveals that Churchill always ran out of London whenever intelligence detected a German attack coming. By contrast, Hitler remained in Berlin when the Russians assaulted it as well as during the numerous British terror bombings.

As leaders, their diretion of the war is also an interesting contrast. Churchill's one Grand Strategy was to involve ever more nations in the war. A strategy he began with the Lusitania sinking of World War I, when he had the ship sunk to try to get America into the war. This strategy was eventually successful, but this is misleading. Much of the involvement of other nations was the work of the Jew, not Churchill who merely worked under their direction. Further, Churchill never asked himself if it was in Great Britain's interest to have some of these nations in the war. It turned out that it wasn't, but this was beyond Churchill's mental horizon. He acted as if this was still the era of Napoleon when England was the only partly industrialized nation in the world. In the actual conduct of the war, Churchill was a clown compared to Hitler. He knew it too and it drove him crazy because it damaged his overwhelming egomania. Suffice it to say that Churchill lost the war for England and that she was rescued, as a basket case, by U.S. and Soviet intervention.

Well, enough. I just wanted to make the point that Irving's excellent historical works allow much clearer understanding of WW II than almost any other author and that it might be worth thinking about whether to offer his books through your service....

Meanwhile, here in Jew York things are going as usual. The papers revealed that Dinkins debt to his lawyers is more than his net worth. Thus he is completely at the mercy of the Jews, who can have him deposed and jailed anytime they please. As an indication of how AIDS is doing, the students at the Harvy Milk school for sexual perverts have an AIDS rate of 75%! I suspect that the only reason it isn't 100% is that there are a number of lesbians at the school as well as homosexual perverts. To me, this data means that the AIDS infection rate among NYC homos is now virtually 100%. In other words, one can now make the equation: Homosexual = Plague Carrier. From now on you can be reasonably sure that any faggot you run into is a plague carrier and act accordingly.

Best Wishes,

Greetings Friends, 16 March 1990

I really enjoyed Nicholas Carter's article "The Counterfeit Gospel" which was reprinted in Christian News, 12 March 1990. I agree with him 100% as I was once a Christian until I studied its origins. CN tries to refute what Carter says but it doesn't even come close—a really poor job. They ask that you print their rebuttal but I don't think you should until they do a better job with it. I subscribe to CN mainly to get the truth about the "Holohoax" as they are very fair with both sides of the issue.

Please tell me about Liberty Bell and send your publication list. What is the price/availability of back issues?...

Once again congratulations on printing this excellent article. Keep up the great work. I look forward to hearing from you.

With respect,
M.R., Minnesota

Dear George: 17 March 1990

Enclosed is payment for another annual subscription of Liberty Bell plus a small contribution to help keep the spark of sanity glowing. I wish that I could do more. But then, if I were financially able to make a sizable contribution, I probably wouldn't be a subscriber to Liberty Bell in the first place, would I?

It appears that only those (of us) who have labored a lifetime and have little or nothing to show for it have finally become alert enough to begin investigating the causes. Some of us awaken easily once we are confronted with the facts; others seem to require the proverbial 2X4 to get their attention.

But George, the cattle are lowing. Even though they have not kept themselves informed as we have, the cattle seem to know intuitively that the decade of the 90's is going to be a decisive one. The cataclysmic race that was put in motion with the starting gun of 1913 seems bound to cross the finish line in the 1990's. The four favorites in the race are in front, sprinting neck to neck down the home stretch with colors streaming; lecherous usury in red; gasping environment in green; sneering racists in black, and miscegenacious society in brown.

Straining against the sweating quay of overweight gendarmes, screaming fans are cheering on their favorites; brainwashed capitalists for red; tennis-shoed spinsters for green; Gods Chosen, with mixed emotions, cheer first for one then the other, but settle for basic black, and, the largest cheering section of all, made up of AIDS-ridden queers and lesbians, abortionists, womens libbers, pornographers, evangelical preachers and gun control advocates, having no such qualms, are solidly for brown.

Sitting apprehensively in the bleachers watching more with curiosity than with real interest, the cattle are lowing.

But suddenly the bleachers collapse! (It seems that during the ensuing years, subterranean termites and rot had been gnawing away at the foundation.) Almost in a flash, the cattle find themselves falling; landing in a heap of dust, guts, rubble and gore. Disembowled, and with gouged out eyes, broken bones and bodies, and with nothing else to lose, the surviving cattle stagger to their feet, still dazed, and follow the wild-eyed longhorns in a headlong stampede toward the cheering fans; fans still more interested in the race than in the fate of their bovine food supply.

The longhorns charge on, now oblivious to their loss of beer, football, slam-dunk and Saturday golf. Even the surviving Jerseys, Guernseys and Holsteins, also oblivious to their loss of soaps, sitcoms and mini-series, become part of the stampede. They surge into the crowd, ripping, tearing and trampling underfoot the startled fans, who began wondering by now what gave rise to the discontentment. But they are too late. It's over in the blink of an eye.

The momentum of the stampede carries the now angered bulls on the track. The race is disrupted, stopped momentarily in mid stride. The longhorns, suddenly conscious of the surviving heifers and with an awakened desire for self-preservation, begin pressing against the racers. But the finish line is within clear view and the racers are determined to complete the mad dash to the end. After all, the many years of constant struggle cannot all have been in vain.

So there we leave our adversaries, standing eyeball to eyeball squarely in the middle of the track. Which one will be victorious? The outcome will be toss and go, as both sides remain determined. Meanwhile, the bulk of the cattle surviving the bleacher accident, still not wanting to get involved, stand clustered alongside the track in the traditional wolf pack defense posture. And deep from within the cluster we again hear an ominous lowing.

I hope you will forgive my little venture into the surrealistic to make my point. But that's the way I see it. The racers and their cheerleaders are relentless. And nothing but a death dealing catastrophe will awaken the cattle.

Anyway George, I am thankful that I found your little missile, so appropriately named the Liberty Bell. You have my sincere wish that before the race actually gets to the finish line, more and more Americans will awaken to their plight and provide you with the kind of financial support you really need to carry the message abroad.

Sincerely yours,
J.M., West Virginia

The Editor, 21 March 1990

It has taken me many years to become aware of the German side of the story. It is hard for me to have a high opinion of persons or communities or nations that have a low regard for pursuing the truth.

I'm reading the pamphlet "Germany and the True Story of the Third Reich." There is one thing that I want to disagree with. It says that Hitler didn't commit suicide. I believe the stories I've read that he did commit suicide. I have a very high regard for Hitler. I believe he was very courageous in the last days. Whether he committed suicide or not, he lived and died defending Germany. I don't think there is any nation in history that can be more proud of one of their own than the Germanic people can be of Hitler.

My ethnic background is 3/4 Irish and 1/4 German. Until recently I felt bad about being German. I had believed just about every bad thing I heard about Germans. I watched the Holocaust stories on television. I believed what I saw, not having access to other information.

From 1982 to 1989 I worked at the Immigration Service. While I was there, attempts were made by Jews and Blacks to make me feel guilty about being German. It was during that situation that I discovered not only that I did not regret my one-quarter-German, but that I loved that one-quarter. After I had been working at the Immigration Service at least two or three years, I found out that the top person in the building where I worked was German. There were all kinds of accusations—and there still are—as to my motivation for being interest in German.

Until lately I had never been able to see IRISH from a German point of view. Now I begin to understand the problem.

I am enclosing a check for $10.00 as a way to say thanks for making so much information available.

Dear Sirs, 29 March 1990

Please send me a copy of the March 1990 issue of Liberty Bell...

A brief comment on "What We Think" article: Right on Target! When events began to happen in Europe, all I could think of was the French Revolution. The masters, unknown, behind the scenes, are calling the tune. I wonder what effect James Bacque's Other Losses will have not only the two Germanies but also on other peoples.

Sincerely,
M.J., Massachussets

Just some comments about articles in the April 1990 Liberty Bell.

In regard to "Hitler Was Right"—I was one of those who was not able to get beyond the negative propaganda. So I find this article very welcome. Heil Hitler!

I especially note the article about Rudolf Hess. From time to time I've read a little about Mr. Hess in the newspaper. I think he was treated very cruelly. After so many years of inhumane treatment just to meet a tragic death—what a terrible ordeal for his family.

Dear Mr. Dietz,

We shall enclose a donation to help a little. We are appalled but not surprised at the propaganda coming from all sides of the media. We are a little saddened that our people allow themselves to be so brainwashed. We hope they wake up soon but are not counting on it.

We are also enclosing a check for $25.00, please send 10 copies of the April 1990 Liberty Bell. We shall send them to our brainwashed friends and relatives.

We found this issue very interesting though. We believe there are many other reasons why the German-Americans are seemingly so docile in this country. One day perhaps they will wake up.

Sincerely yours,
Mr. & Mrs. S.W.K., Oregon

Dear Mr. Dietz & Associates: 5 April 1990

On this, the prelude to Der Führer's birthday, I'd like to commend you all. I've read a number of issues of the Liberty Bell and found them all exceedingly informative, as well as enraging. Dr. Oliver is truly a great mind, and America's Decline no shabby treatise. I can't wait to read any recent material he's written.

Being a member of the Church of the Creator, I fanatically concur with your ardent anti-"spooks in the sky" position. The articles by Dr. Weber, Jim Taylor and the Odinist press are eagerly anticipated. Your knowledge is absorbed and transmitted strenuously, and our struggle grows more grave.

With unswerving faith in the resurgence of our Race;

RAHOWA!

Dear George, 14 April 1990

I read with particular interest the item by Prof. Oliver concerning LaRouche. I started reading his material while I was an airline captain. His organization spread the word by setting up folding displays in airline terminals, a clever tactic. LaRouche was still way left of center but I read the material anyway, mostly because much of it was anti-Israel. I kept reading because there was a certain quality about New Solidarity that I liked, and I noticed that, ever so gradually, LaRouche's position swung to the right, until he was called a right wing fanatic by the mid 1980's.

As an Irishman at heart, I also liked the way the LaRouche organization blamed much of the worlds' troubles on the Royal families of Mutha England. I could forgive him a few left leanings. I was invited to attend a talk by Ms. Carol White in an auditorium in Williamsburg, Brooklyn. The subject was the evils of Zionism. Also, a wild-eyed madman named Dreyfus was to fill us in on just what Prince Phillip was up to.

The Carol White I remember was about my age, which today would be 58. (This was around 1978, I think.) She was a plump woman with fair skin and hair, and a real klotz. Her dress looked like that worn by a hotel maid, and her cotton stockings were rolled down around her ankles. A real Brooklyn shiksa, already.

Before she began her talk, she asked if anyone in the audience (about 200) had any questions about her, personally. I stood up and was recognized, and I asked her directly, "Are you Jewish?" She answered in the affirmative, going further and stating she was of the Reformed Movement. Next I asked, "What do you think of Jesus Christ?", to which she replied, "I regard him as a great teacher."

There was something about her that made me feel she was a sincere woman. Her talk was bordering on brilliant, and she felt exactly about bloody Israel as we all do, and made no bones about it. Dreyfus, on the other hand, went wild every time he ventured into the area of The Royal Family, and swore publicly that if a nuclear was was launched, they were the ones behind it, and fear not, he and his assassins would slaughter the lot of them.

Most of my dealings were with another Jew, Elliot Greenspan, because he was the one in the terminals when I had time to kill between trips. (The Northwest [Airline] boys went to the bars!) Again, I was perfectly comfortable with him, and our discussions were always the sort that ended up on friendly, understanding notes.

I was "tapped" frequently for contributions. Once I was the victim of the "sting" type of operation that eventually got LaRouche in trouble. A Solidarity phone solicitor asked me if I would contribute $45, on a credit card. I agreed and gave her the card #, etc. I tried to use the card later, only to be turned down for the purchase because the limit of credit had been reached. When I got the statement, I discovered that the woman on the phone had used my card to make 10 $45 donations. I called the LaRouche office, where I was given to another Jewish woman, who listened to my story. She apologized profusely and immediately restored 9 of the $45 contributions to my credit.

LaRouche warned about our impending trade imbalance (while we still had a positive balance), warned of the dangers of Rock music and drugs, before they were a real problem and, as early as 1982, warned about a terrible plague which was about to befall us, called AIDS. (Ain't It Divine, Sidney?)

I think LaRouche and his organization could get to the bottom of a deep conspiracy better than anyone, with the possible exception of Eustace Mullins. He had the support of the young lion of the DuPont family, which gave him wealth, respectability, and a great base of operations. That is when he became dangerous, and over 300 Federal agents swept down on the estate, to arrest one man, charged with fraud! (I've got a useless son-in-law arrested eight times for fraud, and he never had more than a deputy go after him!). George, I think you would do some of us a service if you would mention how we can obtain 21st Century Science & Technology" that Professor Oliver refers to.

New subject. A few months ago, my friend [Major] Joe Stano called me and mentioned that someone had painted a Swastika and "White Power" on a U.S. flag billboard in Leonardo (Noo Joisey, da Garden State, so called because there is a Rosenbloom on every street!). I grabbed my camera and drove to the spot, and took pictures. I then called the editor of the very liberal Asbury Park Press and told him that some un-American anti-Semitic racist, chauvinistic swine had desecrated our flag with a Swastika and White Power slogan. He was breathless with anticipation.

Sure enough, the next day there was a full story on the subject, complete with the information that this was a police matter, and was under full investigation. This was bait actually, as I had just come from the BX Annex at Ft. Monmouth (Eatontown) where I spotted a huge "T" shirt in the window, decorated with a clenched black fist, and the inscription BLACK POWER. That of course became the subject of a letter to the editor, whom I now had between a rock and a hard place.

All the Best,
LCDR Edward J. Toner, Noo Joisey

Dear Mr. Dietz: 15 April 1990

Enclosed you will find my check for another renewal subscription. It is a very difficult effort for us, in this new Argentina under the mercyless stranglehold of International Finance, to get this subscription. Our pensions have been reduced to practically nothing (less than $100 a month) and taxes were raised.

Nevertheless, supporting your excellent monthly is a must for everybody who believes in a positive future.

Very Sincerely Yours,

Dear George: 27 April 1990

I am not an expert on what Hitler said or wrote, but my impression was that he didn't assert that the Germans were the "Master Race" and superior to all others, but that the White western European people, including the British, were the most gifted, creative, best stock of humanity on the globe.

I may be wrong, but I believe his message was distorted deliberately to create opposition between various branches of the family of western European peoples.

Tyndall doesn't seem to notice the hand of the Travistock crowd in the promotion of the rock/drug counter-culture, nor does he say anything of the drug cartel as if the book Dope, Inc. never existed.

He writes, "The German approach has always been.....that it is the duty of the state to promote high cultural standards and act as the guardian of cultural values."

Again, I may be wrong. But I have always felt that it wasn't the State's obligation, but the obligation of the aristocracy. The meddling by the modern state in the arts, poetry, music, etc. is a chimera.

And it should be noted that this thing called Rock is not Negro in origin. Please get that straight. Elvis, need I say (?), was not black. Rock was an outgrowth of what we used to call Hill-Billy music, music for Hicks. It was promoted because it could appeal to the young boobs (white) everywhere. And, of course, there was the invitation to get with the drugs. The guitar is NOT a black African instrument. Very few blacks took to the guitar. Practically all the rock bands were white. As it developed, one noticed that there were no girls anymore. No Andrews Sisters, no girl singers except maybe one or two. Mainly it was about boys and boys' sexuality. I mean, how could you miss it with the bumps and grinds of Elvis.

The arrival of Elvis announced to the gaping multitude that young men and their bodies could shake, rattle and roll their sex to the wonder of large paying "audiences." I put that in quotes because there is practically nothing to listen to. It was practically a totally visual experience.

And with Rock the kids were as happy as a pig in shit.

To speak of Beethoven versus Boogie Woogie sounds so corny, limited, ignorant. Let Tyndall discover Irving Fazola, Jack Jenny, Bobby Hackett, Eddie Miller, Bud Freeman and Summa Cum Laude Orchestra.

There is much about Tyndall I thoroughly dislike. When he speaks of discipline, duty, patriotism, etc., etc. He seems to be hankering to boss everybody about like some super-coach with an élite of British rugby and football players. He's a real sport! I wish he were more than he is. He reduces our problems, translates our problems to the understanding of a bunch of highschool soccer players. He's very pedestrian. And then he becomes insufferably bossy.

Colin Jordan in an otherwise interesting and worthwhile article (page 32, [of Liberty Bell for April 1990]) gets to hammering in the value of "discipline, order and authority central to it (National Socialism)." For discipline, order, and authority, read obedience, subservience, conformity, and uniformity. Or more simply, "Obey, obey, obey...forever."

Perhaps Hitler was not 'purchased' but he was supported by, among others, The Bank of England because he was going in the direction they liked.

See The World Order by Eustace Mullins, pages 108-109. Mullins says Hitler discovered he was duped, but you have to take his word for it [and we shall not!] He doesn't explain how or when Hitler was supposed to have discovered this. The departure of Hess makes one wonder, but for myself I feel sure the Zionists, working through the British ruling circles in finance, supported the rise of Hitler and deliberately set the Germans up as you would the bowling pins.

The end result, among many others, of course, is that there are not any real anti-Zionist Jewish forces left in the world. There were many Jews before Hitler who were anti-Zionist. Now there are not. And I suppose that many keep quiet about their real feelings about what is going on in the name of Jewry since world Zionism took command. I believe there are many Jews who don't like what is happening any more than you do, but they are afraid to say anything. The terror for a Jew from 'other Jews' is a thing Gentiles rarely consider, if ever. The number of Jews killed by 'other Jews' in Israel and elsewhere is a secret we are not likely ever to hear about.

Concealment is a trait that is characteristic of the Jews. There are so many things they hide. Do you know anyone who has attended rituals, etc. in a synagogue who was not a Jew? That's just an example of their penchant for secrecy.

I still think The New Dark Ages Conspiracy by Carol White, which took a lot of flak from Revilo in a recent edition of Liberty Bell is the best working hypothesis on the events. I think he is mistaken.

Incidentally, what is a "flex" that Jordan writes "the fiends tried to throttle him (Hess) with?" To say that "Democracy is utterly false is misleading. After all, the composers of the Constitution were to a man against "Democracy." They discussed and cussed'democracy' at length and warned of its dangers. Our enemies began to arrive in great numbers after about 1885 to set to work to wreck our Republic. It never was supposed to a Democracy. It was supposed to be a REPUBLIC. The Senators were supposed to be elected by the State Legislatures. The Federal Reserve is neither Federal nor a Reserve. And it is unconstitutional, i.e., contrary to the expressed will of the Constitution. We were invaded surreptitiously. And now we have lost our country and are dispossessed, not only of our country and any say in its affairs, but any say at all. We are fighting with our backs to the wall.

I don't know for certain why LaRouche and the others were hustled off stage in such a fraudulent way, not allowed to mention that they could not repay their debts because the Government swiped their records. Really, the thing stinks! One can speculate. I don't suppose you saw that interview LaRouche gave where he called Reagan "pussy-whipped." It isn't the sort of remark to endear the fellow to the powers that be. After all, Meese must have been beside himself with all the heat he was getting about the Wedtech thing. Then there was the thing about the call-boy faggots galore wandering around the Reagan White House in the dead of night. An angry Reagan is something to behold. Of course, he's so good at playing dumb, we'll never know.

Adios,
R.W., California

...I don't know anyone at LB and you don't need an explanation when someone buys a book. However, since I'm Irish perhaps it's unusual that I wan't this book about Hitler [Pictures of the Life of the Führer, now out of print. —Editor]. Although I'm Irish, I don't speak for the Irish population. I don't speak for anyone but myself.

In the last few years my estimation of Hitler has gone from very bad to very good. And I want to know more about him. People mock and ridicule the idea of "heroes." But it seems to me that the overwhelming majority of people don't really believe in anything. They do what they do because everybody else does it. I wouldn't know how to be German. But I don't think Hitler would have minded people of other nationalities recognizing his good qualities and things that he believed in. I don't claim to know all about him. I'm learning.

People in Chicagoland could tell you how dumb I am and after so many years I've got nothing. But what I do have is what I believe. Maybe that's why I appreciate Hitler. So, from one damn Irish—Heil Hitler! or Hail Hitler!

Dear Sir: 21 May 1990

Eighty-two dollars and fifty cents is closer to the real value of the Van Gogh painting of Dr. Gachet that was sold in May at Christies for eighty-two million, five hundred thousand.

Van Gogh had a good eye for color but he could not draw and was really not much of an artist.

Reportedly, all the Van Goghs and a couple of Picassos that sold recently for millions were sold by Jewish owners. All the buyers save one (Alan Bond, the Australian brewery billionaire) were Japanese.

We can be sure that what was involved was a far more sophisticated transfer of funds than a simple transaction between buyer and seller.

I am sure the buyers received more for their money than a few badly executed paintings by a couple of Jewish artists.

In addition, the Jews have succeeded in expanding the myth that these two hams were really great artists.

Yours Truly,

Dear George: 25 June 1990

Enclosed is a several month old article concerning our friend Uri Geller. I don't know if the politician he was supporting won or not.

Things are still moving along satisfactorily, and I should be returning to the U.S. in a few months. Probably I will do some traveling when I return, and hope to get to West Virginia for a short visit with you. I'll work on pinning down a date when I get back, but now I am considering in October.

Media propaganda is getting more similar to that given in Andrew Macdonald's books [The Turner Diaries, The Hunter] everyday. From what I hear of the major cities, crime, drug abuse, cases of the African Plague, and anti-White violence seem to be getting more frequent. I doubt it will cause too many people to see the problem until it becomes much more epidemic. But, of course, it will. I wish Jesse Jackson could get elected as president, so he could rapidly give complacent Americans an overdose of his version of equality. Direct contact with Congoids, in their natural habitat, should be an excellent recruitment factor for us.

Hope everything goes well for you and yours.

....In the state of Illinois there is a Holocaust Study Law. After 51 Senators and 80 Representatives voted for the bill the Governor signed the bill into law. And beginning January 1, 1991 all public school elementary and secondary students in Illinois are required to take a course of Holocaust instruction. I believe it could also be called a required course of war propaganda. I'm trying to figure out where "Holocaustomania" is leading to.

Mrs. M.S., Illinois

Dear George: 7 July 1990

Just the thought of the story told by Prof. Martin Brech sickens me. To think that persons calling themselves "American soldiers" could permit prisoners of war to starve to death is to call into question the entire meaning of the nation called the United States of America. Why the Germans? The same treatment was not accorded Japanese P.O.W.s, although the Japanese were actually brutal toward White prisoners.

It must be the Jewish infection of the United States that approved the anti-German atrocities at the end of the Second World War. No other answer is plausible.

But the sad truth is that no matter how many times this story is told by reputable commentators such as Patrick J. Buchanan and James Bascque, author of Other Losses, the boobs will continue to believe that American soldiers were in the business of giving German kids chocolate bars, not .45 rounds to the heads of German women foraging for food. It is the same with the Holohoax. The gas chamber tale, which changes every so often, as often as the IHR or Ernst Zündel's lawyer make a strident point, will be believed as long as the Jews have the power to tell the tale over the media. 'Holovood' may run out of red-necked Southern sheriffs, or even South African consular ministers in the USA who run drugs (cf. Lethal Weapon II), but as long as some little Jewish paranoid personality remembers how to dress an actor in black SS uniform, there will always be a Holohoax.

Never forget the tale, but never forgive those who counter with the truth. This is the Jewish ethic. Jewish life is one long moan. They revel in it. Revisionism threatens the Jewish reason for being. Under all the greed for gain is this need to be a victim, thought of as a victim, coddled as a victim, and reparated as a victim.

Can it be imagined what would have become of the Japanese and the Germans after their defeat had they sat by thinking of themselves as victims, bereft of any ability to turn their situations around? This is the difference between peoples who have a history made by constructive thought and labor, and the Jewish people who know naught but old tales of woe going back thousands of years. The Egyptians got after the Jews. Then the Babylonians, the Romans, the Gothic peoples, the Catholic Holy Office (Inquisition), the rising national states of Europe, even the British House of Lords, who refused to seat Lord Rothschild because he stank so badly. Everyone mistreated the Jews, or so it would seem. A people with delusions of grandeur, who say that it is their excellence that is envied, while at the same time mouthing the perennial heresy of egalitarianism to any foolish enough to believe it, is likely to become a victim throughout history. But the earlier victimizations of the Jews by the many and sundry peoples who had to deal with their attitudes and policies only sharpened the Jewish appetite for the big victimization, the one victimization the 'Hollovood' Yids could make a movie about; and not just one movie, but one or two a year, plus teleplays / documentaries which actually depicted the phony gas chambers that Ditlieb Felderer crawled about in, and Fred Leuchter inspected. So in the documentary, "The World at War," when Sir Lawrence Olivier states with great gravity, 'These are the showerbaths the Germans gave the Jewish victims to cleanse themselves, until the sweet but deadly cyanide gas began to come out of the heads....'; it stood as the definitive tale until the film "War and Remembrance" appeared and depicted the lethal cyanide pellets being delivered in porous bags to vats of acid lying along the base of the gas chamber wall. How many viewers of both films noticed the change?

The "American people," whoever they may be these days, were once a canny Aryan folk. Still, "our boys" committed atrocities against unarmed German prisoners; not many, mind you, participated in such mean-spirited attacks and neglect of human rights. But it was symptomatic of the Jewish disease that had infected the national psyche even before World War II. It showed itself in the four elections of that actor, Rosenfeld, who assumed a Dutch stance to fool the voters, and who appointed the octaroon Eisenhower, with just enough additional Jewish genetical material to have a binding hatred of all things German. General Douglas MacArthur had no use for Eisenhower, whom he considered an ass-kisser. One may wonder what Rosenfeld saw him.

In the long run, however, the Holohoax will have a negative effect on the mass public mind. As the White race in America recedes in numbers, the youth look at the documentary films of those days, days in which Germany seemed like the only place for man, days in which the German people, young and old alike, seemed happy and full of pride and hope. And the youth of today, still Aryan and like the men and women of those days in blood, yearn to snatch something of honor from a hum-drum Junkspiel existence. There will be a reawakening of the Aryan Geist. We do not revel in being victimized, the way the Jews do. The Aryan folks see the past as a learning experience for the future.

So we say to the Jews, continue to show us the parades, the marching bands, the uniforms, the workers toiling in the war plants. Show us "Nazi Art," and let us compare it with cubism, figures with three heads, homoerotic 'art,' and the communistic poster on a wall in a barrio or ghetto. We draw strength from all that you despise and fear. And you won't be able to stop portraying the things you hate and fear. If you did stop, the Holohoax would dry up. As the Holohoax is the only thing that the Jews worship, it, an article of faith, cannot be dispensed with.

There is nothing I can do to bring back those German soldiers murdered by Eisenhower and his toadies. But I can stand shoulder-to-shoulder with Aryans everywhere today. I may have to renounce "Amerika," and all that the Jews have done to it, all that the weak-willed Aryans have permitted the Jews to do to it; but I will not go back on the Aryan race. The Aryan race is for us the one non-negotiable factor in the world. Legions of shabbas goyim and door proselytes cannot stand against the organized power of the Aryan race. We work to organize that power, once again; and this time for keeps.

For the Aryan Confederation,
Maj. Donald V. Clerkin
Chairman / Commander

Dear Liberty Bell,

After sending for and reading Henry Ford's The International Jew I can see the problems which our race faces today against these sub-human Jews. I can also see that the Christian religion is the key ingredient in the destruction and downfall of the White race. Also I feel that "Identity" is pure B.S.... I am totally convinced and strongly believe that there is also a very harmful, Jewish-controlled plot for their race alone to dominate the world and oppress all people but their own.

Dear Mr. Dietz;

My subscription to Liberty Bell expired a few years ago; if the enclosed check does not cover the cost of a renewal subscription, please bill me for the remainder.

The religious and political left, right and center may differ on how to destroy our White Race and culture, but they all agree "racists" must go. RACIST meaning: White people who believe in preserving both their race and culture. It is unfortunate when honorable men like Pastor Herman Otten, Editor of Christian News, joins forces with the left on this most important issue. In his zeal to "save souls for Jesus" he should consider the following: Christianity is the religion of the West, White people are the mainspring of Christianity and the Christian Bible is the foundation of Western civilization. God created the races and history proves God separated the races. Inter-racial breeding, in or out of marriage, is a sin against God and nature.

I am a Christian and I do believe the Holy Bible is the word of God. However, I no more believe the talmudic hogwash promoted from the majority of pulpits is based on the Scriptures than I believe Hollywood's version of history is based on truth.

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. P.R., Washington

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Enclosed is my regular donation... Speaking of donations, I've just gotten about my 4th "request for money" from the David Duke Election crowd. It's really interesting trying to comprehend the amount of money these people talk about when it comes to elections. Also, considering the million or two that David Duke will spend is just peanuts compared to the "fat cats" and you end up with some staggering amounts. For just a plain old tax-payin' slob like me it's rather difficult to comprehend anything past the hundreds of thousands, so it's really amazing when you add up the total for the elections every time they play this charade and see which of the world's countries have a GNP lower than that total. Yeeesh, just think what a true patriot could do with that kind of money.

Which gets met back to David Duke. To read the diatribe in the jewspapers and weekly magazines you would think he was a First Class Misplaced Citizen, someone who should make his home on mars or, preferably, someplace even more remote. Nothing new there; anybody on our side gets the same treatment, it just varies in the degree of effort the press prostitutes go to in direct relation to the amount of misery "our" candidate may cause them in lost revenues or power wielding ability. Is D.D. a "true patriot?" Couldn't begin to know with any degree of certainty. Is he worth a small donation? From me? You bet! watching these idiots gumble all over themselves trying to denounce old David is better than anything they could possibly print in the Comics section.

Seriously though, D.D. comes across very well, seems to have done his homework on his political opponent and his Senatorial District. And last but not least, when "we" don't have anything, something is better than nothing; also makes for a good morale builder.

Respectfully,
V.G., Michigan

BOOK REVIEW

E. von der Brahe, Polen und Deutsche / Wie ist eine Versöhnung möglich? (Poles and Germans / How is a reconciliation possible?) Lausanne: Kritik-Verlag c/o Courrier du Continent, 1986. Number 64 in the Kritik series. Paperback, 14 illustrations in the text, 148 pages. ISBN 3-88037-045-1.

While reading this book, which contains a wealth of information and firsthand observations about Polish chauvinism down through the centuries, a story occurred to me which I had heard many years ago. It seems that once in the dear, dead days beyond recall there was an international meeting of distinguished scientists. After many learned papers, research reports and a banquet honoring the most distinguished scientists that were present, they decided to meet at a future date to discuss a single topic, the elephant. After several years had passed, the scientists convened at the appointed date, eager to report on their research projects, all of which pertained to elephants in some way or another. First came the Englishman with a report on hunting elephants in Hyderabad. Then came a French scientist with a paper on the copulatory habits of elephants. A bearded Russian was the next to report with a profound philosophical disquisition on the question, "Does the Elephant Exist at All in Reality?" An American gave a report with film presentations on the rôle of elephants in Hollywood. Finally a Pole, with military decorations gleaming on his chest, gave a spirited discussion of "The Elephant and the Polish Question."

Much of the book we are considering is devoted to developing the thesis that Germany and Poland are judged by a double standard favorable to the latter, not only by Poles and the world at large, but even by the Germans themselves. The author is of the opinion that nothing is to be gained in the direction of a wholesome reconciliation between the two nations by means of self-castigation on the part of Germans and that Germans will never win the respect of Poles by self-castigation, a magnanimity which Poles do not understand in the first place. Although Poles behave in their national interest as a sort of reflex action, Germans are masochistic in their dealings with Poles. The most striking example of this is the behavior of Willy Brandt (Chancellor of the German Federal Republic, 1969-1974,) while on an official visit to Poland, a behavior which the author considers a disgrace that would be regarded as treason in any nation other than Germany (pages 16-17). [While in exile in Norway,

Brandt wrote Deutsche und andere Verbrecher, "Germans and Other Criminals."]

In all fairness it must be pointed out, as Von der Brahe does not, that the Bundesministerium für Flüchtlinge, Vertriebene und Kriegsbeschädigte (Federal Ministry for Refugees, Expellees and War Victims) published a series of volumes on the German victims of postwar actions of Poland and other eastern European countries. In my library I have a number of these volumes (in English editions!), the very first of which is titled, Documents on the Expulsion of the Germans from Eastern-Central Europe / The Expulsion of the German Population from the Territories East of the Oder-Neisse Line. I received this volume from the Ministry in December 1958. Another striking omission in von der Brahe's book is the lack of mention of a book published by the German government late in 1939 or early 1940, Die polnischen Greueltaten an den Volksdeutschen in Polen (The atrocities against the Ethnic Germans in Poland). Illustrations in this book (pages 219, 235, 244 and 245 reappear in von der Brahe's book. Perhaps he was afraid to mention the source of these illustrations for some reason or another.

Von der Brahe takes us down through the centuries, pointing out one instance after the other of Poland's hostility toward its neighbors and repressive measures against ethnic minorities within the boundaries of the Polish state, while also pointing out distortions and favorable idealization of Polish history, even by German historians and media.

Although the Teutonic Order (Deutscher Orden, Deutsch- ritterorden is portrayed unfavorably in the writing of Polish historians, it was, in fact, invited by a Slavic prince to establish itself along the lower valley of the Vistula in 1225, where the Order promoted agricultural prosperity and built towns. However, in 1410 the Order was defeated by Poles and Lithuanians in the battle of Tannenberg (called Grunwald by the Poles). Poles have never ceased to make this battle a centerpiece of their chauvinistic history. (For the painting of this battle by J. Matejko, see Bulletin 40.) The author asserts that during the nineteenth century Poles living as a minority in Germany were generally given an opportunity to retain their language, cultural traditions and social institutions (page 31). In contrast, settlers from Bamberg in Bavaria who had migrated to the Posen area were not permitted to have their own schools during the eighteenth century. After the first so-called "partition" of Poland in 1772, the Polish minority enjoyed tolerance under the king of Prussia, Frederick the Great (reigned 1740-1786), whose state had a reputation at the time of being the only one in Europe to permit each individual to further himself as best he could without regard to his ethnic origins or religion. Frederick envisaged his own rôle as the first servant of his government (p. 38).

Many American readers would be astonished to learn that Poland was reëstablished as a state in 1916, not by the Western Allies, but by Germany and Austria-Hungary. Several years later the Polish state expanded its territory considerably into areas inhabited by ethnic groups other than Poles, notably White Russians, Ukrainians and Germans (page 40). (The Polish state was planned by the Central Powers to be a kingdom. I have coins in my collection struck by the Stuttgart mint in large quantities and inscribed 1917/KRÓLESTWO POLSKIE = Kingdom of Poland.)

Although Germany laid down its arms in 1918 on the basis of President Wilson's assurances of self-determination of populations as to incorporations of their areas into new states, much German territory was awarded to Poland without any plebiscites. Danzig was taken from Germany and set up as the center of a small territory designated as "Free City," in spite of its almost purely German population. Part of Silesia was given to Poland in spite of a plebiscite with results strongly favorable to Germany (page 43). Toward the end of the book von der Brahe points out (page 144) with regard to the Versailles Treaty: "The citing of a document as a treaty, which was signed by us with a dagger at our back, has nothing at all to do with historical objectivity. Even the United States, as a decisive factor amongst the victorious states, refused its signature under this setup for revenge. All of the participants in the 'negotiations' at Versailles were cognizant of a dictate by force, in reality. Even at the time the French Marshal Foch recognized this dictate as the cause of the next war."

By 1920 various circumstances had permitted the Poles to accumulate territory with nearly thirty million inhabitants, of whom more than a third were members of ethnic minorities. Czechoslovakia, which was also newly formed as a state, likewise had large ethnic minorities, notably a large German minority.

Jews were a hated minority in Poland and many found their prospects to be so poor there that they emigrated to Germany. The economic conditions in Poland were so bad that choice products of Polish agriculture were exported in large quantities because most Poles could not afford them (p. 55). (For a notable example of Jews who preferred living in Germany as late as 1938 to returning to Poland, see Bulletin 31, page 2.)

During the weeks before the outbreak of the war in 1939 persons of German extraction were terrorized by the Polish population. Poland longed for a war with Germany and the commander of the Polish armed forces declared that Poland wanted a war with Germany and that Germany could not avoid it even if it wanted to (pages 56-60). We might also note that a number of Frenchmen in high positions also thought that Germany could be easily defeated. (See H.W. Koch Aspects of the Third Reich, 1987, page 16.)

One important special value of von der Brahe's book lies in the fact that it is based largely on his experiences as a Polish subject of German extraction living in the Polish state. Indeed, an important chapter is explicitly titled "Persönliche Erlebnisse" (pages 61-70). He relates a number of instances which illustrate conditions that prevailed in Poland with regard to its citizens of German extraction. During 1925-1926 he petitioned for a student passport in order to study abroad, but was turned down with the admonishment that he should learn Polish so that he could study at a Polish university. The fee for the student passport would have amounted to 20 Zloty, but he finally had to buy a normal passport for 500 Zloty, a huge fee which he estimates to have had the purchasing power of 5,000 Deutsche Mark at present, a fee which hardly any Pole could afford in 1926. Von der Brahe conjectures that the fee was set very high in order to discourage Poles from traveling abroad and seeing how much more prosperous other countries were. There even existed an economic chauvinism that prohibited the importation of modern manufacturing machinery from Germany unless Polish machinery (of poor quality to begin with) could not be obtained. This chapter is illustrated with four pictures of German victims of mass murders committed by Poles in early September 1939.

Poland was not above taking a chunk of Czechoslovakia when the opportunity presented itself in 1938 (p 75.)

As to a comparison of national moralities of Poles and Germans, Von der Brahe makes the following observations (page 105): "Poland's expansionism in itself, [the results of] which we witness every day, after all violates human rights by the expulsion of more than twelve million Germans, not to mention the Poles' concentration camps, the Bromberg Bloody Sunday and the admitted victims who died during the expulsion. Crimes against a defenseless population during peace time generally weigh more than those which are forced upon the combat troops in the course of military actions, without wanting to excuse such crimes on the part of any side. At this point the numerous victims of brutal Polonization during the time between the wars must also not be forgotten."

Far be it from me to claim that I have conveyed more than a small sample of the information and ideas contained in this valuable book, which has now assumed a great timeliness in view of the renewed discussions about the eastern boundary of a possibly unified Germany.

THE FINAL COMMUNIQUÉ OF THE GERMAN ARMED FORCES

One of the most moving documents generated by the Second World War is the final communiqué of the German armed forces (Der letzte Wehrmachtsbericht). It has some notable parallels to Lincoln's Gettysburg Address given on 19 November 1863, a short statement so powerful that earlier generations of American school children were often required to commit it to memory. Both statements were generated by wars which cost the White race much of its best blood, wars which still haunt and cripple the psyches of both the American and German nations and which have tended to idealize the non-Aryan peoples for whom the wars were largely fought. Both of the short statements portray by means of a few words the suffering which came about in the wars. They both acknowledge the sacrifices of soldiers who "gave the last full measure of devotion," to use Lincoln's famous formulation.

Let us now attempt a translation into English of the final Wehrmachtsbericht:

9 May 1945

Since midnight the weapons have been silent along all fronts now. At the command of the Grand Admiral [Karl Dönitz] our armed forces have ceased the struggle which had become hopeless. Thus, the struggle of nearly six years is at an end. This struggle brought us great victories as well as great defeats. The German armed forces finally succumbed honorably to a vastly superior force.

Faithful to his oath, the German soldier has accomplished feats which will never be forgotten while he committed himself fully for his nation. The homeland supported him to the end with all of its strengths while making the gravest sacrifices.

The unique accomplishments of our frontlines and homeland will find their final evaluation in a later, just judgement of history. Even the enemy will not deny his respect for the accomplishments and sacrifices of German soldiers on land, sea and in the air. Hence, every soldier can lay down his arms while standing erect and with pride and go bravely and with confidence to work for the perpetual life of our nation during the most difficult hours of our history.

In this difficult hour the armed forces remember their comrades who fell while facing the enemy.

The dead obligate us to a complete loyalty and obedience and discipline with respect to the fatherland, which is bleeding from innumerable wounds.

In recent fighting in the Middle East chemical warfare has taken place and there is a possibility that lethal gas would be used in future confrontations if they reached a point of desperation.

Mustard gas was not employed during the Second World War but stocks of it existed and its use was a possibility, as the following article reveals. Not only was the use of chemical weapons a possibility, but, as we pointed out in Bulletin 10, anthrax bombs were actually manufactured in Indiana for possible use against the populations of the Anti-Comintern powers. There is evidence that the use of such bacterial weapons could have turned central Europe into a lethal desert unfit for human habitation.

The following article is translated from the July-August issue of the important revisionist periodical, Recht und Wahrheit, (Hohensteinstrasse 29, Wolfsburg 1, West Germany).

On the Topic of Crimes of the Allies:

The Hell of Bari

An Eyewitness Report

by Dr. jur. Fritz von Radow-Hube (Major, retired)

The visitors to the city of Bari on the Adriatic coast of Italy [70 miles northwest of Brindisi] who moved through its streets as a noisy, howling and dancing mass in connection with the world soccer championship of this year did not know or suspect what dramatic action and tragedy once took place in the harbor area of the city during some hours of the Second World War. At that time, in 1943, those who were present at this terrible event were helplessly exposed to a lethal as well as twofold inferno.

Bari was envisioned as a large and important supply port for the planned landing of the Allies in Italy. After Italy left the side of Germany, the Italian government under Badoglio fled to Bari along with its king, Victor Emanuel.

In December 1943 the following took place: Ninety-six bombers of the JU 88 type of the German airforce took off from airfields near Milan for the purpose of attacking the harbor of Bari, which had been entered by thirty large Allied ships. They were a series of heavily loaded transport ships, tankers and freighters. The cargo of this supply fleet consisted of heavy materials of war. Some of the ships had docked and were discharging their cargo.

When the German bombers arrived over Bari the harbor was brightly illuminated for the unloading activities taking place. At first no anti-aircraft measures were noticed. Two of the attacking airplanes dropped Düppel interference strips in order to disturb the enemy radar reconnaissance. In addition, they marked the target for the following main squadron with flare bombs. An ineffective anti-aircraft fire did not commence until the first explosive bombs were falling.

The German bombs exploded effectively. The ammunition transport ships suffered direct hits and exploded. An oil conduit was also hit. The oil was burning! The escaping quantities of oil caught on fire next to the gasoline supplies of the tankers, which were burning brightly. A chain reaction commenced. More ships that had not been previously hit by the bombs caught on fire. The flaming inferno of war was complete.

During this hostile sortie against the Allied supply harbor of Bari a total of 19 transport ships and tankers with a total of 73,343 gross registered [metric] tons was sunk and seven other Allied ships were heavily damaged. More than 1,000 seamen and men on guard duty lost their lives during the attack. Only after weeks of intense work could this supply port, so important for the supplying of Allied troops, be put back into operation.

This militarily necessary bombing of an enemy supply harbor, the dimensions of which can certainly be compared with the Japanese air attack on Pearl Harbor, was destined to have grave results later on for some of the survivors. The cause of these results was kept strictly secret for decades by the Allied instigators.

What had happened? Amongst the bombed and precisely hit transport ships there was, to be specific, the freighter S.S. John Harvey. It was carrying not only the usual explosive ammunition, but in addition 100 tons of other, forbidden, bombs, each weighing 100 pounds, which were filled with yellow cross gas, that is, heavy mustard gas. Even during the night of the German air attack against the port of Bari described above, this lethal freight, originally designated for the Germans, was destined to have its effects against the Allied people struggling for their survival. And something else came out in this unwanted self-revelation; the Allied war criminals had no scruples! They were determined to employ poison gas in violation of existing international law!

At the very beginning of the bombardment of the harbor the S.S. John Harvey received a direct hit and sank along with its entire crew. Naturally, during the explosion of the ship several of the gas bombs on board burst and their devastating contents quickly spread over the harbor. Although the poison floating on the surface of the water was largely blown out to the open sea by favorable winds, people rescued from the water nevertheless died from this lethal poisonous bath. Before death overtook them they had to suffer the tortures of the damned!

The particular tragedy of the event consists of the following: Not until 12 hours after the bombing attack on the harbor of Bari, which lasted only 20 minutes all told from a German point of view, were the mustard gas bombs floating about discovered by people who were helping out. The harbor authorities immediately alarmed the hospitals of the city. Six hours after the cause of the gruesome poisoning of many people was learned, after a total of 18 hours had passed, the first man pulled from the water died from the wounds resulting from mustard gas. In the meantime another 617 victims of the poison had been registered and given medical care. Of these 617 victims of the poison, 18 more died.

As can be well imagined, for reasons of secrecy all of the people who were injured by the poison gas were put on a hospital ship as quickly as possible. The ship brought the patients to America.

After the delivery of the mustard gas bombs, which were against international law and indeed criminal and which turned out to be a cargo originally designated against the Germans, became known, the criminals expressed themselves in the following well-known manner that disregarded human beings: "If the Germans would have succeeded in driving us off the continent, we would not have hesitated to use gas." [No mention is made in the article of the anthrax bombs that were also being manufactured, as we mentioned in our introduction.]

This episode reveals to us once more in complete clearness the destructive intention of the Allied leaders directed against Germany and permeated with an abysmal hatred. For this band of murderers who were carrying on a war, the Hague Convention on land warfare was nothing other than a ridiculous and worthless piece of paper.

In any event, the knocking out of Bari harbor as a supply base for the Allied land forces delayed by weeks the landing of the Allies at Anzio-Nettuno on 21-22 January 1944.

DIE JUDENSCHUL

A Selection of Passages
Translated by Dr. Charles E. Weber

Germany

Even during the Second World War we Jews were the experts of the Allies with regard to questions cocerning Germany and we developed ideas and plans for ourselves relating to the future of Germany, the reparations which it had to pay us and how Germany might be of use for Jewry and the state of Israel which was to be established. We Jews made the Allies blind with hatred of the Germans and the Allies were happy to have our unscrupulousness and lack of mercy take effect against the Germans. Later we promulgated the German Federal Republic under the protection of the Allied military dictatorship as a "liberal democratic government by law" and made it the perfect government of collaborators such as the world has never seen. With refined, psychologically sophisticated means we induced the majority of Germans to believe that they had something to say or vote on in their country and that the German Federal Republic would represent German interests or be committed in any event to a higher morality.

The western Allies, especially the United States, were already in our hands to such an extent that they forwent further demands for reparations other than the robbery during the initial period and they gave us preference in the case of continuous reparations, called "Wiedergutmachung" [= restitution] in Germany. In order to transfer their powers as victors to us Jews, they put pressure on the Germans, who certainly wished to be relieved of the formal military dictatorship. As the "people who had been persecuted on account of politics, race and religion" we Jews were given priority in the case of German reparations over the Allies, who were willing to forgo them as a result of the pressure of the western Allies. There can be no better documentation that we Jews are masters of the German Federal Republic and that the western Allies were nothing but our helpers in the gagging of Germany.

We put our people in power, old collaborators, with Konrad Adenauer in the lead. He was not so much the "chancellor of the Allies," who were naturally in the spotlight, but he knew precisely who had the real power and he was, without any reservations, the man belonging to us Jews. He was even ready to give the Saarland to France, although the United States and England did not want that. At that time we [Jews] were inclined to be in favor of giving the Saarland to France. That must have been the result of spite because we should have been inclined to be against that for the sake of reparations, which were certainly underestimated at the time.

Thus, we were clever in putting popular grandfather types, such as Theodor Heuss, into highly visible positions. These people were immediately ready to yield to any Allied blackmail. They never had an inkling as to what was betrayed and sold out in the politics of the German Federal Republic. These faithful German politicians who fulfilled Allied demands [Erfüllungspolitiker] made the system of our Jewish domination tolerable to the German people and concealed their collaboration perfectly.

Holocaust

Of course, even in Hitler's Germany there was never a thought of wiping out us Jews physically. The gas chambers or gas ovens, Zyklon B [the commercial insecticide alleged to have been used in exterminating Jews] and the mass murder factories, as we represent the concentration camps, are our weak points. The more such things are examined in detail, the worse we look. Jews who collaborated with the Nazis had a large share in the isolating of assimilated Jews. This took place for the benefit of Jewry, just as Hitler's policies toward Jews in general were aimed against the assimilation of Jews and were strongly favorable toward the objectives of Zionism. For that reason we had to push the concentration camps into the foreground because the Jewish ghettos established under Hitler had complete self-administration and permitted sand box games for the planned state of Israel. The relatively few Jews who were transferred from the ghettos into concentration camps [recall the large number of Jews remaining in the Warsaw ghetto as late as the spring of 1943 —Translator] were sought out by us Zionists. We sent many opponents of Zionism into concentration camps because we knew exactly that they would not fare well and had to work.

Already during the war Jews who were too hasty attempted to make the "wiping out of Jews" the sensation of Allied war propaganda. Fortunately they were not successful because it would have been a lucky break for the Nazi propaganda minister, Göbbels, who could have torn apart that idiocy following all of the rules of his art. Not until the collapse of Germany and the reëducation immediately commenced along with the introduction of the Allied military censorship did we slowly create a solid basis for the step-by-step revelation of the "historical fact of the extermination of the Jews."

The overpowering of Germany by a coalition of the whole world and the wretched treatment of the vanquished produced in the victors an urgent moral need for the declaration of German guilt. This end could be served by the Jewish community, which was not only ready to obtain German confessions by extortion and torture but also to bear witness as a solid block to the murder of millions. Whether Zionists or not, all Jews witnessed and swore to the whole world with a rare, unanimous coöperation that six million Jews were murdered. There might have been originally as few Jews as one can count on his fingers who were not ready to go along with this fraud. We soon took care of them. In the meantime their number has been undergoing a remarkable increase, although not a threatening one.

Moreover, the common fraud of Jews binds the non-Zionist Jews to our leadership and reënforces the mutual fate of Jews. Even if the fraud were to come to the surface, Jewry is once more isolated and the assimilated [Jews] are rejected. For inconceivably bad possibilities we thus would have an emergency brake, of which we shall never have to make use, as is to be hoped. As long as we determine "world opinion" that would never do us any harm; the Germans would be ridiculed throughout the world as the complete idiots that they are. But the German "Wiedergutmachung" [= restitution] would cease and we Jews cannot afford that.

The magic numbers of six and eleven million [referring to Jews murdered and the total of all those murdered, including, for example, Poles] were necessary to outdo the numbers of [Germans] expelled from their areas in the east and those murdered during the expulsion. To the disadvantage of Germans, propaganda in opposition to facts has always been put forth and that was propagated as a higher justice. A balancing up has been tabooed for Germans and the reference to German suffering and Allied crimes is considered simply a desire for revenge, even if no one can think of revenge in this miserable remnant of Germany.

The Mixing of Races

We Jews are chosen people and it is appropriate for us to determine the value of non-Jews and animals from the highest vantage point and to keep and breed them as is best and most useful. Just as the non-Jews deal with animals, it is our right to deal with non-Jews. We have that right as a result of our covenant with God, that is, for a long time. Hitherto, however, we have had that right only to a very limited extent and we must not count on God's tossing it into our laps, but we must create it for ourselves.

Nature loves variety. She has created a large zoo of creatures and then allowed many to die out. However, more and more have evolved and in the process ever more complicated and further developed ones without the simpler ones dying out. Most highly developed are the mammals, the apes, the human beings and finally we Jews. The non-Jews mistake us as a small variant of the white race. Human beings no longer have a foe in nature that could threaten them and for that reason they threaten each other but not necessarily within the boundaries of their races. No race, excepting us Jews, really sticks together in the face of the other races. However, this is a sin against nature and the divine will. Races are not created to mix rather to delineate themselves from each other and to increase the variety.

All races which are inclined to mix with others are refuse of nature, worthless and doomed to their downfall. All of the representatives of advanced civilizations that have opened themselves to mixing of races have declined without a trace in a heap of humanity doomed to death and have left behind only dead monuments. Since we Jews keep ourselves distinct, only we are valuable and all non-Jews are completely worthless, only a waste product of nature. However, the non-Jews are also a test to which God has subjected us. We must prove our superiority over them and make them subject to us. Otherwise we would be only a small, unimportant race amongst many larger and more important races, as the non-Jews believe about us. But God does not want that; otherwise He would not smite them with blindness concerning our intentions. We Jews stand with Jehovah, our only God, against all other races and their gods.

Should we simply wait, then, until the non-Jews weaken themselves to such an extent by racial mixing that we shall arrive at mastery? Jehovah certainly does not want to wait for that. The Japanese and the Chinese are great and ancient civilizations that, down through the millenia, have mixed less than we Jews. What advantage do we have over them if not our God Jehovah? Otherwise the prospects for us Jews are not good, indeed we have no chance otherwise. But why should we not be able to motivate the Soviets and the Yanks to inundate the Japanese and Chinese in war, to exterminate them or at least to compel them to mix? Our morality is not a divine gift but rather an instrument and thus everything is possible for us. However, if we want to utilize our possibilities we must know exactly what we want and even in racial matters do the opposite ourselves of what we force on the non-Jews.

The races are not just externally different, but also in their character. The Negroes are closest to the apes. They are coarse and like animals and have never brought forth an advanced civilization or a powerful empire. Negroes are scarcely human beings and slavery is appropriate for them. The yellow race is quite varied. Japanese and Chinese are advanced, but there are inferior Asiatics who are themselves even bastards of all possible races. Racially the Indians and the Eskimos are amongst them. The Indian caste system reflects the continuous bastardization of a civilized race which has died out as a result of miscegenation in a mass of low, nominally human beings who are the equals of Negroes without having their animal-like vitality. The white race must also be subjected to a quite varied judgement. The northern and central Europeans, the Germanic people, are still the nucleus. Emigrated offshoots are in the United State, Canada and Australia. The whole Mediterranean area, even France, however, is already badly mixed up and no longer worth much. That is also true of the Arabs, the Balkan peninsula and the whole Near East. South America and especially Central America are an example of the devastating effect of miscegenation.

A miscegenated, bastardized society with a muddle of culture and religion can never attain uniform concepts of morality and law and will always be an unpeaceful source of trouble with strong outbursts of violence and with unhappy people. However, that is just the soil on which we Jews can stand out as the born rulers. With skill and a brutal use of force, of which only we Jews are capable, in such societies everything can be attained for us Jews. But how should we be able to dominate China? It is thus necessary that we Jews keep ourselves unmixed and that we upbreed ourselves, but subject the other nations to miscegenation and make them bastards without abilities. The most capable people are the most dangerous for us Jews. In unimportant matters they are even superior to us. But we are capable of guiding and leading them. In the United States, England and the Federal Republic of Germany we have thus seen to it that as many racially different Asiatics, Negroes and Turks as possible immigrate and that the government takes the lead in miscegenation and giving preference to foreigners.

The destruction of healthy families and the "liberation" or emancipation of women play an important rôle in this connection. The wives of non-Jews are even far more stupid than their husbands and that is no different in the case of Jews. They can be easily stirred up against their husbands. They like to listen to someone point out to them how badly exploited and oppressed they are by their husbands, even if they have not felt the slightest amount of that. They are, however, immediately united against men and out to get their advantage, almost like us Jews. But since they are almost completely moronic, their self-centeredness is very quickly turned to their own disadvantage. Then they quickly chalk that up to the men. They become unified not only with other women but with other "oppressed minorities." In the case of Negroes and other sexually interesting men of a different race the unification takes place preferably in bed, especially in the case of the blond Teutonic women, who prefer to fight for their "freedom" in this manner. That also gives them the strength to endure the "emancipation." It is not by chance that the blond Teutonic woman is the most copied model of the prostitute. They themselves and their customers have assumed this rôle, like the rôle of the Jews as an owner of a brothel.

[The final sections of Die Judenschul on pages 69 to 83 are concerned with the financing of Jewish intelligence activities by crime, drug dealing and prostitution, collaboration of fraternal secret societies and religious organizations with Jews and multinational corporations as rivals of Jewish power. On pages 84 and 85 there is a final, summarizing commentary, putatively not written by the author of the main text. In it democracy, with its social ills, is characterized as a façade for Jewish domination and Die Judenschul is praised as a fresh source of knowledge pertaining to Jewish intelligence services and the rôle of fraternal organizations (such as the Masons, Rotarians and Lions) as helpers of Jews.] □

by
Allan Callahan

Street people, beggars and the homeless are increasingly in the news today, and the younger generation may wonder how this compares with times gone by. When I was a small boy in the 1930s these people were usually referred to as "beggars," if begging was their main vocation, or as "tramps," "bums" or "hoboes" in other cases. We didn't have many beggars in our neck of the woods; in the nearby county seat town of about 5,000 there never seemed to be more than one or two around at a time, and often none (tramps, bums and hobos were more common, though not numerous). And rather than just plain begging, they usually also offered something for sale, like pencils or shoe-strings. They would blow into town, stay a brief spell, then move on. This was during the great depression.

I felt very sorry for these people, but usually didn't give them any money. Occasionally I would drop a small coin into one of their tin cups, but in those days a young boy didn't part with a dime easily, or even a nickel. Later on I read that newly arrived English families in India would at first readily give to beggars, but there were so many of them that the Europeans soon got to where they could walk right past the alms-seekers and hardly give them a second thought. Still later I found out that India also has what can be called "stables of beggars," where the owners buy children from some poor family, blind them or otherwise maim them in some fashion, and then put them out on the streets to beg.

Street vagrants, or "the homeless," have been getting a lot of media attention in recent years. At first it was mostly sympathetic, but in the last year or two there has been a more critical attitude, especially in heavily afflicted cities like New York. By and large this has been on the part of the general public, rather then the news media, but even they, too, are starting to turn. Early this year a New York City man was charged with first degree manslaughter for beating to death a street person who spat on him and struck him in the hand. But the newspapers took his side, and he was later cleared by a grand jury.

Even before this incident, N.Y. city had started clamping down on the mendicants who were loitering around too much in bus and rail centers, and by coming out with new restrictions against panhandling and littering.

But whereas beggars and street people became scarcer in many places for years after the Great Depression ended, there is an uneasy feeling that they are now back again, more numerous than ever, and that their presence is going to impinge more and more upon the general public, in a way it didn't do before, since we now have the AIDS factor to contend with. Furthermore, there are also racial overtones. While many mendicants are of course white, there is again a growing perception that panhandling is more and more getting to be a non-white problem. And the beggars are getting more vocal, more pushy, and more demanding to the point that they are, in many cases, no longer objects of pity, but of fear and dislike.

Their boldness has increased to the point where they engage in poking people's bellies, tapping their shoulders, pulling their sleeves. And now, instead of simply walking away, more and more targets of these unwanted attentions are rounding on those who are taking these liberties and "let them have it" with harsh words.

This brings up an interesting question. If white attitudes can harden against non-white street people because of their increasing demands, is it also possible that there will be a hardening of attitudes against non-whites in general, because of their increasing demands? The list of things they clamor for is as long as your arm, and they will never be satisfied till they not only have all these thing, but also crawl up in bed with us.

There is no consensus of opinion what to do about the growing numbers of street people. Some advocate simply seeking them out and giving them money, but most think this would create more street people. Others say they need jobs, or health care, or rent subsidies, or training programs, or a combination of these.

But how many really want to work? Many are alcoholics or drug addicts, and have been through various treatment programs already. Some have personal problems they can't deal with. Others are feeble-minded.

Anyone whose health is not broken, and who is possessed with a fair amount of resourcefulness, can usually get off the streets on his own, if he has a mind to do so. I read of a hobo who once shaved with a broken piece of window-pane, using a pool of water for a mirror. We can feel assured that a man with that kind of get-up-and-go didn't stay a 'bo for long!

Those temporarily down on their luck, and want to change, can be helped, but the others are, in general, beyond help. If you take them off the streets they will soon be back out there again. This is because the street life is what they really want, even if the feeling is subconscious.

As our race problem worsens, the percentage of dark street people is going to get higher. A sub-culture is springing up, in the larger cities, made up basicly of Undermen types. Our nation is declining racially, but it still represents a High Culture, and these Undermen instictively feel uncomfortable in such a culture.

The numbers of street people in a nation act as a sort of guage as to the general health of the nation. Since their numbers in the U.S. are getting worse, this is a bad omen. But one possible benefit might come from it. This would occur if white Americans would start viewing the world of increasingly dark street people as a microcosm of the larger world of non-whites that is pressing in upon them, and cause these whites to start thinking about the survival of their own kind. □

THE LATE GREAT BOOK:
THE BIBLE

AN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN AND BIBLICAL ORIGINS.

Nicholas Carter feels that it is time for us to sit down and do what many Christians rarely do: Study the Holy Bible. In doing so, we may discover whether or not the Bible is indeed "Holy" and the "Word of God." In strict biblical order, the author methodically, and lucidly, examines the various claims made in the "Holy Book" and shows how many of them bear no relationship to reality whatsoever. ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

DEMOCRACY IN ACTION

In the June issue of this periodical, pp. 37-46, I discussed briefly the progress toward economic democracy made by the recent looting of the Savings and Loan agencies. My principal source was a short article that was an extract from a book that I have now read: Inside Job, by Stephen Pizzo, Mary Fricker, and Paul Muolo (New York, McGraw-Hill, 1989.) The negotiations for the publication of this book were evidently concluded a number of years ago through the authors' literary agent and the publisher's two book-editors. Judicious readers will perpend the authors' casual remark (p. vii) that: "We are certain that had they [agent and editors] not embraced this project early on [i.e., before the scandal broke], this book might never have seen print." I emphasize the phrase that hints how conditions have changed since Bushy began to rule us. The authors could have added that if the book had not been published late in 1989 and had been delayed until later this year, it almost certainly would never have been printed.

Eight years ago, in 1982, the senior author was editor of a weekly newspaper,[1] Russian River News, in the tiny town of Guerneville (population 1700), sixty miles north-northwest of San Francisco. Belonging to the small minority of Americans whose common sense has not become atrophied, he took notice

1. Cf. my observation in August 1989, pp. 3-6, that some vestiges of honesty have survived in some weekly newspapers that have not yet been modernized. Incidentally, one of the small papers that I mentioned, the Polish Post Eagle, was not so small that it escaped the vigilance of the cowboys who ride herd on the livestock that God's Race raises on their Promised Land in North America. The Defamation League undertook to squash the insolent Aryan dogs, but Poles are evidently less unmanned than Americans and a majority of the newspapers' advertisers rallied to its support. What the Jews will do to them is not yet known, but you should be able to guess.

when the miniature town's small Centennial Savings and Loan Agency began to throw millions of dollars around the landscape and give fantastically lush and expensive entertainments for hundreds of local suckers.

Despite threats from the thug who was president of the Centennial agency, the editor continued to publish unflattering comments about it from time to time, and meanwhile he undertook a covert investigation that soon extended to Savings and Loan agencies throughout the country. He was not astonished when Centennial collapsed a few years later and it was found that $165,000,000 had evaporated, leaving no residue.

The three authors joined forces and worked in collaboration to produce the 455 pages of their book, which will supply you with hundreds of incidents in one grand looting of American taxpaying animals, and with the names of scores of distinguished and outstanding thieves.

For the general atmosphere of democracy in action, you need read only the report on page 2 of one little party given in Las Vegas by McBirney, the panjandrum of the Sunshine Savings and Loan in Dallas, for executives (and executioners!) of other agencies in the business. The party naturally included the services of a contingent from Las Vegas's famous Whore Corps, which is said to equal Washington's, especially since professional women in the District of Corruption are suffering from competition by the now more fashionable male perverts.

Now although some of the guests at that party, many of whom had been brought to Las Vegas on McBirney's private 747 plane (the old 707 is too small for big men, like McBirney and Bush[2]), doubtless claimed to have been innocent fun-makers, it is obvious that they cannot have been so feeble-minded that they did not perceive that they were enjoying the fruits of high-level rapine.

Americans have long had as their ideal the "open society," which is so perpetually stirred up that the dregs on the bottom become the scum on the top—in keeping with old Jesus's promise that "the last shall be first." Some of the more prominent characters in the looting of the Savings & Loan agencies will be known to you. There was Super-Sheeny Ivan Boesky, hero of the "junk bond" swindle that was devised not only for theft but to ensure the bankruptcy of many banks and insurance companies; there was high-flying McBirney, whom we have already mentioned; there was Lord Bushy's son, Neil, who, the press is now frantically assuring us, was as innocent and intelligent as a new-born lamb; Andrew Cuomo, son of the Italianized Kike who misgoverns the state of New York; and other blossoms on the Upas-tree of American democracy.

2. You doubtless noticed in the press that the taxpaying animals have just supplied their War Lord with a 747 that is doubtless even more luxurious and expensive than was McBirney's. It is only appropriate that the bigger operator should have the best.

A typical flower was a Yid named Hellman, who early and no doubt instinctively discovered that, as he said in his "autobiography," Wall Street Swindler, which he later published to make more money from his crimes, "the [American] investor, the buyer of stocks, is a sucker. He's just a turkey waiting to be plucked." Hellman accordingly plundered the suckers with racial verve and impunity until he made the mistake of plucking some members of the Mafia. He was accordingly prosecuted and was to be sentenced to six years in prison when he disappeared. The U. S. Marshals, one of our rulers' terrorist agencies that you may have overlooked, supplied him with a new identity, a new name, a new "Social Security" card, a new birth certificate, a new driver's license, new school records, new personal history, and, as the authors remark, with everything except a new circumcision. What emerged from the conversion was a Michael Rapp, who, however, retained under his new guise his old ethical standards, which ideally qualified him to guide Savings & Loan agencies and banks to extinction while he looted them joyously.

Since the resounding crashes of so many "thrift" agencies could not be kept secret, the Federal government had perforce to make arrests and prosecute individuals. Hellman, reborn as Rapp, was convicted and sentenced to forty-two years in prison by a sternly upright judge whose lecture on probity was reproduced and lauded in the press, after which he reduced the sentence to two years in a hotel-style prison. But an experienced prosecuting attorney remarked, when Rapp was finally sentenced in February 1989, "he'll be out this summer; you watch." This book evidently went to press before the prediction could be verified, but I am certain that the deserving son of Zion will not suffer for his obedience to God's Law about goyim, as stated in the holy Talmud.[3]

Unless you want to accumulate examples of the utter corruption of the country that once was ours, the long book will become monotonous, since the thieves might all have been cut from one pattern. The authors prudently do not identify the race concealed by each of the various names, except when that is notorious, although they give us occasional hints by referring to the "Israeli Mafia" or telling us that a person named Walker took refuge in the Holy Land.

Their reticence does not really matter, for you may be sure that, in addition to God's Own, Judaized Aryans appear in the list, and probably Aryans who did not need to be Judaized. We must always remember that our race includes a very large number of persons with criminal instincts which are kept in check only by the pressure of a civilized society, such as was created and maintained by a select minority of our race until the Chosen enfeebled and destroyed it with "democracy."[4]

3. Hellman/Rapp may be an agent of the C.I.A., which is reported to have obtained secret presidential pardons for some less notorious thieves. However that may be, it is clear that the Criminal Intelligence Agency, which the boobs so lavishly finance, was deeply involved in the looting of the Savings & Loan agencies, perhaps in connection with its vending of cocaine, heroin, and similar drugs. The authors suggest that some of the loot was taken by the C.I.A. It must be understood, of course, that no money was involved in these transactions, only the trading stamps issued by the Federal Reserve Swindle, which the boobs contentedly use in place of money—and for many of the operations, not even trading stamps, but only the vaporous fiction called credit, which usurers and other thieves create and abolish at will.

4. I cannot too often emphasize the simple fact that barbarism and even no little savagery is the natural state of man, including our race, and that culture and civilization are the work of a comparatively small part of the population who have acquired ascendency over the rest. What is remarkable in human history is not that civilizations have disintegrated and perished, but that they came into being at all.

What you need to learn from this book is that, as the authors clearly indicate but prudently do not state explicitly in a few words, the looting spree, which has robbed every individual American of more than two thousand dollars, was, like all major governmental operations since the "New Deal," planned from the first, with the complicity of the Congress that the Jews describe as the best their money can buy.

As the authors remark (p. 306) "It was clear that Congress and federal regulators knew in 1976 what kind of people were out there just waiting for an opportunity to victimize financial institutions if given the slightest opening." With that knowledge clearly in mind, the Congress in 1982 virtually invited the thieves to loot the Savings & Loan agencies at the expense of American taxpayers. And the wonderful "deregulation" was officially celebrated by old Ronnie at a festive lawn party for two hundred guests in October 1982.

Whether Ronnie knew what he was doing when he signed the new law does not matter. He is a stupid and superstitious man with just enough intelligence to obey directions from the producers of the shows in which he acted in Hollywood and Washington. But the same tentative apology cannot be offered for the Jews' Congress of the United States. They devised and willed the débâcle.

It has long been apparent that, not only in such notorious acts as giving away our Panama Canal and constantly increasing the trillions of the bankrupt country's national debt to increase the loot taken by the usurers, but in virtually every act of the slightest importance, such as most recently the Federal law to spread the epidemic of "AIDS" as rapidly and widely as possible, the Congress has consistently worked to injure and destroy the American people, i.e., the nation of fatheaded Aryans who, with Christian fatuity, gave their country away decades ago.

Sooner or later you will have to face the fact that you are living in an occupied country and that its Congress and all of its government are your enemies, bent on your destruction. (I say all of the government, although we must except a few of its employees, such as those who secretly provided the authors of this book with vital information at the risk of their jobs and livelihood.)

The cage that the American people, full of Christian hokum, patiently built for themselves step by step since 1912 is now almost complete. All that is lacking to the perfection of "mature democracy" is a Gulag, camps into which Americans who show signs of intelligence can be thrown and there done to death in conditions approximating those that the Americans inflicted on the German people and German soldiers after the United States gave the Jews victory in the last phase of the Chosen People's perpetual war against the Aryan race. As soon as our War Lord gets his own Jewish war really under way, and the boobs have been pumped full of righteousness, as they were in 1917 and 1941, that defect will be remedied.

A CRINGING LORD

Boys who have a streak of cruelty in their character often take earthworms or similar small animals and impale them on a pin to enjoy watching them twist and writhe as they slowly die. God's People enjoy capturing an Aryan—currently a hapless Ukrainian named Demjanjuk—and taking him to their Holy Land and impaling him on legal fictions to enjoy watching the creature twist and writhe, doubtless chuckling as they observe what he will do and say in the hope of saving his life.

One form of torture used is one of the subtlest devised by the Holy Inquisition. You may recall a memorable description of it in a short story by Villiers d'Isle-Adam. The victim of applied Christianity is condemned to death and then given opportunities to escape from his dungeon and the fortress; each time at various points along the route to freedom he narrowly escapes discovery and has to remain in mortal terror for a time before he can go on to the next point; of course, it is at the last point, when he is on the very verge of effecting his escape, that he is discovered and hauled back to his dungeon to recuperate until he is in condition to perform in another comedy for the pleasure of godly sadists.

The governments of the Jews' principal possessions in North America, Canada and the United States, have established, at the expense of their taxpaying animals, official gangs of terrorists to corral an abundant supply of victims for the show in Jerusalem, which will probably be made a three-ring circus as soon as Demjanjuk is disposed of. Whether he is finally murdered or dismissed as a dehumanized but living husk of tortured flesh and blighted mind is not important.

Keeping the arena supplied for the entertainment of God's Own is only one secondary purpose of the terrorism.[1]

Primarily the "Nazi-hunters" are charged with a triple function: first, to make a mockery of all the principles of Roman and Germanic law and teach their Aryan swine that there is no law except the pious whims of Yahweh's Yammering Yids; second, to show the rest of the world how despicable are the Aryan curs who will do anything their masters command, and who fawn on the masters and lick their boots even after having been kicked in the snout; and third and most important, to stage show trials at which teams of godly perjurers can tell fancy stories about how they witnessed the awful "Holocaust" (and miraculously escaped). Their lies will impose on the boobs and make them believe that the Holohoax is more than a gigantic swindle by the Masters of Deceit.

An unlimited supply of witnesses is always at hand. (As everyone knows, the Holy Talmud provides that every means of exploiting the lower animals is approved and ordained by the ferocious god of the Christians' "Old Testament," and, even if that were not so, God's People at an annual ceremony revoke and absolve themselves of all oaths they may take during the coming year.) The witnesses will probably be rehearsed before each show to prevent enthusiastic perjurers from claiming that they saw the wicked Germans touch lighted matches to baby Kikes and make them blaze like torches of pitch pine soaked in kerosene, or from affirming that they could tell from the color of the smoke whether the sacred Sheenies then being incinerated came from Hungary, Poland, or some other country. Despite the best efforts of schools and boob-tubes, there are still Aryans intelligent enough to be unconvinced by such exuberant exercises of malevolent fancy.

Probably because some Englishmen are beginning to feel misgivings about the Holohoax, Prime Ministress Maggie, the well-known mannequin created by a pair of malodorous Sheenies whose parents crawled into England from Iraq in 1945,[2] and her staff of Jews and prostituted Britons decided to bless the demoralized survivors of a once great nation with a terrorist gang, similar to the "Office of Special Investigations" in the United States. The pimps in the House of Commons obediently enacted the revocation of British law by an overwhelming majority. But the treasonous measure was rejected by the House of Lords, also by an overwhelming majority. That was noteworthy, even astonishing at first sight.

Despite what you probably heard from a "Liberal" gasbag, if you took a course in "Political Science" or Modern History when you were in college, the House of Lords has always been the moderator that preserved, as best it could, the stability of Great Britain and the vaunted liberty of Englishmen. It may be compared to the governor that prevents a steam engine from running ever faster until it destroys itself. It is true that the Lords sometimes failed when they should have acted, but the decline of Great Britain may be measured by the successive reductions in the power of the House of Lords. What may have astonished you was that that body still has a sense of responsibility and integrity.

The doom of Britain, then Great, was made inevitable in 1911, when, with the shameful connivance of the new and weak king, George V, the British constitution was irretrievably shattered by stripping the House of Lords of its power to veto deleterious legislation (it now can only delay it for a short time), and by permitting the members of the House of Commons to pay themselves from the public treasury. That made possible the rise of thugs like Lloyd George and eventually

2. See Liberty Bell, July 1986, pp. 1-7.

scum like Harold Wilson. And it made possible the suicidal folly of the First World War.[3]

What is left of the hereditary aristocracy of once-great Britain, now largely polluted by infusions of Jewish blood through miscegenation,[4] has become demoralized and effete. Some have renounced their rank (see the listing of the peerage in the current issue of Whitaker's Almanach); many were impoverished in one way or another by the Jews' sabotage of the British Empire and Britain itself; some have been reduced to strange expedients to maintain themselves; and almost all have been deprived of their ancestral homes and their dignity. Most of the survivors seldom take the trouble to attend sessions of the House of Lords, of which they are, of course, members by heredity.

The House of Lords includes a considerable number of undisguised Jews and a Lordly Rabbi, the peer of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, who, corrupt as they are, must wince when they have to look at him. Many members are Jews pretending to be British or Mischlinge. The active majority of the House is now largely composed of prominent politicians who have been boosted into the peerage for disservice to their country. (E.g, Anthony Eden became the Earl of Avon and Harold Macmillan was transformed into Lord Stockton.) A particularly influential group within the House is formed by the "Law Lords," ennobled jurists and eminent judges.

3. The work of substantive treason was carried out by the Liberal Party, a pack of male ideologues and sentimental females, headed by Asquith, a moral weakling who loved peace so much that he precipitated the First World War, much as another weakling, Chamberlain, completed the suicide of Britain by beginning the Second World War. Asquith is credited with an asinine justification of his war: if Britain did not destroy Germany, British industry would have to work harder to retain its dominance of the world's markets. The Jews, needless to say, worked zealously, as usual, to subvert and destroy Britain, but, so far as I know, no one has made a detailed study of their part in contriving the fatal "reforms" of 1911.

4. See Liberty Bell, November 1983, pp. 1-4, with the reference to 'Populism' and 'Élitism,' pp. 60-67. The eminent Jewish ethnologist, Dr. Alfred Nossig, may be right in claiming that even "a single little drop" of Jewish blood will pervert and derange an Aryan's mind.

According to John Tyndall, the present House of Lords "consists of much the same collection of wet liberals, Jew-lovers, and Hitler-haters as the Commons." There is, however, the crucial difference that members of the House of Commons, like American Congressmen, know that if they disobey their Jewish masters in even the slightest matter, they will never be reëlected, whereas the Lords are not subject to that kind of control. Furthermore, the peerage is still a mark of distinction, and a member of that order is encouraged to retain his self-respect. The Lords, including Mischlinge and, it seems, even some Jews, were not willing to descend to notorious prostitution by open treason, formally revoking all British law and the very concept of legality. Thus the overwhelming majority refused assent to the outrageous act of the Commons.

One who spoke in favor of law was Lord Hailsham, who had been the Lord Chancellor and head of Britain's legal system, which he did not wish to see subverted and annulled. In his speech, he denounced the proposed legislation as legal nonsense, but then he saw a Jew frowning at him, and despite his security as a Lord for the rest of his life, he cringed and cowered before his masters, and said, in abject apology:

"Sometimes when I look at my Jewish friends, I wonder how they can possibly regard me, as a Christian and a Gentile, with other than detestation."

The noble lord need not wonder. 'Detestation' may not be the mot juste, but he may be sure that his Jewish "friends," behind their bland smiles and lubricated words:

1. Regard him with contempt as a specimen of an inferior species of mammal. As is implied in the "Old Testament"[5] and explicitly stated in the Talmud, only Jews are human beings,

5. In most of that collection of tales, written or edited during or after the fifth century B.C., when the Jews' religion was drastically converted from a polytheism to a misogynist henotheism, the Jews are the exclusive concern of Yahweh, a god superior to the gods of inferior races, whom he can beat up when they get into the way of his darlings, but when, probably before the first century B.C., the Jews converted their religion to a monotheism, it followed that they were the only race esteemed by the only god. From that position, the doctrine in the Talmud logically follows.

while dogs, cats, Aryans, Mongolians, Semites, pigs, etc. are animals that cannot own property and are at the disposal of the only race of humans.

2. Regard him with contempt for being so gullible as to believe their patently fictitious Holohoax;

3. Regard him with even greater contempt for his moral imbecility. Believing the canard that the Germans gassed or steamed or vaporized six million Kikes, he is so fatuous as to be emotionally upset.

A morally sound and rational Aryan in his place would have done no more than wonder whether the Germans had not been a little too severe in exterminating six million enemy aliens, members of a parasitic race that had officially declared war on them in 1933 and was whole-heartedly determined to exterminate all Germans, but would also reflect that the Germans, after all, had not only given the invaders every opportunity to withdraw, but had made great efforts, even financial, to help them emigrate. Viable nations and races never feel responsible for what happens to other races.

The Jews, who, however much we may dislike them, are now the biologically superior race, whose intense racial solidarity and the hatred of all other races that unites them enabled their small tribe of barbarous nomads to conquer the world in less than three thousand years, would be only delighted by extermination of six or sixty million Aryans or Semites or Mongolians.

The Japanese, who are a great nation and think of themselves as the Yamoto, a "special race" (shido minzuku), would never do more than shrug their shoulders, if they had exterminated six million Americans or Vietnamese or Turks or Arabs or Chinese, although they might privately wonder whether the policy had been mistaken and diminished their commercial prosperity, and in the presence of foreigners their habitual courtesy would make them say, "Very sorry. Excuse, please."

What is truly remarkable, the Chinese Communists, after the United States installed them in power, notoriously and systematically murdered at least twelve million of their own people, but even anti-Communist Chinese do not have moralistic tantrums and imagine a racial guilt, although they denounce the policy as having been destructive of Chinese culture and of the genetically better part of the population.

The fact is that Aryans are the only race afflicted by a silly superstition about the "sanctity of human life" and given to moralistic fits and snivelling about the losses of other races, even today, when it is obvious that the overcrowded planet can be saved for human life only by exterminations on a scale hitherto unknown and unimagined.

For that matter, even Americans become idiotically hysterical only when the Sacred Race is slighted. As I remarked a moment ago, when the Chinese Communists were put in power by American traitors employed by the Jews, they murdered many millions of the Chinese, including the best part of the nation, but although the Americans really had a moral responsibility, since they delivered China to the Communists, they did not really care. A few Americans expressed disapproval of the massacres, a very few perceived that China had been made a potentially formidable enemy that would attack them when that became expedient, and even fewer called for preëmptive action to avert future disasters.

When Franklin Roosevelt's accomplice, Stalin, murdered twelve or more million Ukrainians with special brutality, forcing them to starve to death by confiscating their crops, some Americans expressed disapproval, and some, who did not know that they were themselves being surreptitiously subjected to Communist rule, remarked on the nature of Communists and feared them, but no American was really worried, although the victims were fellow Aryans, members of our minority and endangered race. No American felt guilty, although he had a moral responsibility as a member of the nation that had saved and established the Judaeo-Communist tyranny in Russia,[6]

6. In 1921 the United States made the first of its many and costly efforts to subsidize and perpetuate in power the Judaeo-Communist régime that had been imposed by Jewish bankers on the unfortunate Russians. See Liberty Bell, February 1989, pp. 26-27.

and he, as a taxpayer, had worked hard to endow and sustain the inhuman butchers.

4. Lord Hailsham may be certain that his Jewish "friends" regard him with special contempt because he, an Englishman, citizen of a nation which has for centuries coddled its invaders, feels guilt for what he imagines the Germans did to the Kikes who had invaded their country.

Only the British and the Americans are so mentally confused and morally perverted that they feel a racial guilt because (as they have been made to believe) their fellow Aryans, the Germans, exterminated a few millions of aliens of an enemy race on their territory. The extermination may have been ill-advised and even cruel, but that would be a question for Germans to consider and none of our business, since we in no way participated in the supposed action.

That morbid perversion of morality merits the contempt of everyone, no matter what his race, who has not lost all contact with the real world. Although the Jews happily profit from moral idiocy, they recognize it as one manifestation of the biological inferiority of their victims.

If the recently ennobled Lord Hailsham[7] wanted to feel guilty, he, as an Englishman and Aryan, could have assumed rationally an unsupportable burden of guilt for atrocious crimes:

1. As one small example out of thousands, he shared national guilt because a Sheeny in British uniform had subjected Richard Höss to fiendish tortures for three whole days to extort from a broken and dehumanized mass of quivering flesh a lying "confession" that could be used in putting over the mondial swindle called "the Holocaust."[8] The Sheeny, to be sure, was merely obeying the sadistic instincts of his race and the venomous hatred of all other races that is the secret of his race's amazing power and bloody triumphs, but he was able to do that only because the British permitted, encouraged, and supported a sadism that undegenerate Aryans instinctively regard with repulsion as savagery. Now multiply that example by a few thousand specific instances of comparable guilt.

2. As an Englishman he shared the guilt for one of the most heinous crimes of recorded history—the blood-guilt for the death or mutilation of all the British civilians, men and women, who were killed or crippled by the bombing raids carried out by German planes and rockets. Of the facts there is no possible doubt. The Principal Secretary of the British Air Ministry, J. M. Spaight, boasted in 1944 of Britain's brilliant strategy in carrying out secretly intensive bombing of German open cities in order to kill so many German non-combatants, innocent men, women, and children, that Hitler would be forced to retaliate with bombing raids that would kill enough British civilians, innocent men, women, and children, to generate enthusiasm for a contrived war against the Germans, who would thus show themselves so barbarous that they bombed open cities, in gross violation of scores of solemn treaties between the nations of Europe and all the canons of civilized warfare sanctioned by our racial sense of decency and honor, which requires us to spare non-combatants in war.

Of the ghastly truth of Spaight's boast there can be no doubt; the facts are established by the relative dates of the bombing attacks on open cities in Germany and Britain.

There can be no crime more vile, more revolting, than the crime of a government which contrives the death and mutilation of thousands of its own people to obtain their willing participation in a war for their own destruction. And by this atrocious and nauseating crime, the Judaized British forfeited all claim to be a civilized nation.[9]

9. The terrible crime was carried out secretly and without the knowledge of the British, it is true, and the nation as a whole could have escaped moral responsibility for it by hanging Churchill, Air Marshall Sir Arthur Harris, Mr. Spaight, and other authors of the "grand strategy" when the facts became known. This the British did not do; they thus assumed the guilt as a nation and involved in that guilt every Briton who was adult at that time.

3. As an Englishman, he was guilty of the deaths of hundreds of thousands of English men and women who, as soldiers or civilians, were killed in an insane and suicidal war to appease the monstrous egomania of a half-English sot, who served as a lackey to his Jewish masters, and who kept secret all the offers of peace and preservation of Britain and its Empire made by Adolf Hitler in his anxiety to avoid the destruction of an empire that he recognized as indispensable to the world's equilibrium. The guilt of Churchill included the foul treachery by which Rudolf Hess was lured to Britain, imprisoned and tortured, in violation of all the practical standards of war, observed even by barbarians, which guarantee the safety of an invited envoy.[10] To call Churchill a beast is to defame all quadrupeds. The inexpiable guilt was augmented by that of all the succeeding governments of Britain, who kept Hess incarcerated under inhuman conditions until the government of Prime Ministress Maggie finally murdered the aged and almost helpless old man in a vain effort to preserve the heinous secret.[11]

4. And if the burden of guilt for satanically depraved crimes against his own people was not sufficient for Lord Hailsham, he specifically shared guilt for the agony and death of all the thousands of his fellow Aryans, innocent men, women, and children, who perished in the fiery holocaust of Dresden[12] and other open cities bombed by Englishmen who had ceased to be human.

5. As an Englishman, he furthermore shared guilt for all the lives lost in that war, which the Jews and their monster in the White House could not have contrived without use of Great Britain as a cat's paw.

6. He shared the guilt—but why continue? A chronicle of British guilt for what they as a nation actually did to members of their race abroad and to their own people would require a résumé of British history since 1914.

But of all the real guilt that Lord Hailsham could have taken as a crushing burden on his own shoulders, he said not a word, but preferred to feel an idiotic guilt for something that had never happened and in which Britain was not even said to have had a part! And, so doing, he groveled like a mangy and famished cur at the feet of his alien masters.

One of the miserable hirelings who scribble for the Jews in newspapers that are British only in the sense that they are printed in Britain, quoted the Lord's self-abasing words, which I transcribed above, and opined:

"He was surely speaking for every thoughtful person of the Christian tradition."

There could be no clearer proof that the Jews' mystery religion, a spiritual syphilis, has rotted the minds of our race and induced paralysis of our will to live.

HERO À LA MODE

On 25 July 1876 a regiment of cavalry, sent by General Terry in advance of his troops for reconnaissance, and under the command of Colonel George Armstrong Custer,[1] entered the valley of the Little Big Horn in what is now southeastern Montana. Custer, probably deceived by his scouts and eager to win a brilliant victory before his commander arrived, rashly divided his regiment, which was far below full strength, into three detachments, retaining some 250 men under his immediate command, and sending the other

1. His rank was Lieutenant Colonel, although he held a command normally given to a full Colonel. Custer was an experienced soldier, having fought with distinction throughout the invasion of the South in 1861-1865, and attaining a certain fame because of his youth. He became a brigadier general when he was twenty-four, and a major general by brevet when he was twenty-six. When the Northern Army was greatly reduced in numbers after the conquest of the South, all ranks were necessarily reduced to a peace-time footing. I shall not enter into the endless controversy about Custer's character. His complete and efficient defeat of the Cheyenne at Washita in 1868 was a brilliant victory; whether he unnecessarily abandoned a small party of his own men is a question that could be answered only by someone who has the divine power to know precisely what was the situation and the commander's understanding of that situation at every moment during the battle. As for the "Liberal" pests who yelp about Custer's "massacre" of the savages, they are beneath contempt.

two detachments to what he thought was the rear of the Indian horde to prevent its escape.

Some four thousand well-mounted Indians, led by a chief named Crazy Horse, surrounded Custer and the small body of men he had kept with him (including his younger brother) and, after hard fighting, killed all of them. The two other detachments of the ill-fated regiment succeeded in defending themselves until General Terry arrived with the main body of his troops.[2]

The result of a battle with such disparity of numbers was never in doubt, but you are seldom told that the firearms in the hands of the Indians were much superior to those used by the American cavalry. Greedy traitors had sold to the savages the latest and much improved rifles and carbines, while the total corruption of the Republican administration in Washington extended to the War Department, which left our troops equipped with obsolete weapons.

A monument, surrounded by graves, and erected when the United States was still a nation, now marks the site of "Custer's Last Stand."

The newspaper called USA Today, in a feature article on 19 July 1990, reports that a mountain near the town of Custer in South Dakota is being carved into a huge figure of the great hero, Crazy Horse, riding with "dignity" on his stallion. The carving on the mountain will make a monument taller than the Washington Monument in the District of Corruption. It will be the largest sculptured monument in the world. We are glowingly told that a ten-storey building could stand between the savage's out-

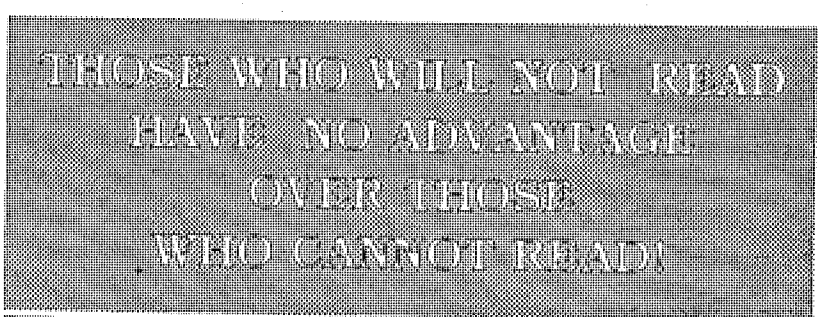
2. Far be it from me to enter into the wrangling about the conduct of Major Reno, who not only saved the detachment under his command but probably also ensured the survival of the detachment under Captain Benteen. Even if the unverified allegations made against him were true, they did not justify the persecution to which he was subjected.

stretched arm andthe mane of his horse, and that a five-room house could be placed in the horse's flared nostril. The design and engineering of the monument was the work of an immigrant, the late Korczak Ziolkowski (who may or may not have been Polish), and the huge task is now under the direction of his widow. No date has been set for completion of the monument, placed derisively near the town that was named for ill-fated Colonel Custer. The project is enthusiastically endorsed by the Governor of South Dakota, a politician named Mickelson, and is being financed by contributions, most of which, no doubt, come from stupid Americans.[3]

So Crazy Horse is a great hero? With four thousand savages, equipped with superior weapons, he destroyed a party of about 250 white men. How heroic! you will exclaim satirically, but you miss the point. He slew white men, Americans, and, in the estimate of our degenerate contemporaries, that godly work is enough to make him a great hero.

Crazy Horse? Crazy Americans. □

3. The term 'American' properly applies only to Aryans in the United States, members of the race that took the country from the savages. The term could etymologically apply to every bit of land and every inhabitant of the Western Hemisphere, from the North Pole to Cape Horn, but it is ours by prescriptive right: we took it for ourselves, having no distinctive name (such as 'Canada' or 'Brazil') for our country. Applying our name to other persons and peoples can only cause confusion.



LETTER FROM A GERMAN CORRESPONDENT

We have received a copy of an interesting letter from a German correspondent who wishes to remain anonymous. He has, however, given us permission to quote from the letter, which was written in a fluent English and which we find of considerable significance with regard to current discussion of the "Holocaust" question.

The writer of the letter served in the German armed forces and saw service in Unkraine and eastern Poland during 1943-1944. He points out in a letter to me that "Stalin's killer gangs" killed some 600,000 to 800,000 German soldiers in Poland and the USSR in spite of the existence of the special security forces (Einsatzgruppen). In this connection we call attention to the important book on this subject by Rudolf Aschenbauer, Krieg ohne Grenzen / Der Partisanenkampf gegen Deutschland 1939-1945 (War without Limits / The Partisan War against Germany 1939-1945), Leoni: Druffel-Verlag, 1982.

The letter was addressed to the well-known English historian, David Irving, and dated 8 July 1990. Irving has lectured to audiences in North America and Germany and Austria, where he lectures in German. The following are selected parts of the letter with some minor editing:

—Charles E. Weber

You may or may not be aware of the fact that Swiss-born Revisionist of long standing, Dr. Max Wahl of Winterthur, has taken you severely to task for your Graz, or rather Leoben lecture. Initially, I was rather angry at Dr. Wahl and thought that he had gone a bit too far in his criticism, so I obtained the audio-cassette in order to come to my own conclusions. I had heard you on various occasions in this country [Germany], in Toronto and on video-tapes from Vancouver and other places, and I thought that what Dr. Wahl said in his article could not possibly be true. I heard you in Porta Westfalica and in Munich on 21 June, and I was greatly impressed by what you had to say on these occasions.....

I have no words either in English or German to describe properly how DISGUSTED I was when listening to your Graz tape. My initial impression was that "there is a man who—for whatever reasons—ventured out into the field of Revisionism for a while, thought twice about it in the meantime, and is now desperately struggling to sneak back into the safe harbour of Exterminationism."

Mr. Irving, what is the use of saying that "O.K., the gas chambers did not exist, but the 'Holocaust' did happen after all and Hitler and the Nazis committed "übermenschlich große Vebrechen während des Zweiten Weltkriegs und auch vorher?" [superhumanly large crimes during the Second World War and even previously]. In saying this, you are precisely in the same boat with Dr. Raul Hilberg, who said to a large U.S. newspaper that "perhaps Leuchter is right and those facilities in Auschwitz and Maidanek were, in fact, unsuitable for mass killing, but it is IRRELEVANT!" Exactly, the "good news" that the gas chambers did not exist is indeed entirely irrelevant if even a renowned Revisionist like David Irving says: "Ich kann nicht leugnen daß...etc., etc." [I cannot deny that...etc., etc.] Hilberg has now known for quite a while that the gas chamber yarn does not really hold water, so he keeps on harping on those Einsatzgruppen. He said in Toronto in 1985 that the Einsatzgruppen alone murdered some 2.5 million Jews. However, he "forgot" to mention that even during those infamous Nuremberg show trials the prosecution alleged that some 90,000 people were killed by the Einsatzgruppen. It is well known that Dr. Ohlendorf and Oswald Pohl were brutally tortured and that Ohelndorf's "confession" is not worth the paper it is written on, in short, that even the figure of 90,000 was greatly exaggerated. I said that this is well known, although I must say that the subject of the Einsatzgruppen has not yet been sufficiently dealt with by the Revisionist school of historiography.

As you are aware, perestroika in the Soviet Union has brought about a siginificant Revisionism, not only in the Soviet Union itself but also in all East European countries. Mass graves with tens, even hundreds of thousands of victims of Stalin's bloody regime, of Tito's Bolshevik killer gangs (see enclosed news item). Mass graves are also being discovered on the territory of the German Democratic Republic (Buchenwald and elsewhere), but again, these are not Hitler's victims.

It is therefore not unreasonable to ask: "Where are all the mass graves of those 2.5 million Jews killed by roughly 3,000 members of the Einsatzgruppen?" Were the Bolshevik authorities under Stalin too sensitive not to hurt the feelings of the German people, so that they tactfully refrained from opening those mass graves and presenting them to the Nuremberg prosecutors as evidence? The answer is quite simple: Those mass graves never existed and those mass kllings never happened! The story goes, however, that the tiny outfit operating under the designation of "Einsatzgruppen" for a limited period of time (they no longer existed in early 1944) not only summarily killed their unfortunate victims at the edge of mass graves which the victims had dug themselves, but that the Einsatzgruppen piled them up in there like sardines in a tin can and that, further, they later exhumed them all again on Himmler's orders in a top-secret mission so that "posterity" would not learn of the crimes!!! [By way of contrast, when the Germans found the mass graves at Katyn in 1943 they immediately exhumed the bodies of the Polish victims and attempted to inform the world about the crime. —Editor]

The most insidious part of your Leoben speech was your repetition of the oft-told cock and bull story that the Germans went around shooting 5,000 to 20,000 (or more?) alongside of pits and neatly packed them like sardines to "save space." This is so absolutely absurd and incredible that it does extensive damage, not to the reputation of the German nation (for even the inmate of a lunatic asylum would not fall victim to such a yarn), but to the reputation of David Irving and, to a certain extent, to Revisionism, if one erroneously believes that David Irving belongs to that category of historians. I tell you quite frankly that after your Leoben "revelations" I personally have my doubts about that.

Euthanasia: It is correct that Hitler signed the euthanasia decree and back-dated it to 1 September 1939. Being a frontline soldier of the First World Ward, Hitler still had horrible visions of overcrowded field hospitals with insufficient medical equipment and insufficient personnel, while on the other hand precious hospital space was occupied to perpetuate the suffering and in many cases next to unbearable pain in places like Bethel near Bielefeld. Did you ever visit such a place? So, as the term "euthanasia" (=Gnadentot, mercy death) suggests, was it really such a terrible crime to relieve those people of their suffering after careful medical examination and a doctor's decision in every single case? I personally think not, and besides, Hitler stopped the Grandentot Operation after heavy protests from Church circles. So why mention these things more than 45 years after the events when the subject of your lecture was the most gigantic lie that was ever meted out to the whole nation?

War crimes. I am not saying that during the war the Germans were all angels. War itself is a crime against humanity and disgusting things happened on both sides. But, Mr. Irving, have you forgotten that the war was only two days old when the Poles committed horrible crimes against the German population in Bromberg and other places, killing thousands of them only because they were Germans? [See Bulletin 39, which was republished in Liberty Bell of October 1989.] Now do you think the British army or occupational authorities would have reacted in a similar case? Was it the Germans or the Poles and Soviets who turned the campaign in the east to what it became in the end? Have you never heard of Stalin's Bolshevik hordes who even outdid Genghis Khan's Mongols of bygone days?

After all, the Germans, who valiantly fought for their country and, in fact, for the rest of Western civilization and succeeded in preventing Stalin's hordes from watering their horses on the Rhine or on the Thames were the same people who fought with Rommel in Africa and who were lauded for their fairness even by the British enemy. Was it a different section of the German nation who committed these "übermenschlich große Verbrechen" in the East?

To put it in a nutshell, a Holocaust did, in fact, occur but not in Auschwitz, Maidanek, Treblinka, Kiev and elsewhere at the hands of the Germans, but in Hamburg, Dresden, Hiroshima, Nagasaki and other places by British gentlemen and Roosevelt's Christian soldiers. In terms of "war crimes" Adolf Hitler was a Sunday School teacher in comparison to Churchill, Stalin and Roosevelt. MORE PEOPLE DIED IN LESS THAN 3 HOURS IN DRESDEN THAN 5 YEARS IN AUSCHWITZ!

A NOTEWORTHY PROPHESY

On 29 June 1941, former President Herbert Hoover made the following prophesy in a radio address:

"If we go further and join the war and we win, then we have won for Stalin the grip of communism on Russia.... Again I say, if we join the war and Stalin wins, we have aided him to impose more communism on Europe and the world. At least we could not with such a bedfellow say to our sons that by making the supreme sacrifice, they are restoring freedom to the world. War alongside Stalin to impose freedom is more than a travesty. It is a tragedy."

Mr. Sal J. Foderaro
The Asbury Park Press

Neptune, N.J. 07754

Dear Mr. Foderaro:

After Asbury Park Press Staff Writer Steve Giegerich wrote a lengthy article branding Lt. Cmdr. Ed Toner and myself as "the Shore's resident fascists"—an actionable slander—Aaron Schectman was permitted an episode of bad-mouthing in "Viewpoints," and sixteen year old Marni Fruchtman was allowed a childish tantrum in the reader's "Forum."

Any reputable newspaper would have allowed us a response if it had published this Press tirade against us—journalistic integrity would have demanded it. As we both know, the Press is not a reputable newspaper and the Press "don't do integrity." However, I have nevertheless attached my response to Schectman's howl about a Holocaust "numbers game," confident that it will be censored like all my other responses to personal attacks in the Press, and all my other attempts to correct the outrageous assaults on history that routinely fill the pages of the Press.

As usual, this article will be published elsewhere, thereby contributing to the growing reputation of the Asbury Park Press as the most inaccurate and highly censored newspaper in the whole of the United States. Indeed, Mr. Foderaro, Ed Toner and I have brought the Asbury Park Press this well-deserved fame, and people, all across this broad nation of ours, have become well aware of a journalistic aroma clinging to the east coast of New Jersey.

Mr. Foderaro, you may not believe it, but even super-market tabloids routinely allow a response to anyone appearing in their pages. It's true—take my word on it. The Asbury Park Press could learn a great deal about journalistic integrity from these superior publications. Publications like The National Inquirer and The Star. And given, let us say, three or four years of intensive effort, the Press might even become nearly as accurate as these cash register tabloids.

Of course, any movement by the Press towards accuracy and integrity, would require the Press to fire its staff of censors and propagandists, like Sunday Editor, and censor, Gary Schoening, your Jewish propagandist who routinely censors anything that doesn't agree with the Jewish viewpoint or the interest of the State of Israel. One does not need propagandists—professional liars—on a newspaper with integrity. Yes, I realize that integrity doesn't come cheap and the Press will probably have to fire most of its staff; however, becoming a reputable newspaper will be worth it.

If, for some reason, you doubt that censorship on the Press is as rampant as I say it is, I have, on file, scores of letters written to the Asbury Park Press by reputable individuals and organizations that were summarily censored by Schoening and others just like him because they did not agree with the Jew-view of history that pervades the Press.

My latest example is a classic: On 2 September 1990, Press Staff Writer Derek B. Lipsombe had his massive article—with five colored pictures—published by the Asbury Park Press. This Press tome was entitled: "Black unit fought in segregated Army."

Amongst the many gross historical inaccuracies one found in this World War Two fiction was that former members of a black tank unit that Lipscombe had interviewed claimed they had liberated Dachau Concentration Camp by smashing through the gate.

Of course, this was all nonsense. Anyone familiar with this aspect of the Second World War knows it was units of the 45th Infantry Division (specifically, the 157th Infantry Regiment) that liberated Dachau. It was a division famous for its "Thunderbird" Indian emblem and the large numbers of American Indians in its ranks. Not surprisingly, the 45th had once been part of the Oklahoma National Guard, ergo all the Indians.

Lt. Cmdr. Ed Toner could only contact one of the four black heroes of Dachau. The fellow immediately retracted his liberation of Dachau story—he never was in Dachau. Instead, he reflected, with some pleasure, on how he had "liberated" the property of a Bürgermeister's [mayor's] house. Of course, he referred to it as "the Bugle-meister's house." But I guess that's close enough for "government work."

Ed Toner wrote the Asbury Park Press with these facts and directed the attention of Staff Writer Lipscombe to the book, Dachau, written by Col. Howard A. Buechner, Medical Corps, A.U.S. Ret., who was actually at Dachau during the liberation and not out looting some Mayor's house.

For his efforts to correct the gross distortion of well documented history that was published in the Press, Ed Toner got a nasty letter from Sunday Editor, and censor, Gary Schoening.

Schoening found that our black hero's recanting of his tall tale to be "without merit." The fact that the fellow now admits he lied is "without merit"? Suspicions confirmed: On the Asbury Park Press, a lie is just as valid as the truth.

Schoening also said that the Asbury Park Press "did not have the resources nor are we prepared to research your presentation of history." Well...World War Two was such a small war, and that's why they have no records of it at the Press.

Clearly, Schoening was quite enamored in having black troops liberate Dachau—even if it was a complete lie. Or, to quote the immortal bard, "The play's the thing." And Hollywood is so much more interesting than history. And with Hollywood, one can easily rewrite history....as in Holocaust. So Schoening quickly shoved Ed Toner's letter down the ol' Orwellian Memory Hole.

It is most interesting to note that a two page letter from Michael E. Gonzales, Curator of the 45th Infantry Division Museum in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, met with the same fate as Ed Toner's letter: down the monstrous Asbury Park Press Memory Hole. Perhaps that's what happened to the record of World War Two at the Press?

One would think that the curator of a museum would have been considered a reputable authority. Perhaps he would be on a reputable newspaper; however, the Press much prefers Hollywood to history. The response of Press Staff Writer Lipscombe was most amusing. He kept insisting that he "had tapes" of his black heroes to prove his story. If having a tape of someone telling a "war story" is sufficient proof of an historical event, one could easily tape a thrilling tale from one who witnessed the 7 December 1941 Jap bombing of...NEWARK! Had Lipscombe bothered to consult a hundred different reference books on World War Two he could have documented a hundred times over that the war stories he was getting were all lies. But, like Schoening, he fell in love with the tale of black troops smashing through the gates of Dachau, in their tanks, to free all the Jews inside. The fact that it was all Hollywood and not history did not matter to Schoening or Lipscombe, it was a new tale to add to all the other tales of the Holocaust, and both of these "journalists" were quite prepared to cover up the truth.

Nothing new, Ed and I run into this routine all the time—it's typical Holocaust. Lipscombe cooks up a juicy piece of Holocaust fiction; Schoening swears that it's true; Lipscombe and Schoening cover up the truth and try to stonewall it behind their anti-Semitic shield; if troublemakers like Ed and Joe point out the truth, Press Staff Writer Steve Giegerich can always call them "fascists" and count on the Asbury Park Press to deny them the right to respond to the slanders. A citizen of New Jersey dealing with the Asbury Park Press is much like a Palestinian dealing with the Israelis: they've got all the guns, and you are never allowed to shoot back.

If the Asbury Park Press was a reputable newspaper instead of a propaganda rag it would be grateful to Ed Toner for doing the research that its staff writers should have done. If there was even a scintilla of journalistic integrity in the Press organization, jokers like Lipscombe, Schoening and Giegerich would be fired for "creating" news. However, the Asbury Park Press tirelessly documents itself, year after year, as the most unreliable rag in the United States.

My documentation of the Press as a horrible example in the field of journalism goes back some seven years. Back to the time when your Executive Editor Jobson, was so frightened of the New Jersey Jewish Federation, that he accepted their Blacklist of Americans who would be banned from even having their letters published in the reader's "Forum" of the Asbury Park Press. Jobson was so clearly terrified of the New Jersey Jewish Federation, that one suspects he left a trail of small puddles everywhere he went.

Now, "fess up," Mr. Foderaro, when you went to journalism school, your professors had no more horrible example of shoddy, yellow journalism than the newspaper on which you now serve—am I right? Well, your rag will get my personal Booby Prize when I publish my book entitled: The Asbury Park Press: Jersey Rag!"

And do remember, old boy, I can document—again and again-the reason why Budgies, all over New Jersey, choke-...gasp...swoon...and flutter to the bottom of their cages, in a dead faint, when their owners thoughtlessly line the bottom of the cage with...GASP!...the Asbury Park Press!

So, keep up the good work. After all, where would I be without the Asbury Park Press to kick around?

Cordially,
Joe Stano

Holocaust figures skewed

I see that once again, along with my friend Maj. Stano, I have become a whipping boy for the Asbury Park Press. A little background, now.

In response to a Steve Giegerich column in which he alluded to the deaths of 6 million Jews during World War II at the hands of the Nazis, I sent a clipping to him from the Press dated July 18. The AP wire service item, buried on page B10, stated very clearly that plaques overstating the number of deaths at Auschwitz-Birkenau had been removed. Instead of the 4 million, the number has been reduced to somewhere around 1.1 million, a saving of some 2.9 million lives from the inflated figure of 6 million, so dearly held by so many in Hollywood.

This revelation was made only after an Israeli professor of Holocaust studies, Dr. Yehuda Bauer, said it was so. Never mind all we "revisionists" who have known this for years. Now it could be told. The 6 million exterminated Jews is in fact a myth, "Shoah" notwithstanding.

By means of a hand-written note below the AP item, I chided Giegerich about his continued use, in his Libitzky story, of the erroneous figure of 6 million.

For my trouble, I am labeled as one of two fascists in the Shore area. (Howell is shore? Steve's geography is as weak as his arithmetic.)

I have to wonder why it is that the news of 2.9 million lives, instead of corpses, is such sad news? News like this belongs on page 1, not B10, along with as many details as possible, as well as the good news that the other "death" camps also severely exaggerated their casualty figures — to the extent that more than 6 million Jews survived, not died, during this "holocaust."

Trivializing tragedy with a numbers game

I regret to note that the letter by E.J. Toner Jr., appearing in the Aug. 24 Asbury Park Press, received bold headlining: "Holocaust figures skewed." The Press, by so doing, gives credence to the claims made by Toner.

He is evidently beating the drum that has sounded ever since the end of World War II, complaining that not enough Jews had been killed as a consequence of that war. By arguing about numbers, he attempts to trivialize the impact of the event that singled out one religious minority for punishment for imagined crimes of deicide and racial impurity.

What Toner and other vocal anti-Semites try to accomplish is to make this stupendous criminal act the object of bickering about magnitude so as to conclude that it never happened, and who cares, anyway? If the numbers can be reduced, so the claim goes, then who can believe the event ever happened?

A careful reading of history, not the hysterical claims of the haters, will show many differing uses of the statistics that came out of that conflict. The numbers, whether they be 2.9 million or 6 million, never included the countless other lives that were diminished, both Jews and non-Jews. The figures generally accepted have been that 6 million Jews and 6 million non-Jews were slaughtered as a result of the attempt to subjugate Europe by "fascists."

It is interesting to note that many non-Jewish Americans and Europeans who have been caught up in the events in Kuwait and Iraq have been treated in the same way as the Jewish victims of Hitler's racial policies. Two lines were established for those detained. One line was for individuals and groups who were passed on. The other was for the Jews who were destined for degradation and destruction. The American and European hostages in Kuwait and Iraq who have been thus singled out have powerful friends who are doing something to aid them. The Jews in Europe in World War II had none.

AN OPEN LETTER:

PLAYING THE NUMBERS GAME

Amongst the great herd of sacred Holocaust cows that graze upon the gullibility of the American people, nothing seems to infuriate the keepers of the sacred herd more than when a non-believer boots their bovine beast of "numbers" in the rump roast.

Reputable historians know that the difference between History and Hollywood is documentation. History is carefully documented and all the numbers add up. When one is dealing with Hollywood: anything goes, nothing is documented, and the numbers never add up.

When Lt. Cmdr. Ed Toner and I attempted to introduce some well-documented numbers into an undocumented Hollywood Holocaust scenario produced by Asbury Park Press staff writer Steve Giegerich—for the sake of historical accuracy—Mr. Giegerich did not challenge any of our numbers. He responded with a long, hysterical article in which he anointed us as "the Shore's resident fascists." Alas, Mr. Giegerich is Jewish, with a strong aversion to playing the Holocaust numbers game.

Initially, Ed Toner was tempted to send Mr. Giegerich a map. Highlands, where I live, is indeed on the Jersey Shore; however, Ed Toner lives in Howell, a fifteen and a half mile drive from the beach. Of course, sending Mr. Giegerich any kind of documentation—like a map of New Jersey—would only produce another tantrum, so Ed Toner spared Giegerich another bout of hysteria.

Since Howell has now been Hollywoodized by Mr. Giegerich and the Asbury Park Press as the "Jersey Shore," the residents might consider exploiting their new found status by selling beach badges to the tourists, so they might frolic in the sand and surf of Howell's beach. One could point them east and send them off lugging their beach umbrellas, blankets and beer coolers, with the explanation that the tide was out, making Howell's famous beach one of the widest in the world.

My fellow "beach bum," Ed Toner, was allowed to respond to Mr. Giegerich's long tantrum with a short letter in the Press. Unfortunately, he again made the mistake of quoting some documented numbers—which clearly infuriated Mr. Aaron H. Schectman, who lists himself as "Chair, Judaic Studies Committee, Monmouth College, West Long Branch."

In a letter responding to the horrors of documented numbers being bandied about (copy attached.) Mr. Schectman assumes two preposterous positions:

First of all, Mr. Schectman says that we "trivialize" the Holocaust by even dealing with numbers. Now, how could that be? The Holocaust is a number. And that number—as we've all been told endlessly—is "six million." Why, without the "six million" the Holocaust would not be the same thing. It would be Panama without the canal; Niagara without the falls; modern dentistry without the Tooth Fairy!

Mr. Schectman's second contention is that one should not try to certify the scope of the Holocaust, since the scope does not effect the result. A silly sophistry one often hears where one is told that it matters little if six million Jews died or only one Jew died, in that, the results are precisely the same. Analogous to a fellow falling out of his row boat on a duck pond, and the Titanic going down in the North Atlantic—the results are precisely the same? Well...perhaps...amongst persons who have lost their ability to reason.

The American public, having been subjected to so much hysteria concerning Holocaust "numbers," should be allowed to play the "numbers game" that they've heard so much about, and sample some of its numerical wonders. After all, we supposedly live in a free country, with a free press, where the people are allowed to decide issues for themselves, so what have we to fear? Surely not the truth? Therefore, let's play the NUMBERS GAME.

NUMBER ONE:

Let us start with the longest list of numbers: the claims as to how many Jews were allegedly killed by the Germans in the Concentration Camps.

There were claims of fifty million. Forty-one million. Thirty-six million: Olga Lengyel's claim in her book, Five Chimneys. Twenty-six million. Twenty-five million: the so-called "Gerstein Confession."

We pause at this point to examine three very special numbers: eighteen million, twelve million and six million. These numbers represent the three decreasing claims made by Jewish organizations at the United Nations after the war. These were the claims made to justify the creation of the State of Israel.

The first claim of 18 million, and the second claim of 12 million, were dismissed as preposterous—amid the usual howls of "anti-Semitic." Then, as now, any disagreement with any facet of the Holocaust, produces that age-old Pavlovian response: "Anti-Semitic!"

It was pointed out to the protesting Jewish organizations that their very own World Jewish Congress was fond of having a census of world Jewry, and in 1938, and again in 1939, the WJC listed 15 million Jews on the planet earth. Clearly, that eliminated the 18 million claim. Also the 50, 41, 36, 26 and 25 million claims.

As for the 12 million claim, if 12 million Jews had died in the camps, only three million Jews remained on earth. With over six million Jews in the United States alone, the 12 million claim was clearly impossible.

In order to end any debate on the issue that would have dropped the numbers even lower, B'nai B'rith demanded that the Truman Administration and the Congress accept the new claim of 6 million. And they did—to no one's surprise. So, without a shred of documentation, the fabulous six million victims of the Holocaust became part of American folklore—as it would require documentation to make it part of American, or world, history.

It still didn't sell at the U.N., where some persons with a deep and abiding respect for historic truth demanded a world census of Jewry before acceptance of the six million figure.

Amazingly, even though the Jews had a census since the days of King David, and the WJC had a census in '38, and again in '39 before the war, a census was refused by Jewish organizations all over the globe, on the astonishing grounds that a census was now, and always had been, against their religion!

Not to fear, we still have a documented census. The World Council of Churches had a census of world Jewry in 1930 and came up with a figure of 15 million—the same numbers as the World Jewish Congress. Although no census was taken in 1940, because it was a war year, the World Council of Churches took a census of Jews in 1950 and came up with 15.3 million. With a near static population that had maintained the 15 million figure for generations, one was hard-put to find any massive losses in the Jewish population during the war. In fact, forty years later, the world's Jewish population is still estimated at little more than 18 million.

Of course, a census today, even at this late date, and research by demographers, would still be able to prove or disprove the 15.3 million figure taken after the war and even document the losses sustained during the war. However, Jewish organizations still insist that a census is against their religion.

NUMBER TWO

The Germans in 1942 estimated 3.25 million Jews in all the occupied territories of the Third Reich. And this was at a time when they were winning the war and they occupied the most territory. Demographers, working after the war, came up with an estimate of 3.5 million Jews—maximum—under the control of the Germans during the war—most of whom survived the war. So, it would seem that the German numbers were quite accurate.

However, Jewish organizations demanded that the documented numbers be changed, raised to 9.5 million Jews under the control of the Germans to accommodate the 6 million undocumented "victims" newly awarded them by our generous American politicians. One simply doesn't bargain with documented historic numbers. Columbus set sail for the new world in 1492...PERIOD! One does not try to "make a deal" for another date. Historic numbers are not negotiable! That's Hollywood, not history.

NUMBER THREE

The fabulous, and completely undocumented six million Holocaust victims awarded Jewish organizations were carefully parceled out amongst all the former Concentration Camps—camps that stretched from Holland in the west to Poland in the east. And five of the fabulous six million were allotted to the camps in Western Europe and Germany, as a kind of guilt trip to inspire these nations to vote for the creation of a Jewish State at the United Nations. As we all know, it worked, and all the nations lumbered with these fabulous victims generously voted to establish a Jewish state out of Palestine—a nation they did not own.

This successful tactic soon backfired, when scientists and scholars in the free nations of Western Europe investigated the alleged "Death Camps" on their territory and found them all to be "Work Camps"—sans "gas chambers." By 1960, even the Yad Vashem Holocaust Memorial Center in Tel-Aviv, was forced to admit there had never been any "Death Camps" or "gas chambers" in all of Western Europe or Germany.

In Orwell's book, 1984, the hero, Winston Smith, was made to believe that 2 plus 2 equaled 5! When Western scientists and scholars proved that the five million victims allotted Western Europe and Germany had never existed, and all the "gas chambers" in these nations were complete frauds, one might assume that only the remaining one million alleged victims that had been allotted to the Concentration Camps behind the Iron Curtain now had to be checked. One would be wrong.

In a classic example of Orwellian mathematics, the original six million victims, minus the five million victims now proven to have never existed, still equaled...SIX MILLION! Or, 6 minus 5, equals...SIX!

Dachau had been famous for having a gas chamber disguised as a shower room, where 238,000 Jews were alleged to have been gassed. The plaque listing this "genocide" had to be removed when the fabulous "gas chambers" turned out to be nothing more than a shower room, and the fabulous 238,000 victims turned out to have never existed.

As with so many other Holocaust tales that were exposed as complete frauds, the mythical gas chamber of Dachau, and the mythical 238,000 victims, were simply tossed over the Iron Curtain into Poland, where the communist government could protect the fragile Holocaust myths from western scientists and scholars. Treblinka, Chelmno and Sobibor had all been Transient Camps, where Jews had been sent by the Germans to await resettlement in the newly occupied territories of the Soviet Union. In point of fact, these camps were closed in 1943, simply because the Russians had taken back the territory that had been held by the Germans, thereby negating any need for the camps.

With a severe housing shortage for the five milllon victims that had been allotted Western Europe and Germany, the camps in Poland, which had previously been allotted only one million victims, now had to make room for these five million refugees from the truth. So, Treblinka, Chelmno and Sobibor simply had to be changed from Transient Camps to Death Camps, just to accommodate some of the refugee victims from the west.

The fabulous 238,000 Jews that had been gassed in the infamous Dachau "shower room," the victims that were the subject of so many tearful wreath-laying ceremonies at Dachau over the years, were unceremoniously dumped over the Iron Curtain into Treblinka, and now became part of the alleged 900,000 gassed Jews that had been newly allotted to Treblinka.

The Holocaust has become a Hollywood exercise in moveable history. Given this remarkable geographic fluidity, one might easily have the Boxer Rebellion fought in the streets of Newark, New Jersey—next Thursday.

NUMBER FOUR

Auschwitz, which is listed in my 60s Encyclopedia Britannica as a camp where "estimates as high as one million Poles, Jews, and Gypsies died" (old Hollywood Holocaust scenario), now had to accommodate three million more refugee victims from Western Europe and Germany. Naturally, a new monument was erected denoting the new four million victims.

How's this for a numbers game: Of the four million victims listed on the monument, the Poles claim four million victims; the Jews claim four million victims; and the Gypsies, not wanting to be left out, claim a modest one million Gypsies—far more Gypsies than there were in Europe.

Of course, it's considered rather bad form and very borish to blurt out, "Why...that makes nine million victims!"

Not true. No! Definitely not! In Hollywood Holocaust numbers, 4, plus 4, plus 1, equals...FOUR! And if you don't believe it, you're probably a fascist like Stano and Toner.

NUMBER FIVE

In his letter to the Press, Mr. Schectman claims that "The figures generally accepted have been that 6 million Jews and 6 million non-Jews were slaughtered..."

Accepted by whom, Mr. Schectman? Please name them. In point of fact, today no one will touch the fabulous six million with a barge pole. Prof. Raul Hilberg, "Shoah" star and self-professed world-famous expert on the Holocaust, has had his retreat from all his previous Holocaust claims turned into a rout. I understand his latest contention—with crossed fingers—is that almost one million died at Auschwitz. Unfortunately, he doesn't mention where the other three million went. So, we seem to be back to the original scenario, with no home for the three million refugee victims from Western Europe and Germany who had taken up temporary residence in Auschwitz.

The truth about Auschwitz came out with the recent release by the Russians of the Auschwitz "Death Registers." After holding on to these Death Registers for forty-five years, the Soviets have, at long last, agreed to give these ledgers to the International Red Cross. These ledgers are similar to those one might find in hospitals, or prisons, or the military. In the U.S. forces we call them "Graves Registration."

In the ledgers, according to Valentina Fatyukhina, head researcher at the Soviet Red Cross, "The deaths of over 74,000 people were neatly recorded, day after day, hour after hour, in 46 huge volumes. Their names, the birthdates, and the names of parents were written down."

With typical Teutonic precision, the Germans recorded the names, back one generation, to insure that one would not make a mistake in the death of persons with the same name.

Doesn't sound much like the usual Hollywood Holocaust "death camp," where Germans indiscriminately slaughtered Jews—by the millions—just to get rid of them as quickly as possible, does it?

The Death Registers are the only real documentation of the numbers of persons that died at Auschwitz. All the other numbers being bandied about are completely undocumented and have been plucked from the same thin air that produced 50 million, 41 million, 36 million....

SS-General Oswald Pohl had been in charge of all the Concentration Camps. He was tortured after the war in an outrageous violation of the Geneva Convention, until he broke and "confessed" to the preposterous murder of "forty million persons" in the camps.

Before he was executed for his fantastic crime, Gen. Pohl stated, for the record, that a total of 200,000 to 250,000 persons had actually died in all the Concentration Camps, and most of these deaths occurred in the latter months of the war when food and medicine were in short supply and epidemics raged in the camps. A fact confirmed by the International Red Cross.

Given the recent release of information by the Soviets, most scholars think that Pohl's estimate will probably be proven quite accurate. A maximum of 250,000 deaths is a far cry from Mr. Schectman's "...6 million Jews and 6 million non-Jews..."

NUMBER SIX

In keeping with our number six: If the reader has noticed in our numbers game that we seem to be always dealing with the number six or some multiple of six, this is no accident. This, fans of horror movies, is the...KABBALAH! The Kabbalah is a collection of Jewish myths, magic, curses and numbers—lots and lots of numbers. In point of fact, the Jewish religion is a religion of numbers. Not complex numbers, mind you. Simple, silly numbers.

For example: All Hebrew words have been given a number value. A value of such importance, that one judges the numerical value of a statement rather than its intellectual value. So, a precise, fact-filled statement during a debate does not win the argument, if one's opponent counters with an absolutely silly statement containing words of higher numerical value. A brilliant reposte like, "Mine aunt Minnie has a red pencil box," may have a far higher numerical value than the most reasoned argument. One must never underestimate the value of Jewish gibberish.

In the Jewish numbers game, the number six is considered most profound. That's why the claims by Jewish organizations at the United Nations were for 18 and 12, the multiples of 6, and, lastly, for the sinister six. It was the fabulous 6 and not the fabulous 5, or 4, or any other number.

The triple six, 666, is considered a very sinister number indeed. In fact it stands for...Beelzebub...Old Nick...THE DEVIL! The devil is also known in Jewish circles as "The Angel of Death," a name often given to Germans and others the Jews don't like. (moi?)

Not surprisingly, my hate mail abounds in sixes—call me Mr. 666. And some carry a fictitious return address with the sinister (and very, very silly) 666 as a street number. This, I am told, is a terrible curse, guaranteed to have one struck down by a bolt of lightning—so says my burning bush.

Now, I'm quite sure that most people can't believe that modern, educated Jews really believe in these silly numbers games with its curses and spells. After all, it's something that one would associate with Medieval witchcraft. Right? Wrong!

Just last year, Messrs. Seymour Seigler and Jack Needle, both of whom teach a course on the Holocaust at Brookdale Community College in Lincroft, New Jersey, sent out a mass mailing, naturally at the expense of the college and the long-suffering taxpayers. Profs Seigler and Needle were pleading for "tax deductible" contributions to the Center for Holocaust Studies at Brookdale. These two professional Holocausters desperately needed many thousands of additional dollars just to battle an unspeakable horror that existed in New Jersey. The horror that made their blood run cold, was the occasional letters that Ed Toner and I managed to get published in some of the local papers. And, mind you, this was long before we became "the Shore's resident fascists."

Well, it's nice to know that one's work is appreciated; however, demanding many thousands of dollars in "tax deductable" contributions just to censor our First Amendment rights seems hardly necessary; after all, the head of the New Jersey Jewish Federation banging on editors' desks and screaming threats has never failed in the past.

The contribution slip contained in the Seigler/Needle mass mailing had spaces where the contributor could check-off his tax deductible contribution towards eliminating what little remains of freedom of the press in New Jersey; apparently, a very worthy cause in the eyes of Messrs. Seigler and Needle.

One could contribute $18, or S36, or $72, or $144, or even $288 to this great cause: a tax deductible contribution towards eliminating the First Amendment from the Constitution.

Not the standard S5, or S1O, or $15, that one might find in a non-Jewish mailing. All contributions were in multiples of the magic 6, so one got a curse with each six-buck investment. Ergo: 2 for $18 one gets three curses, for $36 one gets six curses—or curse^2—and the really big spenders could launch 48 curses on the terrible twosome of New Jersey.

Let it be known that Ed Toner and I have yet to experience the usual plagues: boils, serpents, locusts, etc. etc. And it's a completely unfounded rumor that either of us had our backyard crop of Jersey tomatoes destroyed by a celestial rain of hail. Not true. In addition, I swear on my honor that I am not now, nor have I ever been, up to my buttocks in FROGS! If Seymour and Jack's sure-fire guaranteed curses, for any occasion, were cars, they would all be recalled—they just don't work. One can't find a more inferior service—it's a scam!

I can't say that I'm overjoyed at seeing my tax money going to Brookdale Community College, where full financial support is routinely given Seigler and Needle to aid them in hawking their terrible (and impotent) curses to their fellow religionists. I do not see it as a proper use of our tax money.

However, I haven't a scintilla of a doubt that Messrs. Seigler and Needle have the full support of their fellow Witches, Warlocks, Soothsayers and all the other Professors at our Medieval College and Coven here in New Jersey. And any attempt to change the curriculum, would only incite scores of toothless hags, on staff or doing post-graduate work, to take to the streets with broomsticks raised on high. And we can't have that, can we?

Perhaps the only way we could enhance the image of this tax-supported institution of higher learning, would be to add a course in natural medicine, where an African Witch Doctor could do medical consultations, while squatting in his on-campus thatched hut. For the standard price of one goat. He would be most impressive: decked out in beads and feathers, his face painted white (the African mask of the dead), wearing a splendid headdress of cow dung. One can well imagine the wondrous prognostications he might make after casting his collection of disgusting and revolting...bits...and pieces...of things...into the dust of the hut, to divine one's medical complaint. No doubt the New England Journal of Medicine eagerly awaits his first paper.

As taxpayers, we sustain Seigler and Needle on a well-defined intellectual plane at Brookdale; therefore, I see no reason why we shouldn't add a Witch Doctor to the Medieval brew—as a full and tenured professor—it could only enhance the prestige of Brookdale Community College.

NUMBER SEVEN

One would think that, with so many examples of past Holocaust numbers that simply don't add up, the Holocausters would be wary of introducing more numerical absurdities into contemporary times. Not true, the Holocaust numbers game gets wilder, and wilder, and wilder, with each passing year.

As in these very contemporary numbers: The West German Government now has more than five million—that's right, million—claims for compensation from Jewish "survivors" of the Holocaust. One would think that after 45 years that this is a truly amazing number of "survivors."

Why should one be satisfied with amazement, when one can be dumbfounded! According to the West German Government, most of the five million claims actually represent a single claim by a family of "survivors." If we assume a modest mean of three persons per claim, we could easily be dealing with fifteen million, or more, Jews who survived the Concentration Camps over 45 years ago. Or, according to the census of the World Jewish Congress, every Jew on the planet earth in 1939 spent the war in a Concentration Camp, and, most importantly, they are all alive and well today!

But wait, we've forgotten the fabulous six million Jews that died in these concentration camps....giving us a Holocaust number of 21 million Jews.

Of course, the fifteen million claim for compensation only reflects the survivors in the west, we have yet to hear from all the survivors in the east. Since the East German Government has finally been pressured into paying compensation to Jews, after having refused to do so for forty-five years, we must assume that there are at least another 15 million survivors in the east awaiting compensation.

Let me see now...that makes 36 million Jews in the terrible Concentration Camps during the war.

Just a moment! Surely, some of the survivors must have died during the forty-five years of this post-war period? If we assume a modest 4 million deaths, we now have an accurate Hollywood Holocaust number of forty million Jews crammed into the terrible Concentration Camps during the war.

Crowded, isn't it?

Mr. Schectman refers to the "hysterical claims" of Ed Toner and myself. Not true. The only hysteria in the Holocaust numbers game comes from Mr. Schectman's side, where anyone who can add and subtract is branded as "anti-Semitic," or a "fascist" by his hysterical mob.

Mr. Schectman need only sample some of the telephone calls that I've gotten from his cool and collected counterparts to understand where the hysteria really lies. Now, I've received ...screams shrieks...howls...bellows...belches (I think)...lots and lots of unintelligible gibberish...and some undefinable animal sounds that would make a dandy sound track for a horror movie.

Alas, Mr. Schectman, that's not hysteria you think you hear from us, it's unrestrained laughter. You guys really break us up with your silly numbers.

NUMBER EIGHT

Now, for the eighth and last number in our Holocaust numbers game. One could easily do a thick tome of these silly numbers. However, let me just recount the tale of the gassing victims whose names are now enshrined in the Yad Vashem Memorial Center in Tel-Aviv. Enshrined in a building that supposedly represents a stylized...GAS CHAMBER! Charming.

The Yad Vashem is now the only "gas chamber," stylized or otherwise, that is associated with the Holocaust; in that, all the other alleged gas chambers of Europe—on both sides of the Iron Curtain—have all been tested and proven frauds.

Before building their Jewish Gas Chamber, the keepers of the Yad Vashem sent out questionaires to all the Jewish organizations on the globe, asking them to have their members list the names of all the Jews that they know who were gassed, so that the names of these Jewish martyrs could be properly enshrined in the new Yad Vashem.

They got back lists of 2.5 million "gassed" Jews, whose names were then tearfully enshrined in the Yad Vashem.

Ya know, there are times when nothing seems to go right. When the Yad Vashem was forced to admit there were no "death camps" or "gas chambers" in all of Western Europe or Germany, it presented certain insoluble problems in the field of reason. In that, the Yad Vashem now had long lists of Jews who had been "gassed" in every one of the non-existent "gas chambers" of Western Europe and Germany...enshrined!....as MARTYRS! OY VEY!

Things got worse when scholars started finding the bodies of great numbers of "gassed" Jews buried in unlikely places like...Brooklyn, New York.

Even worse! Numbers of "gassed" Jews started turning up, alive and well, basting their "bods" on the beach at Miami—a traumatic experience that seems to have turned their hair...BLUE!

The greatest horrors were the numbers of Jews who turned up as tourists at the Yad Vashem...demanding to see their names! OY DOUBLE VEY! Not knowing of anyone who was "gassed," these Jews had generously contributed their own names to the cause, and now they wanted recognition.

Recently, the Archives Director at the Yad Vashem, Shmuel Krakowiski, stated that "over half of the 20,000 testimonies from Holocaust survivors on record at Yad Vashem are unreliable." In short, lies! Scholars consider the other 10,000 "testimonies" as much the same. One suspects that admitting to half a fraud at this time seemed the lesser of two evils, and the Yad Vashem will "drop the other shoe" some time in the future.

One would think that Archives Director Krakowiski would not be the least bit surprised at having his "testimonies" proven as lies. After all, the poor fellow has seen a great many Jews that he had certified as "gassed" and enshrined as martyrs, walk through the door demanding to see their names.

As always, there is an explanation by the Holocausters for all of these monumental assaults on reason. After all, these are the same folks who cried, WHOOPS!, we really meant to put those 238,000 Jews who were "gassed" in the "shower room" at Dachau, and wept over by tourists for all those years, into a brand new "gas chamber" that we just invented in Treblinka, Poland. And they did it with a straight face!

According to the "scholars" at the Yad Vashem, there is nothing strange about all those "gassed" Jews turning up in other locations...or alive...or even claiming to have been "gassed and cremated"!

Now get this one: It seems that all the Jews on the planet earth—every one of them—were "PSYCHOLOGICALLY GASSED"—and that's the same thing as being actually gassed!

One now begins to understand why the West German Government has from 5 to 15 million claims for compensation from "survivors." These Jews were psychological survivors, from psychological Concentration Camps, where many of them were psychologically gassed and even psychologically cremated. Poor devils. The West German Government should pay them in kind...with psychological compensation.

What next, "psychological whiplash"? Will we now have great numbers of Jews claiming they were psychologically hit in a psychological fender-bender and demanding monetary compensation for all of their psychological pain and suffering? Wait a minute! We've had that one already, haven't we?

Happy Holocaust numbers, Mr. Schectman. □

The Threat of Massive Immigration of Jews From Russia

The periodical Insight on the News has published a long article on emigration of Jews from Russia and its historic background from a Jewish point of view. The article, contained in the Insight issue of 21 May 1990, presents some statistics and projections which should be of grave concern to anyone who cares about the welfare of the Aryan component of the population of the United States.

On the cover of this issue of Insight is the statement that a million Jews may be leaving the Soviet Union, where their situation is alleged to have become difficult. The opening paragraph of the article states that "nobody really knows how many Jews live in the Soviet Union" and that "estimates range from 1.5 million to 4 million." By the way, these are rather remarkable statistics in view of the claims that six million Jews were victims of the "Holocaust."

From past experience it must be assumed that a very large percentage of the emigrating Jews will not make their permanent homes in the Jewish state in Palestine but will come to what has become their promised land, the United States, as if the six million or so members of this shrewd, generally detested race were not enough of a burden on Americans. Most Jews find greater economic opportunities when living in the midst of a prosperous host population than when living amongst other Jews.

In 1989 71,000 Jews emigrated from the U.S.S.R. William Korey, an official of B'nai B'rith, expects the emigration of Jews from the U.S.S.R. to reach close to 200,000 in 1990.

For many years the Soviet government loved its Jews so much that it would permit only very few to leave the boundaries of the state which was largely a creation of Jews. Now that seems to be changing, largely as a result of pressures applied to the U.S.S.R. by ZOG to let its Jews emigrate freely.

Jews played a leading part in the creation of the debilitating, genocidal hell for the Aryan population of Russia during its earlier years, as we can read in The International Jew / The World's Foremost Problem [available from Liberty Bell Publications; 4-volume-set, approx. 1,000 pages, $26 + $3.90 Postage], which was published as early as 1920-1922 under the sponsorship of the far-sighted Henry Ford, one of the most ingenious Americans who ever lived. The International Jew contains detailed statistical tables which portray the dominance of Jews in leading positions in the U.S.S.R. Americans concerned about the future of their country should do whatever they can to prevent the flood of Jewish immigrants being welcomed, indeed even solicited, by ZOG.

It was the Law in a Saner Time

The races of mankind have developed in biologically different ways for tens, if not hundreds of thousands of years. It has long been recognized that a biological mixing of the races (miscegenation) has produced undesirable results in the children thus procreated. Since there are profound, genetically transmitted differences in the human races, including differences in their mental abilities and temperaments, mixing the genes of different races can lead to incongruities, even, for example, in their skull structures. Psychologically, the children that result from miscegenation have the disadvantage of not being able to identify themselves with one group or another. By the way, designating the human races simply by color has the misleading tendency to imply that racial differences are only a matter of skin color. Terms such as Caucasian, Aryan or Afro-American are preferable.

Generations ago, there prevailed much greater lucidity and common sense with regard to the disadvantages of miscegenation. Many states of the United States enacted laws which forbade miscegenation. The legislature of Oklahoma, for example, passed such laws in 1910, the texts of which are given below and taken from page 1425 of the 1941 edition of the Oklahoma Statutes:

§ 12. Miscegenation prohibited.—The marriage of any person of African descent, as defined by the Constitution [1] of this State, to any person not of African descent, or the marriage of any person not of African descent to any person of African descent, shall be unlawful and is hereby prohibited within this State. BOOK REVIEW

John Bruce Campbell, The New American Man / A Call To Arms, The Press, Carmel, California, Copyright 1983, 1988; 6 + 244 pages, $10 + $1.50 for postage, available from Liberty Bell Publications.

Campbell served as a volunteer in the Rhodesian defense forces (1973-1974) and he offers many fascinating perspectives on the history of the twentieth century from the point of view of a military man. As a civilian he has long been employed by the petroleum industry. The earlier parts of the book are an examination of conspiratorial actions of people whom the subsumes under the terms, "The Group." The later parts of the book examine what action could be undertaken against a government which has become the enemy of Aryans. On page 221 he states his objective in writing the book: "This book is a basic instrument of patriotic revolution against the government. Its focus, however, is on the Group because The Group controls the government."

One of the most commendable historical perspectives in Campbell's book is his condemnation of Roosevelt & Co. for prolonging the Second World War by the demand for unconditional surrender and refusing to listen to Japanese requests for peace made as early as 1942. He quite appropriately observes (page 233): "The Group's demand for Unconditional Surrender against the Axis powers led to terrible and unnecessary bloodshed and destruction and to ensuing communist takeovers." There is hardly one sentence ever written that more effectively summarizes the conduct and results of the Second World War.

Even though Hitler was defeated in a war that had catastrophic results for Aryans, both physically and psychologically, to many Aryans Hitler and the swastika have become pro-Aryan symbols. Campbell's relatively few references to Hitler and National Socialism are not especially positive, although Hitler carried on a bitter struggle against communism, a system which Campbell detests.

Strangely, Campbell avoids the word "Aryan," although it is a convenient word with a respectable etymology and semantic development, as I pointed out in an essay entitled, "Should We Use the Word "Aryan?" (Liberty Bell, June 1984, pages 1-3.)

Campbell's attitudes toward Jews are summarized on page 155: "This book should not be taken as a diatribe against Jews but as a psychological defense against their assaults on us." Campbell gives considerable space to what he calls the "Holocaust Hoax" (p. 138), which he characterizes as the "greatest piece of black propaganda ever devised." He contrasts it to the reality of Operation Keelhaul, which he also mentions on pages 4, 8 and 39.

Campbell has a good deal to say about the effects of Christianity on the Aryan psyche. He refers to Christianity (page 143) as a "passive, demoralizing discipline" and refers to himself as a "heathen" (page 152). He expresses his belief that Christianity inhibits the Aryan struggle for survival.

The merits of Campbell's book are considerable, but it is, alas, marred by a number of factual errors, of which the following are examples: Leon Trotsky was not a "German chap," but rather a Jew (page 19). Much of the gasoline at Germany's disposal during the Second World War was distilled from natural petroleum from various sources (for example, Rumania) and for that reason it would be hard to justify the statement on page 28: "Hitler's entire war machine ran on leaded synthetic fuel...." On page 32 we are misinformed that the "majority of the [not "a"] German army was destroyed and/or captured at Stalingrad." On page 155 Campbell points out that the trial of Ernst Zündel in Canada demolished the myth of the "Holocaust" and continues: "Few of us know this because the Canadian legal system clamped a blackout on the historic trial, so devastating was the evidence presented." I was myself a witness at the Zündel trial in 1985 and I saw that Canadian newspapers and television were bringing extensive and even fair reports on the revealing proceedings in the Toronto courthouse.

Does Campbell intend the subtitle of his book to be taken literally? If so, we must pause to consider the present realities. If the Jews' media have so thoroughly stultified the majority of American voters that they will not elect pro-Aryan legislators and officials within the safety and secrecy of voting booths, is there any prospect that any meaningful number of them would take up arms for the purpose of physical acts against Zionist Occupation Government? Unless American men are motivated to take action against Z.O.G. tyranny by realizing and understanding their present plight and their unpromising future if present trends continue, most of them cannot be expected to act against the Z.O.G. even just by ballots, let alone by bullets. Campbell's book ("Written for men Only" page 97) explains why Aryan Americans should be angry for what was done to them in two world wars and is well worth reading as an explanation and manifestation of justified anger.

THE MESSIANIC AGE

by
Nicholas Carter

The artfully Christianized New Testament tells us that a brand new mystery religion called Christianity was suddenly thrust from the chaotic bowels of Palestine nearly 2000 years ago. This unusual cult—unique in the sense that the new salvation-deity called Jesus the Christ was the first Jewish savior-god in the history of Western Asia—appeared and developed in the space of one brief lifetime. Supposedly, the new Jewish-born Messiah, the Son rather than the Servant of the Jewish God, Yahweh, was a pre-existent God who became human via a virgin birth. He then performed great miracles; he was acclaimed by the multitudes; he preached a gospel of salvation—among other things; he was murdered; and then, miraculously, he rose from the grave and ascended to heaven.

What makes this Gentile-conceived plot totally impossible in any objective sense, is that it is inconceivable that a Galilean Jew would under any circumstance have believed himself to be a savior-god in the tradition of the Gentile mystery cults.* Under no conditions, however unique or remarkable, would he have accepted the validity of the virgin birth of a heathen Christ-child, or engaged in the obscene body and blood ceremonies; nor would he have allowed himself to be offered up as a scapegoat for the sins of not only Jews, but Gentiles as well.

The "anointed one" of the Christian salvation-sect can be described as a philosophically schizophrenic creation of Graeco-Roman theologians who were indifferent to, or ignorant of, deeply ingrained Jewish traditions. The Nazarene Jesus is portrayed as being pro-Jewish and anti-Jewish, pro-Law and anti-Law, liberal and reactionary. He is sufficiently a Jew not to contest the lawfulness of the function of the teacher of the Law, which is to "sit in Moses' seat" and explain and comment on the Law. He is enough of a racially exclusive Jew to forbid his disciples to declare to the Gentiles the coming of the kingdom of God. He never disparages the Sabbath, nor does he speak of doing away with it. And he regards himself as having a message for no one but the Jews—"Go nowhere among the Gentiles...but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

In another part of the New Testament forest, we find a Gentile Jesus liberalized almost to the point of radicalism through the stressing of the principles behind the Law along with a measure of freedom in its application of life. He represents views and attitudes that are less ascetic and less representative of a closed, secretive, exclusivistic outlook. At times, he is even ministered to by women, something no orthodox Judean of that day and time would have considered or allowed. He is portrayed as being more peaceful in spirit than militaristic, more concerned with moral and spiritual values than with the ceremonial aspects of sacred days, seasons, strict conformity to the solar calendar and ritual ablutions. And he manifests attitudes emphasizing the loving of one's enemies rather than hating them, along with an espousal of the Stoic belief in the brotherhood of all mankind as opposed to the practice of national and religious esclusivity found among the Jews.

Scarcely anything could be less indicative of the formalistic rigor of the strict Galilean Jew than the Gentile portrait of Jesus just drawn. Considering the fixed and complicated ritual of Palestinian Jews in which the Mishnah laid down no fewer than 39 principal classes of prohibitions, and in which the rabbis counted 248 classes of things to be done and 365 things forbidden, the possibility of a messianic-pretender or a radical religious cult espousing these two alien and conflicting lifestyles and then attempting to live them simultaneously is so far beyond the sunlight of reality that mere words cannot describe it. The principle of mysticism invariably leads to the combination of irreconcilable attributes, which are accepted nonetheless on the grounds of faith.

From the time the Habiru—the Semitic people who emerged from the wilderness beyond the Jordan river—became a One-God-centered nation ("The Lord our God, the Holy ONE of Israel; ONE, and no oneness like him..."), the Judaic emphasis was on God's creation of a special people to serve him, to proclaim his name and identity in the world, and to exhibit knowledge of him. They were the special people of Yahweh because all other nations had refused the wisdom offered by the Holy One. According to rabbinical teaching, the Ancient of Days had given nine of the ten measures of poverty to Babylon, nine of the ten measures of magic to Egypt, and nine of the ten measures of folly to Greece. Nine of the ten measures of wisdom he had given to Isreal.

Hand in hand with the struggle to make the Jews into an exclusive people with a single god belonging to Israel were the efforts of the prophets to prevent anyone—even high priestly rulers like Alexander Janneus—from changing, or compromising in any way, or introducing heathenish ideas from the outside world into, the rigid Jewish way of Life. Everything indicates that the Israelite/Judeans feared and opposed compromise—theological aristocracy, exclusivity, and nearly total tribal unity. For these reasons, Judaism could never have compromised—even to the smallest degree—with a heathen mystery cult.

The era that produced the New Messianism, which in turn led to Catholicism, was one in which the spirit of subjection was for the masses far more influential than self-reliance. Conditions were so primitive that men used scythes and sickles for mowing; their ploughs were of wood, rarely shod with iron; and threshing was done laboriously with the clumsy flail. Small, undersized oxen, hardly as large as modern calves, dragged the ploughs back and forth, barely breaking the surface of the earth. As for the misfortunes faced by the poor, the peasants were incapable of theorizing about the reasons for suffering or for "divine punishment." It was sufficient explanation of evil to say that "the anger of God was kindled."

Palestine during that chaotic age had more than its share of quacks, vagrants and messiah-pretenders, who endlessly prophesied that the crash and doom of the world was at hand. The less educated masses listened to their chatter and raving until their minds were reduced to a chronic state of fear and confusion. Along with the sick and suffering, the physically stunted or deformed, and the deaf, dumb and blind, there were abnormal mental conditions of every sort—a veritable goldmine of pathology for every messianic-pretender with hand-on experience in the field of abracadabra who could miraculously eliminate demonic possession, or awaken people who appeared to be dead, but who was never known to replace a wooden leg with the real thing.

Everywhere the cry for salvation was loud, persistent and universal as people sought deliverance from the burdens of grief and sorrow; from the oppressive tyranny of fate, the consciousness of guilt, the wasting of disease, and the tedium of life. Because our modern scientific attitude of mind was of course unknown, the supernatural realm was conceived to be far more important than the natural world. Most people tended to think of events as the result of the more or less capriciuous activities of spirits and demons. Thus, fancy, ritual, mysticism, unsound science, and the miraculous were commonplace. Rabbis, priests of the mystery cults, and messiah-pretenders regularly performed miracles such as exorcising satanic spirits and "magically" raising the dead. As late as the 5th century Augustine was declaring that in his own diocese of Hippo, 72 miracles, including five cases of restoration of life, occurred in the space of two years.

Everywhere human beings were plagued by demons. Man had no real privacy because every phase and form of life was ruled by them. They sat on thrones; they hovered around cradles; they caused all diseases, sickness and infirmities; they turned life into a living hell. The 2nd century theologian Justin Martyr was impressed with the demonology to the degree that he believed that the new Messiah had been made mortal to destroy demons. Indeed, this was a time marked by a state of great mental fermentation, the political agitation of centuries having reduced multitudes, especially in the East, to a condition bordering on actual hysteria. It was an age steeped in Oriental mythology, with the masses of ignorant people expecting the end of the world any day. Even mighty rulers weren't immune to superstition. Tiberius was the slave of astrologists; Domitian lived in fear of the fulfillment of Chaldean prophets; Aurelius surrounded himself with magicians.

I trust that the reader can begin to comprehend by now how difficult it is for the modern scholar to project himself into a day and time that is light years away from the 20th century; and how difficult it is to determine with some degree of certainty what actually happened more than 1900 years ago. We do not know for certain who killed President Kennedy a mere quarter of a century ago; and yet every priest and preacher in Christendom tells us that he knows exactly what happened during a primitive, superstitious and ancient age in which the masses were willing to accept any mystical or magical voice of revelation that offered to solve the mysteries of life and death.

The study of history reveals an intimate connection between crushing oppression and hopes of people for divine intervention. It was characteristic of Judaism in all of its manifestations that it looked to the future for the full realization of its hopes. Two great hopes characterized the religion of the Israelites in pre-Christian Palestine: the hope for the arrival of the Great Day of Yahweh and the powerful earthly king (the Davidic Messiah) who would usher in for them a period of national history; and the hope for the eventual salvation of all good and faithful Jews. Secure in the belief that they would be rescued from foreign rule, the Judeans saw the heathen strangers crushed and conquered, Israel consoled, and the Messianic Kingdom with its center in Jerusalem suddenly bursting upon the world. The Kingdom of God, or the sovereignty of Yah in the world, was to be a kingdom of Jews, a pure murim, or miracle, because their chronology led them to believe that that they were on the cusp of the 6th Millennium—the threshold of their long-awaited Golden Age.

Everywhere in Judea during that turbulent era, rabbis eagerly solved the riddle of redemption as they determined the exact hour of the Messiah's advent. Intricate calculations based on the writings of the prophets were authoritatively declared throughout the land, with some of them causing the migration of whole communities of people. In fact, a huge apocalyptic literature developed during the two eventful centuries leading to A.D. 1. In that of Enoch, the Messiah is described as a super-mundane, semi-divine person, as well as a "son of man" (meaning, perhaps, "son of Adam," since son referred only to succession or descent). In the Psalms of Solomon, he is described in the manner of the prevailing prophetic ideal: a man of the earth, of the seed of David.

The Sons of Israel all knew that before another century would pass, the glorious king commissioned by Yahweh would come to deliver the island of the innocent out of darkness, out of shadows, out of death. But whether the Coming One would come like a light and like thunder out of the East, or on clouds of glory, or riding on an ass, or whether he would rise from some ancient tomb, nobody knew. They knew only that he would come—and that all nations would then be the footstool of Israel.

Even though it was dangerous to speak of a King-Messiah or a political Messiah in the days of Roman rule, each visionary who arose could count on a following who would be ready to hail him as the long-awaited Coming One. Significantly, the Judeans were obsessed with the messianic concept to the point that, while Roman soldiers were actually preparing to fire the Temple, a self-proclaimed prophet could assemble large numbers of men, women and children in its courts and porches to await then and there a miraculous deliverance from heaven.

There was also a great spread of messianic ideas over the Gentile world during the first century preceding the Common Era, since neither ancient religion nor philosophy drew a hard-and-fast line between the divine and the human. Hence the widespread belief in the deliverer, or savior, in an incarnation of divine power in a human form on earth, in order to save and regenerate perishing humanity. Virgil's Messianic Eclogue reflected very clearly that state of the public mind. The Roman poet blended the ancient yearning of the East with Greek and Etruscan divination when he prophesied a savior who would descend upon earth as a divine child, wipe out the sins of the past and introduce the golden age. Among the Greeks, Plato had confidently declared that "We will wait for One, be it a god or a god-inspired man, to teach us our religious duties and to take the darkness from our eyes." Everywhere except in Israel people seemd to hunger for a truly DIVINE being in human form rather than a man born of man like the Davidic Messiah with the SPIRIT of divinity upon him. What commanded the allegiance of the mystery cultists was a son of a god by a daughter of earth; and she, on the analogy of many myths, and earthly Kore, a maiden made fruitful by the divine touch.* As the fruit of the marriage of earth with Heaven through the spring Sun and Rain, a Babe would be born who would then become King and save the world. All the savior-gods of Western Asia and beyond were created in that image—with the second god always being the son of the great god.

There was nothing unsual about the fact that many men became gods and many gods became men in the mythology of the ancient world. And it simply isn't coincidental that Gentile Christianity drew heavily on the mythology of the mystery cults. Many aspects in the life of the Jesus of the Gospel belonged to savior-gods all over Asia. The Egyptian Pharaoh of old was born a god and the son of a god. The Chronican Paschale revealed that the Egyptians deified a child-carrying virgin, and adored a child in the manger. As a typical tale of a god "who walked on earth unknown," the beloved hero Krishna was a perfect prototype of the Christ to come. The descent of the savior-god into the underworld as a representation of his symbolic death appeared in Babylonian and in Egyptian religion, with the ascension into the sky being the usual end to the mythical legends of the lives of the deliverers. Baptism preceded initiation into the mysteries of other cult-figures, Isis and Mithra, for example, and it was chosen as a similar symbol—"Die and become!"—by the Catholics. The sacrifice of the Eucharist, or love-feast, common to both East and West at the time, had its fullest significance when the god himself was the victim. In eating and assimilating the god, his worshipers were (and are) deemed to assimilate his virtues. The Catholic Eucharist has no other significance.

As indicated earlier, this convoluted transformation into Catholicism occurred later in the development of the theocratic system that eventually wreaked so much havoc within the Western world. It isn't beyond the realm of possibility that some of the Hellenic participants in the New Messianism began to see the value of a salvation-deity during the first century, perhaps during the latter decades. It must be noted, however, that most of the scholars and theologians involved in studying the origins of the faith have concluded that what I have termed the New Messianism was solely a product of orthodox Judaism. Typical of the comments to that effect are these: "The originators of Christianity stood wholly upon the ground of Judaism." "All the oldest Christian theology is Jewish." "Nothing indicates that Christians desired to break away from Judaism." "Christian origins can be traced directly back to Jewish origins."

*Nana, the virgin mother of Attis, conceived by putting a ripe almond or a pomegranate in her bosom. Zeus visited Persephone in the form of a serpent, and she bore him Dionysus. Poseidon, the god of the seas, was known for having impregnated women by whispering into their ears—the knowledge of which enabled Christians to solve their own celestial impregnation dilemma: "God spoke to an angel and the Virgin was impregnated through the ear..." Thus spake Augustine.

These conclusions are not only illogical, they are absurd. In particular, Jewish origins have absolutely nothing to do with Christian origins. One of the more remarkable and little known, or little realized, facts about the Christian conundrum is that the historical figures involved as philosophers, organizers, and teachers throughout much, if not all, of the 1st century, were Hellenic Jews-NOT orthodox Jews.

What, then, of the many Fathers of Catholicism whose names are etched within the annals of Gentile Christianity? Surprising as it may seem, they all came later: Justin Martyr, Ireneaus, Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, Polycarp, Melito and Ignatius of Antioch, in the 2nd century; Cyprian, Jerome and St. John Chrysostom in the 3rd; Augustine, Ambrose and the notable church historian Eusebius in the 4th. The most eminent Doctors of Catholicism were Augustine, Clement, Jerome and Gregory the Great, who served as Pope from A.D. 590 to 604.

To digress for a moment, Christians skilled in the art of revising history in order to disguise their motives, frequently employ the psychological phenomenon known as rationalization for the purpose of giving the absurd and the nonsensical a more relevant façade. Consider the repulsive, offensive, or just plain ridiculous passages in the "revealed" Word of God, for instance. In the language of apologetics they are simply "common bits of understanding at the time of writing," parts of the "earthen vessel," as it were, and not of the "divine treasure" of revelation. By carefully selecting the biblical passages that he wishes to be known as "revealed truth" and discarding the rest, the artful Christian subordinates reality to his whims.*

*Whom the Gods destroy they first tempt to deny reality.

One area of duplicitous selectivity involves the ominous components of the mystery religions. Non-Catholics cavalierly dismiss them as negative elements of Catholic paganism, because Protestantism "eliminated the pagan doctrines that had burdened the faith for so long" when it developed as the "true" faith—a judgement partially true and wholly misleading. The Eucharist, the rosary, holy water, relic worship, among other things, were discarded. Everything that remained, however, including the virgin birth, baptism, original sin, the concept of the savior-god, and the death and resurrection of the god, was just as heathenish as the elements eliminated.

The more scholarly rationalizers would have us believe that the anti-mind, anti-body philosophy, which ascetic Christendom found so alluring, was derived from the Gnostic sect. Not true. It was Augustine in the company of the Neoplatonists of the 4th century who forged the philosophic fabric that enabled Christianity to blend more thoroughly and more quickly with the Greco-Roman world—and with an assault on reason and human nature that eclipsed the primitive supernaturalism of the Israelites.

To the mystical Greek philosopher Plato, the "apparent" world of sense was more important than the "real" world of ideas. The material world, he declared, was only an imperfect appearance of true reality, a semi-real reflection or projection of it. Any investigation of nature was to be disdained and avoided. "We must be free of the body," preached Plato, "and use the eye of the soul alone to behold the actual realities." This blind faith in supernatural absolutes was the element of Academic philosophy that by way of Neoplatonism was transmitted to the early Catholic Church. Contempt for the world of matter, belief in the liberation of the soul through asceticism and mystic revelation, the subordination of reason to faith, and a blueprint for turning human beings into beehive drones, made this philosophy congenial to the mystics who were building the new religion.

What was Gnosticism? "It drew into itself elements from many sources, Babylonian, Persian, Phrygian, Syrian, Egyptian, Greek. It had affinities with the Babylonian dualism of an upper and a lower world, with the Persian dualism of light and darkness, with the Greek dualism Of matter and spirit," says J.E. Carpenter. By the by, the Christians did "borrow" the doctrine of atonement from the Gnostics.

Unable to completely ignore his Greek heritage, Plato exhibited a certain respect for reason, a respect which was implicit in Greek philosophy; but the worst elements of Plato, not the best, came to dominate Christianity and the Western world.

Turning once again to the subject of orthodox Jewry, it is essential to be equally clear in our minds about who they were and what they taught. Intense psychological conditioning along national-religious lines motivates a definiteness of purpose, persistence and a burning desire for exclusivity. To the Israelites, Yahweh was their God alone; they were his ONLY chosen people. To them their religious truth was unique in all the world; their Torah was without parallel; their ethics could not be equaled in any other nation. Most significant of all is the fact that the devout Sons of Israel were willing to engage in a civil war for the purpose of maintaining their exclusivity, their rigid desert ways, and their contemptuous outlook for all heathen nations. For these distinct and irrefutable reasons, orthodox Judaism did not play an active rôle in the origins of the New Messianism.

And that brings us to one of the more provocative questions in this study: Who were those Hellenized Jews who were involved in developing, organizing and teaching an ethical/religious philosophy during the first century?

Logically, they were the descendants of the Letzim who led the movement to Hellenize Israel, which provoked in turn the disastrous War of Independence known as the Maccabaean War. Approximately 150 years following that conflict, the descendants of the radical Letzim were established in numerous Greek-tinctured communities located primarily within the boundaries of Eastern North Africa and Southwest Asia bordering on the Mediterranean: Alexandria in Northern Egypt, Antioch in Southern Turkey, Thessalonica and Athens in Greece, Caesarea in Southern Palestine, Damascus the capitol of Syria, the Ionian Greek city of Ephesus, Corinth in Peloponnesus, Tarsus in Asia Minor, Philippi in Macedonia, the Phoenician port of Tyre, and the Greek colony of Cyrene.

These are a few of the important cities that Stephen and Saul may have visited during their missionary travels.

Greek thought was the supreme factor that influenced the Letzim to settle in neighboring countries where Hellenism was prominent. While an attitude of intolerant prejudice was characteristic of Palestinian Jews, the Judeans of this minor dispersion regarded the larger world with a tolerance that permitted an association with their Gentile neighbors. In the light of this cultural indoctrination, it is well within the periphery of possibility that the descendants of the original Letzim were responsible for initiating a movement that was geared to converting both Gentiles and Jews to a theological way of life devoid of despairing visionaries, extreme moralists and angry prophets—the first time in their history, perhaps, that some of the Habiru had attempted to blend their hopes and aspirations with the Gentile ethics in a canonical milieu.

The three most important names in that movement—the only names that we can be reasonably sure of—are Philo, Stephen and Saul of Tarsus.

HISTORICAL COMMENTARY

CUMONT, FRANZ: "To the sophisticated Gentile tourist, who with his own eyes had looked upon the Rome of marble left behind by Augustus, the chaster beauties of Athens, the strange enclosure at Baalbek with its stones of unparalleled size, and the huge agglomeration of gloomy temples at Egyptian Thebes, the little Jewish shrine (the Temple) must have appeared poor and even tawdry."

FRAZER, JAMES GEORGE: "Man has created gods in his own likeness and being himself mortal he has naturally supposed his creatures to be in the same predicament."

GUIGNEBERT, CHARLES: "[In the age of Messianism] people were then generally incapable of distinguishing a subjective experience, an hallucination or even a dream from a really objective experience... in the history of religious enthusiasm nothing appears more contagious than visions."

JACKSON, F. & LAKE, K: "There is no proof outside of the Gospels that any city of Nazareth existed in the time of Jesus."

JEFFERSON, THOMAS: "The day will come when the mystical generation of Jesus, by the Supreme Being as his Father in the womb of a virgin, will be classed with the fable of the generation of Minerva in the brain of Jupiter."

LATOURETTE, K.S.: "In art again the debt of Christianity to pagan cults is certain. There can be little doubt that representations of Mithras shooting at the rock or Mithras mounting the chariot of the sun directly influenced Christian representations of Moses at Horeb or the ascent of Elijah...pagan prototypes of the Christian basilica."

McCOWN, CHARLTON C.: "When once it comes to be recognized that almost every heathen shrine boasted its miracles, that stories of miraculous healings were told of almost every heathen deity and semidivine hero, and also that the Jewish rabbis worked miracles by calling upon divine aid...the problem of the Gospel miracles is subjected to a new illumination."

REINACH, S.: "In the days of her infancy...Christianity borrowed much from the rivals over which she was in the long run to reign supreme...When a heathen temple was taken over by the Christians it was frequently dedicated to some saint, who was honored with precisely the same rites and prerogatives as had been given to the old god."

RHYS, JOCELYN: "The idea of a man-god born of a virgin was conceived so early in the history of mankind that it was carried into America in that remote age when men first migrated into that continent."

ROBERTSON, J.M.: "The Christian cult adopted the very terms of the heathen practice, and its initiates were called mystae, like those of all rival religions."

SCHMIDT, N.: "It was the transformation of the coming Messiah into a god that made the Christ cult possible."

SCHWEITZER, ALBERT: "The messiaship of Jesus, as we find it in the Gospels, is a product of early Christian theologoy correcting history according to its own conceptions."

SMITH, G.: "I believe the legend of Jesus was made by many minds working under a great religious impulse...Jesus has been made the receptacle into which every theologian pours his own ideas."

SCHECHTER, SOLOMON: "The student of the Talmud finds that such marvels as predicting the future, reviving the dead, casting out demons, crossing rivers dry-shod, curing the sick by a touch or prayer, were the order of the day, and performed by scores of rabbis."

THE LATE GREAT BOOK: THE BIBLE
AN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN AND BIBLICAL ORIGINS.

Nicholas Carter feels that it is time for us to sit down and do what many Christians rarely do: Study the Holy Bible. In doing so, we may discover whether or not the Bible is indeed "Holy" and the "Word of God." In strict biblical order, the author methodically, and scathingly, examines the various claims made in the "Holy Book" and shows how many of them bear no relationship to reality whatsoever. ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

THE STOLEN CHURCH

In Liberty Bell, September 1989, pp. 6-9, I reported on a booklet by Father Juan Martínez, one of the few priests who are striving to maintain the Roman Catholic religion, which has been abandoned and repudiated by the official Roman Catholic Church, headed by a spurious pope in Rome. The booklet that I reviewed was in Spanish, but I have since learned that Father Martínez has publications in English, which may be obtained from him (313 South Seventeenth Street, Frederick, Oklahoma).

In that article I referred obiter to the highly important book, La nueva Iglesia Montiniana, by the Reverend Dr. Joaquin Sáenz y Arriaga, and to an English translation of it which, so far as I know, was never completed. I was quickly informed by the American artist, Margaret Stuki, whom I have mentioned before in these pages, and Jane's Book Service of Reno, Nevada, that there was in existence an adequate English translation of which I had not before heard. I was soon given a copy.

The New Montinian Church was translated by Edgar A. Lucidi, M.D., from the second edition of Father Sáenz's work (1972), and published by him, 410 West Central Avenue, #101, Brea, California (92621), in a limited edition of two thousand copies in 1985. It may be obtained from him, $25.00 + $3.00 postage, or, at the same price, from Ichthys Books, P.O. Box 1701, Glenwood Springs, Colorado (81602).

It is a volume of 618 pages, handsomely printed and bound by the Lakeside Press. The long and laborious work of making a smooth and accurate translation, and the expense of having it printed by a famous press in so finished a form,[1] attest Dr. Lucidi's extraordinary devotion.

1. There are a very few typographical errors. The press, despite its high reputation, inserted two blank pages between pages 421 and 422.

The last pope in Rome who was a Roman Catholic by religion was Pius XII (Eugenio Pacelli), who died in 1958.[2]

He was succeeded by his worst blunder, Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli, whom he made a Cardinal in 1953, and who took the name of Johannes XXIII.[3]

There can be no doubt but that Johannes XXIII was not a Roman Catholic. He was a revolutionary conspirator who, having by covert intrigues and mysterious influences become a pope only five years after he was made a cardinal, renounced the religion of which he had become the titular head and worked zealously to destroy it, replacing it with the Marxian Reformation. Whether he believed in the Marxian religion may be doubted; as I have often observed in these pages, Marxists who are intelligent enough to reach positions of power and use the superstition to promote there own ends, are too intelligent to believe their own propaganda and have only contempt for their tools, the asses who have faith in it.

Having usurped the Papal See, Roncalli composed encyclicals to convert the church to the "social gospel" while pretending to disapprove of Communism; he prepared for the coming coup d'état by practically doubling the number of cardinals to pack the College of Cardinals with his own confederates and stooges; and he inaugurated the fraud called

2. He was Papal Secretary of State until he became Pontifex Maximus in 1939 to hold that office during an extremely difficult period of history. He made mistakes, but none that can be shown to have been malicious, and his doctrinal orthodoxy cannot be fairly questioned. Oddly enough, he is now adversely criticized, not for, e.g., having permitted the Vatican to serve as a hideout for British and American spies and for traitors conspiring against the government of Italy, such as the notorious De Gaspari, but for not having protested the "Holocaust," which the Jews had not yet invented!

3. The official names of Pontifices Maximi are always Latin, but are often translated in various vernaculars. Thus this pope was called John in English, Jean in French, Juan in Spanish, João in Portuguese, Giovanni in Italian, Johann in German, and probably Ivan in Russian. — The numbering of the popes who assumed this name is sadly confused; for the official explanation, see the Annuario Pontificio for any year before 1953. Some historians of the Roman See offer differing explanations.

"ecumenical religion" by embracing all Protestant (i.e., anti-Roman) sects and even religions antithetical to all forms of Christianity, such as the Japanese Shinto. Coöperation between such diverse religions is possible only though an understanding that they are all working the same racket and practicing on the gullibility of the masses they exploit. The necessary premise of "Ecumenism" is that all the diverse religions are equally entitled to respect because they are all equally false.

To put the matter bluntly, Roncalli simply stole the Papacy from the Roman Catholics, whom he then proceeded to evict for what had been their own church.

If you are interested in the theological details, you will find them abundantly exhibited and documented in the present book, which is indispensable to everyone who wishes to trace the history of Catholicism in our time.

It would be an abuse of my readers' patience to discuss, even summarily, the theology at issue, but I must note that the character and purpose of Roncalli are adequately and brilliantly portrayed on pages 151-154 of the present volume, which reprint an item in the Masonic Bulletin of the Supreme Council of Masons of the highest degree (33°).

The writer, who, of course, is not a Christian and preconises the Judaized deism of a "Supreme Architect of the Universe," can see clearly and estimate objectively the work of Johannes XXIII, which he lauds and then epitomizes by imagining a dialogue between that pontiff and the ghost of Robespierre, the bloodiest of the bloody beasts of the French Revolution. The Masonic author permits Robespierre to boast that he killed off atheists, but naturally says nothing about the flood of the best blood in France that slaked that monster's murderous mania. Robespierre describes his obscene Fête de l'Être Suprême and its vaporous (and probably hypocritical) deism, which Roncalli finds to be his own faith. The pope and the ghost thus discover that their hearts beat as one, and we are left with the conclusion that John XXIII is a kind of Robespierre redivivus. The conclusion, which pleases the Masonic writer, whose "Supreme Architect" is as bloodthirsty as old Yahweh, is spiritually correct.

It is true that Roncalli's dirty work was continued and carried to the planned conclusion by Montini, whom John made a Cardinal in almost his first exercise of his ill-won power, but it was Roncalli who initiated everything that now disgraces the church that has its headquarters in Rome. One may wonder, therefore, why Father Dr. Sáenz chose 'Montinian' instead of 'Roncallian' as a name for the church that has replaced the Roman Catholic church in Rome. I think he chose Montini's name correctly.

In the early 1950s, my scholarly interests made me acquainted with some members of the Roman hierarchy, including a Cardinal and several men close to him. The ecclesiastics knew, of course, that I was not a Christian, so our conversations were naturally confined to matters of scholarship, but once in after-dinner conversation I ventured to mention to two of them a Communist attempt to "democratize" the Church of which I happened to know the details[4]; it had failed utterly, and I regarded that as proof of the monolithic solidarity and probable perpetuity of the Roman Church.

The two ecclesiastics were doubtful, and, perhaps willing to speak more freely to a scholarly atheist than to a votary of any religion, expressed grave misgivings concerning the future of the Church. Their apprehensions were centered, not on Roncalli, who was already a Cardinal, but on Montini, who was then only about to be made Archbishop of Milan and thus the most recently appointed of the very many archbishops in the Church. They did not go into details, but they evidently regarded Montini, then a relatively obscure figure, as a formidably ruthless and clever enemy of the Church within which he had lodged himself. They may have known, but did not tell me, that he was a Jew and secretly a Mason, and I must confess that I was then inclined to regard their apprehensions as merely evidence of another internal feud in a church in whose solidarity I continued to believe until the Second Vatican Council[5] made the revolution and its capture of the official church apparent to everyone.

An effort to prevent the theft of the Church was made by a group of ranking ecclesiastics, whose collective work was published under the name of "Maurice Pinay" and distributed to all members of the Council in a futile effort to prevent what had already been decided by Roncalli's fellow conspirators and their appanage of other ecclesiastics who had been hired for the occasion. The original was written in Italian, the official language of communication within the Church, Latin being reserved for encyclicals and other documents of great solemnity. It was translated into German, French, and Spanish. I have only the Spanish translation, Complot contra la Iglesia (Caracas [Venezuela], 1964).[6]

This book traces the Jews' efforts through the centuries to capture the Roman Church, and obviously implies that another attempt will be made at the Council. The authors, needless to say, write as Roman Catholics, and an impartial historian will interpret many of the events they mention quite differently, but they were absolutely right about what was portended when they wrote. The Council simply converted what had been the Catholic Church into a Judaeo-Communist church, but dishonestly retained the old name.

It is now believed that the present Pope will be succeeded by a Jew who openly avers that he practices his Jewish religion and regards Christianity and specifically what he calls Roman Catholicism as merely an extension of Judaism to obedient goyim.[7] That will complete the work of the Council.

5. The First Council took place in 1869-1870, and, of course, has nothing to do with the activities of the Second.

6. I do not have a list of the reprints in various Spanish-speaking countries. There is an awkward and defective English translation, evidently made partly from the German and partly from the Spanish translation, The Plot Against the Church, which may be obtained from Omni Publications, P.O. Box 900566, Palmdale, California; clothbound, $20.00 + $1.50 postage.

7. On this slippery fakir, see Liberty Bell, May 1987, pp. 6-14.

As Paulus VI, Montini had total control of the property and priests of the Roman Catholic Church he had overthrown, and it was only spite that made him arbitrarily disqualify and exile some twenty-five Cardinals left over from the old régime on the pretext that they were old men. He prepared for the continuance of the new religion by making Karol Wojtyia a Cardinal in 1967.

His immediate successor was Albino Luciani, who took the name Johannes Paulus and was Pope for thirty-four days, until his sudden and mysterious death. It is likely that he was murdered to make way for Wojtyia,[8] who impudently called himself Johannes Paulus II, and is now running the Judaeo-Communist Church from Rome when he is not globe-trotting to incite subversion in some still peaceful nation, such as Chile, or to make grandstand appearances to promote his imposture on ignorant masses.

The Roman Catholic Church, based on a premise that human beings were equipped with immortal souls, was primarily concerned with the life after death that would follow man's brief existence in this world. The Montinian Church is really concerned only with the present world, although, to conceal the take-over and befuddle its victims, it occasionally talks about a life after death and a god whom it designates by the old names but is obviously the mythical "Architect of the Universe," who can be fitted neatly into any religion, including ju-ju (often called voodoo). There is thus a formal, but unimportant, difference between the Montinian cult and the Marxist religion, which, for a long time, used a profession of atheism as sucker-bait to enlist educated men who rejected belief in supernatural beings.[9]

8. See David Yallop, In God's Name (New York, Bantam, 1985); cf. Liberty Bell, June 1985, pp. 5-7.

9. It is neatly ironic that, according to Professor Alexander Krasnikov of the Moscow State University, as reported in Christian News, 10 September, atheists are now the victims of adverse discrimination and of attacks in the official Communist press of Soviet Russia, and may eventually be persecuted. The various Christian churches in Russia and the Moslem sects are thus indirectly given encouragement to compete with each other, and it seems likely that Gorbachev intends to delude his subjects with ecumenical hokum, thus confirming the rumor that he and the present pope agreed to amalgamate forces at their recent conference.

The formal difference appeared in the Communist Manifesto that was issued by the assembly of professedly Roman Catholic Bishops of North America in 1985, which contained the usual hypocritical gabble about "the poor" and "social justice" that is always used to incite turmoil and revolution, but the difference was ignored by the numerous priests in Central and South America who frankly proclaim themselves Marxists and openly labor to incite chaos and civil war.

Father Sáenz was naturally concerned about the work of the Montinian Church in Mexico[10] and all countries south of it. You may not be interested in theology, but you should be interested in the large part of the present volume devoted to Montinian subversion of society and civilization in what is called "Latin America."

What is happening in the larger part of the Western Hemisphere should directly concern us, and we should not suffer ourselves to be confused by the revolutionary priests' pretense that they lament the consequences of what they have done, while continuing to prepare the same consequences elsewhere. You must realize that the turmoil and bloodshed in El Salvador and Nicaragua are precisely what those holy men intended to promote, and that their success in promoting it gives them a joyous satisfaction which they deem it prudent to conceal. That they have not succeeded as yet in producing their "social justice" in other countries is probably to be attributed to the need of the Jews to maintain a semblance of order in countries, such as Colombia and Bolivia, which produce cocaine to enrich Israel.

10. When Mexico becomes a Communist state, like Cuba, Americans cannot pretend to be surprised. I have on my shelf at least ten books by civilized Mexicans who emphatically warn us of what is happening in Mexico. I can mention here only two typical volumes: Alberto Ortiz, Wall Street, el Kremlin de América (Istacalco, D.F., Editorial Tradición, 1984) and "Alby O Alby," Yo acuso (Guadalajara, Jalisco, Editorial Saeta, 1985).

Although Father Sáenz is prevented by his religion from recognizing the reality of race, he does notice the revolutionary exaltation of aboriginal "cultures" in all countries of "Latin America," and the systematic denigration of Spanish civilization. (See especially pp. 93-94). He sees that this can lead only to the expulsion or eradication of the White (Hispanic) minorities in each country, the part of the population that is civilized and capable of civilization.[11]

The more intelligent Montinians doubtless know that there will be no place for Aryans in the Jews' One World, which they are laboring to create.

11. Excluding Argentina, Uruguay, and Costa Rica, the percentage of White inhabitants in the Spanish-speaking countries, generously estimated, varies from 1% in Honduras to 30% in Chile. The latest available statistics credited El Salvador with 11% and Nicaragua with 17% of Whites, but a survey today would probably show a great decrease in the number of Whites in both countries. The greater part of the population of each country consists of mongrels, almost all of them mestizos (e.g., 90% in Honduras, 78% in El Salvador, 65% in Chile); in some of the hybrids the Spanish blood may be predominant, at least temporarily, but their number is unknown. The genetics and abilities of the various Indian tribes whose genes appear in the mestizos varied greatly and hence there are important differences between the hybrids, not only from country to country, but within a given country (e.g., Chile).

The American Civil War And The War Against Germany In 1939-1945

Some Noteworthy Parallels

By
Charles E. Weber

During 23-27 September 1990 The Public Broadcasting System (PBS) transmitted an eleven-hour series on the American Civil War of 1861-1865. There seems to have been a considerable interest in the series and we understand that it will be rebroadcast several months from now. The series was well documented and of considerable merit with regard to filming technique. To give an appearance of balance, a Caucasian author with a strong southern accent was often used as a commentator, while a Negress presented as an "historian" was rather frequently to be seen on the screen. There were a good many sequences which dealt with the rôle of Negroes in the Union armies, probably given a disproportionate amount of attention. A sensitive, patriotic American must have found the film sobering or even depressing, for it showed clearly the stark tragedy of the war, both in terms of blood and treasure. Much time was devoted to the suffering of the wounded and even to the medical techniques of that time used in their care. Many of the illustrations, largely derived from photographs, could be described as depressingly gruesome, but that was the reality of war which was quite properly included.

The greatest lack of balance in the series was a result not of what was shown but rather the absence of a treatment of the postwar period, notably the absence of detail of the "Reconstruction" which followed the war, a kind of continuance of the war by other than military means for a decade or so after 1865, a topic effectively and dramatically presented in one of the greatest of all American Films, The Birth of a Nation (1915)[Available on VHS video cassette from Liberty Bell Publications]. This film made such an effective use of the motion picture techniques of its time that it is still fascinating viewing for anyone with even a passing interest in the aftermath of the most costly war in American history, a war that involved a greater loss of military personnel than all of the other wars fought by the United States combined, a war fought when the population of the country was far smaller than that in 1917 or 1941. To have given a real balance, PBS should have followed the eleven-hour series with a showing of The Birth of a Nation.

In spite of the depressing nature of the series, I viewed it carefully. My paternal grandfather, who was born in Baden and migrated to this country as a boy, was a member of the 57th Ohio Volunteer Regiment and was wounded at the battle of Kennesaw Mountain west of Atlanta in 1864. My maternal grandmother, born in 1853, was terrorized by Morgan's raiders into Brown County, Ohio. As a participant in the Second World War and a student of its history, I could not avoid noting the rather many parallels between the American Civil War and the Second World War, at least in the case of its European phase.

Both the Civil War and the Second World War persist in being active psychological factors in the American mind (see our Bulletin 19). The terrible destruction of the Civil War and the sadistic "Reconstruction" which followed it are still a psychological reality for Americans one and one-quarter centuries after 1865, particularly for Americans who grew up in the former Confederate States, even though there were some attempts at reconciliation during the 1920s and 1930s, as the PBS series showed, and even though the last of the veterans of the Civil War have been dead for nearly a half century. The awareness of the Second World War is kept alive in the American mind, not only because a large portion of its veterans are still alive, but because various aspects of the war, notably the sufferings, real or imagined, of the Jews in Europe, are constantly being employed for the attainment of various objectives. The state of Illinois has even enacted legislation that provides for courses in public schools that deal with that particular aspect of the war, as if the suffering of hundreds of millions of Europeans and hundreds of thousands of American soldiers were of relatively little importance.

Several wars fought by the United States were supposedly fought for the benefit of non-Aryans. This is true of both the Civil War and the Second World War, fought for Negroes in the case of the former, for Jews in the case of the latter. At least two other major wars fought by the United States were supposedly fought to defend non-Aryan countries, namely those fought in Korea and Vietnam. Considerable gains were made by the races for which the Civil War and the war against Germany were fought at the cost of huge amount of good Aryan blood. The need to rationalize psychologically the costs of these wars and the cruel treatment of brother peoples during and after them has been of immeasurable social, economic and psychological advantage to both Negroes and Jews. The change of status and increase of power of Jews since 1945 sometimes seems beyond belief. Whatever wrongs Jews might commit are now countered by mention of real or imagined Jewish suffering during the Second War and charges of "anti-Semitism" whenever the slightest protests are made.

Economic envy seems to have been an important factor in the causation of both wars, the envy of New England abolitionists of the wealth of Southern plantation owners and British envy of the economic success of National Socialist Germany.

In an ethnic sense, both the European phase of the Second World War and the Civil War might well be described as fratricidal or even racially suicidal. Germany, England and the United States had populations that were largely Germanic and Celtic. (Some localities in Germany still bear Celtic names.)

Neither the Civil War nor the American participation in the war against Germany (which had started as a naval war quite some time before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor; see our Bulletin 29) were necessary or beneficial for Aryan nations. Without the Civil War the Union and the Confederacy could have lived in peace, with customs and monetary unions that would have incurred no economic disadvantages to the two countries. Southern states had a right to withdraw from the Union if they so desired. About 20 years ago I walked through the huge capitol building in Austin, Texas and I noticed a display on a wall which contained documents demonstrating that Texas had a legal right to withdraw from the Union. Several years ago I was again in the capitol building in Austin but could not find the display.

During the Civil War the Confederate States made attempts to negotiate peace with the Union, just as German leaders attempted to negotiate a peace with England, culminating in the famous flight of Rudolf Hess to Scotland on 10 May 1941 after German intelligence became aware of Stalin's military preparations for an advance into western Europe. Finally, in an address to National Socialist party leaders in November 1941, Hitler declared that he had ceased his attempts to negotiate peace because they would only be taken as a sign of weakness.

In general, Lincoln's conduct of the war was uncompromising toward the Confederacy and it must be assumed that he knew very well about the conduct of his troops during Sherman's March to the Sea (15 November 1864 ff.). At the Hampton Roads Conference on 3 February 1865 Lincoln demanded, in effect, the unconditional surender of the Confederacy, just as unconditional surrender was demanded of the Anticomintern powers by Roosevelt and Churchill in January 1943, an irresponsible act that no doubt prolonged the war and made it more costly to both sides. One can hardly escape the impression that Roosevelt and Churchill, as well as Lincoln, derived considerable personal gratification from their rôles as wartime leaders and that they were not eager to end their rôles as such. (For a penetrating analysis of Lincoln's personal motivations and conduct of the war, see the article by Sam Dickson, "Shattering the Icon of Abraham Lincoln," Journal of Historical Review, Fall, 1986, pages 319-344.)

Both the Confederacy and Germany attempted to finance their war efforts on the basis of fiat money. The Confederacy struck 962,633 silver half dollars in the New Orleans mint in 1861, but with federal dies. These soon disappeared from circulation and paper notes were issued as substitutes. A lack of small coins caused people of both sides to use postage stamps for small change. At the end of the war the huge issues of Confederate paper money and bonds became worthless. (See Arlie R. Slabough, Confederate States Paper Money, Racine, 1958.) The Reichsmark sank to such low levels of value that a package of cigarettes brought over 100 Reichsmark on the black market before the Deutsche Mark was finally introduced in June 1948, which the Soviet Union used as a pretext to start the blockade of Berlin. (For details, see Bulletins 44 and 45.)

Both the Confederacy and Germany made attempts against overwhelming odds to change the course of the war by the introduction of radically new types of weapons. The Confederacy attempted to break the Union blockade with ironclad naval vessels, while Germany pinned hopes on the development of ballistic rockets called Vergeltungswaffen (retribution weapons). Experience with these rockets helped to put Americans on the moon exactly 25 years later to the day after the attempted assassination of Adolf Hitler on 20 July 1944. In both wars blockades played important rôles. Both the Confederacy and Germany had decidedly inferior naval forces at the outset of the war. A scarcity of food played an important rôle in the defeat of both the CSA and Germany.

The last desperate counteroffensive by Germany took place under the command of Field Marshal von Rundstedt (the "Battle of the Bulge") in December 1944. This counteroffensive had some parallels to the desperate and daring attempt of General Hood to revive Confederate fortunes by attacking Sherman's rear late in 1864, almost eighty years earlier to the day.

There are also some parallels in the treatment of prisoners of war. Conditions under which prisoners of war were confined both in the Confederacy and the Union were often terrible and the number of deaths in the prisons was considerable, especially from dysentery. (See Mark Weber, "The Civil War Concentration Camps," Journal of Historical Review, Summer 1981, pages 137-153.) In the final phases of the Second World War a lack of food, medication and the opportunity to transport them led to rampant epidemics, especially of typhus, in the German concentration camps. In both wars disease and malnutrition took heavy tolls. However, nearly all American soldiers taken prisoner by German forces survived the war (in contrast to those taken by the Japanese), but after the war huge numbers of German prisoners died in American prison camps as a result of unnecessarily bad conditions, as described in James Bacque's important book, Other Losses (Toronto, 1989), which holds Eisenhower responsible for the deaths of hundreds of thousands of German prisoners.

After some initial victories both the CSA and Germany fought largely defensive actions in order to retain their territories. Both wars might be described as wars of attrition after the initial phases. Their populations were far smaller than those of their adversaries.

The wanton destruction of Southern estates and cities, especially in Georgia, without any military objectives has a striking parallel with the destruction of Dresden in February 1945 with an enormous loss of life which has never been ascertained with absolute certainty because the city was full of civilians who had fled the terror of the Red forces advancing into East Prussia and Silesia. Atlanta was set on fire even after it was captured (September 1864). The final phases of the two wars were separated by eighty years and by the end of the wars the Confederate and German governments retained only remnants of the territories which they had held. The final defeats of the Confederacy and Germany took place in springtime.

After both the Civil War and the Second World War the victorious powers attempted to bring about changes in the thinking and way of life of the defeated populations, namely by reconstruction after the Civil War and by "reëducation" and "Denazification" after the Second World War.

Following the Second World War the American government abandoned legal principles honored in Europe since ancient times and embodied in the U.S. Constitution (e.g., nulla poena sine lege) in order to collaborate with the Soviet government in the show trials in Nuremberg. On trial were 23 leading figures of the defeated German government, of whom 10 were hanged in 1946. To his eternal credit, Senator Robert Taft of Ohio protested against these trials. After the Civil War Jefferson Davis was imprisoned and the commandant of the Anderson prison was hanged on 10 November 1865. (For details, see the January-February 1989 issue of Confederate Veteran, pages 22-31, "The Trial of Henry Wirz: A National disgrace." Address of Confederate Veteran: 8506 Braesdale, Houston, Texas 77071.)

We referred above to economic envy as a causative factor in both the Civil War and the Second World War. Postwar behavior of the victors had a strong tendency to confirm the importance of the economic factor. In the article by Sam Dickson to which we referred above, he points out (Journal of Historical Review, VII, 3, page 330) the exploitation of the Southern states by means of tariffs unfavorable to the South, which were continued for almost eighty years after the war. Likewise, the economic objectives of the war against Germany were demonstrated by postwar Allied policies. German goods were kept off world markets by dismantling factories (continued for about five years) and by causing a considerable paralysis of the German economy by delaying a currency reform (see Bulletin 45). The Deutsche Mark did not replace the Reichsmark until June 1948.

The Confederate war effort was essentially financed by fiat money. This fifty-cent note was dated 17 February 1864. Note the inscription: "Two Years after the Ratification of a Treaty of Peace between the Confederate States and the United States The Confederate States of America will pay FIFTY CENTS to bearer." The portray is that of Jefferson Davis.

FOR MY LEGIONARIES. The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Cornelu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $8.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. DEATH BY DIESEL

by Robert Frens

It is not my intent to "prove" anything to anyone. Proving some notion to another person is merely an exercise in the art of convincing as any snake-oil salesman or politician knows. In most cases, to be convinced of something is to be transported into the realm of belief. Some people refuse to believe what their eyes and ears tell them (the Warner syndrome). Others believe only that which appears on a signed affidavit (the Daley syndrome). Our government and courts are run by those that evidence both. Most of us will believe any sort of nonsense as long as it is accompanied by sufficient tearfulness and sobriety.

If one criticizes a Jew, he is automatically classified as an "anti-Semite". If one criticizes a "Revisionist," he is usually classified as an enemy of Revisionism and thereby becomes an "anti-anti-Semite". In both camps, the same sort of mental set exists and this commonality is perhaps the reason that they have so much fun when they get together. It also explains why those with distinctive personalities, such as Michael Hoffman, can easily be ostracized irrespective of the logic or truthfulness of their utterances. Ernst Zündel is outside of this pale, as he is always, and generously, open to any criticism as long as it enhances the truth. My continuing discussion should also be accepted in this light.

In The Journal of Historical Review, Vol. 8.1, Spring 1988, we find in Robert Faurisson's article (p.91), the statement, "But a Diesel engine is not appropriate for asphyxiating people." This was puzzling to me as I had recently read a small notice in a Rochester, N.Y. paper concerning a suicide involving the exhaust gas from a Mercedes Diesel automobile. The method used was not specified. In itself, this might not have been interesting to ponder except for the fact that I recalled a similar incident being reported in the Los Angeles Times sometime in 1975. Whether reported correctly or not, I do not know, but the articles clearly indicated that Diesel exhaust was sufficient for suicide purposes. When I queried Dr. Faurisson recently about his statement, he replied that it was incorrectly translated from his original French version. Dr. Faurisson was busy with his research work for the second Ernst Zündel Holocaust trial in Toronto, Canada and therefore terminated the discussion. This was entirely understandable and justified. Later, my mind began to buzz with the notion that perhaps people really could die from breathing Diesel exhaust fumes. After all, it was quite believable. The matter would not rest and so I shuffled through my collection of unkempt files to find the 1984 report entitled "The Diesel Gas Chambers: Myth Within A Myth" by Friedrich P. Berg, V.5.1, Spring issue of The Journal of Historical Review. There are several statements in this report that do not agree with what I believe to be true. I will address those statements that appear to be the more salient.

I do not believe that there ever existed any homicidal Nazi "gas chambers." I did once, but in a very feeble manner. I no longer do, either in whole or in part. Perhaps in the future I shall be swayed back to the earlier belief which I held in 1959. I was a bigot then, knowing only one side of the story and believing it to be the only side, the truth, if you like. In general, I believe that Mr. Berg has done an excellent job in demolishing this facet of the continuing barrage of defamation directed toward the German people in particular and the Aryan people in general.

First, some commentary in regard to excerpts from the Berg article.

1. "...they piped carbon monoxide from diesel motors..." (p.18). "...bodies were tossed out blue, wet with sweat and urine." (p.20, eyewitness). The falsity of these statements was aptly covered by Mr. Berg. Under most operating conditions, Diesel engines emit relatively little carbon monoxide.

2. "...in any Diesel gas chamber, although death from lack of oxygen is very unlikely, it is nonetheless far more likely than death from carbon monoxide." (p.20, Berg). On the contrary, death from the lack of oxygen in the blood is nearly certain regardless of the oxygen content of the surrounding air. The presence of carbon dioxide inhibits the oxygenation of the blood and death would result even in the presence of ample oxygen. However, death from non-existent carbon monoxide would be a miraculous event for anyone except a Jew.

3. "...the thoroughly false impression that Diesel exhaust must therefore be very harmful." (p.24, Berg). Diesel exhaust IS harmful to your health because it contains a generous amount of carbon dioxide. The Diesel engine has received less attention in regard to noxious emissions than has the spark-ignition engine mainly due to the relatively small number of Diesel powered vehicles in use as compared to the spark-ignition gasoline types. (p.118, V.2, ref.A).

4. "At idle, Diesels operate with air/fuel ratios of 200/1." (p.25, Berg). Nowhere in the M.I.T. volumes (ref.A) nor in the Society of Automotive Engineers papers (710835, 710836, 720755, 729757, 730169, 730170, 730212, 730213, 730214) is there any mention of any such lean ratio. At idle speeds, combustion chamber turbulence would be reduced along with wall temperatures and ignition would be highly unlikely at this ratio. The surveyed literature commonly refers to an air/fuel ratio of 40/1 as "very lean" and cites no performance data above this ratio. Ratios higher than 40/1 may be achieved by a decelerating engine under low pressure conditions but this transient state is not pertinent. Moreover, at idle speed, combustion is not complete and unburned hydrocarbons make their appearance known by the visual evidence of smoke.

5. "...Diesel exhaust is relatively harmless, ..." (p.31, Berg). I am not sure what Mr. Berg means by "relatively." Diesel exhaust contains a greater volume of nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxides and assorted aldehydes than does the exhaust from a gasoline powered vehicle. (S.A.E. papers). The higher percentages of nitrogen oxides are mainly the result of the higher compression ratios used in Diesels and not from the different method of ignition or fuel. All exhaust substances, with the exception of water, uncombined nitrogen and uncombined oxygen (if any), are listed as toxic materials. (ref. D & E). The usual Diesel air/fuel ratios of 20/1 to 35/1 will produce a lethal exhaust in the same sense as an atmospheric environment devoid of oxygen.

6. "...could they have died instead from the effects of reduced oxygen in Diesel exhaust?.....This theory, however, does not hold up very well because of the fact that Diesels always operate with excess air." (p.32, Berg). In regard to respiration, we always operate with excess air. Expired air (breath) contains about 16% unused oxygen but I have yet to find anyone that suggests that expired air could serve as a replacement for inspired air of the usual composition. Our expired air contains 4.5% carbon dioxide and that is what makes it hazardous. We were not designed to make use of expired air. One simply cannot live in an environment consisting of 4.5% carbon dioxide and 16% oxygen. At sea level, the atmosphere contains 21% oxygen but we could exist very well with lower oxygen levels as the Incas did and their descendants still do. In this case, the body would respond by increasing the concentration of red blood cells (hemoglobin) thus making the blood more efficient in oxygen carrying. At an altitude of 2000 feet, the concentration of oxygen is equivalent to 10% at sea level. About 40% of normal blood consists of red blood cells. Given a period of time, the body can increase this percentage upwards to 70% in order to adapt to the lower oxygen levels found at the higher altitudes. The body cannot, however, adapt in any such fashion to unusual levels of carbon dioxide.

7. "Carbon dioxide is not really any more poisonous than ordinary water. Most toxicology handbooks do not even mention it." (p.34, Berg). I do not know what Mr. Berg means by "most" handbooks. Ref. C states that carbon dioxide is a narcotic. Refs. D & E state that carbon dioxide is toxic and can be lethal. It certainly is a substance that produces injurious or deadly effects upon a body and therefore can lay claim to being classified as a poison as is so labeled in most medical handbooks.

8. "The cause of death, chemically, in both situations is not carbon dioxide but rather the lack of oxygen in the blood." (p.34, Berg). This statement is also enigmatic. In order to be consistent, Mr. Berg should also state that, chemically, carbon monoxide (CO) could not be a cause of death. In this case, death is also due to the lack of oxygen. Blood hemoglobin has approximately 600 times the affinity for carbon monoxide (CO) than it has for oxygen and therefore absorbs it in preference thus rendering the blood oxygen deficient. The reason that this insidious poison gets past the body's "security guard" I shall explain later. In order to be logically consistent, I shall refer to the culprit that causes low oxygen levels in the blood, as the toxic substance. This is in agreement with definitions and usual practice.

9. "In general, if enough oxygen is available, a carbon dioxide level even as high as 12 percent is not likely to cause death." (p.34, Berg). Since Mr. Berg cites no references for this conclusion, I will classify it as an opinion albeit one that is at odds with the literature I have perused. An examination of the relevant medical literature will demonstrate the falseness of Mr. Berg's remark. The partial pressure of carbon dioxide in veinal blood is 45 mm Hg (mercury), which corresponds to 5.9% (Dalton's Law). The inspired air must contain less than 5.9% carbon dioxide or there will be absolutely no diffusion taking place. Actually, the body attempts to maintain a concentration of 5.3% carbon dioxide at the blood/air interface (alveolar air sacs). If carbon dioxide is not released from the blood, there can be no oxygen absorbed by the blood's hemoglobin. The breathing rate would rise and a small increase in soluble oxygen would sustain the biological processes for a time. In any event, the 12% figure given by Mr. Berg is ludicrous. Inspired air containing 12 percent of carbon dioxide, regardless of the oxygen content, is fatal. (ref.D, p.1701).

10. "The principal danger to life from Diesel exhaust arises not from an abundance of carbon dioxide, nor even from carbon monoxide, but rather from the lack of oxygen." (p.35, Berg). I have commented upon this in item 9. Poisons are causative agents. Excess carbon dioxide CAUSES an oxygen deficiency. Therefore carbon dioxide IS a poison. Using the logic of Mr. Berg, we could state that Rudolf Hess did not die from strangulation by his murderers. Rudolf Hess died from the lack of oxygen in his blood. In Diesel exhaust, carbon monoxide is really not a consideration but an abundance of carbon dioxide, in any atmosphere, is lethal.

Hydrocarbons are substances composed of the elements hydrogen and carbon. During combustion the hydrogen is oxidized to form water while the carbon may be transformed to its uncombined state (soot), or into carbon monoxide or carbon dioxide. Depending upon circumstances, the combustion may be complete in a chemical sense whereby the products consist entirely of water and carbon dioxide. We have all observed the laboring Diesel truck puffing out its volumes of black smoke while climbing a hill. The exhaust, in this case, always contains carbon (you can see it) and carbon monoxide as well as other toxic substances. Whether spark-ignition or compression-ignition (Diesel), the internal combustion engine never produces "clean" exhaust. A clean exhaust being one where the fuel and oxygen entering the engine egress as water and carbon dioxide. In an internal combustion engine, the maximum chemical to mechanical energy transformation occurs when the carbon monoxide content of the exhaust is 2-3%. Incomplete combustion (carbon monoxide) produces a larger volume of products while complete combustion (carbon dioxide) produces a larger quantity of heat. Combustion chamber pressures increase as the volume of produced gases increase and also as the temperature increases. As the combustion products shift from carbon monoxide to carbon dioxide, temperatures increase while the produced gas volume decreases. The maximum pressure is achieved where the combustion process is not quite complete, that is, when the exhaust contains a small percent of carbon monoxide. It must be remembered that maximum pressures occur under full load conditions and that the black stuff pouring out from a Diesel's exhaust pipe, when it is laboring, can hardly be classified as "excess air".

Regardless of whatever air/fuel ratio is necessary, a moderate sized Diesel engine consumes, at the least, 100 grams of fuel per minute just to overcome the internal engine friction at idling speeds. This amount is equivalent to over 2 gallons of fuel burned per hour. Most Diesel truck operators will tell you that their rigs consume in the neighborhood of 4 gallons per hour in the idling state. Two gallons of fuel per hour is sufficient to produce a carbon dioxide flow of over 6 cubic feet per minute. This is sufficient carbon dioxide to render, within one minute, 60 cubic feet of otherwise normal air, lethal. I take issue with Mr. Berg and dispute his claim that "... the Diesel engine is nothing more than an unusual kind of blower...". Whether or not some oxygen is unaffected is beside the point and the fact remains that whatever oxygen is consumed, it is replaced by carbon dioxide to the extent of 65% of its volume. Under standard temperature and pressure conditions, the relation between the percent carbon dioxide and percent oxygen in the exhaust is a linear one. We must not lose sight of the fact that regardless of all other considerations, the Diesel engine is a carbon dioxide producer. Let's assume that our "sweet-clean" Diesel doesn't use oxygen after all. It magically replaces some of the nitrogen in the air with carbon dioxide thus leaving the 21% oxygen level unaffected. This, I think, would fill Mr. Berg's "not likely to cause death" situation. How does the body react to ever increasing levels of carbon dioxide even in the presence of an unaltered oxygen supply?

Carbon dioxide is about 20 times more soluble in blood than is oxygen. While hopefully not prompting my atheist friends into laughter, I will state that God, in His infinite wisdom, apparently designed our bodies with this in mind. Deep within our medulla oblongota are nerve cells called chemoreceptors that monitor both the oxygen and carbon dioxide levels of the blood at the alveolar interface. (ref. B). These chemoreceptors prompt the body to respond to a condition of hypercapnia (excess carbon dioxide) or a condition of hypoxia (deficient oxygen) by a rather immediate increase in respiration rate. The alveolar oxygen concentration is maintained at about 14% while the normal carbon dioxide concentration is about 5%. Inspired air remains in contact with the blood for about 300 to 700 milliseconds which is ample time for the achieving of the diffusion equilibrium.

The chemoreceptors are very much more sensitive to changes in carbon dioxide levels than they are to changes in oxygen levels. The receptors that monitor the carbon dioxide will precipitate a doubling of the respiration rate if the carbon dioxide concentration is increased only a bare 4/10 of 1 percent above normal levels. An increase of 7/10 of 1 percent will quadruple the breathing rate. Severe carbon dioxide poisoning occurs at 8%, producing narcosis. The fatal range begins at about 10% and at this level and above, death can occur within minutes (ref.D & E). Carbon monoxide, on the other hand, is not detected by the chemoreceptors, enters the blood rapidly and is physiologically far more dangerous and poisonous, than is carbon dioxide. Hydrogen sulfide (the smell of rotten eggs) is more poisonous than hydrogen cyanide but less dangerous, simply because the body detects it more readily. Both carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide are poisonous in nature because they interfere with the oxygen-carrying function of the blood. Red blood cells will transport carbon monoxide in preference to oxygen since hemoglobin prefers it 600 to 1. Carbon monoxide will occupy the space usually reserved for oxygen. Carbon dioxide will prevent that space from being used by either, including itself.

On the other hand, if the body is at rest, oxygen levels can drop to as low as 8% before the receptors trigger an increased respiration response. Unconsciousness is produced at levels of 4% and some other effects have been stated in Mr. Berg's article. As mentioned earlier, prolonged exposure to oxygen levels of 10% or so, will induce the body to adapt by increasing the oxygen carrying capacity of the blood. However, the body has no way of adapting to high levels of carbon dioxide. Low oxygen levels occur naturally on this planet. High levels of carbon dioxide are transient abnormalities.

This augmented sensitivity of the body to changes in carbon dioxide levels is the reason that the common practice of hyperventilating before a deep plunge beneath the water, is often fatal. Hyperventilating hardly affects the oxygen level in the blood, but it does reduce the carbon dioxide level dramatically. As the diver holds his breath, the carbon dioxide level of his blood increases while the oxygen level decreases. In many cases the oxygen level is reduced to a point where unconsciousness appears before the warning level of 5.3 percent carbon dioxide occurs. My WW II, U.S. Navy diving manuals make heavy reference to this even in editions as early as 1942. Also heavily noted are warnings concerning recirculating apparatus where the exhaled carbon dioxide is absorbed in a filter medium while oxygen is continually furnished. A failure in the absorbing module is lethal regardless of the presence of sufficient oxygen concentrations. Unlike the usual SCUBA gear, a recirculating apparatus does not discharge the expired air into the surrounding water. Here the oxygen is supplied by a small tank and the produced water and carbon dioxide is absorbed by a special unit. Moreover, the carbon dioxide levels in all manned NASA space capsules are continuously monitored and a level of 6/10% is cause for "deep concern".

Hemoglobin does not transport carbon dioxide. In the presence of carbon dioxide, it acts as buffer in the blood by absorbing hydrated protons. Blood normally carries about 5% of this gas in solution and as carbonates and bicarbonates. The inhaled air must contain less than this percentage in order for the carbon dioxide to be passed into the expired air since matter moves from high pressure areas to low pressure areas. Since gasses are compressible, high pressure areas are also areas of high concentration and each individual gas supplies its own contribution to the overall pressure independent of the other gasses that are present.

Normally, inspired air contains little or no carbon dioxide. In the alveolar sacs (blood/air interface), the carbon dioxide equivalent in percentage is 5.3 (40 mm mercury, partial pressure). These are the conditions for normal respiration. When the inspired air contains 1% to 2% of carbon dioxide, by volume, the body experiences discomfort. Obviously, if the inspired air contains 5.3% carbon dioxide, no passage of that gas can occur. The body responds with an increased respiration rate which will be quadrupled if the carbon dioxide level reaches 6.1%. Increasing the oxygen level would prove valueless because the body is reacting to the abundance of carbon dioxide and not to a deficiency of oxygen, although this is also the case. If the situation is not soon remedied, narcosis will set in and death would follow. Narcosis always occurs when the inspired air contains 8% or so of carbon dioxide and is fatal in the region of 10% and upwards. The presence of abundant oxygen has no effect upon this physiological reaction. We must not lose sight of the fact that the body is continually producing carbon dioxide thus aggravating the situation.

In an analogous sense, one cannot survive by drinking sea water. Sea water contains about 4.5% salts and the body can only excrete water containing about 3.5% salts. For salt to be eliminated, the ingested water must have a salt content below 3.5% and the lower the better. In order for carbon dioxide to be eliminated from the body, the inspired air must contain less than 5.3% carbon dioxide and here again, the lower the better.

Under normal operating conditions, Diesel engine exhaust contains from 5% to 13% carbon dioxide, depending upon speed and load conditions. Even if there were as much as 14% excess oxygen in the exhaust gas, the mere presence of carbon dioxide would render it poisonous. Diesel engines usually operate with excess oxygen but not always, as Mr. Berg has stated. Regardless of air/fuel ratios, a typical idling Diesel engine will produce each minute sufficient carbon dioxide to render 60 cubic feet of air fatal to anyone unfortunate enough to have to breath it.

It has not been my intent to cast doubt upon Mr. Berg's considerable efforts nor upon his excellent article. I feel that there exists a serious flaw in his argument that needs to be addressed even though enough time has already been wasted on this "gas-chamber" nonsense. I agree with Robert Faurisson who reminded us that the "holocaust" is dead, but we're having a Hell of a time burying it.

To that great, unconvinced crowd, I shall conclude with questions that you might find stimulating to ponder. When was the last time you were trapped in traffic, following a Diesel powered bus? Did those invigorating smells conjure up an image of a harmless "blower" in action? Do you really believe that you could breathe that stuff undiluted, for an hour or so? Would you be willing to have your SCUBA tanks filled with 67% nitrogen, 12% carbon dioxide and 21% oxygen, believing that carbon dioxide is harmless? Would you like to prove to me that you cannot kill yourself, via an actual experiment, by breathing the exhaust gas of a Diesel engine? I am not a paper-and-book type of researcher. You don't learn about cows from a college text about farms. You learn about them from the sweat of milking, pitching hay and shoveling manure. Put your life where your mouth is. SCUBA dive with Diesel exhaust filled tanks or do the usual hose-in-the-window automobile exhaust trick. While we are at it, let's build some real "gas chambers," "burning pits" and what all, according to those 6 million eye witness accounts and see what effect they have upon some Palestinians. The Jews shouldn't object to that. It would settle the revisionist/holocaust debate once and for all and send the great unwashed out looking for another way to earn a living. Once upon a time, there was a Shroud of Turin (Torino, Italy, 1578 AD).

THE NEW MESSIANISM

By
Nicholas Carter

The blackest hole in the cosmos of Western civilization is the first century of the era beginning Anno Domini 1. The West has been so thoroughly Christianized for so long with Bibles and Testaments and wondrous myths supporting the Christ that, if anything survived the 1st century that explained what exactly occurred during the one hundred years or so that antedated the development of Catholicism, it was destroyed by the Christian faith-police a long time ago.

In this brief study, I have endeavored to make irrevocably clear that the entire New Testament, as well as other carefully Christianized works, cannot be accepted as historical documents because the events they chronicle did not occur as or when related. Ergo, virtually all of the sources recounting the activities of Stephen, Saul, and others whom we believe to have lived during that day and time, must be eliminated from any and all scholarly considerations.

For rational, intelligent people, there can be no compromise with mythological beliefs that are nonsensical at their best and obscene at their worst.

What, then, do we know about the 1st century?

We know that someone—a real human being—did die at the approximate same time as the fabled Nazarene, and for the approximate same reason. Stephen, a Jew with a Greek name, was put to death by Pharisees or Zealots for the Law, around A.D. 30, for preaching heretical ideas. Sound familiar? (Of this, more later.)

We know that orthodox Jewry was in no way involved with the establishment of whatever ethical or religious system emerged in that time frame.

On the Christian side of the fence, once the Catholics made the second century determination to appropriate the historically-defined Messiah of the Israelites and transform him into the divine head of a Gentile mystery cult, they realized that so radical a move would need the appearance of Jewish support. Hence, the insertion of material in the New Testament citing a large 1st century participation on the part of Jews in the "new Messianic Movement." The redactors even declared that an attempt was made in Palestine to exclude Jews from the Synagogue for accepting the Jesus as Messiah before A.D. 80—which is nonsense most fanciful.

We are reasonably certain that Jews did play consequential rôles in the New Messianism because of the existence of Philo, Stephen, and Saul of Tarsus. Significantly, however, they were Hellenized Jews who were not comfortable, to one degree or another, with the traditional theology of Judaism.

We know, too, that Catholic Christendom did not begin to evolve into a viable theological system until well into the 2nd century. It is historically evident that, around that time, a manifest change came over the New Messianism, a new innovation resulting from the appropriation of the cult by the Gentiles and signaling the advent of Catholicism with its ever-expanding layers of external, ceremonial, legal and metaphysical dogmas to come, which in turn would increasingly subject the spirit to law and the individual to the institution.

In the most basic terminology, the theological evolution over the first few centuries can be divided into two periods. The first, beginning early in the 1st century A.D. and lasting for approximately 130 years, was morals; the second, beginning with the acquisition of the New Messianic cult by the Graeco-Roman Fathers of Catholicism during the 2nd century, was orthodoxy.

Setting aside all dogma and its faith-supported counterfeits of truth, I have composed a scenario delineating what may have happened in the beginning—and my speculations and educated guesses are based upon the philosophical yearnings of the people involved and their psychological motivations.

First, the significant players.

PHILO OF ALEXANDRIA (circa 30 B.C. to A.D. 40), often called Philo Judaeus, or Philo the Jew, was the supreme example of Hellenism's influence on the cosmopolitan intellectual life of the Jews in Alexandria. He was an outstanding intellectual, and his writings demonstrate that he was well-educated in classical Greek philosophy, rhetoric and the natural sciences. He mentions in passing that he had once questioned the Jewish elders about Judean traditions. Perhaps the New Testament incident describing Jesus questioning the elders in the Temple was inspired by the writings of Philo. Significantly, the Catholic Fathers—Clement, Origen and Ambrose, in particular—adopted some of Philo's philosophical and Neoplatonic concepts, as well as making use of his allegorical interpretations of Scripture.

Orthodox Judeans were unhappy with his teachings and accused him of trying to interpret away the literal (and offensive) meaning of biblical passages. They argued that he was more Greek than Jewish; that he did not even know the Jewish language; and that he produced a system in which Judaism and Hellenism lay together in confusion. For these reasons orthodox Jewry rejected him.

Would Philo, like the original Letzim, have concluded that Israel should have been Hellenized by force? Possibly. I does appear that he was haunted by the failure of Israel to create anything that could compete with the imposing civilizations around her. For that reason he sought to cultivate a compromise between Judaism and Hellenism by claiming that all the great achievements of the Greeks had been discovered first by the Israelites. This desperate attempt to give the Jews a collective sense of ego-identification has also been used by Josephus, Artapanus, and countless other Jews of the centuries. Time and again they have preached to the world at large that all the knowledge and institutions of the Egyptians had been taken from Israel; that Joseph had taught them better forms of cultivation; that Moses with his ten commandments had marked out the entire history of the Western world; and that the tiny fraction of humanity known as Jewry had provided the world with the concept of monotheism, the eradication of idol worship, and the abhorrence of human sacrifice. As we shall see, the world's most significant moral revolution originated with the Stoics; and just as the Jews derived monotheism from the Egyptians, they derived their ethics from the Western world.

STEPHEN, SAINT, first Christian martyr, stoned to death. One of the seven deacons. That, in the proverbial nutshell, is the story of the life of Stephen. We don't know where he was born, or why he had a Greek name. We don't know where he was martyred. As to when, the New Testament gives the impression that it was after the crucifixion of Jesus, because he allegedly heard the words, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." According to the Gospel, however, Stephen was nowhere to be seen or heard during the tribulations of Jesus; nor was Saul there, nor were all of the twelve apostles. John (which John?), Joseph and Nicodemus are mentioned briefly; but no one else. Surprising? At first thought, yes. On second thought, it is entirely possible that the redactors concluded that the melodramatic scenario involving the capture, trial, death and resurrection of their savior-god would be more effective if it was staged in such a way that Jesus was always in the limelight and the forefront of the morality play, and without the presence of hysterical relatives and fiercely loyal disciples who would be expected to divert attention from the proceedings.

A convoluted biography of Stephen as related in the Acts of the Apostles is of interest. In strictly Catholic terms, he is described as being "full of grace and power," and "full of the Holy Ghost." Not unlike every alleged "holy man" of the day, he is credited with having attracted much attention by performing "great wonders." The "new vein of teaching" that leads to his martyrdom, as the narrative relates, involved his condemnation of people called "Hebrew Christians" who had supposedly embraced not only the Holy Land, but also the Holy City and the Holy Place of the Temple. The Greek-named Stephen—most likely a Hellenized Jew born outside of Palestine—featured as a Christian in the New Testament, creates the sort of controversy over "Christian" worship in the Holy Land that will lead to his condemnation as a "deceiver" and a "teacher of errors." He is then forced to appear before the Sanhedrin, the Supreme Council of the Jewish people. And who accuses Stephen and demands that he be arraigned? Jewish "Hebrews"? The alleged Christian "Hebrews"? No. Hellenic Jews of North Africa and Asia Minor. Curious? Indeed. Equally curious is the fact that the subject of the disputation with the Letzim is not explained. Evidently, the New Testament redactors needed a theological conflict of a heretical nature, regardless of the illogicity of the dissension, to provide the motivation for the martyrdom of Stephen.

Speaking in his defense before an assemblage of Pharisaic jurists, Stephen charges, among other things, that the same ungrateful and narrow spirit that he was witnessing in the Sanhedrin, wasn't new to Judaism. As he speaks, the judges keep "gnashing their set teeth against him." Suddenly, the vault of heaven opens and the Divine Presence, with the human form of Jesus seated on his right hand, appears to Stephen. As if speaking to himself, he then describes this glorious vision; but the judges appear to be singularly unimpressed with the experience. Then Stephen commits the ultimate heresy by condemning the Israelites for only persecuting their prophets, but for having killed Jesus the Christ, as well—an impeachment that sends the Sanhedrin into a frenzy. As with one impulse they hurl themselves upon Stephen and drag him out to the place of execution, where, wonder of wonders, a young man named Saul, who happened to hail from Tarsus, is waiting to hold the cloaks of the executioners—an act indicating that Saul was "consenting unto his (Stephen's) death."

As Stephen is stoned to death, he allegedly forgives his enemies with words curiously similar to those attributed to Jesus on the cross. Let me emphasize now that if Stephen did speak before he died, rather than words chosen by Christians centuries later, he would have used the language of Hellenism: "Receive my spirit, O Father of the Universe. And I beg of you, judge not the brotherhood of man by sins, but by virtues." And thus his absolution would have applied, not to just his tormentors, but to all men the world over.

Just as the death of the Great Teacher at the hands of the wicked priest—as recounted in the Dead Sea Scrolls—suggests a parallel to the Jesus story, the curious circumstances surrounding the deaths of Stephen and the legendary Nazarene, which occurred at approximately the same time, suggest too many parallelisms to be casual occurrences.

SAUL OF TARSUS was born around A.D. 5. As a young man he supposedly took the Gentile name of Paul, but we have no proof of that. We are told that he was a Roman citizen, but we have no evidence for that. Like Stephen, much of his life is mysterious and unknown. If he stood so high in the hearts and minds of his contemporaries, why did such important documents as the Didache and the Epistle of Barnabas ignore him? Justin Martyr, born around A.D. 100, ignores him, as do the Clementine Homiliae and Recognitiones. To the redactors, Saul was the "Apostle to the Gentiles." But one Gentile, Tertullian, called him the "Apostle of heretics." Much that has been written about Saul is contained in the Acts of the Apostles and the Pauline Epistles. For those of us who do not accept these works as being original and authentic, the miraculous conversion of Saul, his First Missionary Journey followed by the "historic" visit to Jerusalem, his visits to Philippi, Athens and Corinth for the purpose of carrying the Gospel into Europe, his apprehension at Jerusalem, his imprisonment in Caesarea, and finally, his voyage to Rome, are all questionable and unacceptable.

For some reason, Christians have refused to speculate about the murder of Saul. We are merely told that he was "martyred" around A.D. 70. Significantly, the Christian authors created an abysmally pessimistic Saul who believed that the flesh and sin were identical. It was Saul who purportedly recognized the actual original sin in sexual lust. Born in Tarsus, an important Hellenized city in Asia Minor, Saul probably learned to use the Greek language with freedom and mastery; and he may very well have been familiar with some of the great literature of the Hellenistic Orient. To the redactors, however, it was essential that he appear to be uncompromisingly Jewish. While he "may have encountered Stoic teachers" in Tarsus, he was "chiefly educated in Jerusalem" under the Pharisee Gamaliel. The prime implication here is that he was brought up as a strict Pharisee. There is an ulterior motive behind this characterization. Only a miracle could or would transform a "zealous and bigoted Jew" into one of the Christfolk during that single mindboggling event described as Saul's "supernatural conversion."

No doubt Saul did write some letters during his missionary wanderings; but they were Christianized at a later date—i.e., updated, expanded, and then rewritten many times until every action and word fitted properly canonized doctrine according to the progression of canonization over the centuries. Thus, we have the New Testament Saul claiming that the "saw" and "heard" the Jesus after the resurrection, and that God had revealed "His Son in me." We also find equally absurd statements such as this one: "God, angry at their unbelief [meaning the Israelites] has turned His face from them." The anti-Jewishness of Saul aided in giving the New Testament impression that Christianity was really new wine and just new bottles containing some of the old wine of Judaism.

Admittedly, we know virtually nothing for certain about the lives of Stephen and Saul. We can reasonably assume, however, that they were Hellenized Jews, that they were traveling missionaries or prophets (teachers) who journeyed to those Gentile cities in Western Asia where the Letzim had settled, and that the deaths of Stephen and Jesus occurred in tandem with the conversion of Saul. And that brings us to the crux of this chapter. It is my contention that the parallelisms between the deaths of Stephen and the fabled Jesus are not coincidental. Stephen is the most likely and logical archetype, or pattern, for the Jesus of the Gospel.

Stephen was born around 30 B.C., which means that he would have been an elderly man in his sixties when he died. More than any other man of his time, Stephen is the logical choice for the idealized "man in the sandals" who preached a nondenominational gospel in a language of reason that appealed to more knowledgeable and independent Jews and Gentiles: a gospel of simplicity and directness, more humanistic than ceremonial, that would have impressed the best of Greek philosophers.

If Stephen was the "admirable revealer of true virtue," the "winsome teacher conjuring the Kingdom of Heaven down to earth by the spell of the infinite tenderness radiating from him," why wasn't he the obvious Catholic choice for the Christ of the new savior-god cult? Age, for one thing. The new Messiah had to be young, vital, and more the son than the grandfather. And—he had to be 30 years old. Once again a symbolic intention is involved in the use of a number. Various texts in the Septuagint attributed a special value to the age of 30. Joseph was 30 when he became Prime Minister; David was 30 when he became King; the eligibility of the Levites at the altar was from 30 to 50 years. So Jesus had to commence his ministry at "about 30 years" of age—exactly the age required by the Law for a Man of God.

The Christian myth expects us to believe that a charismatic young man "theologizes" the whole of Palestine with his preaching in just three years. Nonsense! Not even a lifetime of proselytizing—30 to 40 years—could have achieved that end in an age light-years away from televangelism. Illiteracy was widespread, with most of the literate citizens living in the cities. There were no printed books and pamphlets to be distributed in every community. There were no modern means of travel or communication. One had to walk or ride on a donkey. In order to carry a gospel to the people, especially to the remote and rural areas, a dedicated prophet hat to spend most of his life, walking, talking, and preaching, endlessly; and the more esoteric the message, the more difficult it was to influence the masses.

By the time Saul was a young man, the formation of what may be termed the Mystic Gospel of Hellenized Judaism had probably been initiated in some parts of the Hellenistic Orient by the more educated descendants of the Letzim such as the students of Philo, who were surely carrying to Greek-bedizened communities the radical notion that Jewish aspirations could be blended with Gentile ethics. Like a select number of young people of any era, Saul may have been torn between controvertible forces in his life; he may have been unsure of which way to turn, uncertain of what to do with his being.

To all objective persons, the miraculous conversion of Saul belongs to the deceitful world of creative mythology. But SOMETHING must have happened to Saul. So let us assume that he was on that road to Damascus when a remarkable fusion of circumstances brought him to the turning point of his life. Let us assume that he witnessed the execution of Stephen—not as one sympathizing with it, but as one horrified by it.

Saul had probably heard of the unusual prophet, and he may have witnessed his preaching. But when he saw the prophet bravely die without asking for mercy, defending his faith all the while, and asking, not Jesus, of course, but God, to receive him, and finally, forgiving not only his enemies, but quite possibly in the eyes of an impressionable young man, the whole world—the "center" of his life's motivation and purpose was changed. The tragic fact of his seeing, not the "risen Christ," but the dying Stephen, became the main root of his entire life. An event such as that could have motivated Saul to dedicate his life to the study, and then the transmission, of the gospel of Stephen.

What indeed was it about Hellenism that appealed to Philo, Stephen, and then to Saul—as I contend it did-and others? What led them along a path never before traveled by Jews? It was one thing for the Letzim of the 2nd century B.C. to aspire to a Hellenized Israel; it was something else for the new Letzim to create for both themselves and Gentiles a Hellenic/Jewish faith.

The principal tenets of the religious philosophy of the Letzim of the Common Era were gleaned mostly from Greek sources, along with the contributions of such Roman thinkers as Epictetus, Seneca and Virgil. It was a gospel reflecting a special keenness and nobility of language comparable in directness, truthfulness and simplicity to Greek literature. People today who no longer find solace in the aristocratic Church, or in the Christian "spin-off" denominations, sects, and cults, often speak longingly of what they call "the true teachings of Christ." (They mean the idealized Jesus, of course, rather than the cosmic Christ.) Their words express a hunger for precisely the kind of creed that may have been developed by the Hellenized Judeans.

In the vanguard of the movement was Stoicism, which was both a philosophy, and a system of religion placing the realization of its ideal in this world. Among the various types of philosophic world-views that originated with the Greeks, the Stoic creed with its emphasis on the doctrine of brotherhood and equality of man, was the most cogent expression of Hellenistic culture. The leading Stoic maxim was, "Live according to nature." For reasons that should be obvious, the theology of Stoicism has never been popular with Christians. The "Stoic god," having no independent or personal existence, is neither a god-surrogate nor a scapegoat slated to die for the sins of weak and cowardly people.

From the Stoics, the new Letzim learned of the quixotic concept of the brotherhood of all men, an inordinately radical notion when compared with the doctrine of exclusivity practiced by the Israelites. To a Judean, loving one's neighbor as one's self meant loving one's Jewish neighbor. They learned of the Greek concept of one God for all people; they learned that there was truth in the books of the Gentiles, that there were also prophets and holy men among the philosophers of the Hellenistic Orient, and that Greek morality in particular was very lofty.

From the Roman philosopher Epictetus, they learned that good is within the individual, and that universal brotherhood was an ideal to be achieved in the world. The conception of the all-pervading goodness of God is very apparent in the writings of Epictetus, more so perhaps than in any other Gentile writer of the time.

From Philo, they learned about the Platonic Logos, which so impressed the Alexandrian philosopher that he concluded that all beings, both finite and infinite, had their unity in, and proceeded from, the divine Logos. They learned that the conception of the unity and purity of the Divine One was preeminently that of Plato. The One Supreme being of the universe was the god of all people and a moral necessity. He was an infinite Father guiding in wisdom, cherishing in mercy; and finally, a God who received his children to himself. Pythagoras, too, believed in the concept of one Supreme Being, a Father of not just a select few, but of all.

Seneca taught them that "Man is a sacred thing to man." Seneca devoutly believed that all human beings are formed from the same elements and have the same destiny. Indeed, Seneca's work, De Beneficiis, has been described as the finest work produced by antiquity on the subject of the love of man. Seneca's morality helped to prepare the way for the New Messianism.

While the utopianism and determinism in some of these notions is to be deplored, the fact that they originated with Greek and Roman philosophers cannot be denied. Jewish claims to the effect that their thinkers provided the human species with the highest moral conceptions known to man are as false as certain of their other claims to greatness. While the Judean rabbis were preaching that the badness of men was better than the goodness of women, the Stoics were teaching that men and women were equal in virtue—and they were the first to do so.

Their Gentile studies undoubtedly taught the new Letzim the power of seeing things straight and knowing what is beautiful or noble, regardless of the traditional and superstitious cultural forces that swirled around them. A dominant idea conceived and shaped with a definite artistic purpose invariably has a strong influence upon the formation of history. It was Hellenism then that created the form into which the New Messianism found entrance.

The term mysticism derives from a Greek word which designated those who had been initiated into the esoteric rites of the Greek religion—the union of self with a larger-than-self. The Mystic Gospel of Hellenistic Judaism, rooted as it was in the ethical concepts outlined above, may very well have been as simple, direct and appealing as the following:

> The ONE God of the universe is everybody's God...therefore everybody is eligible for Salvation. Repent of your transgressions against your fellow man. Affirm that you will love your fellow man, as you love yourself, regardless of his race or religion... that you will live with men as if God saw you, and speak with God as if men heard you. Love God with all your heart and soul...AND YOU WILL BE SAVED.

Nothing more. No sacraments...no ceremonies...no sin-offerings...no sin as it relates to "transgressions against God," and no guilt or shame.

It is my contention that something of that nature occurred during the 1st century, and that the Letzim then became involved in the teaching of a faith of love without fear, and a God appropriate to that love. The illusion that love need to have no opposite, however, would have appeared to the masses of the common people who were steeped in the fear of gods and demons, as both impossible and unacceptable. Consequently, only the more educated Gentiles and Jews would have been attracted to the New Messianism—but never enough of them to incite the interests of the notable writers of the time.

I contend, too, that Stephen was the first major prophet dedicated to that faith of love, and that it led to his death. And Saul, once he was prepared, donned the mantle of Stephen and began to preach the same gospel. He continued to do so for the remainder of his life.

The New Testament indicates that Saul laid a great deal of stress on evangelizing Gentile colonies. From the standpoint of the Catholics, this makes sense. They wanted to give the impression that their new creed had universal appeal from the beginning. But it is logical, too, in view of what Saul might have been preaching. There was no Christ, no resurrection, and no miraculous conversion; ergo, he wasn't peddling the "good news" about a Jewish savior-god born of a virgin. And if he was a Pharisee—a bigoted and zealous Jew—he would never have preached to Gentiles. The fact that the chief converts of the New Messianism during the 1st century belonged to an upper- or middle-class bourgeois stratum of Hellenic society lends credence to the proposition that Saul's message was esoteric and undoubtedly Greek-inspired.

And that brings us back to square one: the Mystic Gospel of Hellenized Judaism. We cannot measure the complexity of the involvement of the protagonists—the degree, that is, to which the Hellenic Jews may have tried to fuse Greek and Jewish speculations. For the purpose of this study it is enough to conclude that Gentile ethics were the driving force behind the activities of the Letzim.

As suggested above, none of the leading intellectuals of the 1st century noticed the movement because it wasn't successful from the standpoint of popular acceptance. Not until the final decades of the century, most likely, did the efforts of the increasing numbers of disciples, students and proselytes in the movement begin to pay off with a growing acceptance of the cult on the part of Gentiles. And during those same years, it is quite possible that some of the more imaginative members of the faith had come to the realization that Stephen really was a messianic figure. The Jewish word Mashiach, which answers to the word Christ in the New Testament, means anointed, and is applicable in its first sense to those anointed with holy oil, such as kings of Israel. The word also refers to the anticipated Messiah, consecrated of God, whose coming was predicted by the prophets.

What of the descriptive term, Jesus? In the original Jewish language, Jesus is Isehouah, or Ieshou, a word that means "salvation." According to another interpretation, Jehua-Joshua-Jesus are all the same meaning Yahweh the Savior. Logically, then, the word Jesus can be used to describe both Salvation and Savior.

According to these definitions, therefore, an individual could become a Christ or Anointed One, and a Jesus or Savior, with the names being used solely in a descriptive sense. After the death of the mortal Buddha, his legendary development as a Savior followed the same general pattern. Because Christians are inclined to see the Christian past as if it was a gloriously produced technicolor motion picture smoothly unfolding within a compressed time frame, they are indifferent to the fact that the passage of 100 years can produce some awesome results. The whole world can be turned upside down in one century. Virtually anything human (not superhuman) would have been therefore possible during the 1st century of the Common Era—including this possibility: the transformation of the martyred Stephen into both A "Jesus" and A "Christ" in the minds of his worshipers by at least the turn of the 2nd century.

Thirty to forty years later, when Justin had come of age (A.D. 135 or so), the "Jesus" of the New Messianists, having evolved into A "Christ" who had died for the brotherhood of man—a great "wonder-worker" as well who had exorcised demons, made blind men see, and revived the dead—appeared to the Gentile world as a credible archetype for a savior-god; and before long, an assemblage of Graeco-Roman scholastic theologians, having deduced that the intriguing new Messiah had a Jewish background, and that there were passages in the Septuagint that could be interpreted as having predicted his coming, joining the movement. And then—the game was afoot. Before the century was out, the mind-blowing task of assimilating a Jew to the Gentile mystery-cults of Asia was under way.

One question remains: Why were Stephen and Saul murdered? Not because they were attracting the multitudes and stirring up the countryside against the powers-that-be. To repeat, their movement was not patterned to influence the masses who expected miracles and wondrous signs from heaven. They were hated for no other reason than that the nature of their philosophy was blatantly heretical. The New Testament claims that orthodox Jews encountered by Saul were "jealous" of the success he was having in converting Gentiles. Once again, fanciful nonsense! Anger, even fury, is what the orthodox would have felt as they observed a Jew preaching to the heathen sons of the no-gods that the ONE Creator God, Yahweh, who had decreed that they were his only Chosen people, was everybody's God; that people should love everybody indiscriminately, regardless of race or religion; and that salvation was available for anybody—rich, poor, intelligent, ignorant, Jew, Gentile, healthy, sick, and so on.

An ancient curse of the Sons of Israel reads as follows: "If I betray thee, O Jerusalem, may my right hand wither, and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." And a lexicon to the Talmud says, "A Pharisee is one who separates himself from all uncleanness." Of all Jews, none would have been more unclean or traitorous than the Stephens and Sauls who denied particularistic Judaism in favor of universalistic heathenism.

They would have been savagely hated by both the Pharisees and the Zealots for the Law who would have attempted to oppose, embarrass, or even to exterminate them in order to "separate" their uncleanness from the world.

Anyone who questions my reasoning should seriously consider the Salmon Rushdie affair of our day and time—i.e., the death sentence passed on Rushdie by orthodox Muslims who believe that his book, The Satanic Verses, blasphemed Muhammed, the founder of their religion. And Muhammed is merely a prophet, not the ONE God of the universe.

The bottom line contention here is that zealous Jews murdered Saul just as they murdered Stephen. There is absolutely no reason to believe that members of any other race or religion regarded Saul with so much malevolence.

Catholic Christendom and hundreds of years to create a savior-god in the exact image in which they perceived him—to have him say and do exactly what they thought he should say and do. The establishment of traditions geared to indoctrinating the child and controlling the man quickly followed. For the millions of Christians whose eyes have been torn out of their reason, all the cards are carefully stacked in favor of the Christ-Myth. They know exactly what happened over 1900 years ago and for several hundred years to follow.

Those of us who deny the Christ-Myth cannot make the same claim. We have supernatural sources of "revealed" knowledge. My speculations and educated guesses, for instance, must all be grounded in the NATURAL world, rather than in the SUPERnatural world. It took a very long time to ferret out speculative answers to the questions posed by that mysterious 1st century of the Common Era. Nonetheless, I am convinced that this inquiry realistically describes what might have occurred in the real world of the Hellenist Orient.

My scenario explains how a charismatic prophet—a true human being—may have lived and died and even evolved in a legendary sense into a "Jesus" and a "Christ" in the minds of people yearning for a semi-divine hero. It provides the requisite time period (at least 80 to 100 years) necessary to accommodate a meaningful dispersion of a new faith within Western Asia. It explains why Saul was ignored by a significant number of Christian scholars and theologians who apparently believed that, due to his Hellenic background, his legendary being could contribute nothing of value to Catholicism. It clearly provides a viable cult suitable for adoption by Gentiles intent on transplanting a new and seemingly vigorous movement—one that might possibly generate universal appeal—into the Graeco-Roman world. More engaging, perhaps, is the fact that it explains why no reliable historical commentary of Jesus called the Christ ever heard of either the Jesus or the Christ.

Assuming for the sake of argument that this scenario has validity, we can logically conclude first, that Stephen, who dedicated his life to a noble cause, was banished to make room for the fabricated Jesus—not the first time in history, to be sure, that an imposter has gotten the credit for the efforts of a truly gifted innovator; and second, that the moment the New Messianists were dismissed as schismatical by the Catholics, the death knell sounded for Hellenic Judaism. With the subsequent establishment and success of Christianity as a major force in the world, Judaism was provided with a humongous and insidious enemy that would forevermore feed the paranoia of the orthodox, and keep the "nation" of Israel in line.

Admittedly, the arrogant Christian condemnation of Jews for, among other things, having executed the Christ, nurtured the hostility that festered between the two systems from the beginning. Of the people murdered by Jews during the 1st century, we can be absolutely certain that the fabricated Jesus and the cosmic Christ were not among them.

Whether my speculations and educated guesses are more right than wrong cannot be proven. To paraphrase James George Frazer (the author of The Golden Bough), perhaps brighter stars of insight will rise on some voyager of the future whose realms of thought will be able to disperse the dark clouds that lie athwart the origins of Christendom.

In the meantime, my more modest hope is that this little study will lead you, the reader, to some speculations and educated guesses of your own.

HISTORICAL COMMENTARY

CARPENTER, J.E.: "By the time of Jesus, the Jews had long ceased to use the ancient divine name 'Yahweh' because it was too holy to be pronounced."

GOLDBERG, B.Z.: "It was enough to draw a vertical line to suggest the lingam and a horizontal one to signify the yoni, while union of the two was represented by the cross."

GUIGNEBERT, CHARLES: "We have dealt at length on the growth of legend round the story of Jesus, because the details are so familiar... But none of the details will bear close examination, and all in the end will fall outside the realm of history."
Ibid.: "Christian propaganda created, developed, and elaborated a Christ myth theory at the expense of Jesus."

HARNACK, ADOLPH: "Jesus brought forward no new doctrine...It is not difficult to set against every portion of the utterances of Jesus an observation which deprives them of originality."

HALL, G. STANLEY: "The folk-soul is always and everywhere disposed to ascribe supernatural parenthood to great men...Back of and reinforcing all such cases of the mating of divine and human beings lies a deep and rank phallic stratum, bottoming on cosmogenies wherein Mother Earth or the primal abyss is impregnated by rain, lightning, wind, or heaven itself personified."

JACKSON, F. & LAKE, K.: "Historical criticism shows that the points in the story of Jesus which played the greatest part in commending Christianity to a generation asking for private salvation are those which are not historic...the Jesus of history is quite different from the Lord assumed as the founder of Catholic Christendom."

KLAUSNER, J.: "It is quite impossible to admit that Jesus would have said to his disciples that they should eat of his body and drink of his blood...The drinking of blood, even if it was meant symbolically, could only have arouse horror in the minds of Galilean Jews."

KOHLER, KAUFMAN: "The history of Jesus is so wrapped up in myths, and his life as told in the Gospels is so replete with contradictions, that it is difficult for the unbiased reader to arrive at the true historical facts."

LAKE, KIRSOPP: "The thoughts and words of Jesus were borrowed from his own time and race...No historical reconstruction can make them adequate for our generation, or even intelligible except to those who have passed through an education in history impossible to most."

LOISY, ALFRED: "...so all the mystic pride of the Jews in the consciousness they had of being God's Chosen people...passed over entire to the Christians."
Ibid.: "Jesus the Nazarene is at once an historical person and a mythical being who, supporting the myth and supported by it, was finally made by it into the Christ."
Ibid.: "As baptism was not instituted by Jesus, no more...was the Holy Supper...this idea of communion with God by drinking the blood of a sacrificed victim was never born in the brain of a Jew."

MAXIMUS of MADAURA (in a letter to Augustine): "Who is that God of yours, of whom you Christians claim, as it were, the exclusive possession and the first discovery?"

MONTEFIORE, C.G.: "Either this man (Paul) was never a Rabbinic Jew at all, or he has quite forgotten what Rabbinic Judaism was and is."

PEIKOFF, LEONARD: " 'God' as traditionally defined is a systematic contradiction of every valid metaphysical principle. The point is wider than just the Judeo-Christian concept of God. No argument will get you from this world to a supernatural world. No reason will lead you to a world contradicting this one. No method of inference will enable you to leap from existence to a 'super-existence.' "

REINACH, S.: "To speak of the authenticity of the Sermon on the Mount...is hardly consistent with serious criticism."

RHYS, JOCELYN: "The discovery of the empty tomb is the less credible in that Jesus, once put to death, would have been thrown by the Roman soldiers into the common grave of malefactors..."

ROBERTSON, J.M.: "The Christian world seems to present a relative paralysis of thinking, due largely to the very acceptance of the Gospels as a super-human product."

ROYCE, JOSIAH: "I have the right to decline, and I actually decline to express an opinion as to any details about the person and life of the alleged founder of Christianity. For such an opinion the historical evidences are lacking."

SCHMIDT, K.L.: "There is no life of Jesus in the sense of an unfolding life story, no chronological outline of the story of Jesus, but only single stories, pericopes, which are placed in an artificial editorial framework."

SCHMIDT, N.: "We have no really authentic information as to what took place at the trial of Jesus...If Jesus had been the son of God the demons which he cast out would have known him for that."

SCHWEITZER, ALBERT: "The whole account of the last days in Jerusalem would be unintelligible, if we have to suppose that the mass of the people had a shadow of a suspicion that Jesus held himself to be the Messiah."

TACITUS: "By the eagerness of the human mind things which are obscure are more easily believed."

TOYNBEE, ARNOLD: "The whole history of Israel is a history of the struggle to make Jews into a people of an exclusive religion...a struggle between the kings on the one hand and the prophets on the other...between the majority who wanted to mate and mix in human fellowship, and the prophets and their followers who strove for the dogma of a chosen and exclusive people."

AN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN AND BIBLICAL ORIGINS.

Nicholas Carter feels that it is time for us to sit down and do what many Christians rarely do: Study the Holy Bible. In doing so, we may discover whether or not the Bible is indeed "Holy" and the "Word of God." In strict biblical order, the author methodically, and scathingly, examines the various claims made in the "Holy Book" and shows how many of them bear no relationship to reality whatsoever. Skinheads testify against neo-Nazi leaders

—GUARDIAN—13
OCTOBER 24, 1990

White Aryan Resistance leaders John and Tom Metzger outside the Portland, Ore., courtroom where they are on trial for instigating the 1988 murder of Ethiopian refugee Mulugeta Seraw.

By MICHAEL NOVICK

On the eve of the civil trial of two major national white supremacist leaders, more than 2,000 anti-racist demonstrators marched across Portland, Ore., Oct. 7. Tom Metzger, his son John and two of their neo-Nazi skinhead followers are being sued for instigating the 1988 killing of an Ethiopian refugee, Mulugeta Seraw.

The march and rally were sponsored by an ad hoc coalition initiated by the Center for Democratic Renewal, which united Black, Native American, Jewish, Asian, Latino, and lesbian and gay grass-roots groups with more militant groups such as Anti-Racist Action and Skin Heads Against Racial Prejudice.

The demonstrators emphasized the need for continuing vigilance and organizing in light of a recent report prepared by the Coalition for Human Dignity. The report details the operations of more than three dozen white supremacist groups around the state.

As evidence of the continuing threat posed by the neo-Nazi movement, other marchers pointed to the trial of several members of the Aryan Nation on charges of planning to bomb gay bars, Jewish temples and Korean businesses in Seattle.

The trial here represents an effort by the Southern Poverty Law Center and the B'nai Brith Anti-Defamation League to find the Metzgers liable for the death of Seraw.

Seraw, a 27-year-old Ethiopian national who had been planning to attend college in the United States, was returning home from a party in November 1988 when he was beaten and kicked to death with a baseball bat and steel-toed boots. Three neo-Nazi skinheads pleaded guilty to the killing; two of them—Kenneth Mieske and Kyle Brewster—are now on trial with the Metzgers.

PREVIOUS SUCCESS

The Alabama-based law center successfully used a similar lawsuit two years ago against the United Klans of America for fomenting the lynching of a young Black man in that state. A judgment was won against the Klan organization, bankrupting it and forcing it to turn its headquarters over to the victim's mother. Seraw's family is seeking $10 million in damages for his death.

Tom Metzger is head of White Aryan Resistance, or WAR. John Metzger heads WAR Youth. The suit accuses the Metzgers of inciting the beating death of Seraw by sending agents to Portland to preach hate and violence.

The Mezgers are defending themselves. The American Civil Liberties Union declined their request for representation. But the ACLU did file a friend of the court brief calling on Judge Ancer Haggerty, a Black man, to dismiss several of the counts on the grounds that they violate Metzger's free speech rights to verbally advocate racism and violence.

Morris Dees of the Southern Poverty Law Center and the other attorneys for the family of the slain Seraw claim the Metzgers were intimately involved in fomenting the deadly attack. The National Lawyers Guild has supported the view that the kind of racist organizing carried out by WAR, the KKK and other racist groups is not simply political speech entitled to Constitutional protection, but is part of a continuum of racist action and violence.

Metzger claims the trial is political persecution, and despite the Nazi-skins' confessions of racially motivated murder, proclaims that the killing of Seraw was justified self-defense.

"I am a white separatist," the elder Metzger told the jury. "I'm a small-business man from Fallbrook, Calif. I'm going to talk to you like I would one of my customers over a cup of coffee or a beer." He told jurors the lawsuit was a government attempt to persecute him.

He made a similar claim in a recent letter to the Nation, in which he charged Portland politicians with hypocrisy for supporting the trial and march. The boardrooms of Portland, Metzger said, are as full of racists as those elsewhere.

Metzger, a master of media manipulation, has perfected his "free speech" rhetoric over several years of using his TV show "Race and Reason" to promote WAR on cable systems around the country.

Incriminating testimony linking the Metzgers to the killing has come from several neo-Nazi skinheads involved. One, Mike Barrett, testified that the Metzgers sent him to recruit the Portland Nazi-skins to WAR. "We told them that Blacks and Jews are the enemies of the white Aryan race, and to use violence if they had the opportunity, and be sure to beat the hell out of the enemy." It was after one such session that the killing occurred.

Dees, lead attorney for the Seraw family, spent the trial's first week linking the Metzgers to Seraw's murder, in part through the testimony of Mieske, who is serving a life sentence for killing Seraw. Mieske, 25, who goes by the nicknames Ken Death and Bat Man, was contentious under Dees' questioning, smirking and winking at his girlfriend across the courtroom.

When he pleaded guilty to killing Seraw, Mieske had said his motive was racial. But on the stand at the civil trial he said the government forced him to say that to avoid more prison time than the 20-year minimum sentence he ultimately received. Mieske claimed he really killed Seraw to defend fellow skinhead Brewster.

Mieske's testimony later was contradicted by his former girlfriend, Julie Sanders, who said Brewster and Seraw were fighting face to face when Mieske struck Seraw from behind with a bat. Sanders said Brewster spotted Seraw as they left a skinhead's apartment and suggested they go "check it out."

MAXIMIZING DAMAGE

Mieske acknowledged that after striking Seraw with the bat, he kicked the Ethiopian. "When he was on the ground and trying to crawl away, I kicked him in the stomach and then I kicked him in the head," he said. This testimony was considered significant because one of the aspects of training by WAR agents was allegedly in the use of steel-toed boots to inflict maximum damage.

Dave Mazzella, 21, who allegedly trained Mieske in violence, took the stand Oct. 12. Mazella, former vice president of the Aryan Youth Movement, now WAR Youth, told jurors the Metzgers sent him from California to Portland to organize neo-Nazi skinheads and incite them to do violence against minorities. Testifying without immunity from prosecution, Mazella told the jury he met with members of East Side White Pride only hours before three of its members fatally beat and kicked Seraw.

Mazzella testified that Metzger approved of his violent methods and of his recruitment of skinheads to join WAR. "He was basically patting me on the back for what I was doing," he said.

During cross-examination, Metzger reviewed a series of his organization's magazines with Mazella, asking if any of the articles directly incited him to attack minorities. Mazella answered that collectively, the magazines create an impression that violence is acceptable.

WAR PAPER LAUDS ATTACKS

Metzger's newspaper, WAR, and its White Student Union supplements are filled with vile racist cartoons and stories, calling for the bombing of civil rights demonstrations and lauding attacks on Jews, Blacks, Mexicans and gays. Reprinted speeches to other white racists by Tom and John Metzger label non-racist whites as "zomboids" and "race traitors" who will probably have to be "eliminated" along with racial enemies.

During a short break while the jury was out of the room, one of Tom Metzger's four bodyguards handed Mazzella a copy of a lawsuit claiming he and several others were testifying as "agent provocateurs," paid or retained by Portland police. A police spokesperson has denied that claim. The countersuit also claims two of Seraw's friends provoked the fight with the skinheads and adds that the "provocateurs" should be liable for any damages Metzger might be ordered to pay Seraw's estate.

Dees denounced the presentation of Metzger's countersuit in court, calling it "intimidation and coercion" of the witness.

The courthouse remains under heavy security. Last week officers routinely lined skinheads along the wall outside the courtroom and searched them. Three skinheads were arrested for carrying weapons, two on outstanding warrants.

Early in the week a suspicious-looking lunch box was spotted outside the federal courthouse several blocks from where the trial is being held. The bomb squad was called and the box was pulled into the street. It contained a lunch.

But fear of neo-Nazi violence remains high in the wake of a bombing of the federal building in San Diego last month. A previously unknown racist group called the White Fighting Machine of the Cross claimed responsibility, demanding that the Portland trial be stopped and threatening further attacks. ■

Racist ordered to pay $5 million

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP)—A jury ruled Monday that white supremacist Tom Metzger must pay $5 million in damages to the family of a black man beaten to death by skinheads Metzger is accused of inciting.

Metzger, a former grand dragon of the Ku Klux Klan, was assessed $5 million and his White Aryan Resistance was ordered to pay $3 million in damages. His son John must pay $1 million in damages.

The lawsuit accused Metzger, 52, and his 22-year-old son of inciting the murder by sending an agent to Portland to organize skinheads and teach them how to commit violence against minorities.

The jury decided that Kenneth Mieske and Kyle Brewster, two skinheads who pleaded guilty in

The wrongful-death suit, which sought a total of $12.5 million, was brought by the family of Mulugeta Seraw. The remaining $2.5 million sought by the family was awarded by the jury, but how it breaks down among the defendants wasn't immediately clear.

Seraw, 27, an Ethiopian who planned to attend school in Portland, was attacked as he returned home from a party in November 1988. His head was split open by a softball bat.

The Multnomah County Circuit Court jury found that the Metzgers and White Aryan Resistance conspired to do violence to minorities and that they were reckless in sending Dave Mazzella, a former vice president of John Metzger's Aryan Youth Movement, to Portland as their agent. Mazzella, 21, was the plaintiffs' star witness.

Sending a $12.5 Million Message to a Hate Group

By ROBB LONDON

Special to The New York Times

SEATTLE, Oct. 25 — When jurors in Oregon assessed more than $12 million in damages against a white supremacist group and its leaders this week, they virtually indentured the leaders for the rest of their lives.

Not that the civil rights lawyers who brought the case against the group, the White Aryan Resistance, ever expected to win nearly that much.

"The amount of the award has no real relation to WAR's assets," said Morris Dees, the leading trial lawyer for the plaintiffs, referring to the white supremacist group by its acronym. The lawsuit Mr. Dees brought was a wrongful death action on behalf of the family of Mulugeta Seraw, a 27-year-old Ethiopian who was bludgeoned to death in Portland, Ore., two years ago by three "skinheads" who said they were followers of the White Aryan Resistance.

"A judgment of several hundred thousand dollars would have done the job in terms of getting what these defendants have to give," Mr. Dees said in an interview Wednesday. "The reason we asked for so much, and the reason the jury gave it to us, is the signal it would send to the organized hate business. We're going to clean their clock."

Much Legal Work Remains

But the process of tracing and seizing the assets and a portion of future earnings could involve as much legal work as it took to win the trial — maybe more, given the tendency of many white supremacist groups to change their names and bank accounts, said Charles Jones, a professor at Rutgers University Law School who is an expert on such lawsuits.

The skinheads pleaded guilty in 1989 to criminal charges in the racially motivated killing. On Monday the Multnomah County circuit jury found that Thomas Metzger of Fall Brook, Calif., the 52-year-old head of the Aryan group, and his son John, 22, had intentionally incited Portland skinheads to provoke confrontations with minority groups, and should therefore be financially liable for Mr. Seraw's death.

The jury ordered the elder Mr. Metzger to pay $5 million in punitive damages, his son to pay $1 million and two of the skinheads $500,000 each. The jury also awarded $3 million in punitive damages against the white supremacist group and $2.5 million in compensatory damages under a rule that authorizes a plaintiff to collect the money from any defendant who can pay it.

The civil suit was the latest and most important use of a strategy that has been used only two or three times: bankrupting white supremacist groups with enormous civil judgments. Four years ago, Mr. Dees, who works for the Southern Poverty Law Center and took no fee in this case, won a $7 million award in a wrongful death suit in Mobile, Ala., against the United Klans of America on behalf of a woman whose teen-age son had been lynched by Klan members.

'A Whole Separate Phase'

Mr. Seraw's father, Seraw Tekuneh, a 60-year-old farmer, flew from Ethiopia to Portland just in time to hear the jury announce its verdict. It was easy for many who watched him sit silently in the courtroom to imagine him flying home to Africa with a certified check for $12.5 million from the Aryan group's bank accounts.

Not so. "Winning the lawsuit was one thing," Professor Jones said. "Collecting on it is a whole separate phase of the action."

He added, "It could take years of very diligent monitoring to stay on top of the Metzgers, tracking their incoming contributions and making sure they don't commingle their funds with those of other groups that aren't subject to the judgment."

Mr. Dees said his legal team, none of whom will profit from the effort, was equal to the task. "We're going to be just as diligent collecting the money as we were in winning it," he said. "We'll get our pound of flesh."

The Metzgers have 14 days to put up a $12.5 million bond if they want to keep the judgment from being carried out. If they cannot put up that much bond — and no one contends that they can — seizure of assets can proceed even while they appeal the case. The Metzgers have said they will probably appeal.

What can Mr. Dees realistically expect to get for the Seraw family? Principally, the Metzgers' family home in California, two or three bank accounts in their name, cash contributions that continue to come in to a White Aryan Resistance post office box, and some of the Metzgers' personal property.

Property Sales and Wages

"We expect to seize the house, sell it off, and hand over the proceeds to the family in the next three or four months," said James McElroy, the San Diego lawyer who will oversee most of the collection efforts. But he added that under California law, a "homestead exemption" will give Mr. Metzger the first $45,000 in proceeds from a sheriff's sale of the property, presumably to be used for new lodgings.

The Seraw family will also be entitled to garnish 25 percent of any future wages earned by either of the Metgers as long as it takes to satisfy the judgment — a point that is unlikely to be reached.

"This applies more to John Metzger than to Tom, since John has been a wage earner," Mr. McElroy said. "Tom owns his own television repair business, which means he's not a wage earner in the strict sense of the term, and different rules may apply to the money he makes."

Even so, the elder Mr. Metzger could be forced to turn over the lion's share of any profits or investment income over and above what the courts determine he needs for food, shelter and working equipment. "If he wins the lottery or finds money on the street or makes a killing in the stock market, we'll be there with the sheriff," Mr. McElroy said.

"The reason we asked for so much, and the reason the jury gave it to us, is the signal it would send to the organized hate business," said Morris Dees, a lawyer for the plaintiffs.

Metzger, a television repairman from Fallbrook, Calif., represented himself in the trial, as did his son.

Metzger told jurors that if he were found liable, their own freedoms could be eroded. As an example, he said a juror could be sued for sending a co-worker out for coffee if that person then held up a convenience store.

The lead attorney for the plaintiffs was Morris Dees of the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Ala. Three years ago, Dees won a $7 million jury verdict against the United Klans of America after two Klansmen from Mobile, Ala., killed a 19-year-old black man.

John Metzger pledges to carry on racist fight

By Dee Anne Traitel
Tribune Staff Writer

Wearing shorts, a T-shirt and dirt-streaked white tennis shoes, white supremacist youth leader John Metzger sat on a low brick wall near his father's Fallbrook home and guessed that his most valuable possession is probably a gun worth $200.

"I don't even own this," he said motioning to the dusty, olive-colored car he had just pulled to the side of the road yesterday to talk to a reporter. "I have lived my whole life below the poverty line because I realized the less you have, the less people can take from you."

Whatever assets John and Tom Metzger do have will be the object of close scrutiny in coming weeks by attorneys out to collect $12.5 million in damages levied against the white supremacist father and son and two skinheads.

On Monday, a Portland, Ore., jury decided the Metzgers incited the racial violence that led to the clubbing death of 27-year-old Ethiopian immigrant Mulugeta Seraw by a group of skinheads on a Portland street in 1988.

Despite predictions by civil-rights groups that the jury's verdict will cripple the Metzger's Fallbrook-based white-supremicist network, known as White Aryan Resistance, John Metzger painted a different picture yesterday just hours after driving home from Portland with his father.

"They think they're going to drag us down, but we're going to continue to grow," Metzger said, adding that neither he nor his father is worried by the jury's verdict.

Indeed, at one point yesterday, the elder Metzger drove by in a station wagon with his wife and children. He smiled broadly and waved to his son.

"Hey, we're going to go celebrate, have some drinks and some Mexican food," he called out before driving off. John Metzger waved his father on and continued talking.

Metzger, 2½ months shy of his 23rd birthday and head of WAR's youth group, spoke calmly and matter-of-factly during an hour interview. The conviction of his controversial views advocating white separatism and the dismantling of the government and capitalism seems absolute.

When asked about the family's plans, Metzger replied: "That's probably the $10 million question. We have doors open to us all over the world. Who knows, maybe we'll move to Portland — they deserve some of our wrath."

As he had in court, Metzger continued to deny that he and his father sent a skinhead to Portland to agitate a group of Portland skinheads into violence against minorities.

"I don't like violence, I don't get involved in fights, I don't like to see people hurt," he said. "I wouldn't send someone to beat up non-whites, that's ridiculous. What would that do? They're not the problem, the politicians are the problem."

Metzger contends the jurors in Portland who ruled differently got caught up in the emotion of the trial and didn't decide the case on the facts.

"A couple of the jurors were crying when (Seraw's) uncle got up there to testify — how can you get a fair trial?" he asked. "After all the propaganda that's been printed about us, I don't think we could have gotten four jurors on our side anywhere in the country."

Metzger and his father — who represented themselves in their trial — owe more than $10 million as a result of the Portland verdict. John Metzger was ordered to pay $1 million, his father $5 million, and the group the elder Metzger formed, White Aryan Resistance, was assessed $3 million by the Portland jury.

Two of the skinheads who pleaded guilty to killing Seraw each were assessed $500,000. Jurors also awarded an additional $2.5 million to Seraw's family.

One man pleaded guilty to murder in Seraw's death and is serving a life sentence with a minimum of 20 years while two others pleaded guilty to manslaughter and were sentenced to 20 years each.

Southern Poverty Law Center attorney Morris Dees, who along with the Anti- Defamation League of B'nai B'rith sued the Metzgers and their followers on behalf of Seraw's family, hailed the verdict as the beginning of the end for the Metzgers.

Dees plans to push for the sale of the Metzger's house and car and other belongings to collect what he can of the jury award. Dees also hopes to garner the thousands of dollars in contributions that he contends the Metzgers have received from supporters.

But John Metzger contends that odd jobs — including brief part-time work at Hughes Aircraft, the San Onofre Nuclear Power Plant and a temporary help agency — have netted him only $5,000 to $6,000 a year. The elder Metzger is a television repairman who also claims limited income.

Still, John Metzger disputed Dees' claims of their movement's impending demise.

"Morris Dees may have won that skirmish, but the war, as we call it, is continuing to go forward," he said. "If anyone knows the Metzgers, they know that they simply change tactics. We base our lives around the movement."

Metzger said he and his father are already busy lining up support among their followers, and are at work on their next issue of their newspaper, WAR.

And Metzger predicted the jury's verdict will make the white separatist movement more violent.

"I'm just afraid this verdict is going to push a lot of frustrated people out there over the edge," he said. "It's going to force people who support us to become more fanatical, or radical or just not to care."

Dear Friend,

The show trial in Portland, Oregon of Tom & John Metzger has run its sordid course. The Metzgers were well aware of the uphill fight from the beginning. Unable to afford attorneys, even the press gave much credit to Tom & John in their handling of the case.

Remember, it's not over until it's over and Tom & John will fight on. They must purchase the transcript of the trial. The appeal process is already under way. This transcript must be purchased soon. The deadline for filing the appeal comes in less than 30 days. Tom & John will fight on no matter what, but this appeal will be critical to the future of White Separatists into the future. Join me and let's help Tom & John fight in the Oregon appeals court. These trial records are imperative; to file an appeal is expensive. Send all cash, checks and money orders to me and I will purchase the transcripts. Send to: Wyatt Kaldenberg, 1119 So. Mission Rd., #160, Fallbrook CA 92028.

The Portland Show Trial

The result of the civil lawsuit brought by Morris Dees against Tom and John Metzger was thoroughly predictable. Liberal state, liberal city, nigger judge, jury of scum. Morris Dees only brings cases where he has carefully scouted the ground beforehand and he is certain he can win. The result was fore-ordained and should surprise no one. There will be more of this kind of quasi-legal harassment against racial activists in the future. We must accept it, expect it, and prepare for it.

Although liberal and Zionist forces are proclaiming the Metzger case to be a complete victory, this simply isn't the case. For one thing, Tom and John Metzger threw a monkey wrench into the proceedings from the beginning by representing themselves and by refusing to shell out thousands of dollars for lawyers. It should be borne in mind that one of the major tactical objectives of these harassment lawsuits is to interdict ongoing White political activity by drawing away our scant financial resources and channeling our funds into the pockets of attorneys. Dees himself publicly admits this. The Metzgers refused to play ball and thus negated a major part of Dees' victory right there.

The ten million dollar award is equally meaningless. Unlike Robert Shelton and the U.K.A., Tom Metzger has avoided the real estate trap and is not encumbered with identifiable, seizable assets. I am not sufficiently familiar with the logistics of Metzger's operation to know whether or not his home and other personal property have been legally Dees-proofed, nor would I say so if I did know. There are many ways to do this under the law, such as placing one's property into a blind trust, the name of a spouse or other title transfer, a foundation, so forth and so on. There are also ways to safeguard such important assets as bank accounts, typesetting and office equipment, mailing lists, etc. I have sufficient confidence in the intelligence and ability of the Metzgers to believe that they will survive and carry on. Dees caused all kinds of problems for Dave Holland and his associates in Georgia, and yet Dave hasn't been stopped but has bounced right back. Dees-proofing is simply one more survival skill we are going to have to acquire.

I think, though, that we need to examine the contents of this case more closely. The specific allegation—i.e., that Tom and John Metzger allegedly incited Skinheads A, B, and C to go out one night and beat an Ethiopian monkoid to death—is, of course, pure Deesian horse hockey. Nor, I suspect, was the specific allegation meant to be taken seriously, least of all by the jury or the news media. This trial had nothing to do with law; it was political theater, and pretty much understood to be such by everyone involved. I find this lack of hypocrisy refreshing and encouraging. By forcing ZOG to drop even the barest pretense of balance and objectivity, the Metzgers scored a victory. In the moral sense it was a vast improvement over previous show trials, because the genuine objective of suppressing political dissent was never concealed or denied this time.

However, having said all of the preceding, let's face some possibly inconvenient and unpalatable facts. Anyone who has been reading Tom Metzger's publications over the past few years knows damned well that Metzger has been inciting these kids to violence for a long time now, not in specific cases but by creating an atmosphere romanticizing and encouraging spontaneous acts of street fighting and petty vandalism. I could cite examples from the canonization of the Geraldo Rivera chair-throwing incident to articles praising John Dillinger, of all the ridiculous things. I once point blank demanded of Metzger just what the hell he thought he was doing, and his answer was, "I'm trying to raise the temperature on the streets to the point where the system can't keep the lid on any more."

Okay, I can see his point, nor will I deny that Metzger has become the godfather of the Skinhead movement and he has to some degree succeeded in accomplishing that very objective. Nor do I deny that one bad aspect of being a general in any struggle is that one has to send young men out to their destruction. At some point we are going to have to acquire the ability and skill to make military as well as political decisions, hard ones.

What I question is the disparity in the White casualty rate as opposed to the actual amount of damage we are inflicting on the enemy. To my mind, a few re-decorated Jewish Community Centers or even a few dead niggers aren't anywhere near worth cumulative prison sentences totaling thousands of years for dozens of our best and bravest youngsters, including some of our young women, lest we forget. I've said it before and I'll say it again: we need a revolutionary army, not a Monty Python suicide squad.

My view is we need to start getting these youngsters' minds in shape for a long haul struggle and getting them trained, placed on a career track which will yield results years down the pike, and eventually put these kids into a position twenty years from now where they are carrying the briefcases and making the decisions, just like the left-wing Sixties generation is now. We don't need to be throwing them away on pointless acts of symbolic defiance like burning a cross on the lawn of some nigger and his White slut of a "wife" or kicking some monkoid's teeth in on a street corner. Skinhead-ism is the most encouraging thing to come along in years, precisely because it is an organic, natural expression of White youth rebellion—but it is only a phase and we need to concentrate on keeping these kids with the Movement once they grow out of that phase.

In any case, best luck to Tom and John. I don't agree with everything they do, but they've got style and persistence, and they'll pull this one out of the fire.

Yuletide Greetings

To Faithful old Friends . . . To cherished new Friends Our Best Wishes

During the year, in the rush of events, we tend to overlook the important friendships that are the true basis of business relationships. One of the great pleasures of the Holiday Season is the opportunity to exchange cordial greetings with those whose friendship and goodwill we value so highly.

In this spirit it is our pleasure to say "Thank You" and extend our sincere appreciation for the very pleasant association we enjoy with you.

May a bright and prosperous New Year bring happiness to you and to yours.

With deep appreciation

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

PHYSICIAN EXTRAORDINARY

I have just received a copy of a book that I overlooked for years, although it should have particularly attracted my attention. It is Adolf Hitler: the Medical Diaries, the Private Diaries of Dr. Theo Morell, edited by David Irving (London, Sidgwick & Jackson, s.a. [c. 1983?]).

In 1970-1971 I was concerned in an effort, on behalf of Dr. Röhrs, whose work I shall mention below, to locate Morell's diaries in the labyrinthine archives of expropriated German material in Washington, D.C. The attempt was unsuccessful, and I was inclined to suspect, it seems unjustly, that the diaries were being intentionally kept secret.

The eminent historian, David Irving, was more fortunate. The diaries, which he had long sought in vain, were found in the files of the notorious Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (often called "Phew!") in 1981 and finally sent to the National Archives.

The diaries are evidence in an important historical problem which, I am sorry to say, Mr. Irving has not directly confronted, and I am not sure whether his opinion is to be deduced from what he does not say.

When Adolf Hitler became Chancellor in January 1933, he was a man of forty-three, and had survived experiences that permanently impair or ruin the health of many men. He had undergone great privations in his youth and early manhood; had been gassed and severely wounded in the First World War, in which he exhibited such courage that he, although only a corporal, was awarded the Iron Cross, First Class.[1] And for eleven years he had dedicated himself to an arduous task that alone suffices to break the health of lesser men.[2] He converted a tiny group of assorted malcontents into a political party that won power with the ardent support of the overwhelming majority of the German people. That required not only political genius and the indefinable force of personality that we call charisma, but extraordinary powers of physical stamina, nervous energy, and mental vitality.

When Hitler came to power, he seemed to be, and probably was, in excellent physical health, and of his abundant nervous and intellectual energy there can be no doubt.

Although he bore a crushing and terrible burden of responsibility while he made a great, but impoverished and crippled, nation again prosperous and strong, although World Jewry, with its unappeasable hatred of our race, had immediately declared war on it, and bore an even greater burden after the world's vampires succeeded in forcing on Germany a war against nations that were certainly more wealthy and apparently more powerful, there is no sure evidence that Hitler's vitality was seriously impaired before July 1941, when, while visiting the Eastern Front, he contracted a contagious disease that is not infrequently lethal, through the covering layer of Jewish slime that is mandatory in all publications that are intended for general sale to the misinformed public. There are innumerable works devoted to him alone. You will, of course, disregard the output of professional liars, such as Rauschnig's Voice of Destruction, and Yiddish forgeries, such as "Thyssen's" I Paid Hitler, but when you come to books written by men who were associated with Hitler, you must make careful allowance for the author's natural self-interest, for what he felt obliged to say to avert persecution or murder, and finally for what was dictated by his timorous publisher to avoid boycott or ruin. I can think of no more concise an antidote to prevalent lies than the memorial issue of Liberty Bell dated 20 April 1989 (available from Liberty Bell Publications, $8.00 + $1.50 for postage).

2. An acquaintance of mine was a close friend of the founder of one of the many ephemeral efforts to organize a popular movement that would make the United States again an independent nation; he quotes his friend as saying, "When I began, I did not consider myself even middle-aged [in his middle forties]; when I quit, four years later, I was an old man."

producing prolonged and violent dysentery, persistent fever, nausea, occasional periods of fainting and temporary unconsciousness, physical prostration, and, it appears, coronary sclerosis.[3]

Hitler was thus prostrated at the most critical juncture in the war, and he was unable to overrule and control his generals about the strategy to be employed in the thus-far victor-

3. The fatal timing of this virulent infection naturally arouses suspicion. None of the poisons in common use would produce the recorded symptoms, and while my very limited knowledge of toxicology does not extend to the more recherché, much less to the secret, poisons, I doubt that any pharmakon could have been the cause. If you are unwilling to accept the infection as a disastrous coincidence, you should think of the possible introduction of deadly bacteria in food as a means of disabling and possibly killing Hitler. Although it seems to have occurred to no one, the possibility that Hitler was the victim of an attempted bacteriological assassination should not be dismissed out of hand. The Courrier du Continent, September 1990, reports an article in Figaro by Mondher Sfar, an honest and courageous Jew, who knows that the "Holocaust" is just a gigantic hoax by the Zionist part of his race, and that the "gas chambers" were only containers for disinfecting the clothing of persons confined in the concentration camps. He cites the "Mitkiewicz Report" of 7 September 1943 as proof that a favorite weapon of the underground resistance to the German army of occupation in Poland was the use of the germs of typhus to contaminate anything that would come into the possession of the Germans, who, incidentally, were protecting Jews from Polish vengeance. (This underground consisted chiefly of Jews, many of whom had an inherited or acquired immunity to the dire disease, which was endemic among the Jews in Poland; see the article by Friedrich Paul Berg in Liberty Bell, May 1989. They could thus handle the germs of typhus with some confidence of impunity.) This proves the practice of bacteriological warfare in Poland, close to the Eastern Front that Hitler visited, and infections other than typhus could have been used for special efforts, perhaps seconded by German traitors, such as those which later attempted an assassination by planting a bomb near him. So far as I know, the disease that struck down Hitler could have been one of the several varieties of typhus. All varieties, if I am correctly informed, are caused by rickettsia (a peculiar kind of very minute bacteria), which in Poland was carried by the cherished body lice of which the heartless Germans so ruthlessly deprived the Jews and filthy Poles who had raised them on their unwashed bodies. The symptoms of typhus vary so widely in individual cases that no sure deduction can be drawn from Dr. Morell's record, assuming that it is accurate. On the treatment of cases of typhus by German physicians, see the article (really a booklet) by Mr. Berg in Liberty Bell and his earlier article in the Journal for Historical Review, September 1986.

ious war against the Soviet Empire. It is quite likely that Göring was right in his belief that had Hitler's original strategy been followed, "the eastern campaign would have been decided by early 1942 at the latest." It would be one of history's greatest ironies, if microscopic bacteria were responsible for the catastrophe that may have doomed our race and civilization.

From that infection, Hitler never fully recovered, and it at least contributed to recurrent maladies that occasionally prostrated him thereafter. His physique was shattered by the dastardly attempt to murder him on 20 July 1944, made by a pack of infamous traitors who are now honored as heroes by the pack of traitors that now misgovern the two thirds of Germany that were recently reunited. The injuries that he received were more serious than the public was permitted to know at the time, and from these also he never fully recovered.

To men who knew him in 1940 and 1941, Hitler appeared remarkably younger than his years; in the later part of 1944 he was a prematurely old man. According to Naval Captain Assmann, "The rot...set in on the 20th of July." In his last days, Hitler was, in Irving's summary, "a nervous ruin....a physical wreck who could barely walk, doing so with a stooped back and shuffling gait, his right leg dragging, his head shaking, and his left hand violently trembling on the limply dragging arm." That he retained, at least at moments, his old lucidity is proved by the "testament" in which he, shortly before his death, warned the American people of the consequences of their crime against civilization. They, however, do not even honor him as a prophet.

This record inevitably raises the question to what extent Hitler's physicians contributed to, or even caused, the rapid deterioration of his health and vitality. And that question focuses attention on Hitler's favorite and personal physician, Dr. Theodore Morell. Captain Assmann, whom I quoted above, went on to say that "the rot...was made only worse by the questionable treatments and methods of Dr. Morell."

The Captain, who had accompanied Hitler and, with him, survived the traitors' bomb, was not a physician, but his opinion was shared by all of the physicians who treated Hitler during the war, and a group of them went to Hitler and emphatically warned him that Morell's drugs were destroying him physically and perhaps mentally. The unexpected result was that Hitler affirmed his unlimited confidence in Morell and dismissed his critics, almost ruining some of them.

Unfortunately for our inquiry, the man best qualified to criticize Morell's medication of Hitler, Professor Dr. Karl Brandt, was murdered by the Americans. His assistant and colleague, Dr. Hasselbach, survived the furor Americanus, but seems to have written no medical critique of Morell's methods, although he, while admitting Morell's success in curing nervous complaints, charged that "in many cases he [Morell] suggested to patients that they were suffering from a serious malady which he then successfully cured." Professor Erwin Giesing, who tended Hitler immediately after the bomb plot and was close to him for two years, was alienated by what seemed to him Hitler's unfair and irrational reaction to his concern and rather courageous attempt to warn Hitler against a favorite whom he regarded as a quack. (Hitler, in fact, accused the worried physicians of jealousy of Morell and professional dishonesty in intriguing to take his place.) He wrote, however, in an unpublished manuscript that Mr. Irving used, that "Morell converted the largely healthy man that Hitler had earlier been into one constantly plied with injections and fed with tablets which made Hitler more or less dependant on him; he played on Hitler's neuropathic nature by spouting utter rubbish about how Hitler's extremely heavy work load meant he was burning energy at the same rate as people in the tropics, and that the lost energy had to be replaced by all sorts of injections like iodine, vitamins, calcium, heart- and liver-extract, and hormones."

The simplest question is one that commonly arises when celebrities in the theatre or arts die prematurely. One remembers that the actress called Marilyn Monroe, whose aspirations to become a Mrs. Kennedy were terminated by her sudden and mysterious death, had been treated by two physicians (one also a psychiatrist), who gave their patient potent drugs, one of which produced effects that were precisely antithetical to the effects of the other, thus naturally causing physical and nervous stresses that gravely affected her health and may have destroyed her emotional stability. More recently the death of an attractive though gullible actress has been imputed, in part, at least, to the work of her physicians.

A problem in medical ethics is presented by "society doctors," who are often accused of pleasing the patient and perhaps multiplying treatments, even at the expense of his welfare. The accusations are sometimes, perhaps often, justified.

It was in the later 1950s, as I recall, that I met by chance a former student of mine, and when we had cocktails and dinner together, he was lavish in praise of his physician, who, he said, was a prominent "society doctor" and always made him "feel good." I learned that whenever the man felt less than buoyant, he went to the physician, who gave him an hypodermic injection of cortisone (or could it have been cortisol?). If you are a physician, I need say no more. If you are not, I will add that while cortisone, by accelerating the metabolism of carbohydrates and fats, does produce a sense of euphoria, when a healthy man receives frequent injections of cortisone, the almost invariable result, according to my medical friends, is deterioration of both kidneys and liver, which may trigger a wide variety of diseases.[4] The man died about ten years later, but I did not learn the cause of his decease.

Morell was undoubtedly a very popular and prosperous "society doctor," and proprietor of two profitable pharmaceutical plants, when he became Hitler's personal physician and began almost constant attendance on him.[5] He was undeniably an aficionado of hypodermic syringes, and he continually injected his illustrious patient, sometimes daily, with glucose and a multitude of other drugs. In an appendix, Mr. Irving lists and briefly describes the physiological effects of the seventy-three drugs which Morell administered to Hitler in 1941-1945, according to Morell's records.[6]

Mr. Irving concludes that "Many of Morell's medicines were quite harmless, and he injected the others in such minute quantities [i.e., the comparatively small doses recorded in the diary] they would have been virtually useless." This despite the fact that one of these drugs, a sulphonamide (sulphamethylthiazol), manufactured by a Jewish pharmaceutical firm in Budapest in which Morell had a proprietary interest, was known as early as 1940 to damage the kidneys and nervous system, but Morell nevertheless administered it lavishly to all his patients, including Hitler, even for common colds, presumably hoping that its deleterious effects would be mitigated by a high intake of liquids. In this one instance, indeed, Hitler perceived how adversely the drug affected him and refused to take any more of it.

5. The immediate occasion was Hitler's frequent cases of nervous indigestion, which he himself sensibly recognized as probably caused by tension and worry. (A physician to whom I once mentioned the cases of Darwin, Carlyle, and perhaps one or two others, remarked, "Nervous indigestion is the occupational disease of men who work intensively with their brains, particularly if they do not take sufficient pleasurable exercise while excluding intellectual problems from their consciousness.") Hitler was also suffering from eczema, which, too, is sometimes of psychosomatic origin. Morell undertook to cure him of both within a year. Hitler thought that he did, and was accordingly grateful to him, even while his own health was constantly declining.

6. The list strangely omits strychnine and atropine, perhaps because their effects are so well known, or perhaps because Irving relied on a Dr. Schmidt, who seems to have pronounced them harmless (in small doses). The list includes a drug called 'Cortiron,' which Morell gave by hypodermic "a few times." I suspect that it may have been a corticosteroid, but do not know. Irving also notes that Morell often injected Hitler with a drug of unknown composition, called "Vitamultin-forte" in his records, presumably vitamins plus unnamed ingredients, but he does not speculate about what these may have been. Part of the compound could have been 'Pervitin'; cf. Note 7 infra.

Granting that the drugs listed in the diary were not likely to harm at any one time in the small doses Morell records, routine administration of some of them very frequently and sometimes daily could have produced a cumulatively adverse physiological effect as well as a psychologically deleterious dependence on them. Mr. Irving seems to accept Morell's clinical diary as an authentic record, although he notes that Morell compiled it and multiplied copies of it for use to defend himself, if he should be accused of misconduct. If Morell did dose Hitler with a noxious drug called Pervitin'[7] as Captain Assmann suspected, he would naturally have refrained from noting it in a record he was keeping to justify himself in a possible investigation.

The question is complicated by Morell's personal traits. He had mastered the art of ingratiating himself with his patients and impressing them with the profundity of his iatric expertise, but he was personally unprepossessing, especially to Aryan eyes. He persistently denied, perhaps truthfully, that he was a Jew.[8] He had a swarthy complexion, was corpulent and even obese, and was a glutton who "ate like a pig." He was timorous, and when Hitler traveled by air, his physician remained on the ground; that was how Drs.

7. 'Pervitin' was the trade name of a stimulant similar to amphetamine; it was highly addictive and was found to cause serious and permanent damage, and was classified as one of the dangerous narcotics of which the use in Germany was restricted by law in 1941.

8. What the Americans did to Morell when he fell into their bloody hands is not evidence. Eichmann, whom God's terrorists kidnapped in Argentina to show their contempt for Aryan governments and Aryan law, took to the Holy Land, and eventually murdered to advertise their Holohoax, was almost certainly a Jew. The Chosen never hesitate to sacrifice members of their own race for the "good of the Jewish people," and, of course, they have only contempt for their White tools, scrapping them as soon as they are no longer useful. Morell had many wealthy Jewish patients, some of whom he continued to treat for years after he became Hitler's physician, and when he was first launched on his successful career in Berlin, he purchased a villa at Heringsdorf, a spa so infested with the Yids that Aryans shunned it. Neither of these facts is probative; they can be explained as natural in a "society doctor," moderately wealthy by marriage and determined to become more wealthy professionally.

Brandt and Hasselbach, who were Hitler's medical escorts, acquired their knowledge of him as a patient.[9]

Morell was a basically vulgar man. His childish vanity made him design for himself a polychrome uniform that would have won applause on the stage of a comic opera, and he was aggrieved when the Schutzstaffel would not permit him to adorn it with its proud symbol, the fulgurant SS. It was also vanity, no doubt, that made him the possessor of Germany's only electron microscope, which he never used and probably did not know how to use.

He was mercenary, perhaps avaricious. He used his illustrious patient to force on the German army the doubtless salubrious vitamins manufactured by one of his pharmaceutical plants,[10] a drug that he falsely described as the equal of penicillin, and a worthless insecticide, manufactured in enormous amounts in a factory commandeered and given to Morell at Hitler's order.[11] And Dr. Brandt, before the Americans murdered him, described Morell as a "greedy business man, not a physician," and reported that Morell had proposed to send patients to him for surgical operations and mutual profit; although the practice is now common in the United States, Dr. Brandt thought it unethical and indignantly refused.

It will be obvious that if Morell was not a Sheeny, he certainly resembled one in both personality and conduct; he was the kind of individual whom healthy Aryans instinct-

9. Dr. Giesing, an ophthalmologist and otologist, was the specialist who treated Hitler for injuries caused by the assassins' bomb.

10. He sold these vitamins, which contained ascorbic acid obtained from the Wehrmacht's strategic reserves and lemon juice, probably from the same source, to the troops by the billion. On 23 January 1944, for example, his plant was working on orders for 460,000,000 vitaminic lozenges; on 29 April of that year, it was filling orders for 696,164,616 lozenges.

11. The exasperated Wehrmacht seems to have arranged for an empirical test of the marvellous and sickeningly malodorous insecticide; lice were confined in a box of the insecticide: "after twenty-four hours, the lice crawled out in rollicking spirits."

ively dislike and contemn. That fact must be taken into account in any sincere effort to judge him as Hitler's physician.

It cannot be denied that Morell, quite apart from his success with psychosomatic patients, did effect genuine cures, largely because he was willing to employ new therapeutic agents, such as vitamins,[12] especially if they were manufactured by one of his pharmaceutical plants. It is also undeniable that Morell often behaved as a quack.

I think we must concede that Morell's medical services were highly deleterious to his great patient. Mr. Irving twice remarks (pp. 140, 213) that on the rare occasions when Morell was ill or otherwise unable to attend Hitler, "his patient's health seemed to improve quite rapidly." Hitler, unfortunately, seems not to have drawn the inevitable inference from the fact that "as soon as Morell ceased visiting, Hitler's health improved."

Morell's ascendency over Hitler from the first until shortly before the end,[13] seems inexplicable, even when we know that the wily physician was wont to lecture Hitler on the magnitude of his burden of responsibility, and to avow that he, Morell, was the only physician in the world who

12. I do not know what was the general attitude toward vitamins among German physicians at this time, except that Göring's physician, Dr. Erich Hippke, knew how much of vitamins B and C were needed to meet an adult's daily requirements. That suggests that the efficacy of vitamins was recognized in Germany. At about the same time, the American Medical Association was engaged in a campaign to laugh away the use of vitamins as a silly fad sponsored by crackpots to the detriment of the medical profession, since the useless substances could unfortunately be bought without a prescription. I remember that an honest and competent physician, whom I liked, was taken in by the Association's propaganda, which ridiculed the notion that foodstuffs could affect health. He assured me that all one needed to do was eat in restaurants, all of which served balanced meals, planned by expert dieticians. He was taken aback when I asked him about lemons and scurvy.

13. When Hitler bade Morell to be gone, he was probably angered by the man's pavidity. Morell eagerly availed himself of the opportunity to escape from the bunker under Berlin and was flown to a place of temporary safety. He probably regretted his escape after he fell into the hands of the Americans.

understood the physical consequences of that burden and could enable Hitler to bear them. He even had the effrontery to claim that, but for him, Germany would have been finished in the first years of the war!

Hitler was certainly not a fool, although he was often uncritically indulgent toward men whom he esteemed and in whom he had confidence, and, as an Aryan, felt an obligation of gratitude and loyalty to men who seemed (e.g., Admiral Canaris!) loyal and devoted to him. But how can he have failed to be repelled by Morell's shameless vaunts? That, it seems to me, can be explained only as a continuation of the almost total ascendency over Hitler that Morell established from the very first.

Disregarding the unverifiable report that Morell was a friend of Professor Haushofer, the friend and teacher of Rudolph Hess, and that Hitler thus knew him and accepted him as a patriotic German in the 1920s, long before he first became Morell's patient in the later 1930s, that ascendency, it seems to me, can be explained only by Morell's early success in alleviating Hitler's nervous indigestion and his unorthodox medication, which, although medically certain to be eventually disastrous, gave his patient a temporary surge of energy when he was weary, calmed him when he was anxious, and induced euphoria when he was worried. I think of the former student whom I mentioned above and his virtual addiction to cortisone.[14]

14. Mr. Irving speaks of Hitler's willingness to accept such unorthodox medication as connected with his general scepticism about the competence of professionals. He does not observe that when Hitler insisted on strategy that petrified the veteran generals of the Army, he was invariably right and the professionals were proved wrong. The one exception is not, strictly speaking, a question of military strategy. He certainly made an enormous and fatal blunder when he chivalrously permitted the shattered British army to escape from Dunkirk, and we in retrospect can see that at that point he lost the war (given, of course, the sequence of future events that were, at that time, unpredictable). Why he did so is less commonly understood. His knowledge of Britain had been almost entirely derived from English culture (literature, art, philosophy, science) and British history (i.e., what Britain had been in the past). Even that knowledge was severely limited because he did not read fluently or at all the requisite languages (Eng-

That Morell's medication at least contributed greatly to, if it was not the primary cause of, the deterioration of Hitler's health seems certain.

That poses the question whether he did so as a quack or deliberately as an enemy agent. That, astonishingly, is a question that Mr. Irving ignores, unless we are to assume that his silence is to be taken as a rejection of any suggestion of Morell's guilt.

The historian's evasion of the crucial question is the more astonishing since he cannot but have been aware of the impressive and medically explicit book by Dr. Hans-Dietrich Röhrs, who, as one of the last living members of the Reichsgesundheitsführung, undertook to establish what he regarded as an historically certain fact in his Hitler, die Zerstörung einer Persönlichkeit (Nekargemünd, Vowinckel, 1965), of which the second edition appeared under the title Hitler's Krankheit (ibid., 1966). The first of these was translated into French, Portuguese, and perhaps other languages at the time, but no English translation has thus far appeared.

Hitler bore the awful responsibility of commanding the last great effort to save our race and civilization from the crazed members of that race who were determined to destroy lish, French, Latin) and had never resided in England. (Although it is not applicable here, please note the distinction between residence and travel; mere travel in a foreign country, even if extensive, will not significantly augment your knowledge of it, and is quite likely to distort it.) With the exception of persons who have resided for some years in a foreign country, whether England or Arabia or Japan, and have paid close attention to quotidian events, especially in the behavior of its government (and that excludes most men who, for example, may have lectured at Oxford or been consultants on electronic equipment in Germany), our conception of a foreign country depends, first of all, on our knowledge of its culture and history (both largely of the past, and possibly obsolete now), and that in turn may well depend on our linguistic instincts; e.g., we have a preference either for languages that are analytical and only rarely form compounds (English, French, Latin) or languages that are synthetic and more or less freely admit compounds (German, Greek, Sanskrit). And even an extensive knowledge of a nation's culture and history is not likely to disclose the extent of covert Jewish sabotage in either past or present. These facts must be taken into consideration before we judge Hitler for his fatal blunder.

both, and it is admittedly difficult, almost impossible, to estimate the effects of that burden on a conscientious and resolute man, but Dr. Röhrs, an eminent physician of long experience, on the basis of careful consideration of the slow alteration of Hitler's health and personality, compared with the known effects of 'Pervitin' and similar narcotics, came to the conclusion that Morell deliberately and with malice prepense gradually poisoned Hitler to cause the defeat of Germany and of all that depended on that nation. The book will, I think, convince any objective reader that Dr. Röhrs' conclusions must be taken into account.

I am equally astonished that Mr. Irving simply ignores another fact which can be variously explained, but cannot be simply disregarded by an historian.

Morell, as I have said, escaped from the bunker under Berlin, but he fell into the hands of the Americans, who not only subjected him to brutal interrogation, but tortured him atrociously. He was eventually imprisoned in Dachau, which is infamous, not for what the Germans are said to have done to Jews, but for what Americans there did to Germans. He said that, among other things, they pulled out his toenails, one by one. We may hope, of course, that the torturer was not an American, but one of the innumerable Sheenies in American uniforms and with commissioned rank that the Americans loosed on the German people, but we cannot be sure of that. After all, the Americans were engaged in a holy war for the holy people, and they normally lose all contact with humanity when they have been pumped up with righteousness.

Mr. Irving has seen the records of the interrogations to which Morell was subjected, and he must know that, according to reports which have never been questioned, Morell, when first arrested, averred that he loved Jews and that he had "deliberately poisoned" and destroyed Hitler with his drugs to procure the defeat of Germany.

Now, needless to say, that confession could be only a frightened man's attempt to ingratiate himself with captors whose savagery he may have already suspected. And it is also possible that the atrocious tortures to which he was later subjected were attempts to elicit from him confessions that would implicate prominent Germans, defile the memory of the dead and traduce the living, whom the Americans intended to murder after an obscene parody of a trial to establish the legal rule that the comfort and whims of God's People are divine law that supersedes all human laws, ethics, and even decency.[15]

Mr. Irving must have known of this purported confession. His silence is astounding, the more because he does know that Major Cortez Enloe of American Military Intelligence contributed to Collier's, one of the two leading and most widely circulated weekly magazines, an article, published in the issue for 4 May 1946, in which he stated that "there is some evidence that Himmler, the Gestapo chief, Martin Bormann, Hitler's executive officers, and the ill-famed Dr. Morell conspired in a plot slowly to poison the Führer... It is certain that the daily dose of drugs hastened the collapse of Hitler's personality."

If we are Aryans and uninfected by the lofty idealism of Bushy and his kind, we must feel, as does Mr. Irving, compassion for Morell. When his wife was finally permitted to see him for a few moments, under the supervision of two uniformed thugs who enjoyed insulting and mocking her, he was no longer sane and could only repeat over and over again that he thought her dead. Mr. Irving plausibly suggests that he had been subjected to one of the Americans' favorite amusements. The prisoner was forced to listen, sometimes for hours, to piercing screams from the adjoining room, which, he was told, were the cries of his wife as she was being tortured and finally killed because he would not give them information he did not have—or just because they wanted some fun to relieve the monotony of their days.

15. They may have wished to implicate all the Germans mentioned in Major Enloe's article, which I mention below. Morell would doubtless have obliged, but, terrorized and apparently seriously ill, he would have been unable to invent plausible perjury about matters of which he knew nothing. The confession, whether true or false, gave rise to absurd stories. The New York Times, 24 May 1945, reported from Flensburg that Morell had helped Hitler commit suicide by injecting him with a lethal drug, and had then, with the aid of Hitler's adjutant, secretly buried the body. Of course, when Hitler died, Morell had run as far away as he could.

Morell was no longer rational, could no longer read or write, could not speak intelligibly, and was partly paralysed when the Americans decided it wasn't worthwhile to murder him, as they murdered a number of German physicians to create an atrocity story for the boobs back home. They simply dumped him in the waiting room of the railway station in Munich. He was eventually taken by a compassionate woman to the hospital in Tegernsee, where the human wreck ceased to live on 26 May 1948.[16]

We pity him, but there remains the confession, which might, after all, have been true,[17] and the record that Dr. Röhrs studied.

16. Note that if Morell's condition after his release is correctly reported by Irving, that invalidates one point in Dr. Röhrs' position: if a document submitted in Morell's name from Tegernsee contains a statement or intimation that he deserved gratitude for having poisoned and destroyed Hitler, he cannot have been capable of making such a statement rationally. It also casts doubt on the purported interview with him published in the New York Times, 22 May 1945, according to which he denied such guilt but was paradoxically terrified because "the Gestapo, the SS, and Heinrich Himmler were out to get him."

17. The callous disposal of Morell does not indicate anything about the accuracy of the confession. Righteous idealists, unlike the wicked "Nazis," never feel obligation or gratitude to their servants and simply scrap the tools when they are no longer useful. — Not all Americans were dehumanized. I am reliably informed that a certain Colonel Philby was at least human enough to be attracted by one of the prisoners, the famous German aviatrix, Hanna Reitsch, and to have wished to win her regard. He secretly showed her the text of Morell's confession, and agreed to her suggestion that it should be submitted, under a seal of absolute secrecy for a century, to a committee of physicians competent to judge its accuracy. She said that he made that suggestion to the commander of the prison and immediately disappeared, having presumably been courtmartialed for his indiscretion or humanity. Furthermore, Professor Robert Kempner, a Jew who was one of the "prosecutors" who performed in the obscene farce that preceded the murders at Nuremberg, is said to have affirmed, as from official knowledge, that Morell deliberately drugged Hitler with 'Pervitin' and made him addicted to that and other narcotics, and furthermore injected massive doses of dextrose to darken his powers of judgement disastrously. I have not seen a copy of Kempner's Das dritte Reich auf der Anklangebank, which may contain that statement.

Dr. Röhr's conclusions receive some substantiation from Morell's known connections. His closest friend was a gynaecologist named Dr. Wohlgemuth, who was eventually discovered to have been a member of the famous Communist espionage and murder organization, "Die rote Kapelle," and who somehow inherited Morell's office on Kurfürstendamm. Morell's friend and chief chemist at his pharmaceutical plant in Olmütz, Dr. Kurt Mulli, was identified, as Mr. Irving does not tell us, as a Communist (Jewish?) agent and accomplice in the escape of Dr. Otto John in 1954. A scrutiny of Morell's circle of associates would probably reveal other connections. There is finally the consideration that Morell, even if a cynical quack, was sufficiently competent in medicine to know what effects his drugs would have on Hitler. Even if he did not administer 'Pervitin' or a similar drug in his unexplained "Vitamultin-forte," he must have known the probable consequences of injecting a man with glucose and "harmless" drugs every day.

I do not affirm that Dr. Röhrs is correct. As I have said, every datum can be explained in more than one way. Morell's diary may be either an accurate clinical record or precisely what a scoundrel or traitor would prepare as evidence of his innocence. The disease that struck down Hitler in July 1941, whether contracted by accident or murderously induced, may have inflicted damage that no therapeutic art could repair, or it may have given Morell an opportunity to intensify and prolong its effects, and thus to begin the destruction of Hitler's body and mind in earnest. The same is true of the attempted assassination in July 1944, its effects augmented by the traumatic discovery of treason among his closest and most trusted associates, and the horror of having seen loyal friends horribly mutilated and dead or dying.

Dr. Röhrs, however, is a man of distinction and courage, and his work will impress you with his knowledge of pathology and his absolute honesty in his analysis of the record, whether or not he is right. I have written now because I want you to be aware of an important historical question, and, if you have read or will read Mr. Irving's book, I urge you also to read the book by Dr. Röhrs that he so strangely fails to mention.

TRAGEDY AND TERROR

The great catastrophe of 1945, which may have doomed our race to extinction, is generally explained as the ineluctable result of the overwhelming force of crazed Aryans whom the Jews had mobilized against Germany and the great man whom Francis Parker Yockey perceptively styled the Hero of the Second World War.[1] But there are doubts. For one thing, there is the question of timing and the probable consequences of the accidental or contrived malady that immobilized Hitler at the most critical juncture of that War.[2]

Now undoubtedly the major immediate cause of Germany's defeat was her loss of superiority in the air, which exposed her cities and factories to destruction by the Anglo-Americans who had repudiated treaties and the concept of civilized warfare in their frantic advance to Judaic barbarism. It is not by any means clear that Germany's fatal loss of command of the air was necessarily due to the quantity or quality of airplanes produced by the Judaeo-Communists' factories in Britain and the United States. The fatal loss of superiority in air power must to some extent have been the responsibility of Hitler's second in command, Hermann Göring, who was the Minister in charge of the German Air Force, and whose strangely excessive devotion to dive bombers, which seemed to him to be a romantic revival of knighthood, is well known.

In Liberty Bell, February 1989, I noted that Göring's biographer, Charles Bewley, admitted that an unnamed "technician among the [German] generals" prevented the new Heinkel bombers from being ready in time for use against Russia by insisting on militarily nugatory but aeronautically drastic modifications of their design. Bewley did not see that this was almost certainly an act of sabotage, and that the "technician" was probably one of the covert traitors who contrived disasters to Germany.[3]

The sabotage consisted in requiring that the Heinkel plane be redesigned to permit its use as both a high-level bomber and a dive bomber. This was equivalent to demanding a horse that was both a Percheron and a Hunter. The aircraft thus produced, after a long and perhaps fatal delay, were less efficient as high-level bombers and I think it likely that no one was ever mad enough to use them for dive bombing.

For that sabotage Göring must bear the responsibility, since he obviously could have overruled the "technician," but we are inclined to attribute his acquiescence to his romantic notions about dive bombing, which, of course, is feasible only with much smaller and lighter planes.

Göring, furthermore, was incompetent. General Hans Bauer, who was the pilot whom Hitler trusted, in the book reviewed in my article, reports that German aviators were well aware of the incapacity and slothful blundering of the man who was chief of the Air Force, and that Göring himself was aware of his own disqualification for the post he held. He once said to Bauer, "I must honestly confess that I have little notion of contemporary aircraft and their capabilities. The newer developments are way over my head." But he did not resign, and continued to impose on Hitler's loyalty to an old comrade, probably telling himself that his own incompetence was not important, since he relied on experts who gave him advice he could not comprehend!

Bauer further reports that when the Jew-driven British and Americans, repudiating Western civilization, became savages and made war against German civilians, women, and children with disastrous effect, Hitler gave categorical orders that the great German aeronautical engineer, Messerschmidt be supplied with the material requisite for the manufacture of planes that could successfully defend Germany, but the order was not obeyed, although Bauer is certain the materials were available and in the possession of the Air Ministry. By implication, Bauer suspects that Field Marshal Erhard Milch, who had been Göring's friend in the First World War and who thus became Göring's second in command and the expert on whom Göring relied, was responsible for blocking Hitler's order. On the other hand, General Remer, who notes that there were many traitors ensconced in the Air Ministry, seems not to number Milch among them—possibly because Milch echoed Hitler's denunciation of the shocking inferiority of the German Air Force when the Anglo-Americans' savage bombing raids began, and openly accused Göring of being responsible.[4]

3. The terrible prevalence of treason by mad or suborned Germans in 1939-1945 is catalogued (incompletely) in the book by General Otto Ernst Remer which was reviewed by Dr. Charles E. Weber in Liberty Bell, June 1987, and which is mentioned at the opening of my article in February 1989.

The question is now solved in the December 1990 issue of Hans Schmidt's GANPAC Brief, which reproduces photographically an article printed in the Saturday Evening Post, 8 April 1950, when the Yids' scaly claws had not yet entirely strangled American journalism and it was still possible for a prominent magazine to print articles that they had not censored. James P. O'Donnell reported an interview with Willy Messerschmidt, perhaps the world's foremost aeronautical engineer. The historical consequences of the revelations almost incidentally included in that article are drastic.

Americans are so proud of the jet aircraft they were able to build after the War, when they had access to German plans and German models, jet airplanes that had been manufactured in 1944 and 1945 and had survived the war, in which they, though few in number, admittedly achieved such success and evinced such great superiority over the British and Americans' propeller-driven planes that they terrified the barbarians' commanders, and the Anglo-American bombers were given as their important mission the destruction of the factory in which the revolutionary German planes were produced.

4. See Goebbels' Diaries, translated by Lewis Lochner (New York, Doubleday, 1948), especially the entry for 9 April 1943. Part of the responsibility for the technical incompetence was unjustly placed upon General Ernst Udet, who was in charge of the technological part of the Air Ministry, and who committed suicide or was suicided early in 1941.

Messerschmidt revealed to the reporter the crucial fact that his jet planes were not developed late in the war, but were ready for production in 1939-1941. According to Messerschmidt, who certainly knew, Germany was denied planes that would have maintained and guaranteed her superiority in the air by Marshall Milch, who, even as late as the beginning of the German preëmptive attack on Russia in 1941, furiously denounced Messerschmidt's jet airplanes, declaring that the war had already been won (!), that too many planes were being produced (!), and categorically forbidding Messerschmidt to plan "radical" new types of aircraft, accusing him of "profiteering motives." General Udet, who was present, supported Messerschmidt, predicting that if Germany did not get the superior planes into production at once, the war that Milch thought won in 1941 would be lost in 1943. Milch even forbade Udet to talk to their superior, Göring! This was about two months before Udet committed suicide or was suicided.

Milch continued to prevent the production of jet and rocket aircraft through 1942, even threatening to have Messerschmidt arrested, if he criticized the Air Ministry's insistence on a limited production of planes already obsolete. And he successfully prevented production of planes vastly superior to anything the Anglo-Americans had or could learn how to build—prevented Germany from defending herself effectively against aerial assault until it was too late and the barbarians' destruction of Germany from the air was already proof that the war had been lost.

It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that Milch was almost certainly a traitor and, with Admiral Canaris, one of the principal architects of Germany's defeat and our race's disaster.

Milch was a Mischling, a hybrid, son of a Jew and a White mother, but his old comrade and good friend, Hermann Göring, had the records falsified to make Milch his mother's bastard son. And it is highly significant that Milch, who owed his position and high rank to Göring, constantly worked to undermine his dear friend and patron by devious intrigues.

Milch was ostensibly a "fanatical Nazi" and Göring, who had become a vain bon vivant, was confident of his loyalty. One suspects that Milch had inherited a racial talent for duplicity and treachery.

One wonders how many other traitors in Germany were really Mischlinge, perhaps even fractionally so, through a grandparent or great-grandparent. And one is reminded again of the most urgent of all problems in genetics, that of testing the terrible certainty of an eminent Jewish scientist, Dr. Alfred Nossig, that even a drop of Jewish blood will poison and deform the mentality of an Aryan family through many generations, enabling the Jews to use the members of the family to help them impose jüdische Weltbewegung on all mankind.[5]

Needless to say, the facts disclosed by Messerschmidt do not mean that, but for Milch, Germany would have won the War for our race and civilization, but they do indicate the distinct possibility that if Germany had achieved an irresistible superiority in the air in 1939-1941, she might have won the war before the great War Criminal in Washington was able to use hordes of American cattle against her. And it certainly reinforces the dismal conclusion that the principal authors of Germany's defeat were Germans.

Milch is an illustration of tragedy in the full and proper sense of that word. Hitler's heroic undertaking failed because he was an Aryan and had our race's instinctive morality, which means that a man should be loyal to men who (he believes) were loyal to him. Hitler could not forget that Göring, however incompetent he had become, had been his loyal supporter in the early days of his adversity. (Hitler made the same mistake about the cunning Admiral Canaris, who was almost certainly a disguised Jew or, at least, a Mischling, and attached himself to Hitler to betray him.).

We also wonder about the genealogy of the many presumably German traitors who contrived the great catastrophe, and we will have waking nightmares, if we remember the terrible possibility: "Even a drop of Jewish blood...."

MORE ABOUT THE JEWS

A German correspondent impatiently disclaims interest in recent books about the Jews. They all, he says, necessarily repeat what has long been known to everyone who has objectively observed and thoughtfully considered the vampire race, and add little or nothing that is new. And even if some book discloses significant facts that were previously unperceived, it has no practical utility. All that we need know about hostes generis humani, he insists, was clearly set forth in Henry Ford's The International Jew.[1] He could have added, or even substituted, Adolf Hitler's masterly analysis of the Jewish Problem in Mein Kampf.[2]

My correspondent is essentially right. What is needed is not more information about the terrible race that the Roman historian identified as "the enemies of mankind." The survival of our race depends on its will to act to preserve itself from an obvious and imminent threat to its very existence—depends, in short, on its racial will to live. If it has already lost that instinct and become biologically degenerate, it is no longer a viable species and there is nothing more to be said.

That is true, but the author of each book hopes that his presentation of the known facts, with whatever he can add to the record, may somehow be miraculous and awaken an instinct that he hopes is yet dormant in an effective part of our race. I have even convinced myself that there is some practical value in the series of notes by which I try to explore the complex web of bonds that make Gulliver a helpless captive in Lilliput.

In the present treatise in two volumes, Dr. Ratibor-Ray M. Jurjevich, who is both a recognized professional psychiatrist and a Christian—rare combination!—necessarily repeats much of what you and I know and have long taken for granted, but which has been totally concealed from the American public by the predatory race's tight control over all the media of information, the schools, the state and Federal governments, and virtually all of the churches.

That, however, is not Dr. Jurjevich's subject in his Fear-of-the-Jews Syndrome in America (2 volumes, Ichthys Books, P.O. Box 1701, Glenwood Springs, Colorado; paperback, $22.50; cloth-bound, $33.50). He undertakes a clinical study of the "Brainwashing of Americans into a Special Neurosis, Fear of the Jews." The first volume bears the subtitle, Bamboozled Americans and Their Vile Brainwashers; the second, Americans: a Nation of Dupes, Sheep, and Wimps?

When one reads the works of Dr. Jurjevich, Nesta Webster, the Abbé Barruel, and comparable writers, one must naturally allow for the author's Christian premises and his or her consequent misunderstanding of atheism.

It is quite true that so long as organized Christianity was a force in maintaining social stability, the Jews were pleased by atheism and strenuously promoted it in their Communist attack on our nations and race, and perhaps in other ways, just as they likewise encouraged the Protestant Reformation as a means of undermining the social power of the Roman Catholic Church, which at that time did foster stability in several European nations. So long as a feudal aristocracy was the dominant power in Europe, the Jews naturally fostered Monarchy and the centralization of power in the hands of a king whose self-interest made him reduce the territorial magnates to submission and service on his behalf, but when monarchial governments seemed securely established, the predators as naturally promoted "democracy" and every other disruptive tendency within each kingdom. The merits of any ideology, its truth or falsity, are simply irrelevant to the vampires, who are interested only in utilizing it to sabotage a nation and paralyse their prey. It is not at all remarkable, therefore, that they now foster every kind of religion and pseudo-religion to counteract the rational implications of atheism and its threat to their dominion over their hebetated goyim.

I have, for example, no information that would even suggest that our enemies directly participated in the demise of the once-excellent periodical, The Truth Seeker,[3] which can be satisfactorily attributed to the greed of persons unwittingly Judaized by the society in which Americans live. But the death of that journal as an atheist publication undoubtedly gratified the Sheenies.

It is the great merit of Dr. Jurjevich's book that it covers all aspects of the Jews' intimidation of intelligent Americans and promotion of a mindless and dispossessed majority who even take pride in their enslavement to ruthless masters, who think of them as pigs, raised for the profit and nourishment of their owners.

You will find in this book, scrupulously documented, hundreds of specific instances of the Jews' precautions against the emergence of a rational perception of their nature and activity. Librarians, either puffed up with Yiddish hokum or aware of vultures watching over their shoulders, refuse to accept even donated books whose authors had not done obeisance to Yahweh's Master Race.[4] Publishers, if not already merely employees of alien owners, know that their solvency depends on not offending the race of vicious Conquerors by Deceit. In a society that has been so Judaized that the only thing that counts is current income and in which tyrannical taxation has left few persons who are not dependent on their quotidian income to avoid being crushed by the insatiable usurers who are their real masters, the predatory race's dominion over their befuddled slaves is virtually absolute.

By patient, unremitting, and often covert efforts over centuries the vampires have so forced their own standards on their helpless victims that the latter have come to consider them normal and indisputable. Some clear instances of their subversion of our race's ethical and commercial standards would shock the average American into a coma, if he is not already in one.

He would, for example, be stunned by the discovery that all commercial activity in his home town, even the small part of it that is not yet owned by the invaders of their newest Canaan, is totally Judaized. How completely that has been done, he will discover from p. 513 of Dr. Jurjevich's second volume, which contains a long quotation from The International Jew, Vol. I, p. 51, which should be read both in the context in which Ford wrote it and with Dr. Jurjevich's comment, on his p. 514, n. 1, which also adduces the case of Rudy Stanko.[5]

3. Cf. Liberty Bell, August and September 1989, pp. 22-28 and 1-6 respectively. A thoroughgoing atheist will necessarily have emancipated himself from even the residue of Christian superstitions, and will therefore perceive and understand the cunning and insidious devices of the Self-Chosen People.

4. For an added illustration, note that D. J. Goodspeed's The German Wars, 1914-1945, which was mild enough for Houghton Mifflin to publish it without fear of reprisal, but which failed to repeat some fundamental Jewish lies about those wars, was given a derogatory and derisive review in the official Library Journal, 1 November 1977, obviously concocted with sneering but vague generalizations to prevent librarians from purchasing copies of the book for their libraries. The boobs must be kept in a state of collective hallucination.

5. Stanko was imprisoned by the Federal government under various pretexts but really for not giving his flourishing business to Jews. His trenchant volume, The Score, is available from Liberty Bell Publications, cloth-bound, $17.25 postpaid.

I shall not take space here to reproduce Mr. Ford's essentially accurate summary of the ethics of Anglo-Saxon and Scotch merchants before the international parasites infiltrated and corrupted Great Britain and reduced it to the Little Britain they own today. I will observe, however, that the British merchants were merely following Aryan ethics, as is obvious from the Greeks' disdain for buying and selling that involved bargaining, i.e., an effort by the seller to obtain more than the goods were worth, and by the buyer to obtain them for less than their worth—an effort that is necessarily dishonest, and accounts for the usually contemptuous connotation of Greek terms for small retail trade that was conducted (as it still was in Mediterranean countries until recently) by bargaining, and for terms that would translate "a bargain," as that noun is currently used, both with reference to a transaction and to a thing purchased.[6]

The average American today will have difficulty in comprehending his race's commercial morality, which was still dominant at a time when a respectable merchant would never have thought of advertising, which was justly regarded as demeaning, disgraceful, and probably dishonest. He will, however, understand at once his enemies' financial practices, most recently and emphatically illustrated by the "junk bond" swindle that has served to enrich many vampires while furthering the race's plans by wrecking Savings & Loan Agencies—a notorious scandal[7] from which War Lord

6. If you have read Greek writers in translation, you probably missed the satirical thrust of such words when used metaphorically, as in Theognis's reference to marriages between a nobility and a wealthy lower class as 'retailing.' Such marriages are essentially bargaining, by which the noble acquires money and the parvenu acquires social standing—and both are almost invariably cheated. (Incidentally, it was by the marriage of sons of greedy or necessitous peers and gentry to richly endowed Kikesses that the Sheenies corrupted the blood of the British nobility.)

7. Cf. Liberty Bell, November 1990, pp. 1-6. Old Americans may recall that when the proto-Communist trick called the "New Deal" was foisted on American nitwits in 1933, there was legislation that was advertised as preventing swindles in the stock market. They will understand, however, that American laws do not apply to the divinely authorized thieves of God's Race.

Bushy's endeavors in the Persian Gulf opportunity distracted public attention—and by preparing the coming insolvency of many insurance companies and banks.[8]

Dr. Jurjevich does not neglect this aspect of the activities of Yahweh's pet freebooters, but, of course, he could not include the admirable article, "War on a Racial Basis," by Ivor Benson in Spearhead, October 1989 and reprinted in this issue of Liberty Bell. Mr. Benson, taking his departure from the activities of four Sheenies, all disguised by seemingly Aryan names (Lyons, Ronson, Saunders, Parnes), whose attempt to grab Scottish distilleries was so malodorous that even Maggie Thatcher's government, which usually holds its nose and disregards the pervasive stench of Jewry, could not ignore it.[9]

Mr. Benson goes on to consider the now infamous Sheenies, Boesky, Milken, and others who operated the great "junk bond" swindle and used it to grab control and virtual ownership of some of the largest corporations that were still American. He notes in passing a significant facet of the Jews' technique: when the Guinness scandal broke and the fact that the fight for the control of the Scottish distilleries was fought on a racial basis became well known, a tabloid owned by the enormously wealthy Sheeny who calls himself Rupert Murdoch published an article denouncing the conspiratorial band of Jewish financiers whom it called "Kosher Nostra," on

8. Lawrence Patterson, in Criminal Politics, estimates that Bushy's government plans to liquidate eight hundred or more banks in 1991 as a stage in a progressive transfer of ownership of all American banking to the notoriously predatory international financiers in New Jerusalem-on-the-Hudson.

9. Some believe that the Guinness scandal may have contributed to the recent decision by the "Tory" party to retire mannequin Maggie, who, doubtless on orders, had tried to shelter the guilty. She has been replaced by a comparatively young man, who, according to John Tyndall, is an unprincipled and unscrupulous arriviste, such as is normal in "democratic" governments. — The celebrated brewery in Dublin was founded by Arthur Guinness, said to have been of Scotch-Irish ancestry, in the early Nineteenth Century; he left numerous descendants, but today all of them together own only 2.5% of the company, which is operated by Kikes, although a Guinness, the third Earl of Iveagh, is hired to pose as President of the now huge and avaricious corporation.

the analogy of the old Mafia's "Cosa Nostra." Murdoch's fellow tribesmen understood and applauded his gesture. You must not be so foolish as to suppose that their race has self-respect, a notorious weakness of Aryans.

Most significant of all is the complacent remark in the Jewish Chronicle, quoted by Mr. Benson: "Only fifteen years ago sociologists reported that the ownership of major U.S. corporations was largely restricted to a small hereditary class of White Protestants. Now, largely as a result of corporate raiding, some of the most powerful names [sic] in the U.S. business world are Jews, many of them graduates of Mr. Milkin's seminars." [Mr. Benson's emphasis.]

In Dr. Jurjevich's massive compilation you will find, and, unless you are very cynical, be astonished by, many examples of the success of our invaders in overawing and befuddling the Americans. And you will have at hand for use in your own writing vivid illustrations of their cunning and covert war against our race. A characterization that the late Professor William Abbott Oldfather once applied to university faculties is now applicable to the American people as a whole: "We constitute the only known species of animal life that is both mammalian and invertebrate."

I would add that we are also the only known species that has lost interest in perpetuating itself and surviving on this planet—the only known species in which its natural enemies have induced a racial death-wish.

MURDER MYSTERY SOLVED

In 1888-1889 a number of women were atrociously murdered in the poorer quarters of London by a sexual maniac who boastfully styled himself Jack the Ripper. The murders are still officially unsolved, but they are still remembered, partly because they were so gruesome, the murderer having so obscenely mutilated and dissected the bodies of his victims that the details were long withheld from public knowledge, and partly because the British police, then justly esteemed for their integrity, admittedly suppressed some evidence. Furthermore, the sudden cessation of the series, which Jack had promised to continue indefinitely, warranted a suspicion that the police had secretly apprehended him and put him under restraint.

The mystery thus created naturally aroused various conjectures and surmises, and someone started a rumor that Jack the Ripper had been the Duke of Clarence, the eldest son of the Prince of Wales (who later became King Edward VII). The rumor gained credence among persons who should have known better because it seemed to provide the only plausible explanation for the extraordinary behavior of the police.

The rumor has been revived from time to time.[1] You may have seen or even read a fairly recent story by one of the writers who specialize in producing pastiches of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's stories about Sherlock Holmes. In the novel, Holmes is engaged to investigate the murders committed by

1. A somewhat amusing revival of the story was by a Polish defector from the Soviet, known as Colonel Goleniewski, who is said to have provided much accurate information about Soviet spies and saboteurs in western Europe, but who, after some years, was either coerced by the C.I.A. to discredit himself or concluded, not without justification, that American boobs will believe anything. He pretended to be the Czarevich who was murdered by Jewish Communists in 1918, and for a time published a periodical entitled Double Eagle, to advance his claim to be the legitimate Czar of Russia. The periodical was chiefly noteworthy for the phenomenal credulity of its subscribers. Among the great historical revelations contained in it was an article on the Duke of Clarence, who, indeed, had been Jack the Ripper, but did not die in 1892; protected by the police, he went into a luxurious retirement until he went to Germany and became Adolf Hitler. Naturally, he did not die in the bunker under Berlin, but was smuggled to safety and was then (in 1980) living happily under an assumed name in Britain (and hence flourishing at the ripe age of 126, thus outdoing the celebrated Count Waldeck). Another of the bogus Czarevich's revelations was that the celebrated Reinhard Heydrich was not murdered by a team of assassins despatched from England, but was instead smuggled out of Germany by the conspiratorial team of Hitler & Churchill and sent to the United States, where he became Guy Richards, editor of the New York Journal-American, a journalist who, despite my explicit warning, espoused Goleniewski's cause and labored mightily to vindicate his claim to be the heir of the Romanovs—until he did something that displeased His Imperial Highness and was accordingly unmasked and identified as being Heydrich in disguise. If I were to go on and name the prominent American anti-Communists who put their minds in cold storage so they could bask in the radiance of a real live Czar, I would destroy what is left of your faith in mankind.

Jack the Ripper and is harassed and thwarted by Scotland Yard, so there is a clear intimation that a royal personage (i.e., the Duke of Clarence) is involved.

In Britain today, as in the United States—and quite naturally, indeed inevitably, given the infestation of both countries by "Liberal" clergymen and "intellectuals"—every month a few impuberate White children of both sexes mysteriously disappear without a trace or until their bodies, often drained of blood or savagely mutilated, are found. In Britain, however, the press does not muffle such incidents, which accordingly are causing no little concern among racial bigots and other reactionaries.

It was remarked, therefore, that after the police reportedly exhumed the body or part of the dismembered body of one victim who had been deeply buried in an open area behind a Jewish synagogue, there was a sudden silence, and two months later the police, under pressure from the public, announced that the remains were those of an animal not human. This aroused suspicion, and a bulletin demanding clarification of the mystery was published by the Campaign for Gentile-Jewish Reconciliation, under the title, "Another 'Blood Libel' or Ritual Murder?" The bulletin points out that quite reasonably a ritual murder[2] will be suspected, unless the strange incident is officially clarified.

The bulletin reports two very enlightening statements. At the time of Jack the Ripper's merry exploits, the police were known to have suppressed evidence, and Sir Charles Warren, Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, admitted that he had done so, but claimed that he had done so justifiably "to avert an anti-Jewish uprising."

The bulletin continues; "In 1908 the Assistant Commissioner of Police, in reference to the identity of Jack the Ripper, declared flatly, 'In stating that he was a Polish Jew, I am merely stating a definitely established fact.'" [Italics as printed.]

2. On this subject, see Arnold Leese, Jewish Ritual Murder, available from Liberty Bell Publications, $4.00 + postage. You may think it significant that such murders have been reported so frequently in so many Aryan countries over many centuries, but, if you are a well-trained American, you will know that, despite appearances and despite all evidence, God's Holy Race can do no wrong.

This, then, solves the supposed mystery of Jack the Ripper. It is reasonable to assume that the Polish Jew was apprehended by the British police and secretly placed in confinement, probably in a comfortable asylum for the insane, to avert adverse criticism of the godly race that is everywhere persecuted for its sanctity. It remains uncertain whether he was acting from religious motives or merely obeying the sage advice in the Talmud: "When one finds that evil appetites are taking hold of his senses, let him repair to some place where he is unknown, let him dress himself in black and follow the impulses of his heart."[3]

So many readers of Liberty Bell will recall an incident that took place a few decades ago that I will not take the time to ascertain the exact date. The corpses of two impuberate White boys, aged eleven and twelve, as I remember, were found in a wasteland west of Chicago. The bodies had not been seriously mutilated, but they had been totally drained of blood while resting on a metal table adorned with cabalistic or Kabbalistic[4] symbols, which, as the bodies cooled, impressed themselves on the flesh.

3. Cited from Mo'ed Katan, 17a.

4. In English, 'cabalistic' applies to any esoteric doctrine and secret practices that resemble the mystic doctrine of the Kabbala, the system of Jewish theology of which the best known exposition is the Zohar, which was probably concocted in the Thirteenth Century in Spain by a well-known Jewish theologian, Moses de Leon. It is—naturally!—a hoax, purporting to be a secret doctrine expounded to select disciples by a prominent Galilaean Rabbi, Simeon ben Yohai, the favorite pupil and comrade of the famous Aqiba, who was the most fervent disciple of the christ called Bar-Kokhba, until the Roman legions proved him wrong in A.D. 135. Simeon revealed to his disciples cosmic secrets that had been transmitted only orally since the time of Adam. The doctrine was really filched from the Persian Sufis and Judaized. 'Kabbalistic' would imply that the symbols impressed on the bloodless corpses of the boys were actually taken from that theology, but, so far as I know, they were not identified as such by a person competent to judge.

The symbols were photographed and published in an early edition of the Chicago Daily News. Within half an hour after that edition was on the streets, the newspapers' trucks were dashing about frantically to collect all unsold copies, which were immediately destroyed, obviously at a heavy financial loss to the newspaper. The father of one of the boys demanded an elucidation of the symbols and the murders so persistently that he was kidnapped by the police and incarcerated in an insane asylum.

The facts require no comment. There is in the United States only one race so mighty that it could instantly frighten and coerce what was then the second most influential and potent newspaper in Chicago and compel the police to commit the crime of silencing the dead boy's father.[5]

In the meantime, you will be glad to know that the "mystery" of Jack the Ripper was solved, and that Scotland Yard around 1890 deserved its reputation and operated with an efficiency that would be unthinkable today.[6]

5. Many of the children who disappear are doubtless taken to be educated sexually by "paedophilic" males, and, unfortunately, cannot be released to return to their parents, who might be so bigoted as to disapprove. A noteworthy "paedophil" of exceptional accomplishments was the once famous Albert Fish, a creature of uncertain race who identified himself as a reincarnation of the famous Jesus, who asked little children to come to him. Fish was so fond of children that he ate about a dozen of them, after raping the girls and castrating the boys. Since the Supreme Court in 1935 was not sufficiently progressive and humanitarian to turn the gourmet loose, Fish was electrocuted. Some children are probably used in the ceremonies of ju-ju (commonly called voodoo in this country), which require sacrifice of a "hornless goat" to make really big magic. But although perverts and niggers are powerful politically, they could not have wielded the authority that was exercised in Chicago.

6. On the disgusting twerp who is now Commissioner of Metropolitan Police and therefore boss of Scotland Yard, see Liberty Bell, December 1987, pp. 8-9. The punk was proud that his sister-in-law and his niece were so depraved that they had, by 1987, given birth to six Congoid mongrels to afflict Englishmen and pollute their island.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE CHRIST MYTH

Nicholas Carter

The story of the salvation-deity is one of the oldest myths in the recorded history of mankind. Prior to the emergence of the Christ, there was hardly a god in four continents who hadn't been born of a virgin, persecuted by wicked rulers, condemned to death, and sacrificed for the benefit of his followers. The melodramatic rise and fall of the savior-god was essentially the same everywhere: A lowly human creature is elevated to the level of a deity. He is then dragged down to the lowest depths of humiliation and degradation. He is then murdered so that he can come to life again and offer forgiveness and salvation to the very people who denounced him.

To pave the way for a more complete understanding of how mythological Christianity was created, consider for a moment the fabrication of a less complicated scenario: The Apostle's Creed—an obvious forgery exposed long ago by a scholarly gentleman named Lorenzo Valla. If we attribute the name Dionysus or Krishna or Hercules or Osiris or Attis for the name of Jesus, and instead of Mary insert the name of Semele or Devaki or Alcmene or Neith or Maya, and for Pontius Pilate use the name of any terrestrial tyrant who comes into the corresponding story, we will have a creed that fits in all particulars into the rites and worship of any of the savior-gods of the Hellenistic Orient and beyond.

The Gentile theologians who came to be known as Catholics created, developed, and elaborated a Christ myth at the expense of the Gospel of the original Jewish Hellenists who were quickly dismissed as schismatical and forgotten. They accepted the form of the Hellenic Jewish sect without the substance; they presided over the gradual assimilation of that faith to the mystery religions; and they grafted upon that form the incredibly complex layers of orthodoxy that would eventually result in the establishment of an oppressive theocracy. It was only logical that Gentile theologians would concern themselves with shaping their new faith after the pattern of the salvation-cults so popular at that time. Could the masses be convinced to believe in the validity of a god on the esoteric basis of faith and love alone? No. But convince them that the god had been born of a virgin, had walked on water, and had even ascended from the grave, and the new god-cult might have a chance to succeed.

Ironically, priests and witchdoctors dedicated to spirituality and non-materiality have never been able to "sell" an abstract god to the human species. In lieu of the "unknown god" whose silence is more terrifying than his wrath, they have had to create gods out of the sun, the moon, thunder, lightning, and animals with human heads and vice versa. "Prophets" and "servants" of God with personal pipelines right to the heavenly kingdom have been invented. Even totem poles and stone idols have found acceptance as deities. Through the manifestation of the presence of the Great God in material form, the deity is personalized. God-surrogates are materialistic bridges designed to span the gap between man and the invisible "spiritual" god.

Gentile Christianity began with the trappings of just another messianic-cult as it rearranged the patterns of fear, tradition, superstition and motivation. By the turn of the 3rd century, it had bloomed into a full-fledged mystery religion—a Graeco-Oriental creed offering salvation, more exclusive claims than its competitors, the promise of immortality for repentance in the form of fasting and a little prayer, and shortcuts to heavenly kingdom through baptism and other sacraments so magical and powerful that they could change human nature—or so simple faithful believed. Through the sacraments they could be "born again" and "become the children of the eternal and unchangeable God instead of the children of mortal men."

How did it all come about? How did this curiously convoluted religion, rooted as it is in both the mystery-cults of Asia and orthodox Judaism, evolve into the slave of dogmatism and the tyrant of souls?

By the time Justin Martyr was a young man—A.D. 130 to 135—the New Covenant, with a martyred, Hellenized Jew having been accepted by that time as a Jesus or "savior" and a Christ or "anointed one," had spread widely enough among Gentiles to attract the attention of Greek and Roman mystics. Over the following decades, scholastic theologians from Clement to Tertullian joined in the movement with Justin. They were not the best educated men outside of their theological studies. Augustine, who came later, best exemplifies the type of thinker who engineered the Catholic revolution. He had a profound contempt for all educational traditions. And his cynical epigram, "Inter faeces et urinas nascimur," was obviously the product of one who had developed an exaggerated doctrine of total depravity.

In light of the fact that the Founding Fathers of Catholicism were transcendentalism-intensive creatures who regarded all the things of earth as vile in comparison with the priceless treasures of heaven, it isn't difficult to understand why their spiritual heirs delivered over without hesitation to dungeons, flames and slaughter, a far greater part of the human species than any other religion; and why Christianity prevailed to produce such a "melancholy record of human error and folly."*

The eventual success of Catholic Christendom can be accounted for only when we consider the intense longing on the part of the people, and in particular the illiterate masses, for a heroic figure more divine than human to take the darkness from their eyes and lead them to salvation. Marana Tha, "Our Lord Come"—not "Our Lord has come"—was the watchword of the day. It was a common occurrence during that era to apply the term Son of God to the hero-prince of Graeco-Roman mythology. To the Jews, Sons of God was simply an idiom conveying nothing more than the truth of the spirituality of man. As a mythical conception, Son of Man, on the other hand, originated in those Gentile religions in which the protagonist was in some sense "the second man." Among the Phrygian Ophites, "A Man and a Son of Man" were said to be the origin of all subsequent things; and in the Avestic literature of Persia, Gayomort the son was the pattern and the source of the whole human race. When the Catholic authors of the New Testament attributed these words to Jesus, "The Son of Man has no place to lay his head," they were describing their Messiah in the Phrygian sense of his being the Son of the Creator of all things, or God.

The all-important issues confronting the Gentile Christ-folk once they decided to transplant the New Messianism into the Graeco-Roman world were: 1) whether he was to be perceived as a man who became human; 2) how to provide both prophetic and miraculous confirmations for the existence of the first Jewish savior-god; and 3) how the moral and spiritual worth of their savior could be supported by great moral apothegms.

The task they set for themselves was a far-ranging project calling for the nearly endless borrowing of ideas and rites from other religions, the rearrangement and fertilization of myths, the divorcing of the new religion from that of the Jews to as great a degree as possible while retaining the Jewish God, the laws supposedly given to Moses on the holy mount, and the writings of the prophets. Rather than fabricating just another virgin-born Tom, Dick or Harry, their dedicated purpose was to create a savior-god in the greatest measure of them all—a "true" Son of God who would save mankind. An effective reflection of sublimity would emanate from

*The Christian hell, it seems, is always just around the corner from the Christian heaven.

THEIR Christ. Every aspect of HIS divinity would be validated by the holy writings of the ancients. HE would be the Mystical Body of the new Church. HE would be the eternal vine—his worshipers the branches.

The methodology they adopted was both creative and ruthless. In time they began to master the art of molding words and ideas—Savior, Epiphany, Illumination, Mysteries, the most sacred Heart of our Lord Jesus Christ, Logos, etc.—to suit Christian dogma. The Logos is of cardinal interest because some scholars content that the notion was the proper formula for uniting the Christian religion with Greek thought.

"Logos" was coined by Plato to describe possibly both the thought and the will of God—although the word has no single equivalent in modern language. Defining the genealogy of the new savior-god involved the Logos Christologists who regarded Jesus as the eternal Logos or Word of God, a pre-existent god who became human, and the Adoptionists who claimed that Jesus was first a mortal man. After a raging controversy, the first group prevailed. Jesus was assimilated to the Greek Logos; and from that point on, the Christians identified the Logos with the Son of God: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God...And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us."

In their attempts to bring the fabled Jesus and the cosmic Christ into a single personality at once historical and raised above time, the mortal Savior had to be shoved aside and virtually ignored. So little about the biblical Jesus—his appearance, his brothers and sisters, and so on—is included in the Gospel, that his "life" might have been sketched in as an afterthought. The "Jesus" of history was far less important to the builders and shapers of the new cult than the "Christ" of dogma. Nor could Jesus be the mere son of a man and a woman.

By the end of the 2nd century, However, that decision had still not been made. The manual of church ordinances known as the Didache (the word is Greek, and it means "teaching") had appeared by that time with its strong emphasis upon the Davidic line of descent leading from David to Joseph to Jesus: "We give thanks unto thee, O our Father, for the holy vine of thy servant David which thou hast made known to us by thy servant." Notice that the title servant is applied to both David and Jesus. To the Jews, their Messiah, "born of the seed of David according to the flesh," would have been the Servant rather than the Son of God, for such was the designation of the "men of Yahweh." And some of the spurious writings attributed to Saul stated that even though Jesus was the son of Joseph, he had been declared the Son of God "through the Spirit of Holiness." It seems evident that an evangelium infantiae wasn't considered to be a necessary part of the early development of Catholicism. A Siniaitic

Syriac manuscript discovered in 1894 stated simply that "Joseph begat Jesus."

But more astute Catholics were soon to realize that if Jesus was to be the exclusive Son of God, he could not be the son of Joseph. "Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary?" they eventually wrote in the Gospel—thus specifying the mother to the exclusion of the father. And in Matthew we find this exclusionary form of expression: "And Jacob begat Joseph, the husband of Mary, and of her was born Jesus called the Christ"—the implication being that Joseph was only the apparent father of the child of Mary. The conclusion that a savior-god born not of the blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God alone, was far more significant than a messiah cast in the limited Jewish image, meant that a different god and an entirely different messianic system would have to be created. The new god had to be a savior. The new religion had to offer salvation. Only if the man Jesus died and was then resurrected could he become the supernatural, divinely glorious judge. Only in that way could his death be made acceptable.

The first step in the creation of the Christ was to assimilate Jesus to the sun-gods of Asia. Only then could the resurrection of the Christ become a central part of the faith. Then, like Mithra, he could be entombed, and the circulation of the story of the empty grave or tomb could then become a logical part of the legend. For the day of his death they chose a time when a partial eclipse of the sun had occurred. And soon, Mary (Myrrh, Maia, Maya, Maira, all the same as mare, meaning the sea)—the mother of numerous other gods—became the virgin mother of Jesus. By now, the movement from the Hellenic ethics in which there were no sacraments, ceremonies, sin-offerings or guilt, to a faith which redeemed man from his slavery to sin by an obscene and bloody sacrifice, was well on its way.

Of the many mystery-religions, Isis and the Magna Mater (the Great Mother, Cybele, whose Phrygian cult was introduced in Rome in 204 B.C.), were most influential on the Catholic creed. They all had characteristics in common: a purification rite of initiation, a communion with the deity, a look to the future life, a foundation dealing with a god's life, death and coming back to life; the mourning of the dying god; the celebration of resurrection; the glorification and exalting of the god; the promise of personal salvation through sacraments; and the triumph of the God following suffering and death.

The Catholics even borrowed from the Jewish Sibylline Oracles, the works of the legendary prophetesses who tried to foretell events for their illiterate and superstitious followers. In particular, the Christ-folk were impressed with the prophetic declarations that "he shall satisfy five thousand men in the wilderness with two fishes" and "he shall raise the dead." And thus it was that Jesus had to raise the dead and feed a multitude with fish. Then they learned about the legendary Babylonian Ebani, a wild and shaggy man who lived in the wilderness while preaching that the Kingdom of God was near. One day, he entered a boat with his disciples and a storm developed and, miracle of miracles, he stilled the waters. So Jesus had to be placed in a situation where he could still the waters when they became rough.

Like the other savior-gods, the Jesus of legend had to rise from the grave and ascent to heaven. (Among the Egyptians the ascension of Osiris was called the passion.) Like Attis, Dionysus, and Mithra, Jesus had to rise on the third day. Like Osiris, Adonis, and Attis, Jesus predestined, prepared, and assured the salvation of those who became partakers in his passion. And, naturally, Jesus had to measure up to the Greek god Poseidon and the divinized Buddha who walked on water.

Catholicism owes to the mystery-cults its ideas of secrecy, symbolism, mystical brotherhood, sacramental grace, the three stages of the spiritual life, and more. From Buddhism, for example, came these observances: monasticism, the tonsure, the use of beads, confession, penance, and absolution, relic worship and miracles wrought by the church, the purchase of salvation by gifts to the church, and the pilgrimage to sacred places. Various other so-called pagan rites, symbols, and conceptions were adopted by the church, including the form of her sacraments and the periods of her fasts and festivals.

One of the bottom lines to this inquiry encompasses the actuality that the Christ-cult did not develop as a single religion, or as the result of one, or even a few men. It became a product of the ages and a complex of many religions through the intermingling of Persian, Greek, and other doctrines, with the Mosaic elements being attached to, but not well-blended with, the myths of the Aryan and Oriental peoples. The result: a chosen Jesus, or savior, was transformed into a solar deity like Ra, the Egyptian god, and like Mithra, the Persian deity buried in a rock tomb, and like countless other savior heroes all wrapped up in one. Even the language attributed to Saul, but written long after his death, reveals a strong similarity between Christian sacraments and the terminology used in the worship of Dionysus and Mithra: "Oh mysteries truly holy...the Lord is the hierophant and seals the mystes for himself, himself the photogogue." For these reasons, it is safe to assume that there wasn't a great deal of controversy on the part of those individuals among the masses who switched their faithful allegiance from one savior to another. In Antioch, for instance, where the identifying term

Christian was first used, the people regularly celebrated the death and resurrection of their savior-god, Adonis. Once they converted to the new cult, they didn't lose their old customs, they merely transformed them to Jesus called the Christ.

The second step in the development of Christism involved the ferreting out of distinctive words and statements expressing or implying prophetic and miraculous vindications of the new faith in the holy writings of the Israelites. The Catholic Doctors did it with the aid of the only basically Jewish "Old Testament" available to them, the Septuagint. Once the Gentiles accepted the Jewishness of Joshua, they discovered, as if by miracle, the "Version of the 70"—a kind of spiritual anatomy of Jewish faith, observance, culture and nation—a wealth of "inspired" Scripture that could be used to prove that their new Christ had the spiritual power and fitness to be chosen as the Son of God. And, lo and behold, it was written in the popular Greek language. Regardless of the degree of Old Testament accuracy or lack of same within the Septuagint—depending upon which critics are considered—it is important to recognize hat the Septuagint was a treasure-trove of inestimable value to the Catholics for the singular reason that they were able to "fulfill" their theological legends through the duplicitous use of the holy writings of the Israelites.

Legend has it that King Ptolemy II of Egypt, in response to a suggestion by Demetrius Phalareus, ordered each of 70 Greek-speaking rabbis to make, on his own, a full Greek translation of the available Scriptures of the Israelites in exactly 72 days. The manuscripts would then be compared with the hope that they would all be exactly alike, showing therefore, God's approval or miraculous assistance in the project. Obviously, they wound up with 70 garbled and variant versions of Holy Writ, since at least 250 years passed before the powers-that-were finally put the stamp of approval on the most "inspired version, which was accepted near the beginning of the Common Era. By the 2nd century, a number of laboriously transcribed copies were probably available to the Gentiles.

In the Old Testament, prophecies are made according to events. In the New Testament, events occur according to prophecy. It was a common practice then to tailor ancient writings to fit the emotions of the day, even if a great deal of "culpable temerity"—to use Origen's words—had to be employed in translating and/or interpreting the writings in question. The modus operandi of the Catholics was to provide the new messianic faith with a historical background on a prophetic warrant by claiming for their very own every Septuagint passage that might be interpreted in a "revealing" way that would vindicate and illustrate the object of their faith.

For this reason, the words, "that the Scriptures might be fulfilled," are often repeated in the New Testament.

Hand in hand with the creation of a NEW Testament—designed primarily for the purpose of proving their Christ was the same Davidic Messiah whose coming had been predicted in the Jewish Bible—the Christians began to forge their own OLD Testament, a "Christianized" version of the Septuagint, with the books aligned in exactly the same order—no coincidence, to be sure. Over hundreds of years, the Catholics fabricated, forged, edited and molded their very own HOLY BIBLE, with the Christ being the bridge linking one testament to the other, until it reflected the entire package of Christian dogma.

The Higher Critics who have studied both Judaism and Christianity have concluded that Catholicism could never be supported by straight-forward interpretations of the Jewish holy writings. Because the original Old Testament was essentially a Jewish book, any and all attempts to find in it a series of prophecies foretelling the coming of Christendom were radically wrong. The Jewish Bible never contained anything even remotely resembling the appearance upon earth of such a personality as a savior-god born of a virgin, for instance. In fact, the concept of a savior was so little Jewish that even the word was unknown to the Israelites; and the word messiah as used in Jewish Scriptures did not have the supernatural significance which it came to possess when used by Christians to describe their Christ. Only by means of forgery, misinterpretation and clever allegorization could orthodox Judaism be used to validate the existence of Gentile Catholicism. Only through duplicity could Psalm 22, for example, become the fountainhead of the Christian legend.

To create a "One Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father," the Christ-folk rewrote the Scriptures of the Jews so that the Christ could be called "the creator even of themselves who spoke to Him"...so that he could be "David's Lord, as being Lord of all"...so that he could be called at one time "the Angel of great counsel," and "a Man" by Exekiel, and "like the Son of Man" by Daniel, and "a child born of a virgin" by Isaiah (rather than born of a "young woman" as originally written), and "Christ and God to be worshiped by David." They rewrote Isaiah even further for the purpose of describing the Coming One as having been "wounded" and "bruised" for the transgressions of Israel. By having to share "his grave" with the wicked and "his death" with the rich, Jesus is subjected to the same degradations as the savior-gods who preceded him. But the true Servant of Yahweh with the divine spirit upon him could never have been bruised or degraded; nor would have been chosen as a scapegoat for the sins of both Jews and Gentiles.

One of the more significant Jewish texts purloined by the Catholics was the Moses' statement, "God will raise up for you a prophet from among your brethren..." Foreverafter, Jesus the Christ was proclaimed as the prophet whose coming was predicted by Moses. Moreover, it didn't matter to the ruthless Catholics that when the prophets personalized their appeals to Yahweh, they were always speaking of all Jews, not one, and certainly not a messiah. "Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles" (Emphasis added.) "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"—meaning why have you forsaken Israel? "O Yahweh, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear?"—meaning that Israel is crying out to Yahweh. "Out of Egypt have I called my son," wrote Hosea: But Hosea meant that Israel was the son being called from Egypt. "Thou art my son [meaning Israel]; this day have I begotten thee." "O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame?" was not David's cry; it was Israel's cry. No! Nothing mattered to the Catholic Christians as they appropriated and twisted any and all Jewish texts that appealed to them as grist for the "prophecy" mill.

The light shining on Jesus, the interpreting of Shiloh to mean the Christian Lord, the scepter rising out of Israel, the betrayal of a familiar friend, the offering of a pain-killing drink ("they made me eat gall..."), the curing of the sick, the cries in the wilderness, the parting of garments among them, the piercing of the hands and feet, the desolation of the high places, the circumcision of Abraham (supposedly looking forward in spirit to the coming of Jesus), are choice examples of the many concepts taken from writings of the Jews never intended as support for anything outside of their own totally obsessive religion, and twisted and corrupted by Catholics in a fanciful effort to fulfill everything that they could conceive of being a "prophecy." And then they had the mind-boggling gall to not only call their savior-god the son of the Jewish Yahweh, they salted the wound with the declaration that Israel had been abandoned by the Jewish God.*

Within the boundaries of their NEW Testament, the Catholics emphasized that the words and actions were commanded by God: "The spirit of the Lord spake unto me..." They implied that what others had said or done was similarly commanded: "The words which the Lord of hosts hath sent by his Spirit by the former prophets..." They had the Apostle Peter set forth the full inspiration of the Jewish-inspired Scripture and definitely assert that it was the direct word of God, or the Holy Spirit. They placed into the mouth of Jesus the claim that the Pentateuch was the very word pronounced by God himself; and they claimed that the Holy Spirit's assistance in recalling the words God spoke was guaranteed to the disciples of Jesus, enabling them to say that the statements were not to be received as the words of men, but as the words of God himself—that they had been taken up by his Holy Spirit and brought by his power to the goal of his choosing. The expression "it is written" introduces between 80 to 90 quotations in the New Testament; and many quotations from the Old Testament are introduced as having been spoken through the prophets. For the purpose of repudiating the significance of mortal men, they placed these potent words into the mouth of Saul: "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." And then they enunciated the "gigantesque" claim that the prophetic element in their Bible—so obviously fraudulent—was unique in that the Bible itself "made the fulfillment of prophecy the test and proof of its own validity." No other word to which the inscription of "sacred literature" is given, they claimed, "makes, or could make, this claim."

*"Israelites were the Chosen People in the Old Testament; but their special status ceased after Christ began his ministry. From then on, God's Chosen People are those who believe in Christ." Thus speaks the invincibly ignorant Christian, blissfully unaware of the fact that he is spitting in the face of Judaism.

In other words, via the process of underwriting their Graeco-Roman creed with Judean theology, the Catholic Christians raised theological obfuscation to the level of an art form.*

The concluding step in the creation of Christism involved the adoption of the moral precepts of the wisest thinkers of Western Asia and beyond to be blended into the legend of Jesus the Christ. There isn't a single teaching in the Gospel that cannot be paralleled practically word for word in the ethical literature of Greeks, Romans, Hindus, Jews, and others.

The passage in Matthew 5:28 ("Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart..."), was taken almost verbatim from one of the treatises of the Talmud called Challah. In the little Jewish book called the Sotah, the Catholics found the worst words about the son turning against the father, the daughter against the mother, and the daughter-in-law against the mother-in-law in the time

* The patent use of Jewish propositions to support non-Jewish doctrines backfired when a Bishop tried to influence the King of the Khazars to convert to Christianity. Rejecting both Christism and Islam, the Khazars converted to Judaism around A.D. 740. The common denominator shared by the three faiths; the Old Testament, which originated with Judaism, indicated to them that the Jews were "nearer of the Messiah, "when a man's foes shall be they of his own household." Hence, in Matthew, those terrible words about hating one's relatives are placed in the mouth of Jesus.

In other parts of the contemplative forest, Lao Tse, Buddha, Socrates and Pittacus had been teaching that good must be returned for evil; the Jews said, "Cast not your pearls before swine..." first; "He who would do injury to another has already done it," declared Seneca; "The Gods regard with delight the man who when struck does not strike back," says a Hindu proverb—and, lo and behold, Jesus repeats them all. Two hundred years before the Common Era, Tiberius Gracchus said that the foxes had holes and the birds had nests but man had no place to lay his head. So the Christians give the words to Jesus. As if it was his, they have Jesus repeat the old Jewish maxim about those who exalt themselves being humbled, and those who humble themselves being exalted. From Seneca, Plato, Buddha, even from the Sibyls, the Christians purloined words and ideas and used them to provide their fabricated Jesus with ethical and speculative credence.

The Christian Establishment denies the issue of plagiarism by claiming that the disciples and their proselytes would not have been capable of "inventing the remarkable statements of Jesus, which are so obviously stamped with personal originality combined with profundity of thought." The evidence indicates, however, that the redactors had no intention of inventing anything. They confiscated, instead, the wisdom of philosophers both ancient (such as Buddha), and contemporary with the genesis of the Common Era (such as Hillel and Seneca).

Throughout the evolution of the Catholic system antiomianism, the doctrine that a state of spiritual perfection exempted men from the obligations of the moral law, circulated unchecked within the "Mystical Body of Christ." With a scarcity of fair dealing and truthfulness that would shock an unregenerate cynic, the Christians became adept at ignoring truth or misinterpreting it to fit the latest dogma. This plethora of duplicity led the deliberate and completely fraudulous creation of the literature of the Church.

The golden age of Christian deceit began in the 2nd century and continued well into the Middle Ages. Flying in the face of Job's words, "God does not need our lies," the Catholic Doctors of theology professed to believe that it was an act of virtue to deceive and lie, when by that means the interests of religion might be promoted. Eusebius, for example, freely avowed that he would omit whatever might tend to the discredit of the Church and magnify whatever might contribute to her glory.

"It is not we who take our opinions from others," argued the Christians in response to critics, "but they who take theirs from us." The "deceiving serpent," they claimed, had counterfeited Catholic practices in the mysteries of Mithra, Osiris, Buddha, et al, religions that antedated Christianity—some of them by centuries. Some Christians even presumed to declare that Greek philosophy was derived from what they called Hebrew wisdom, and they supported their thesis with spurious quotations from ancient Greek poetry.

To be sure, nothing in this grand procession of orthodoxy occurred quickly. Catholicism developed slowly, evolving by minute steps toward the completion of the basic Catholic foundation with its emphasis on predestination, original sin, the trinity, the incarnation, the sacrifice by God of a Son for the sins of mankind, and the resurrection. Because the Catholic cult speedily divided into quarreling sects—nearly 90 by Augustine's time—every step of the way was marked by double-crossing, dissembling, and at times bloodshed, activities so ferocious that the emperor Julian was moved to describe theologians divided by dogma or opinion as being worse than savage beasts. For hundreds of years to follow the Catholics continued to edit, expand and fine-tune the results of their labors, in addition to squabbling over the settling of such dogmatic "innovations" as purgatory, indulgences, limbo (limbus infantium), the immaculate conception, the ascent of the Virgin Mary into heaven, and the modus operandi to be employed by inquisitors during the questioning and torturing of witches, heretics, and heathens.

Catholicism began with the conviction that "all kingdoms of the world and the glory of them" were the proper possession of Satan; but as soon as it appeared that the Emperor Constantine was on the brink of becoming a Christian, the hierarchy quickly came to the realization that the Roman idea of the State—government and religion should be one—was not an altogether bad thing. Not surprisingly, the Christian historian Eusebius described Constantine as a man "adorned with every virtue of religion." On the other hand, Constantine, whom some historians call willful, voluptuous and self-conceited, may have realized better than most that religion is the only conceivable sanction of despotic power; ergo, he embraced Christianity for the sole purpose of enhancing his own power. In any event, it didn't take him long to conclude that additional benefits could be accrued from his cozy relationship with the new theocracy. He and his successors were subsequently divinized by the Senate; and if with the Emperor Gratian the custom ceased, the Christian emperors were for some time afterward still spoken of as gods.

In the final analysis, the "apostolic faith" that eventually came to be known as Christianity was not the religion of Philo and his students, or of Stephen and Saul and their disciples. Instead, everything that had been achieved during the 1st century was swallowed up by the incomprehensible mysteries of Catholicism—the Christ of the Apostle's Creed, "the only Son of God the Father Almighty"...the Christ of the Nicene Creed, "Very God of Very God, being of one substance with the Father"...and the Christ of the so-called Athanasian Creed, "at once perfect God and perfect Man"—with the long dead prophet of the 1st century having been transformed into the Alexandrian Christ. What was achieved was not the gathering of the Gentile world into the religious/ethical world of Hellenistic Judaism, but an overthrow of the very basis of that Gospel, with the word faith coming to be transferred from simple trust in one good and loving God to the acceptance of a series of complex propositions in abstract metaphysics that led to the virtual elimination of creative mental effort, the complete subordination of intellectualism to the dogmas and institutions of religion, a rigid fixity of institutional character, and a deadening imposition of external authority on the consciousness of men.

Once their savior-god had been created, the Catholic Christians recognized him as the divine head of their mystery-cult and themselves as his initiates and God's chosen people. The word Christ was turned into a proper name with Jesus the Christ becoming Jesus Christ. Many minds working under an obsessive religious impulse created the legend of the pre-existent god who descended from heaven in order to become a sacrificial goat for humanity.

Christianity succeeded because out of the man sacrificed for an idea, it created the ideology of a willing self-sacrifice of one who dies for all others and for that reason alone is himself immortalized. In following this tortuous god-building path, the Christ-folk reduced the esoteric, poetic myth that developed around the original messianic legend to dogma.* They debased it to the level of common understanding until it became only another superstition—and they did it, as French historian and critic Ernest Renan describes the process, "with mere baggage brought from the pagan mysteries."

From a great feast of religions—in other words—the Christians stole scraps.

HISTORICAL COMMENTARY

CARPENTER, E.: The Nicene Creed had nothing to propound except some extremely futile speculations about the relation to each other of the

CARPENTER, J.E.: "At the opening of the 3rd century Christianity stands at the parting of the ways...the two great sacraments, Baptism and the Eucharist, were soon set in the light of the mystery-cults of Greece, Egypt, and the East, and the sanctity of an exclusive priesthood gradually enveloped in them."

CELSUS, AULUS CORNELIUS: "Let no educated man enter, no wise man, no prudent man, for such things we deem evil; but whoever is ignorant...unintelligent...uneducated...simple, let him come to Christianity and be welcome."

COBB, J.H.: "The Catholic scholar begins with Scripture and tradition, the total deposit of the faith as, and only as, this is officially interpreted by the living magisterium of the Church...when the Catholic scholar writes about Jesus, messianic prophecy, and the doctrines expressed in the various New Testament books, he is controlled at every point by loyalty to the teaching Church."

CUMONT, FRANZ: "During the first five centuries Christians felt an unconquerable repugnance to the representation of the Savior of the world nailed to an instrument of punishment."

DREWS, ARTHUR A.: "It is little wonder that the Fathers, from the 2nd century, saw in Mithra the most formidable foe of Christianity. Indeed, the resemblance between the two religions...were very striking."

ELLIS, HAVELOCK: "The ascetics, those erratic and abnormal examples of the variational tendency...knew that every natural impulse of a woman is the condemnation of ascetism. All true lovers of the artificial and perverse find women repulsive..."

HATCH, E.: "Prophesying died when the Catholic Church was formed. The voice of the prophet had ceased, and the voice of the preacher had begun...when one generation was bound to accept the symbolical interpretations of its predecessors..."

MANSON, T.W.: "The 80 or 90 sects into which Christianity speedily divided, hated one another with an intensity that provoked the wonder of Julian and the ridicule of the Pagans."

MILL, JOHN STUART: "It is one of the most tragical facts of all history that Constantine, rather than Marcus Aurelius, was the first Christian emperor. It is a bitter thought how different the Christianity of the world might have been, had it been adopted as the religion of the empire under the auspices of Aurelius..."

MOORE, G.F.: "Christians found the distinctive doctrines of Christianity expressed or implied in all parts of the Old Testament. With the weapon of allegorical exegesis in her hands, the Church was able to defend the Old Testament, and to read into it whatever she judged to be 'spiritual' truth."

MURRAY, GILBERT: "The Gnostic redeemer has various names which the name of Jesus or 'Christos', 'the Anointed', tends gradually to supersede...in some sense Man, or 'the second Man' or 'the Son of Man'...He is the real, the ultimate, the perfect and eternal Man, of whom all men are feeble copies."

PFLEIDERER, O.: "Not because the heathen were irreligious, but because they were so incurably and tenaciously religious, Catholic propagandists actually made little headway with them at first."

REYNOLDS, REGINALD: "In its first embraces with Roman civilization, the Christian Church would appear to have done little to preserve, and a great deal to undermine, the standards of cleanliness among the people. Thus we read of the Blessed St. Jerome rebuking the dames who followed him for too much washing."

ROBERTSON, J.M.: "It was the insistence on the imminent end of the world, the preaching of celibacy, the disparagement of earthly dignitaries, the vehement assault on the standing cults of the State, no less than the refusal to sacrifice to the emperor's statue, that had so long made Christism seem the natural enemy of all civil government."

SILVER, ABBA: "The major effect of most of the New Testament writers was to 'Christianize' the Bible, and the Rabbis were constantly engaged in opposing their views."

SMITH, G.B.: "When One recalls the innumerable stories of sacred dramas, serious or comic, narrated in The Golden Bough, with the killing of their kings of masquerade, or the mysteries of Osiris, one asks by what somber coincidence the execution of Jesus repeats most of the features of those terrible festivals..."

SMITH, ROBERTSON: "In almost every case, the myth was derived from the ritual, and not the ritual from the myth."

TAYLOR, HENRY OSBORN: "The Fathers of the Church were accustomed to a historical tradition and practice in which facts were presented so as to conduce worthy ends."
Ibid.: "Whether a Church which stands convicted of having forged its Creed would have any scruples of forging its Gospels, is a problem that the reader will solve according to the influence of prejudice or probability on his mind."

TENANT, F. ROBERT: "Christians were not persecuted because of their creed, but because of their universal claims...With sublime audacity the followers of Jesus proclaimed that Christ must be all and in all...emblazoned on its banners its loathing and disdain for all the cults around.

TERTULLIAN (Roman theologian—circa 150 to 230): "I believe because it is unbelievable...the Son of God died; it is by all means to be believed because it is absurd. And He was buried and rose again; the fact is certain because it is impossible."

THOSE LATE GREAT BOOKS

THE BIBLE

AN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN AND BIBLICAL ORIGINS.

Nicholas Carter feels that it is time for us to sit down and do what many Christians rarely do: Study the Holy Bible. In doing so, we may discover whether or not the Bible is indeed "Holy" and the "Word of God." In strict biblical order, the author methodically and scathingly examines the various claims made in the "Holy Book" and shows how many of them bear no relationship to reality whatsoever. WAR ON A RACIAL BASIS

By Ivor Benson

This article was first published in the September 1990 issue of Behind the News, obtainable from P.O. Box 1564, Krugersdorp 1740, South Africa, and is reprinted here from Spearhead No. 260, October 1990.

THE TRIAL of Ernest Saunders, Gerald Ronson, Anthony Parnes and Sir Jack Lyons on various charges in connection with the Guinness company takeover of the Scottish Distillers Corporation momentarily lifted the lid on what we have in this service down through the years described as a 'criminal overworld,' corresponding in many ways to a widely publicized criminal underworld.

Momentarily revealed to a startled British public was a weird combination of high finance, politics, corruption and philanthropy, but few who read the newspapers or watched the television would have realized that the Guinness case was only a small portion of a vastly greater drama involving giants of business and high finance on both sides of the Atlantic, nor would they have understood what bearing all this has on national and international politics.

What we have witnessed is a tumble of the mighty on an Olympian scale, all brought about by one of them, the New York wheeler-dealer Ivan Boesky, who over-reached himself on Wall Street and then ratted on the others, for which he was rewarded with a sentence which, for him, was a virtual let-off—namely three years of 'soft' imprisonment and a $100 million disgorging of ill-gotten gains.

The nearest any British national newspaper came to an explanation of it all was a short piece in the Sunday Telegraph of October 18th 1987, when that paper's assistant editor Graham Patterson drew attention to what he called "a racial element in the takeover battle for Distillers." "This greatest of all Scottish companies," he said, "—owner of such quintessentially Scottish brands as Johnnie Walker, White Horse and Haig whiskies—was fought over on a racial basis."

One fact ignored by all the media but discussed in every City wine bar, Pall Mall club, etc., said Patterson, was that the accused were Jewish.

So what does it all mean? Those who are able to put together all the pieces of a giant jigsaw puzzle, and not only those directly connected with the Guinness case, find themselves in front of a grand tableau for which these words would be a suitable title: "War: the Jewish Nation versus the Rest."

'UNDECLARED WAR'

Pieces which were hitherto inexplicable are then suddenly found to make perfectly good sense. It explains first of all why the 'baddies' on both sides of the Atlantic were all Jewish and, almost to a man, fabulously wealthy. It also explains the fact that all the giants of business and high finance involved in the recent scandals in Britain and America were huge donors to Jewish charitable and other causes and all enthusiastic supporters of the state of Israel.

But the multi-millionaires Ronson and Lyons were also massive supporters of certain non-Jewish causes. Ronson was a leading light on the advisory council of the Prince of Wales's charitable organization Youth Business Trust, a trustee of the Natural History Museum, etc., and Lyons was for many years much in the public eye as a supporter of the London Symphony Orchestra, the Royal College of Music, the Shakespeare Birthplace Trust, etc.

How could those who have done so much good also be guilty of doing so much harm?

The apparent contradiction vanishes as we consult the big picture of what has been going on, and will no doubt continue to go on, for we see with the utmost clarity how 'good works' can be used to mask consciously evil or hostile intentions.

Where a state of war exists, whether declared or undeclared, a dual moral code is inevitably practised, a code which draws the clearest distinction between 'we' and 'they', amity, co-operation and benevolence among 'us' and enmity towards 'them.'

In such a war, conducted almost exclusively in the realm of the mind, concealment and deception are factors of major importance; and it goes without saying that easy access to those most prominent and influential among 'them'—Prince Charles, Margaret Thatcher, etc.—and universal acceptance as 'friends', confer an enormous secret advantage on 'us', the Jews.

But is it true that a state of war exists? Is it not possible that the word 'war' should be understood rather in a metaphorical sense, as when such words are used by the sports writers?

Part of the answer to such questions will be found in a report in the April 7th issue of the London Jewish Chronicle which began as follows:

> Following one of the largest investigations in the history of the US has brought charges against the man considered an architect of the last decade's countrywide takeover craze.

The man concerned was 42-year-old Michael Milken, a Los Angeles investment banker and reputed to be one of America's richest men, who had been charged with illegal stock manipulations and irregularities in connection with his work as head of the so-called 'junk bonds' department of Drexel Burnham Lambert, one of the nation's top investment banking houses.

What happened to Saunders, Ronson, Parnes and Lyons in Britain is only part of the huge chain-reaction of consequences produced by the downfall of Milken.

The Jewish Chronicle reminds its readers that Milken and others involved in the junk bond scandal were munificent contributors to Jewish charitable and other causes, and the paper's New York correspondent sums up as follows:

> It may be, however, that Mr. Milken's greatest impact on the Jewish community life is not through his gifts but through his corporate raiding. Only 15 years ago sociologists reported that the ownership of major US corporations was largely restricted to a small hereditary class of White Protestants. Now, largely as a result of corporate raiding, some of the most powerful names in the US business world are Jews, many of them graduates of Mr.

Milken's seminars. Moreover, unlike earlier generations which have made good, the Milken generation has maintained—and even increased—its public identification with Judaism. (Emphasis added.)

What is this if not war? What does it mean if not that 'we, the Jews' have succeeded by evil means, legitimized by a state of war, in dislodging from positions of power many of 'them, the White Protestant Christians'?—those Protestant Christians being, of course, the heirs of the pioneering families, now largely defenseless against cunningly contrived 'combined operations' in the realm of high finance.

Viewed in this context, the 'good works' of big operators like Ronson and Jack Lyons acquire a meaning very different from that which gets through to the public and to leaders like Prince Charles, Margaret Thatcher and the Queen, and through them to innumerable others immediately below in the echelons of power and influence.

This simple fact of power politics was demonstrated in the Guinness case by the personal letter which Lyons wrote to Prime Minister Mrs. Thatcher and was reckoned by Saunders and his associates to be worth every penny of three-million pounds.

Sir Jack's cunningly worded letter, asking only for 'even-handed' treatment of the Guiness request to be allowed to put in another bid for Distillers, placed Mrs. Thatcher in an invidious situation. The reply her 'friend' should have got was a note from her private secretary informing him that the Prime Minister fully trusted her Department of Trade and Industry to be even-handed in its dealings with Guinness. Knowing, however, what enormous power hovered behind Sir Jack, she answered quite differently, as any realistic politician would feel bound to do: she asked if she could refer his letter to an official of the department, whom she named. Whatever happened thereafter, Sir Jack's letter was considered cheap at the price, for the Guinness bid was not referred to the Monopolies Commission, as had been feared.

There we see how political leaders are compromised. At Lyons's invitation—in the circumstances almost a command—Mrs. Thatcher also attended a lunch at the offices of Bain & Co., the firm of management consultants that was actively involved in the Guinness takeover bid, another guest so honored by the mighty being Jeffrey Archer, the novelist and former deputy chairman of the Conservative Party.

In fact, Britain's Prime Minster, like political leaders in all western countries, finds it expedient, on a more or less regular basis, to make genuflections towards a great power outside and above party politics. For example, quite recently she traveled to Israel to lay a foundation stone at a hospital built by Ronson, who is not only a multi-millionaire in his own right but heads a Jewish foundation which owns some 60 per-cent of the financial empire that goes by his name.

'THE NEW UNHAPPY LORDS'

Those who are aware of such realities were not surprised to learn that less than 48 hours after they had been sentenced Saunders, Ronson and Parnes were moved from Brixton Jail, the worst in Britain, to Ford Prison in West Sussex, the best in the country, more like a health farm, where they will have access to telephones and enjoy many other privileges. Nor was that all; while they were in Brixton Jail they were not required to 'double up' with other inmates in a cell but were placed in a more comfortable hospital wing.

What this uneven-handed treatment signifies is that the executives of British party politics acknowledge that the three men are regarded by their own community and its leaders, not as common criminals but as 'warriors' who have suffered the misfortunes of war and must be treated accordingly.

"A good man goes to jail," says the heading over an article in which the London Jewish Chronicle discusses the verdict and sentences in the Guinness trial, great emphasis being placed on what the judge said about Ronson's services 'to the community'.

There is no derogatory reference to any of the accused, and for Ronson nothing but the warmest praise. Nor in two separate pieces about the trial is there any reference to the essentially criminal character of the offences committed. On the contrary, the laws contravened are referred to as belonging to a 'grey area' of the law.

Language of condemnation and indignation is reserved for Today newspaper, which is accused of printing a piece about the trial "which reeks of anti-Semitism." Rupert Murdoch's mass-circulation tabloid had alleged that a 'Kosher Nostra', the Jewish equivalent of the Mafia's 'Cosa Nostra', would support the wives of the Guinness men. The Today paper had added: "It was through this close-knit band of Jewish businessmen and financiers that the guilty Guinness quartet carved their paths as captains of industry."

Our comment is that there is far more to it than a 'Kosher Nostra' crime syndicate, as has been explained.

Postscript

- In April this year Boesky was released after completing two-thirds of a three-year sentence, served in the poshest minimum-security prison in California, where he worked in the prison dairy and found leisure time enough to win several tennis trophies on its clay courts.
- Milken comes up for sentence in New York on October 1st. In plea-bargaining, a regular feature of American trial procedure, he has admitted six criminal charges and offered to pay $600 million in fines and restitution. Meanwhile, the judge has been inundated with letters from the chief executives of major companies singing his praises as a donor to 'good causes'.
- The junk bond exercise can now be seen as one of the major causes of the failure of hundreds of savings and loan banks all over America. In many cases there were collateral deals in which the owner or manager of the bank was richly rewarded for investing at great risk the savings of his clients.
- Like the heirs of almost all the great western pioneering families who launched huge enterprises, the descendants of Arthur Guinness have lost all control over the great company that bears their name. For cosmetic reasons, the head of the family, Lord Iveagh, figures as non-executive president, but all of Arthur's descendants combined—and there are many—now own only 2.5 per-cent of the shares.

WHAT IS A HATE CRIME?

By
Charles E. Weber, Ph.D.

On 3 December 1990 The Tulsa Tribune published an editorial by a certain Neal R. Peirces, who purported to be writing in Washington. His article bore the tile, "Hate Crimes on the rise." Peirce writes as if "hate crimes" are only those committed by Aryans against members of other races, "blacks, Hispanics, Jews and Arabs," and happily notes that some 40 states "have responded on every front [,] from sophisticated information systems to radically stiffened penalties" and that "prosecutors are moving to throw the book at hate-crime perpetrators."

What is a "hate crime?" When a Negro rapes an Aryan woman or kills an Aryan man defending his home during a burglary, must it be assumed that no racial hatred is involved? The example par excellence of hate crime was the ritual murder of Aryan children by Jews in previous centuries. Jews, in fact, have a long tradition of hatred against their host populations, a hatred manifested in our days by Jewish attacks on the mores and institutions of their host populations by means of corrupting them and by means of insidious denigration in the media which they so largely control, especially television. The wise, gentle, suffering non-Aryan contrasted to the evil, ignorant Aryan has become a standard plot in motion pictures and on television.

I am neither a Skinhead nor a member of the Ku Klux Klan, but out of curiosity and concern I have talked with many Skinheads and Klansmen in order to understand their motivations. Since I am myself a victim of what is designated by the cynical euphemism, "affirmative action," my approach to them was with considerable empathy. Many, but not all, Skinheads and Klansmen are from families whose breadwinners are (or would have been) employed in industry or who are involved in agriculture or small businesses. Most of them have not had an education beyond the high school evel but have a certain healthy astuteness and idealistic desire for the survival of their race.

In recent years they have watched giant corporations create unemployment amongst young Aryan males by employing foreign labor, either by exploiting illegal ("undocumented" is the cynical euphemism) aliens or by actually building production facilities in poor ("developing") countries, especially Mexico. They have also watched governments, both federal and state, encourage hiring practices prejudiced against Aryans.

They have watched a flood of illegal aliens, a flood which the federal authorities could easily stop but seem to tolerate or to make only half-hearted attempts to stop, while military forces that could be employed to patrol our borders are sent all over the world for purposes that are not readily comprehensible or justified in the minds of most Aryan Americans. They have watched the demographic decline of the Aryan proportion of the American population, a decline which is no doubt due to anti-Aryan immigration policies and laws and to homosexuality and abortion. They have suffered from taxation which is largely employed for the benefit of non-Aryans, including generous aid and "loans" to the criminal Jewish state in Palestine and chaotic Negro states in Africa. They have seen public schools corrupted by their use of anti-Aryan indoctrination and by the busing of pupils to schools in which Aryan children are harassed and assaulted by hate-filled Negroes. They have noted the anti-Aryan policies of "their" government, to which they are forced to pay taxes, with regard to South Africa.

It is only natural and indeed healthy that there is a growing feeling of desperation, frustration and anger in the minds and hearts of young Aryans, even if these feelings are sometimes manifested by acts which are of dubious value to the Aryan cause by being met with ever more repressive measures.

Skinheads and Klansmen typically refer to the federal government by the acronym ZOG (= Zionist Occupation Government) with good reasons, even though with some measure of rhetorical exaggeration. They see "their" representatives in Washington corrupted by huge funds from Zionist organizations, as described in detail by the former member of Congress, Paul Findley, in his important book, They Dare to Speak Out, published in 1985. Many Skinheads and Klansmen debate the use of the American flag at their meetings because of a growing feeling that the American flag no longer represents a government dedicated to their welfare and protection. For that reason their rallies are often decorated by the flags of the Confederate States of America or of National Socialist Germany.

Instead of simply condemning the anger of young Aryan Americans and occasional acts that manifest that anger, those in power should seek to understand the reasons for their anger and then act to remedy the conditions which cause it.

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. STOP GOVERNMENT FROM DISTORTING "HATE CRIME" STATISTICS CALL TOLL-FREE TO REPORT HATE CRIMES AGAINST WHITES!

The recently passed National Hate Crime Statistics Act requires the Justice Department to gather statistics concerning crimes, including "verbal harassment" and "intimidation", in which the victims were singled out because of their race, color, national origin, religious affiliation/beliefs, or sexual orientation. One of the co-sponsors of the bill which led to this law, Rep. Coyne of Pennsylvania, while speaking at the University of Pittsburgh earlier this year, openly admitted that he plans to use the statistics collected to press for a federal law which would impose special penalties for "hate crimes."

While common sense indicates that Whites, Christians, and heterosexuals must be, by their overwhelming majority in the population, the most frequent victims of "hate crimes," it appears that crimes against these groups are being ignored in the statistics. The way the law is worded, it requires the Justice Department to collect statistics on all "hate crimes," and certainly, given the Constitutional guarantee of equal protection under the law, Congress could not have intended the Hate Crimes Statistics Act to apply only to some groups and not to others. White Americans should therefore help the government gather accurate, balanced and meaningful statistics by calling the Justice Department Community Relations Service toll-free phone number to report any and all hate crimes committed against Whites.

If you have been the victim of verbal harassment which included anti-white remarks because you refused to give a panhandler money or because you are a woman who refused sexual advances; if you have been threatened or attacked by ethnic street gangs because you were a white person on their turf; if your property has been vandalized and you suspect anti-white motivations; if groups of homosexuals intimidate you or make you afraid to let your children to go alone into public restrooms; call to report it. The toll-free number is 1-800-347-HATE. They may try to discourage you from reporting the crime. Be persistent—the law requires they take your report. They may want you to file a complaint with your local police, but they can hardly insist on this in cases of minor crimes such as verbal harassment. You may, of course, want to report all hate crimes to your local police also, and if they refuse to take your complaint or refuse to include your claim that it was hate inspired, you can call the Justice Department to report police abuse of your rights as a hate crime victim.

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Bacu describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. THE ANTI-HUMANS is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. Appl. THE ANTI-HUMANS, 307 pp., hb. 1. Oktober 1990 enclosed are an invation and some other correspondence regarding our noble undertaking to unite (finally), the many different conservativ and national-democratic organizations, clubs and even political parties in Germany.

Dear Mr. Dietz,

Never before has there been such a call for unity in our different ranks, all throughout the lands of West- and Central-Germany. The response has been good so far, even though many are waiting to see what the state-elections (Landtagswahlen) will bring on October 14th in Bavaria, Hessen and the liberated states of Central-Germany.

Several well-known patriots have already declared their willingness to work with this newly formed Union of German Interests (Dachverband Deutscher Interessen) but we want to spread this unifying enterprise throughout the world, to all the Germans, wherever they now live. Thus we need the support of all organizations and publications to accomplish this task.

Our financial resources are still very limited, but we would like to get from you (Liberty Bell Publications) some of your material and publications, in German or English.

At the same time we would like to ask you to please help us spread the word and support our undertaking. If you know of any German organizations in the US who might be willing to join in this Union, please let us know. An introductory article in your publication would be of great help, I am sure.

Hoping to hear from you very soon, in German or English.

Mit freundlichen Grüßen und deutscher Verbundenheit,

Josef Schaller
Generalsekretär

We urge our German- and English-speaking readers in the US and across the world to lend their support by writing to Mr. Schaller for more information. —Ed. Liberty Bell

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

A PORTENT

By the time this note appears in print, Bushy may have wrought enough slaughter and destruction to enable him to strut in glory as a War Lord—under the watchful eyes of his superiors, of course. But as I write, in the middle of December, there are a few indications that would justify a provisional and cautious optimism about the viability of our species.

Despite the screaming of the Jews that the American boobs have a moral duty to conquer Iraq for Jewry,[1] the Americans, according to all reports that have come to me, were showing little enthusiasm to sacrifice their lives and property for the Master Race. It would seem, therefore, that they are not totally incapable of learning from painful experience.

In 1917, the nation was easily crazed with righteousness and rushed eagerly to fight (in a "war to end wars"!) to make the world safe for the Jews' democracy. When the next world war was started twenty-one years after 1918, much less than half of the Americans were inspired with a righteous blood-lust, and it was necessary for the loathsome energumen called Roosevelt to arrange for the destruction of the American fleet at Pearl Harbor to work up the needed bellicosity. If Bushy is planning to start the Third World War, now overdue, since forty-five years have elapsed since 1945, he will have to arrange a much more sensational casus belli, if he thinks American approval desirable.

1. Particularly shrill screams emanated from the editor of one of the Jews' most recent purchases, the once mildly American and respected U.S. News and World Report, which they continue to publish under its old and now mendacious name.

A French periodical published what purported to be the American plan to have twenty thousand American troops killed at the beginning of an attack on Iraq. Judging from the attitude of the public thus far, no matter how loudly the jewspapers yell, it will take much more than that to whip up enthusiasm for ruining the country and sacrificing American lives.

What was, in present circumstances, truly astonishing, there was a major newspaper, the Sentinel of Orlando, Florida, which dared to be American. It published a series of brilliant editorials that pointed out the obvious fact that Americans have no conceivable interest in who controls Kuwait or the Persian Gulf, and no legitimate excuse for meddling in Arabian affairs.

The most significant gain, however, was the realization forced on the American people that they have nothing whatsoever to say about what will be done with their lives and their property. Their opinions and desires are all otiose and nugatory. If their masters want a war, a war they shall have, with all its consequences. That realization of our helpless servitude should have given pause to even the happiest moron among us, and must have made our more astute fellow slaves wish they had kept a country of their own, when they had one.

Americans can no longer refuse to see the ineluctable consequence of their fatuity since 1913 in obeying every gang of Jews or Jews' stooges who told them, "Come, little boobies, stick your heads in the noose and we'll do you lots of good." They now exist in the abject slavery to which they prepared to subject themselves in 1913, when they approved the White Slave Act, commonly called the Income Tax.

If the slaves aspire to freedom now, I do not know what they can do. No hope, of course, is to be placed in the Congress that the Jews boastfully describe as the best their money can buy, even though its members are a little miffed by the War Lord's contemptuous disregard of their vanity when he regarded them as not worth consulting. If Americans show a reluctance to impoverish themselves and die for God's Race, Bushy, as I pointed out in the October issue, has only to say "Emergency," and terrorists from his own Criminal Intelligence Agency and the Federal Bureau of Intimidation will haul Americans suspected of rational thought from their homes and kill them, and perhaps their families, in the streets or, if more sadistically inclined, put them in concentration camps in which the offenders will learn what existence was like in the Soviet Gulag or in the camps to which German soldiers were confined, after 1945, by the foul mongrel called Eisenhower.

There were two significant events in Chicago on 8 December. The Populist Party, which I have mentioned several times, held a rally to protest the plans for a war in the Persian Gulf. A total of eight (8) stalwart members of the Populist Party appeared for the scheduled rally, and stood for a while, embarrassed, under the eyes of about fifty policemen, who had ready three "Black Marias" for prisoners. The police, according to one account, had been sent to overawe the Populists; according to another account, the police were sent to protect them from an anticipated riot by the screaming zombies our enemies can always call out on any occasion. I hope the second version is the correct one.

At the same time, a loose association of "leftist" (subversive) and other organizations also held a rally to protest the waging of war in the Persian Gulf. It was attended by a crowd which the press estimated at four thousand (4000). Some police were on duty, but there were no reported disorders.

A rather large but unestimated proportion of the four thousand consisted of niggers, who were naturally concerned for the welfare of their relatives in Arabia. According to a naval officer who professes to have observed the camps in Saudi Arabia on the border of Kuwait, 65% of the regular army consists of niggers.

Another source estimates that females form 25% of the regular army, more than the 17% given in official statistics.

What percentage of the females are Congoids or mulattas was not stated. The use of females as uniformed "soldiers" is characteristic of, and obligatory under, all Judaeo-Communist régimes, including the government of the United States. When the Americans still controlled this country, that was one of the aspects of Communism they regarded as most repulsive, but now that they are a subject people, they no longer have standards of their own.

The regular army may contain a few "élite" units, but if the war comes to hand-to-hand fighting, the multiracial and bisexual mass will run across the desert faster than a simoon. That explains why it was necessary to rush to Arabia the almost entirely white National Guards of quite a few states to form a fighting force that will stand its ground.

I have seen a press report about the rally of four thousand, but have no certain information about it. I have no reason to suppose that it was planned to facilitate a tactical measure when the war is under way.

Unless you are fairly young, you will remember the time when a crook from Texas, who, supervised by his Jewess, had climbed into the White House, found in Vietnam a pretext for killing many young Americans, maiming many others with wounds or tropical diseases in a fake war, and squandering a large part of the resources of the American people to accustom them to ever increasing slavery as taxpayers. The boobs were told that the purpose of the débâcle was to "fight Communism," although the obvious purpose was to promote the Judaeo-Communist conquest of the world, as became obvious to everyone after the planned defeat that finally terminated a folly, which was, from any American point of view, simply insane.

You will also remember that during the years in which that obscene orgy was in progress, Americans who perceived that it was simply an act of treason by the government that was supposedly theirs were neatly prevented from public opposition by the clever tactic of inciting mobs of the mindless zombies produced in the public boob-hatcheries to "demonstrate" and riot against the "War in Vietnam," which they denounced, not on any rational grounds or with the slightest consideration for the young Americans who were sacrificed by a military strategy designed to produce the greatest number of casualties, but because some precious Oriental enemies were being harmed.

I doubt that such a tactic will be needed this time. It is possible, of course, that Bushy's Jewish masters will be content with the ruin of Saudi Arabia, which assuredly cannot survive the massive American invasion of its territory and humiliation of its rulers. After the invaders withdraw, that unfortunate land will become a revolutionary chaos.

If, however, Bushy gets the real war he wants, he will have little need of, and probably will not even want, the approbation of his subjects. He has the power to rule the boobs by terror, as did those paragons of Jewish democracy in Russia, Lenin and Stalin, and as Bushy's colleague, Gorby, is preparing to do again.[2] That kind of rule, surely, would yield him the most fun.

SANITY IN SOUTH AMERICA

You will be glad to know that the singularly courageous little periodical, Temple, which I mentioned in these pages in December 1984 and November 1988, is still being published by Dr. Gastón Ortiz Acha (Unión 1087, Oficina 501, Lima, Perú). No. 77 of the current series, which reached me in November, contains eight articles in its four tabloid-size pages.

The article that will first attract your attention is entitled (I translate, of course), "The Most Loathsome Hireling

2. Needless to say, all the gabble about an "end of Communism" and "liberalization" of Russia is simply a screen to hide the obvious fact that, as I pointed out from the first, Gorbachev is systematically concentrating in his own hands all of the powers that Stalin once enjoyed, perhaps appealing, as Stalin did, to Russian nationalism to facilitate his progressive seizure of one power after another. The only question is whether he is doing so with the approval of the Army, which has the power to depose him by a coup d'état, if it so wishes. That is a point on which I shall comment obiter in the next article.

in the World." The subject is Bush, "a bacillus in the bloated gut of the Jewish imperialism which, through its Marxist and Capitalist derivatives, keeps the entire planet in helpless subjection." The picturesque description of our War Lord, the servile vassal of both the Jews who reside in the United States and the Jews who reside in Israel and Russia, identifies him as part of the Trilateral Commission, "an organism created by the Rockefeller clan of the international vampires, the Jews who dictate the internal and external policies of the United States, a country whose inhabitants imagine that they are free, but which is only a jail filled with prisoners who are, just at present, well-fed, but whom international Jewry keeps psychologically captive, manipulating them to serve its every whim."

A second article, "The Case of the Persian Gulf and Bush's Hypocrisy," shows that the Vampire race simply ordered our War Lord to run his dogs into Arabia to ruin the authentically Semitic power of Iraq, which became formidable because the same Jews supplied it with arms and money to destroy a possible Islamic unity between Iraq and Iran, with the result that Iraq now has a large, battle-seasoned army. Bush is recognized as just one of the "American" Presidents who have sent their drugged and enslaved soldiers all over the world to fight and die for the Sheenies. Dr. Ortiz, however, still nourishes a hope that the American slaves will finally revolt and condignly punish their domestic enemies and the traitors who serve them. Well, ¡ojalá!

As you see, Dr. Ortiz, from his watchtower in Peru, has perceived accurately the present condition of the United States, apart from his optimistic hopes, and his perspicacity extends to the rest of the world. There are articles on the activities of the Jews' hirelings in France and South Africa. In the latter there is a nice phrase about "That wretch, Mandela, who has even gone so far as to call the Sephardic Jew, Fidel Castro Ruz, a champion of human liberty, and who is now riding in state on the necks[1] of American, French, and Canadian imbeciles, and is applauded by the Jews' figureheads, such as the Thatcher woman and the renegade Bush, and by the Jews' steward, Mitterand."[2] The renegade, De Klerk, who is now President of the self-doomed[3] land, is identified not only as a traitor, but specifically as paid by Oppenheimer and his gang.

There are two articles on Russia. Dr. Ortiz, needless to say, ignores the time-worn rumor, now put into circulation once more, that the Jews have lost control of their first total conquest. That canard was first invented in 1923-24 during the struggle over the succession to the bloody Jewish mongrel, Ulyanov, alias Lenin,[4] between three unspeakable creatures who were disguised as Russians, Apfelbaum, alias Zinoviev, Rosenfeldt, alias Kamenev, and Dzhugashvili, alias Stalin,[5] with the balance of power evidently held by the

1. Since costillas means both 'ribs' and 'property,' a costillas is a kind of pun here, meaning both 'closely beside' and 'at the cost of.' Our idiom 'on the necks of' approximates that meaning.

2. On Mitterand's use of "subliminal suggestion" on television to procure his reëlection, see Liberty Bell, September 1990, pp. 1-3.

3. See Liberty Bell, December 1983, pp. 5-10, where I suggested that the nation's suicidal mania was the result of a rotting of Aryan minds by a disease comparable in its effects to kuru. Since the fatal infection produces no physiological symptoms, it must be spiritual, i.e., Christianity.

4. Everyone knows that "Lenin" had not even a drop of Russian blood; according to official records, he was the son of a Mongol (Tatar) by a Kikess (i.e., fully a Jew by orthodox definition, which considers the race of the father as irrelevant), and I think that is probably correct. There is no real support for the story that he was all Jew, son of a Goldman, adopted by the Ulyanovs, and it is negated by the fact that "Lenin's" brother had inherited the same murderous instincts, but was fortunately executed before he had much chance to put them into practice.

5. Dzhugashvili claimed to be a Georgian, but may have been at least partly a Jew; see Liberty Bell, February 1988, pp. 56-59, where I hoped that some reader would have a working acquaintance with Karthli and so could confirm or refute the statement that his name indicates Jewish ancestry in that language. His favorite butchers were two Jews, Yagoda (later Beria), who was head of the Secret Police, and his factotum, Kaganovich, a Yid who had not even assumed a Russian alias. On vicious Jew, Bronstein, alias Trotsky (Rosenfeldt's brother-in-law). Since "Trotsky" had lived in New York, whence he had led a cargo of blood-thirsty vermin shipped to Russia in 1917 under the protection of Woodrow Wilson, no one could have mistaken his race, but some gullible persons, deceived by the Russian names assumed by the other three, assumed that some or all of them were Russians and so imagined a racial struggle within the Jews' first great colonial possession.

The canard gained credence in 1929, when Bronstein popped out of Russia, having either lost to "Stalin" a struggle for supremacy or, by agreement with him, emigrated to propagate his race's spiritual poison by having it vended in two flavors, "Stalinist" and "Trotskyite," for the delectation of simple-minded Aryan "intellectuals." And the canard has been repeated at every opportunity since then. It should be worn-out by now, but fish never lose their appetite for hooks concealed in worms. It now serves to facilitate a mass migration of Sheenies to the United States to join their fellow tribesmen in pauperizing their American boobs.

Dr. Ortiz ponders the question that has occurred to everyone: Why does not Gorbachev (whom Dr. Ortiz calls a Jew, as is quite likely, although I know of no valid evidence) simply use the overwhelmingly powerful Soviet Army to suppress, with delightful slaughter, any discontent in Russia, which is the heartland of the Soviet Empire and the only country that counts in it?[6] the latter, see the recent biography by Stuart Kahan, The Wolf of the Kremlin (New York, William Morrow, s.a. [1987]), which discloses more than it conceals. Dr. Ortiz simply lists "Stalin" as a Jew.

6. Some reports from Russia affirm that the Army, "living on the fat of the land," is in fine fettle and eager for action; others contend that it was "demoralized and disunited" by the retreat from Afghanistan, although it left that country securely under the control of a Communist puppet-government. Current speculation centers about the recent prominence of Colonel-General Boris Gromov, who was in charge in Afghanistan. According to the Sunday Times (London), 9 December 1990, he was exalted by "saturation coverage on state television." and

His answer is that (a) Jews are so universally and deservedly hated by the Russians that some diversion of their anger had become necessary, and (b) the economy had become so disorganized and corrupt that it was requisite to put on a show to provide Gorbachev's colleague in the United States with a pretext for making his American serfs finance the Judaeo-Communist rule of Russia, as they have done so often before, beginning in 1921.[7]

Dr. Otriz believes in the reality of the economic chaos reported from Russia, e.g., by a reporter named James Blitz in the Sunday Times (London), 9 December 1990, who reports that an abundance of food, theoretically to be sold in the state stores, is virtually all cornered by corrupt administrators and gangsters and can be obtained only in "black market" stores at 1500% of the offical price, thus producing widespread hunger and starvation.

Dr. Ortiz suggests a possible eventuality that I have not seen mentioned elsewhere: a "conquest" of Russia by the efficient Jewish satrapies in "capitalist" England, France, and Germany, which will take over and provide "democracy," probably in some way that will satisfy the Yiddish lust for mass-massacres of goyim.

Many other conjectures about the future of Russia are possible, but we need to hold fast to the only certainty, that now is "the most popular general in the Soviet armed forces." He has now entered the government as Deputy Minister of the Interior. Some experts, taxi-drivers in Moscow and professors in British universities, believe that, when the time comes, Gromov will use the élite corps of the Army for a coup d'état against Gorbachev. If that is so, then Gorbachev's "liberalization" and "democratic tendencies," with the economic chaos reported from Russia (e.g., in the feature article in the Sunday Times cited below), will have served the purpose of demonstrating to the Russian masses that everything was better under strict Communist rule, and this would fit the position taken by Dr. Ortiz. Alternatively, Gromov's rôle may be to help establish Gorbachev as an autocrat (note the recent resignations of some of his supposed opponents with a corresponding increase in his own powers) and virtually a new Czar. That would also fit.

7. Cf. Liberty Bell, February 1989, pp. 26-27.

Yahweh's Yids will remain firmly in control of the country they conquered by deceit and terrorism many years before they were able to start pushing the Semites out of Palestine and eventually Asia Minor.

Beyond that point, it will be hazardous to make assumptions concerning what is now happening in Russia, because, as always since 1918, we cannot ascertain how much of the "news" that is printed is organized lying by the prostitutes of the press. That lesson is emphasized by the recent publication of Stalin's Apologist, Walter Duranty, the New York Time's Man in Moscow, by S(ally) J. Taylor (Oxford University Press, 1990). The lady makes it quite clear that Duranty deliberately lied for Stalin in his despatches from Moscow in the 1920s and 1930s, and was congratulated by Stalin for "having backed him to win" from the first. She is certain that the mongrel rat[8] was not a Communist, since he had no 'ideology' and indeed no scruples or principles whatsoever, except self-advancement, and she indicts him for the crime of having misled the Western world about the horrors of Soviet rule, particularly Stalin's murder of millions of Ukrainians by forcing them to starve to death. She does not see that, aside from winning Stalin's patronage,[9] Duranty was pleasing his employers, the Jews who owned the New York Times, often called the Slushbuggers. She also failed to consider the fact that there were still honest reporters in Russia in those years, the late Malcolm Muggeridge and, more importantly, Robert Wilton of the London Times, but the Jews had already attained such control over the press,[10] and the malice of fledgling "intellectuals" intoxicated with "social justice" and hatred of their betters was so great, that truthful reports about Jewish rule of Russia were discounted and ignored by the stupid British and Americans, who lapped up the swill put before them by their covert enemies. Had Duranty been an honest man, he would have been similarly ignored. He chose to please the Masters of the World, and there are many like him today.

In his article, "The Ferocity of the Jews in Palestine," Dr. Ortiz notes that the Yids, who, at the expense of their serfs in Europe and North America, are now raping Palestine for the second time with the sadism innate in their race, are merely repeating what every Christian knows they did before. "From the Bible itself it is obvious that the Jews are merely criminal usurpers of Palestinian territory. Jews who had come from Egypt, and from Babylon before that, took for themselves the land that was owned by the Arabs [i.e, the Canaanites][11] just because they coveted it and without the slightest right to it."

8. It is evident from photographs of the creature's ugly and sinister visage that he was not an Aryan. Although Mrs. Taylor claims to have spent ten years in research for her long book, she does not inform us what genetic strains produced the degenerate; he could have been partly or even entirely Jewish. He was a drug-addict, amateur of occult and even overtly Satanic hocus-pocus, squat, bald, and ugly, but was nevertheless able to seduce a very large number of supposedly respectable women, who must have been devoid of both taste and self-respect. For many other details concerning the personality and career of this scabrous creature, see Mrs. Taylor's book. She incidentally notes that William Shirer, a champion liar about Germany, naturally called Duranty "the greatest of correspondents to cover Moscow."

9. Mrs. Taylor does not tell us whether Stalin paid Duranty in cash, women, drugs, or sadistic pleasures—or, perhaps, all four. Although the journalist professed to have been shocked by the carnage he saw in France during the First World War, it is likely he derived a spiritual satisfaction from human suffering and death.

10. A clear illustration of the extent of that control is shown by the fact that Butterworth, the British publisher of Wilton's book, mutilated it by omitting the most telling references to the world-conquering Sheenies, and Wilton had to set the record straight in his French version of his book, Les derniers jours des Romanof.

11. The term 'Arab' is now currently, but mistakenly, used to designate all Moslem Semites, who now speak Arabic or a dialect of it because that was the language of the Koran and is the language of their religion, law, and culture. The word should be reserved for descendants of the inhabitants of the territory that is now Saudi Arabia and adjacent lands when Mahomet founded his religion on the basis of Jewish myths. The rightful inhabitants of Palestine (and of Iraq) are Semites and speak a dialect of Arabic, but as a nation they are an ethnic conglomeration of various Semitic strains, in which Arabic blood is only a small fraction. — The ancient Canaanites were Semites, closely akin to the Phoenicians, but it would require much discussion and speculation to try to identify the ethnic strains within a nation that was divided into many small independent kingdoms.

That the Jews simply invaded and captured Canaan, a land to which they had no conceivable title other than the reported promises of a bloody god who was viciously egging them on, is clearly stated in the Christians' holy book, and so provides an excellent example of their proficiency in what Orwell called "double-think." Our ancestors escape the moral edge of that reproach: they credulously accepted the Jews' tales about an armed conquest of Canaan as an historical record, but having done so, they credited the Jews with the only valid right to a territory, the right of conquest. The gravamen of scorn falls on our contemporary salvation-peddlers and their dupes. They are forever chattering about the wickedness of "aggression" and "violent solutions," but hypocritically do not denounce or even deplore naked and barbaric aggression against the Canaanites by the world's trouble-makers, even though it is described in what they consider an infallibly accurate story.[12]

Dr. Ortiz's lead article is naturally devoted to his own country, which, he says, is so dominated by the Apristas that its only hope is that its military men still possess the resolution and power to save the nation, as they did so often in the past.

My older readers will remember the time when the Peruvian "Apra" (= Alianza Popular Revolutionaria Americana) set our simple-minded "intellectuals" atwitter with enthusiasm for a "native and genuinely American program of Social Justice" and a gorgeous "alternative to Communism." Its doctrine, supposedly invented by a professional trouble-maker who sonorously called himself Victor Raúl Haya de la Torre, was, as I wrote in 1960, just a "prescription specially compounded by Soviet pharmacologists for the local market, with a strong racial flavoring to attract Indians and mestizos." It naturally also attracted American do-gooders, ever eager to meddle in the affairs of all other countries and to excite subversion, rioting, civil war, anarchy, and murder.

It would be pointless to summarize the "doctrine" of "Apra." It, like the "doctrine" of Mordechai, alias Karl Marx, is just sucker-bait concocted to excite childish minds of "intellectuals" who prize verbiage above reality.

There is some excuse for a populace's insatiable appetite for sucker-bait. They (including many persons who have advanced university degrees in some lucrative speciality) have received only a rudimentary eduction, usually have their minds muddled with supersitions, and have a slothful reluctance to undergo painful exercise of what powers of reason they may innately possess. Their naïve willingness to assume that the noises made by the mouths of politicians have some relation the scoundrels' beliefs and intentions merely demonstrates the absurdity of the farce called "democracy." But when a nation is dominated by individuals who profess to have had a superior education and to possess powers of ratiocination, but are befuddled by the verbal hocus-pocus of Marx, his Peruvian imitator, and the whole jabbering horde of crypto-Bolsheviks called "Liberal intellectuals," one despairs of the future of a race that has become imbecile and is no longer viable in a world in which only the biologically fit will survive. ❑

12. The tale about a military conquest of Canaan is a patently implausible fiction, as was recognized by the Jews' great apologist, Philo Judaeus. One of the major historical problems before us is this: Whence came the marauders whom the Canaanites called Hebrews ('aliens')? What genetic stocks entered into their racial amalgam? What was their religion, and what language did they speak before they slithered into Canaan and stole their victims' gods, their victims' language, and their victims' country?

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book, that the sing's undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The books goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. For your copy of Which Way Western Man? send $17.50 (which includes $2.50 for postage and handling for the softback edition (Order No. 22003).

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980—except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. For your copy (Order No. 03014) send $9.50 (which includes $1.50 for postage and handling). LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Landsmann:

Well, we now have the war in the Middle East I spoke of for so long. I didn't know exactly when or how it would be done, but he genesis of it is clear: the 1973 war. All the previous wars were a lot of fun for Israel. In 1967 they massacred 119,000 Arabs for a loss of a mere 600 Jews. But 1973 was not so much fun. Nearly 10,000 Jews were killed and 30,000 wounded. In the first week of the war Israel lost over 100 jets and 800 tanks. They only won out because they were completely reequipped by the U.S. In the aftermath of this war it was decided that two things had to be done. First, the U.S. would have to be brought in to fight the next war for Israel. Second, the oilfields must be stolen from the Arabs.

From the time of the first oil hoax on, a plan to accomplish these two things was set into motion. First the Shah of Iran was overthrown by the U.S. and Britain acting in concert and Khomeini was installed. Then Iraq was egged on by the U.S. to overthrow Khomeini which led to the Iraq-Iran war, which the U.S. and Israel then prolonged for nearly a decade by supplying arms and money to both sides. At the same time Egypt was threatened with atomic attack by Israel and forced to make peace and put on the U.S. payroll. Next, Syria was chastised in the 1982 war and half of Lebanon stolen for Israel. At the same time the whole U.S. Army was redeployed and strengthened for the Mid East war with the setting up of Carter's RDF, which was gradually increased to the 6 division Central Forces Command. It is hard to tell now whether Iran or Iraq was the initial target of this force but the intent was clear: to put a U.S. Army in control of the Gulf oil fields.

About three weeks ago the hate propaganda of the Jewish press was put into high gear. King Hussein of Jordan commented on 21 July that it was just like the propaganda preparation for the 1967 war, At that time the Jew papers came out with the code words that Hussein of Iraq was the "new Hitler." In other words, he was designated Enemy #1 of the Jews worldwide. Even before this the U.K. and U.S. took a number of aggressive measures against Iraq, cutting off exports and loans for commerce. It is clear now that Iraq was goaded into acting against Kuwait by its undercutting the OPEC price by selling oil as low as $12 per barrel at a time when Iraq desperately needed money to fend off the Israeli attack Hussein knew was coming.

It is clear now that the U.S. attack on Panama was a rehearsal for Iraq. In particular, Bush was first humiliated by the Jews foiling his clumsy coup against Noriega to see if he was to be goaded into action by humiliation. He was, and the Israeli controller of Noriega dumped him and fled the country on an Israeli C-130. From then on it was only a matter of goading Iraq into action and then letting the pre-planned operation take its course. The secret Jew hand was what smoothed out all opposition and suddenly made the U.N. and even Turkey and Saudi Arabia agree to let American troops in. From the moment the massive U.S. invasion of Saudi Arabia began, the war was certain.

What next? At the time I write [11 August 1990], the first elements of the American invasion force are occupying the port of Saudi Arabia and the airfields of Riyadh and Dahran. Iraq clearly never had any intent of occupying Saudi Arabia but the American invasion may force such a move as a defensive measure. If not, U.S. troops will build up until some incident is manufactured to begin the war. Iraq is doomed regardless. It will be "bombed back to the stone age," as North Vietnam never was. Kuwait and Saudi Arabia will be permanently occupied by Jewmerican troops. Sometime during the war Israel will invade and conquer Jordan and expel all the Palestinians into it. Probably the pretext will be to "help America" in the war or to "forestal an Iraqi invasion." Whatever the excuse, Jordan will become a Jew puppet state and a slave labor pool for Israel. As for the U.S., we've lost the war already. We will pay for the war, we will suffer the losses, we will suffer the oil hoax, and we will occupy the Mid East for Israel from now on. What use is the destruction of Iraq to us?

Right now Bush is posturing like Imperial Ceasar trampling on the Egyptians. The one question is, what happens if the U.S.S.R. puts a spoke in this game? If the U.S.S.R. intervenes, Bush will go from posturing bully to a puddle of slime. Right now the Soviets are laughing at this lunatic U.S. war and profiting from it mightily as the #2 oil and gold exporters. They may well be letting Bush have enough rope to hang himself. I well remember that 4 of the 7 secret conditions for German reunification dealt with a U.S.-U.S.S.R. war in the Mid East.

That there is going to be a shooting war is certain. Having worked 15 years to set up the present situation, Israel is not going to allow the situation to be settled peacefully. It has already stated it will attack Jordan if any Iraqi troops enter it. They have thus already declared that they consider Jordan their property. At any time Israel can claim that it spotted Iraqi troops entering Jordan and attack. Who will ever be able to prove otherwise?

I personally knew that the war was near because of the economic situation. It is clear that the debt bubble began to collapse last September 15th when Campeau Corp. defaulted on its junk bonds. Since then the Junk Bond market and then real estate has collapsed. A third oil hoax and a Mid East war was needed to enrich the banks and justify the Jews' depression. The government was barely holding the markets up and I knew some action had to be taken soon.

The only question is whether the war will begin now, with an Iraqi preemptive strike (like the Boers launched in 1898 against the British in South Africa) to delay the U.S. build-up or whether Iraq will wait until the whole U.S. force arrives and the Jews manufacture a pretext for the fighting to start. Either way, Iraq is doomed. If they had any sense, they would strike first, before the U.S. build-up is complete. Iraq could easily push aside the weak Saudi forces and smash the U.S. troops and Planes there now. If they don't, the war will simply be delayed until Israel is ready for it. Make no mistake, there will be no peaceful solution. War is certain. Die for Jewry, American pigs! Again! Take a look at the media and you'll see that the fix is in. Not one media outlet dared mention that Iraq is only doing the same thing the U.S. did in Panama seven months ago. Not one Liberal "pacifist" dared question what the U.S. is doing invading the mainland of Asia 11,000 miles from the U.S. No Vietnam style treason will be allowed here. This is the Jews' war! I haven't seen hate propaganda like this since WW II! In WW II nobody in Britain dared ask what business the Polish border was of England's. Now, nobody dares ask what business the status of Kuwait is of the U.S.'s. Incidentally, a look at the map will tell you that Kuwait is part of Iraq, split off by the British for their own purposes. And for this Americans are going to die? Use of nuclear weapons has already been mentioned since America's ground forces are pathetic.

Another thing the media don't mention is how the U.S. government, already running a $300 billion deficit, is going to pay for this war. I estimate it costs $50,000 to send one GI to Saudi Arabia. The papers are already talking of a 250,000 man force. Then there are the inflationary effects of the oil hoax. Oil is already at $27 per barrel compared to $18 a few weeks ago. Clearly the U.S. has no way to finance this war except through inflation and the theft of Arab funds (like Kuwait's). I estimate that inflation was already running at a 15% rate this year and this new stuff will come atop of that. Anyone who doesn't already own gold or silver should buy some. Anyone in debt had better get out of it quick if they want to survive the inflationary depression to come. If you want to see what will be done in America as the financial crisis unfolds, have a look at Brazil. The Jews usually practice whatever they plan to do on a small scale before implementing it. Panama was the practice for Saudi Arabia and Brazil was the practice field for America economically.

Please note—another thing the papers won't dare mention. It is Bush who is cutting off our oil, not Sadam Hussein of Iraq.

Sincerely,
R.S., New York

Dear George:

I used to have the idea that Dr. Oliver was maybe an educated nut who didn't have the intelligence to handle knowledge he had accumulated, but after reading America's Decline I can see that I was wrong. He has it all! He is probably one of the most wonderful men in the world, if not the most wonderful. I have read an awful lot myself and he is always bringing up books that I have read. It seems that he has read everything that was ever written and the most wonderful thing is his memory. He remembers what he has read...

Now I see in the Spotlight that Israel wants to have the computer it will need to make the H-Bomb and that Bush will probably give it to them. If he does, it will be the worst thing anyone has ever done to our country. It could be the death of every white person on the North American continent.

I wish you would let Dr. Oliver read the article I wrote and see what he thinks of it. He may not know about the underground Washington D.C. the Jews are digging down there. I have never seen one word anyplace except what you told us several years ago. I thought maybe you had been wrong but I asked my nephew who lives there. He said that the contractors are working feverishly on it and that they call it "Operation Foggy Mountain."

Well, I won't be here to enjoy it as I will soon be 88 years old and thank God I have no children to leave it to. I do think the white race is the greatest race on earth. If it had never existed, where would we be now? I doubt we would even have electricity. If there had never been a white race, how long do you think it would take the niggers in Africa to put a man on the moon. Probably never.

So keep up the good work, George. We need a lot of people like you and it is a shame that more people don't know you exist.

So long,
A.H., Ohio

Dear Mr. Dietz,

Thank you very much for printing Charles Weber's review of my book. Liberty Bell is the ideal format for a discussion of such a book, given its anti-Christian position. I'm enclosing a copy of my letter to Dr. Weber which was in response to his review. We have since become correspondents.

Thank you also for your book order. I hope you sell a lot of them.

It is apparent that the forced war in Arabia will bring about arrests of nationalists. You are probably as aware of this as anyone. My wife and I took a nine-thousand-mile trip around the country this summer on which I spoke to groups of men who have read my book. Our host in Ohio, Lee Hayes, a veteran of the Pueblo incident, was informed by a contact in the Columbus city hall that the Secret Service was investigating him for terrorism! We were followed in and around that city by agents, probably federal. I'm enclosing an article from a Medford, Oregon patriot newspaper which describes a near incident there. We were also followed in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho and my wife was nearly abducted in Post Falls while I was holding a discussion. We were tipped about the intended arrest in Medford. The patriots there had goofed and advertised my talk! FBI agents stupidly told a local talk show host that they would arrest me at the meeting. They'd gone to the radio station to obtain tapes of past shows in order to make voiceprints of the callers! The host is not friendly to us, but the word got out.

My current project is a book to be entitled Our Struggle, and will be much more direct than even The New American Man.

Yours truly,
J.B. Campbell

Dear Sirs:

Someone said a democracy is a Jewish dictatorship.

With their money power and spider-web-like legal system the Jews are well protected in a democracy.

Strong nationalist leaders are anathema to them. Their paranoid shrieking about Hitler for fifty years or more attests to this. They fear any system that they cannot control.

What they want is a New World Order which means undermining the sovereignty of all nations and welding them into a One World Government with Jewish Nationalism as its core center. It is to be nationalism and racism for the Jews and internationalism and mongrelization for the rest of us.

It is doubtful that President Bush understands all this, which brings to mind Oswald Spengler's remark: "People today would be shocked if they fully realized the incompetence of their leaders."

Yours truly,
J.J.McC., Washington

Dear Mr. Dietz,

...I may not agree with your views on Christianity but it is a pleasure to read articles and letters written by White folks with a genuine concern for the welfare and preservation of our race.

Best wishes,
Mrs. P.L.R., Washington

Dear Sir,

Please renew my subscription to Liberty Bell as I don't want to miss out on any of the good news. Also I have enclosed a book order.

I pray for a new beginning....when men and women embrace one another with respect and stand together, firm, under one Leader, for one Reich, as one People. I pray for the time when the limitless blue sky will be our flag, and the revolving sunwheel will be our emblem. Because such is the destiny of those who remain pure. Such is the destiny of the whole world.

Thank you so much for your quality education.

Dear Mr. Dietz:

Enclosed the galley proofs for Bulletin 54. I was pleased that you reproduced the Confederate note and that it came out well. The original was a somewhat worn specimen in my collection of historical bank notes. I have already had some good responses to Bulletin 54.

I was sorry to see Harold Covington attacking Ben Klassen and his Church of the Creator and I suspect that his attack is unfounded. [Anyone wishing to read the "attack," please send $1 for postage & copying fees.] I hate to see such dissention amongst our small, pro-Aryan forces. I think that Klassen has written some valuable things.

Today [13 November 1990] I received a letter from a physician in Maryland who wrote: "As to Liberty Bell, it is considered a bible of revisionism and truth. The articles by you and Professor Oliver are of particular importance." Well, I suppose that should make both of us feel a little better.

Sincerely,
Charles Weber

Dear Sir,

Your publication deserves a lot more than my small contribution, but I give it to you with all my heart.

Merry Christmas, A Happy New Year and all the best for you and your family. Keep up the good work!

D.M., New York

Dear George Dietz & Liberty Bell

Thank you very much for your excellent and courageous periodical. I think it is one of the best and most plainspoken we can get at present. And the eminent writers, Professor Oliver, Dr. Charles Weber, Maj. Joseph Stano, Ernst Zündel, and all the others. It is a great pleasure to read their articles. (I beg your pardon for the errors I do in my English writing.)

Because I am only a number and a name in your subscription file, I must introduce myself a bit for you. I am a pensioner now, but in my young days I was a member of the Norwegian National Movement, and during WW II I was, together with about 8,000 Norwegian volunteers, in the Waffen SS by the Eastern Front, and was, after the German surrender in May 1945, taken as a POW by the US Army.

The day of the surrender, our division—the 16th SS Division "Reichsführer SS"—was under transfer from the front line by the Hungarian-Austrian border in southern Austria, and up to the battlefield south of Vienna for a last attempt to stop the Red Army. The beautiful city and cultural center, Vienna, was already bombed to the ground and taken by the Bolsheviks. When we got the message that the war was over we made our course westward to the Alpine mountains and over a high mountain pass where the snow lay 3-4 feet deep. It took us seven days to get over there because of the bad road on the top. It was a whole army on that march, hundreds of thousands soldiers, with trucks and cars. Our goal was the American occupied territory in western Austria, because we had very little desire for the Russian slave camps, and thought it would be better to go to the civilized [sic] Americans.

But life turned out to be hard enough in the American POW camps. In three months I went down from 75 to 55 kilogram in weight, but saved my life, in spite of the fact that we had very, very little to eat, and all the time stayed outdoors on open ground and fields, without any shelter at all. In the end of our imprisonment we began to fear that the intention and the purpose was that we should be starved to death.

I suppose that we owe the good American General George Patton who— as I understand it, was in charge of the command in the Bavaria region, where we in the end were "encamped"—a debt of gratitude for the fact that we where set free (released) after only three months in POW-camps. A million or so of other German soldiers had to wait for years to be set free. And about one million German POW's lost their lives in the slave camps, as we can read in the book by James Bacque, Other Losses.

We can now learn the truth from James Bacque's book, that it was a planned starvation and death for the POW's, after a scheme formed by the Wall Street Jew, U.S. finance-minister, friend and head adviser to Roosevelt, Henry C. Morgenthau. A plan that General Eisenhower agreed with and tried to carry into effect.

Here in Europe we have in the last time seen great events taking place, in the way that the East European countries are throwing off all the communist regimes. It could be wished that we had something of the same here in the western countries; that we could get a change in the Jew-controlled forgery of history, brainwashing, the race-mixing program, the rampant corruption, criminality, drug traffic, the stupefying, etc.

Respectfully,
H.J., Norway

Dear Mr. Dietz:

I know that many stupid Americans let their male children be circumcised, and I supposed that the same would be true with the Englishmen. I did not know though that the Royal family would do the same. Now I found out that they do.

I just finished reading The Jewish Book of Why (copyright 1981) by Alfred Kolatch, published by Jonathan David Publishers, Inc., 68-22 Eliot Ave., Middle Village NY 11379. On page 16 it says:

"In England, the Royal House has a long tradition requiring that all male children be circumcised by the Jewish mohel of London." It explained previously that "Although a mohel is not a medical doctor, he is a trained specialist with wide experience in his field, much more than any doctor or surgeon is likely to have."

At first I could not believe that, but after pondering for a while I concluded that that might just be true. There is one thing though that still does not sound kosher to me. It says "a long tradition." How long could that tradition be? It would be very interesting to know. Could Dr. Oliver or Nicholas Carter elaborate on that?

Yours truly,
G.S., Florida

Dear Landsmann:

...Bush seems to be going ahead with a planned attack on Kuwait. If so, the U.S. will suffer a severe defeat. Only the USAF is fit for war and that may be nullified by the threat to Israel from Iraq's A-bombs. It would take 750,000 men to defeat Iraq and 2-3 years of war. Here in America the Bush oil hoax and the threat of war seem to have pushed the banks over the edge. There is a run on the banks and Chase Manhattan may disappear in the next few weeks. Indeed, there may soon have to be a general "bank holiday." That has been coming for a long time but the current events seem to have pushed things over the edge.

Here in New York AIDS is still doing wonders. Today a niggeress on the Board of Education admitted 3 members of her family had died of AIDS and another had it. Jew faggots are dropping like autumn leaves.

In all this the reunification of Germany has a vital part. I mean it has a vital part in the Mid-East war. I know that the agreement for the reunification of Germany between West Germany and the USSR specifically mentioned a Mid-East war and exactly what was to be expected of Germany during it (total neutrality and the internment of US troops!). There is something on the vastest scale occurring here. The whole post WW II settlement is breaking up.

WAS ROCKWELL WRONG?

Allan Callahan

George Lincoln Rockwell believed that the best hope for a white racialist movement lay in the United States, rather than Europe or any place else. I admire Rockwell greatly, and know that he did much, and suffered a great deal (eventually paying for it with his life), to get things off and running, but believe that he may have been wrong on this point. Europe, to me, seems to hold the most favorable opportunities.

Of course at the time he died the racial situation in the U.S. had not deteriorated so badly. The big changes started in the '70s and '80s (Rockwell was assassinated in 1967). Imbecilities like our accepting the refuse from Castro's jails and insane asylums had not yet taken place, the brown invasion from south of the border had not yet turned into a flood, and non-white immigration in general had not yet gotten out of hand. So he had reason to be more optimistic.

There is not much reason for optimism now. If present trends continue, America will become half colored by the middle of the next century, and whites will make up just 40% of the U.S. population by the year 2100. A few more centuries after that they will be only a tiny minority.

The situation in Europe is quite different. Already heavily populated, it isn't likely to open the door very wide for colored immigrants. Right now, the threat of massive white immigration, from the East, is setting off alarm bells, and the thought of hordes of dark invaders pouring in would be far more frightening to Europeans, no matter what they might say. Also, the race problem there isn't as bad. Some countries, like England and France, have quite a large percentage of non-whites, but they are still not as bad off as the U.S. The other Western European nations are better off, and the East Bloc nations are better of still, being mostly all white. Russia is an exception, having a large Asian population in parts of it, but the old Russian heartland is heavily Caucasian, and nowhere is there any negro problem to speak of.

America, on the other hand, will let in any featherless biped that can stand upright and grunt, and the darker, the better. A Pandora's Box was opened up in 1965 when the old system of national quotas was abolished, and a new system put in its place, which stressed "family reunification." In practice it meant that the most recent immigrants had first choice on the available visas, and they used up nearly all of them to bring in close relatives from Asia and Latin America, and this became a huge tidal wave. Most Europeans were shut out.

It is obvious that the congressmen (and they are mostly still white, at this time) who make and vote on our immigration laws are ignorant of racial truths. And they are afraid. Afraid of being called "racists" or "bigots" (although these words are easily blunted, these worthies haven't the foggiest idea how to do it). And even though their own race is being both squeezed and mongrelized out of existence, they dare not lift a finger to stop it.

Most Europeans don't seem to be quite this brainwashed and intimidated yet, and more than a few of them may be snickering up their sleeves at the idiotic and cowardly way white congressmen are behaving over here. And while the racial situation is generally getting worse in America, there are a few bright spots (no thanks to our government). There are now said to be nine to ten "White Student Union" types of organizations on U.S. college campuses, while not many years ago there weren't any. And Afro-American studies departments are shriveling up at some universities. Also, a small but growing trend seems to be developing among blacks themselves to have their own colleges. They already have some, of course, but they say they need more, because integrated education is not working. Still, the U.S. is pressing ahead on most fronts to integrate the races, while the European countries are not so gung-ho about it. But the factor most favorable to the white man in Europe is the aforementioned population density. There are already plenty of people there, so it would be the height of folly to bring in swarms of blacks, browns or Asians.

To be sure, the more contact Europe has with America, the more chances there will be for the race-mixing virus to build up in the European genepool, but this threat is not shaping up to be anywhere near what it is over here. Most of the future contact Europe will have with non-whites (with the negrified U.S. Army scaling back and maybe moving out) will be with trade representatives, government officials, entertainers and tourists, rather than immigrants.

Europe is the homeland of the white man, and it may turn out to be his last bastion. At one time he spread his wings and flew far and wide, put down roots to establish colonies and countries, and planted his bloodlines here and there over much of the globe. But now he is in retreat, not so much because of the strength of his opponents, but because of his own muddled thinking. At one time both Canada and Australia offered high promise but now they, too, have changed their immigration laws.

History sometimes springs great surprises, and this is what I am hoping for, for my own people. They may yet wake up, and turn things around. But if they don't, I believe the white man will be gone from the U.S. within 300 to 500 years, except for traces here and there. Things are mot as bad in Canada and Australia, but bad enough, as they have a lot of room for more immigrants, and I am afraid too many of them will be coloreds. Still, their situation is not as grim as it is here.

It has been predicted that by the year 2100 the white race will constitute only 1% of the world population. But if the racial makeup of Europe and the Russian heartland can remain pretty much as it is now, along with that of Caucasian Siberia, I believe the percentage will likely be higher than that.

While I think that Rockwell may have been wrong in believing America offered the best hope for a white renaissance, and I see very little to be optimistic about at present, it does not mean that things here are hopeless. In fact, the bad situation might spur us on to greater efforts, which allow us to turn things around, in the end.

We white Americans should start feeling like underdogs, and underdogs sometimes have the edge because they try harder. Even though our efforts right now may seem plodding at best, we should keep in mind the importance of maintaining a steady pace

(while remembering who the winner was in the Aesop fable about the race between the tortoise and the hare). Calvin Coolidge gave us some words worth remembering:

> Press on, nothing in the world > can take the place of Persistence.
>
> Talent will not; nothing is more common > than unsuccessful men with talent.
>
> Genius will not; unrewarded genius is > almost a proverb.
>
> Education will not; the world is full > of educated derelicts.
>
> Persistence and Determination > alone are omnipotent.

FOR MY LEGIONARIES

The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $10.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. ("Solzhenitsyn would appear to have not the slightest inkling of who conquered HIS country!"—B.C.) FOR MY LEGIONARIES, Order #06003; single copy $10.00, 3 copies $25.00, 5 copies $35.00

For postage and handling add: On domestic orders, $1.50 for orders under $10.00, 15% of order total for orders over $10.00. On orders from abroad, $2.00 or 20% respectively. Sample copy of our monthly magazine Liberty Bell and copy of our huge book list containing hundreds of "Eye-Openers," $5.00. Subscription for 12 hard-hitting, fact-packed issue $35.00 (U.S. only). DEVELOPMENTS IN 'HOLOCAUST' REVISIONISM SINCE 1983

A Brief Summary

By

Charles E. Weber

Since the appearance in 1983 of my small propaedeutic book, The 'Holocaust' / 120 Questions and Answers, quite a few significant developments have taken place in correcting popular, widely propagated misconceptions about the history of the Jews in Europe during the Second World War.

The importance attached to maintaining these misconceptions is demonstrated even by the efforts of the United States government (often called Zionist Occupation Government by its critics) in this area. Let us mention two manifestations of these efforts which are especially noteworthy. One is the notorious judicial misbehavior of an agency of the United States Justice Department, the Office of Special Investigations, which has had a hand in causing the deportations of aged men accused of war crimes. Notable examples have been John Demjanjuk, a former worker in the automobile industry, who was deported for a show trial in the Jewish state in Palestine, and Andrija Artukovic, former Minister of the Interior of Croatia. The latter died in captivity in Yugoslavia. It is encouraging to note that there have been courageous Americans who have protested some of the abuses of the OSI, including even the widely read commentator and columnist, Patrick Buchanan. Buchanan, who is also widely viewed on weekly television broadcasts transmitted by the Public Broadcasting Service, has expressed his doubts about the evidence presented against Demjanjuk in Jerusalem. Demjanjuk's cause has also been aided by other American citizens, such as Mr. Jerome A. Brentar of Cleveland. In view of the positions of these men and what they have to lose, one can only admire their courage and idealism, traits present in a number of other men who have challenged the "Holocaust" material. The large salaries of the leading employees of the OSI are listed in our Bulletin 30.

A second manifestation of the efforts of the United States government in this area is the publication of a book which vividly demostrates the subservience of the United States government to Zionist objectives, a subservience also now demonstrated in an ominous and frightening manner by the presence of hundreds of thousands of young American men in the area of the Persian Gulf, tens of thousands of whom might not be alive a year from now. The book to which I refer is Days of Remembrance, a guide for commemorating the "Holocaust" published by the Office of the Secretary of Defense. This book purports to be a directive for commemorative "Holocaust" observances throughout the American armed forces and is introduced by the portraits and endorsements of President Ronald Reagan and Secretary of Defense Carlucci. We described and criticized the contents of the first edition of this book (1988) in Bulletin 25. A considerably expanded edition appeared in 1989, this time with portraits and endorsements of President Bush, whose faithful service to Zionism is a costly burden to taxpaying Americans, and of William Howard Taft IV, Deputy Secretary of Defense. Both editions were "produced with the assistance and coöperation of the International Center for Holocaust Studies of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the United States Holocaust Memorial Council."

On 4 July 1984 a costly act of arson was carried out against the offices of the Institute for Historical Review in California. Its huge stocks of books were almost completely destroyed, along with records and manuscripts. The persons who committed this crime have never been apprehended and it seems that no great effort was made by authorities to apprehend them.

Not only in the United States have desperate, unscrupulous efforts been made to maintain the credibility of the "Holocaust" material in the face of growing doubts and criticism. In France Professor Robert Faurisson, a brilliant and fluent critic of the "Holocaust" material, was recently beaten by thugs to within an inch of his life. Such attacks demonstrate the importance which Jews and their organizations attach to silencing any critics of the Extermination Thesis. Brutal physical attacks and slander now seem to be the chief methods of intimidation for silencing such critics, while open debate about actual historical facts is generally avoided by advocates of the Extermination Thesis. The governments in Bonn and Vienna, for complex reasons of their own, also use heavy-handed tactics against any historian who dares to speak out against the absurd distortions and falsehoods of the "Holocaust" material. Wilhelm Stäglich, the author of one of the most important books on the "Holocaust" question, Der Auschwitz Mythos, has been denied the use of his doctor juris title after a long legal process. Ironically, this denial was based on a law signed by Adolf Hitler in 1939 and never repealed. In 1986 an English translation of this important book was published. In another instance, a doctoral degree was denied to the French historian Henri Roques, who had written a dissertation on the fraudulent "confessions" of Kurt Gerstein. Although his dissertation had been accented, French education officials intervened to revoke his doctoral degree on procedural pretexts (Journal of Historical Review, spring 1988, pages 5-23).

It is hardly necessary to point out to the discerning observer that such unscrupulous, unfair or criminal acts only serve to emphasize the essentially fraudulent nature of the "Holocaust" materials.

We can speak of a vast "Holocaust" industry which has grown up in recent decades. It seems to me that the growth of this industry has been, in part, an attempt to provide a propagandistic and psychological counterbalance to the growing disgust throughout the world—even in some Jews—at the Jewish mistreatment of the Palestinians. The amazing dimensions of the "Holocaust" industry are described in a revealing book published by the United States Holocaust Memorial Council in 1988, Directory of Holocaust Institutions. A total of 99 museums and other types of institutions are described in the book, of which we gave a summary in Bulletin 30. The largest of such institutions is the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, with a listing of 45 persons on its staff.

Still another manifestation of the desperate efforts of Jews and their organizations to counter the critics of the "Holoaust" material are the tremendous—indeed, almost unbelievable—production costs (well over $100,000,000.) of the two television series, The Winds of War and War and Remembrance. Ironically, the chief actor in the two series, Robert Mitchum, disturbed his Jewish masters greatly by weakly expressing some doubts about the "Holocaust" material during an interview. We summarized and discussed these two series in some detail in an article in The Liberty Bell of May 1983 and in Bulletins 32 and 37.

In spite of the tremendous political and economic power and psychological factors lined up against historians who have dared to protest against the absurdities and falsehoods of the "Holocaust" materials, during the past seven years there has been quite a bit of activity on the part of honest historians who have objectively investigated the "Holocaust" question. Are they having any effect? An ADL Research Report of the summer of 1989 would seem to imply that they are. It mentions over 70 persons of various nationalities whom it alleges to have engaged in some sort of revisionist activities or another, including such well-known figures as Patrick Buchanan, David Irving and Phyllis Schlafly. All of these people should feel honored, even if that were not the intention of the Anti-Defamation League. (For details of the Report see Bulletin 42.)

During the past few years a great amount of research, information and opinion on the "Holocaust" question has been published in three periodicals that deserve particular mention: a weekly, Christian News, a monthly, the Liberty Bell, and a quarterly, The Journal of Historical Review. The courageous publishers of these journals deserve the gratitude of all fair and objective people who wish to learn the truth about the history of the Jews in Europe during the Second World War. A list of the articles in the Journal of Historical Review (1980-1987) was given in our Bulletin 17. Articles which appeared in the Liberty Bell since 1983 are listed in our Bulletin 43. The following Bulletins of our Committee are devoted wholly or in considerable part to the examination of the Extermination Thesis: 2, 3, 4, 8, 9, 13, 14, 15, 20, 21, 25, 27, 30, 31, 32, 34, 37, 38, 42 and 53. Of these, 2, 13, 14, 15, 20, 21, 25, 30, 31, 32, 34, 37, 38, 42 and 53 were republished in the Liberty Bell, 9, 13, 21, 25, 32 and 42 in Christian News and 31 in The Journal of Historical Review.

In 1983 and 1987 two large, noteworthy books were published which dispute the "Holocaust" material. The first one, by Walter N. Sanning, The Dissolution of Eastern European Jewry, is a detailed statistical study of Jewish populations before and after the war. The second book, published by Liberty Bell Publications in 1987, is titled Made in Russia: The Holocaust / A Collection of 'Eye-Witness' and 'Survivor' Fairy Tales and written by a man going by the name of Jack Ketch. The author presents copies of many documents from Allied war crimes trials and points out their absurdities and improbabilities in short comments. He also demonstrates the crudely unfair trial procedures which violated legal traditions that have been respected in civilized countries for centuries.

There can be little doubt that some of the most significant developments in "Holocaust" revisionism since 1983 were the result of the trials of Ernst Zündel in Toronto. Zündel republished a small book refuting the Extermination Thesis, Did Six Million Really Die? For doing so he was prosecuted on the basis of an old, virtually unused law which provided for punishment for knowingly spreading false news likely to do social harm. I was a defense witness at the first Zündel trial in February 1985 and recorded my impressions of it in an article in the September 1985 Liberty Bell. A far larger work on the first trial also appeared in 1985, The Great Holocaust Trial, by Michael A. Hoffman II. The first trial resulted in a guilty verdict by a jury consisting of people who appeared to me to be subservient and not very bright. The first trial was so unfairly conducted that a five-judge appellate court unanimously set it aside. A second trial followed, again resulting in a guilty verdict (now being appealed) but also resulting in sensational evidence against the Extermination Thesis, the most important of which was the result of an on-site examination in 1988 of alleged locations of mass exterminations in Auschwitz, Birkenau and Majdanek. The examination of these sites was led by Fred Leuchter, an American expert on the construction of gas chambers used for executing criminals. Leuchter's conclusions concerning structures alleged to have been used for mass gassings were based on observations of the structures and brick samples which were later chemically analyzed for remnants of cyanide radicles. So damaging to the Extermination Thesis was Leuchter's testimony that the renowned British historian, David Irving, changed his opinion on the "Holocaust" question to the extent that he reversed his previous writings on the topic in his books. Irving, however, has been criticized for his belatedness in assessing a mountain of evidence against the "Holocaust" material. Leuchter, alas, is now being harassed in legal procedings which supposedly have nothing to do with his findings in Poland, but rather his professional status as an engineer. In an article by Charles Provan in the Christian News of 17 December 1990 his plight is described. (For further details on the Leuchter Report see Bulletin 35 and The Journal of Historical Review, summer 1989, pages 133-139.)

As a result of revisionist research the advocates of the Extermination Thesis have been forced to make concessions with regard to some of their more obvious falsehoods and exaggerations. A notable example is a book which we reviewed in Bulletin 38 by a Jewish professor at Princeton University: Arno J. Mayer, Why Did the Heavens Not Darken? (1988). Mayer infuriated fellow Jews by admitting that sources for the study of gas chambers are at once rare and unreliable. Although Mayer is an adherent of the Extermination Thesis, one of the merits of his book is the recognition that whatever happened or did not happen to the Jews took place under the influence of a desperate war. Another striking concession to reality was made by the directors of the museum in Auschwitz, who removed a tablet claiming four million deaths in Auschwitz in order not to subject themselves to ridicule. (See Hans Schmidt's commentary in Amerika-Brief 36, December, 1990.) This was after the Jewish historian Yehuda Bauer had conceded in September 1989 that perhaps 1.6 million died at Auschwitz, a less absurd figure than four million. Recently the Soviet government, in line with glasnost, made available death records captured at Auschwitz which list approximately 74,000 deaths from all causes there.

Recently the state of Illinois passed a law providing for the teaching of "Holocaust" courses in its public schools. It is gratifying to note that some parents would not allow their intellectually defenseless children to be subjected to such indoctrination. There are even some instances of teachers who have had the courage and intellectual honesty to suggest to their pupils that there is more than one side to the "Holocaust" question. (See, e.g., Christian News of 17 December 1990, pages 21-22.)

Often accompanying the "Holocaust" material is the claim that Poland suffered huge population losses as a result of policies and actions of the German occupation authorities. These are grave and important charges, even if they are not given the publicity of the alleged losses in the Jewish populations. In 1983 the Zeitgeschichtliche Forschungsstelle in Ingolstadt published an important revisionist study by Dr. Otward Müller based on official Polish census data from prewar and postwar times.

More or less on the periphery of the "Holocaust" question as such are a number of genocidal actions on the part of Allied governments or their populations. The earliest of these that we might mention is the deliberate starvation of millions of Ukrainian peasants by the Soviet government in the early 1930s (see Bulletin 7), a topic about which very few Americans know anything very specific. It was encouraging to view a presentation of a film about this topic and a panel discussion by William F. Buckley in September 1986, transmitted through the facilities of the Public Broadcasting Service. Both Buckley and PBS are characteristically subservient to Zionists.

Further genocidal actions by Allied governments were the Bromberg Bloody Sunday (massacres of ethnic Germans by overconfident Poles in September 1939; see Bulletin 39), the massacre of some 15,000 captured Polish officers at Katyn and other localities (see Louis FitzGibbon, Katyn, 1979), the aggressive intentions and annexing of large territories by the USSR during 1939-1940 with atrocities against the annexed populations (see the article by Viktor Suvorov reprinted in the Liberty Bell of January 1986), the militarily unnecessary destruction of Dresden in February 1945, the expulsion of German civilians east of the Oder-Neisse Line resulting in the deaths of over two million victims (see Bulletin 23) and the apparently deliberate and unnecessary starvation to death of hundreds of thousands of German prisoners of war under the command of General Eisenhower, a crime described by the Canadian journalist James Bacque in his book, Other Losses (1989). To all this we must add the infamous "Operation Keelhaul."

At this point we should note that seven German officers were tried in an Allied court and sentenced to hang for the massacre of Polish officers at Katyn, a crime which the present Soviet government has confessed to have been a Soviet crime. How many other Germans were executed for crimes which they did not commit? In this instance we see a circumstance which must cast further doubts on Allied War crimes trials in general. (See the Montreal Gazette of 5 November 1990.) This example of Allied injustice is all the worse because Allied authorities had already known that the Katyn massacres were committed by the USSR, as the German government had cried out to the world in the spring of 1943 after having brought in many foreign witnesses to the exhumations.

Even if the genocidal crimes of the Allies mentioned above have only a peripheral bearing on the "Holocaust" question, they must be considered in connection with it in order to understand the context of any suffering to which the Jews might or might not have been subjected. The frantic, continued, costly efforts to propagate the "Holocaust" material and the unscrupulous measures to silence the critics of it are an obvious attempt at what might be called "obliteration by contrast" in line with a general effort to present the Second World War as one with righteous objectives, "a good war." Then, too, these genocidal actions and genocidal threats (such as the book by Theodore N. Kaufman, Germany Must Perish, 1941, the use of mustard gas and anthrax bombs contemplated by the Allies, as mentioned in Bulletins 52 and 10, and the genocidal Morgenthau Plan of 1944) must be taken into consideration as part of the reality of a war in which several million Jews suffered along with hundreds of millions of Aryan victims of the war. In view of the rôle of Jews in instigating the war (e.g., by means of the "Focus"; see Bulletin 12) and prolonging it, Jews should be inhibited in complaining about whatever sufferings they endured as a result of the war. □

The Rape Of The West

By
Nicholas Carter

From the beginning the established Roman Catholic Church was paranoid—always in conflict with those who did not believe, or with the nasty heretic who had differing theological viewpoints. When Constantius, the strongest of the three sons of the baptized Constantine, succeeded to the throne, he made himself the sole emperor. The first Christian-bred emperor, he called himself "His Eternity" and "Lord of the Universe." He closed the "heathen" temples in response to Christian entreaties, and he decreed that all who used them or offered sacrifice should be put to death. Thus, within fifty years of the time when the Christians were subjected to some persecutions, the new religion was defining heretics as "all those who even in a minor matter deviated from the opinion and path of the Catholic religion," and subjecting non-Christians to capital punishment. That such a book should have been written as the 21st of Augustine's City of God as early as the turn of the 5th century accepting as one of the articles of Christian dogma a hell of fire that would not only burn limbs, but also feed on them and nourish them, indicated in no uncertain terms the direction in which ignorance, superstition and blind faith were leading the Church.

In short order, criticism of Church or State was shackled by an overwhelming respect for authority—a respect motivated by terror. Human reason was forced to succumb entirely to the tyranny of the clergy and the wasting debility of insoluble theological ranklings. Any sense of value, purpose and mission was directed toward repressive ends—the establishment of the Christian religion and its God through force; the destruction of anyone or anything posing a threat to the faith; the paranoic notion that any opposing point of view existed as the direct result of the forces of evil (Satanism) to subvert and destroy Christians; and the unyielding perpetuation of the belief that the Church should be the final arbiter of all human endeavors from faith to morals, from philosophy to science, from law to medicine.

According to Christian dogma, Jesus the Christ established his universal Church to be his continuing representative on earth—one completely competent authority to adjudicate between truth and error. Quick to pursue that adjudication following the nuptial tie between Catholicism and the Roman Empire, the Christians, in keeping with the "above-average morality and high religious principles" of the time, ordered that the great Graeco-Roman library in Alexandria, a monumental storehouse of the treasures and scientific writings of antiquity, be destroyed. Virtually the entire library—nearly half a million volumes or scrolls, many of them collected from the farthest points on earth visited by the ships of the time—were destroyed in that single barbarous assault on the precious products of the human mind. Greek mysticism (Neoplatonism) and Christian-Judaic apocalypticism joined hands in applying the torch that ignited that literary holocaust.

Galen the physician, Ptolemy the geographer, and Diophantus the mathematician, were the last in their respective fields to follow the classic tradition, as Lucian was the last exponent of Hellenic skepticism and Julian the last emperor to defend religious tolerance. In 529 Justinian closed the schools at Athens, the last to teach Greek philosophy. In the same century, Pope Gregory the Great condemned all literary and philosophical efforts. Prayer and exorcism over science, religious over geometrical theorems, and the Scriptures over any other literature, were beginning to define the Christian way of life. All experiments in chemistry, physics and medicine were condemned. By the time of the persecution of Galileo (circa 1632) mathematicians were denounced as the greatest of all heretics.

With the power of the state behind them and deeply convinced that only a belief in Christ would provide for salvation, the Christians began to enforce the baptism of their subjects en masse. According to Augustine, at least ten thousand Angli were forcibly baptized in one day. Heraclius baptized one hundred thousand people in one year. Charlemagne decreed that any who rejected baptism should be put to death. Scandinavia was Christianized during two bloody centuries of warfare and it has been estimated that the Christianizing of the whole of Europe cost from eight to ten million lives.

"In cases where evidence is in conflict with logic, it is better to stick with evidence," according to Christian apologists. Logic, it seems, can lead to the kind of consistency that can easily close the doors to greater truth. If, therefore, we concentrate on a few evil men and the negative experiences resulting from their abuse of power, we will miss the "greater truth" of how absolutely joyous it was to be a Christian in those early days—how they "experienced a joy unknown in any other religion on earth;" how they "evidenced a tranquility, simplicity and cheerfulness that had never been encountered elsewhere;" and how they "sang from the irrepressible overflow of glory discerned." Among the intolerable burdens suddenly and dramatically lifted from their shoulders were "fear, guilt, and the cramping confines of the ego."*

Curiously, many of those same irrepressibly joyous Christians were quick to acknowledge the ages-old belief that "the fashion of this world passeth away; life is not worth living." Hence—fanaticism blossomed early within the "Mystical Body of Christ." Asceticism, a combination of spiritual megalomania and egotism, was quickly accepted as a prerequisite of, and a qualification for, supreme holiness. In their attempts to express divine philosophy, thousands of Christians accepted the belief that purification and detachment from things of the senses were goals to be achieved, with the true Christian ideal soon coming to be represented by poverty, celibacy and retirement from the world. "For I desire to suffer," said Ignatius. "Suffer me to be eaten by the beasts, through whom I can attain to God."

To destroy the flesh on which EVE had put the curse, Christians began to maim and torture the body in every way imaginable. Convinced that practically all the ills of the earth had been caused by a woman ("For your deceit," raged Tertullian, "the very Son of God had to perish!"), hysterical monks fled into the wilderness to wrestle with Satan, to endure the most hideous forms of torture and self-mutilation—even castration—as they tried to erase their terrible fear of the Bitch of Eden.

Tertullian wasn't alone among the Catholic Fathers in despising womankind. Because they believed the myth that man had been created a pure being in the image of God and that he had been defiled by a woman, Catholics from the highest to the lowest turned against women with a hatred so bitter and intense no language could be found strong enough to express their horror. Clement was so disgusted at the thought of anything feminine that he felt that any woman ought to be filled with shame at the mere thought that she was a female. To Cyprian, woman was the instrument employed by Satan to possess men's souls. And St. John Chrysostom described woman as a "necessary evil, a natural temptation, a domestic peril, a deadly fascination, and a painted ill." By the time of the Middle Ages, the Christian era had evolved into the "most unfortunate period in the history of womankind." Women were considered to be naturally inferior because they had been fashioned from the lowly rib. The Monk would bend his knee to the Virgin, but deep inside he knew that woman was the gross betrayer, the despoiler of purity; and whatever place she had in the natural order of things, man should try to avoid that place as he would avoid a plague.

Throughout the Christian era women have paid heavily in the coin of pain, blood and death. Because Genesis 3:16 says of woman, "In sorrow thou shalt bring forth children," pain was ordained in childbirth, with the Catholics subsequently teaching that the prevention of pain during birth "was contrary to religion and the express command of Scripture." Even after the invention of anesthesia in the 19th century, the female had to suffer this pain. As late as 1921 religious zealots were still claiming that "the very suffering which a woman undergoes in labor is one of the strongest elements in the love she bears for her offspring."

Until relatively recently, only a few voices had been raised in defense of women. With the Bible in mind Elizabeth Cady Stanton wrote: "I know of no other books that so fully teach the subjection and degradation of women." Said Helen Gardner: "Every injustice that has ever been fastened upon women in a Christian country has been 'authorized by the Bible' and riveted and perpetuated by the pulpit." And from Moncure D. Conway we have this powerful indictment: "There is not a more cruel chapter in history than that which records the arrest by Christianity of the natural growth to European civilization regarding women..."

Contemporary Christians claim that their Bible has withstood the assaults of its critics because it is in truth what it claims to be, the revealed Word of God. Ever since investigators unbiased by religious motives first applied themselves to the study of Christian problems, however, not one has failed to reach the conclusion that when the Western world became Christian, it walked from the light of the Roman and Greek civilizations into the universal ignorance, superstitions and depravity of the REGRESSIVE AGES—that period of time encompassing the Middle Ages, beginning in the 4th century when Catholicism became a state-sanctioned theocracy, and ending with the momentous events of the 15th century—the fall of Constantinople, which drove Byzantine scholars with the literature of Greece into Western Europe, the invention of printing, and the discovery of America—ELEVEN centuries of oppression and regression.

Where was the stimulus of multiplicity during those ages? Smothered by authoritarian orthodoxy. Where were inoovation and emulation? Discouraged and denounced by the all-powerful Church. Everywhere, frantic zeal was more important than courageous curiosity. During the Regressive Ages, the intellectual energies of Europe cogitated about ghosts, goblins, demons, witches and heresies, and devised countless ways of interpreting God's puzzles. And whenever revolutionary agitation and civil wars were deemed necessary by the theological and temporal rulers, biblical texts could always be found that would inflame people with pious blood-lust.

There is in most people the belief that what has occurred in the past was, without question, the best that could have happened, even if the philosophical, political or religious systems of any particular era had been entirely different. At best, this viewpoint is simplistic and self-serving. By any and all reasonable standards, it is highly unlikely that the past sixteen centuries would have been as evil or destructive under any other system of belief for the simple reason that we, the people of the Western world, hitched our wagon of theological yearnings to one of the most alien philosophies—alien to basic Western thinking, that is—on the face of the earth: Judaism.

We produced a religion significantly bound to the DESERT heritage of the Israelites—a religion of the lonely, solitary, childless, unwedded, unloved and remote Godhead, Yahweh, the world's most vengeful and merciless deity...a religion of the strong-beaked, terrifying Jeremiah...a religion smelling of desert heat and burning earth, hot stones, moistureless hills, lifeless vegetation and a harsh, unforgiving sun. For the revelations of angry, wild-eyed prophets and a gospel of worldly renunciation, we traded the achievements of thinkers, and scientists, of artists, philosophers, poets and statesmen. And we rejected the greatest champion of the human mind who had ever lived, Aristotle, for whom the ideal life was one of self-fulfillment (as opposed to Plato, for whom the ideal life was essentially one of renunciation).

If, on the other hand, we had created a religion rooted in our Western AGRICULTURAL heritage, a religion, not of a patriarch (nor of a matriarch, either), but of the family of both Man and Woman (both god and goddess)—a religion like a garden, deep and lush and drenched with colors...a religion of a strong, kindly, providing Father, and a warm, loving, caring Mother with the head and breast of a goddess and at her breast a beautiful infant...a religion presiding over the fructifying powers of the earth and smelling of fruits, pure water, good earth, warm winds, lush forests and fragrant valleys...a religion that could only have been compassionate and humane to a degree unheard of in Oriental Semitism—we would be living in an entirely different world today.

Think of it!

We would have conceived a more loving, less fearful, religion—a less paranoid faith, more secure in its ability to attract believers and to hold onto them. The great and enduring qualities of Caucasians—energy and enterprise, foresight and common sense, creative and innovative genius, tolerance and flexibility—would have been given much more latitude, with the overall results undoubtedly being a more tolerant, more flexible, more decent, more humane, and assuredly, a more productive society.

We would have "loved the stars too fondly to be fearful of the night." We would have had the freedom, courage and initiative to "stretch our eyes" and examine not only the planets in our solar system, but some of the vast and uncounted galaxies that lie beyond the Milky Way. We might have probed the cosmos over 1500 years ago, and invented movable type far earlier than we did. Had it not been for that uniquely Christianized nightmare known as the Middle Ages, we might have been building skyscrapers and trains, automobiles and airplanes, and inventing the telephone, film, television, computers and lasers during those benighted centuries. And we might have walked on the moon at least 300 years ago.

It took the Catholics several centuries of conflict waged with anathema, excommunication and banishment, and aided by torture, poison, and even armies, to frame a creed that could not be undone by its enemies—a theocracy preaching that reason was of no avail and that disagreement or heresy doomed men to eternal torment. (Little wonder Tertullian was moved to exclaim—"Credo quia incredibilis est!") Needless to say, all of the great achievements that might have seen the light of day much earlier were postponed until much later.

To understand the aberrant nature of the Christian-Judaic system and the seemingly endless conflicts that have racked the faith, one must comprehend the fact that there is a fundamental difference in outlook between Semitic and Western minds. Semites are essentially tribalistic and collectivistic. Caucasians, when given the opportunity, have a tendency to lean toward a pantheistic world-view (the doctrine that the universe taken or conceived as a whole, is God), which invariably allows for considerable emphasis on individuality, personal creativity, and innovative freedom in all things, including religion. Accepting Christism as the primary creed of the West has been our most enduring and injurious blunder. For hundreds of years we were virtually halted in our intellectual and creative tracks. When mysticism as an all-embracing cultural philosophy failed to survive the Middle Ages, we cast off our chains, and our basically Aristotelian nature took over as we began to think, plan and create in an explosion of innovation and productivity that thrust us into the 20th century with the highest living standards and the greatest scientific achievements ever known.

The many apologists—both Jew and Gentile—for the Judaic "tradition" and its alleged effects on the West would have us believe that our ideas of freedom and individual vocation began, not with the great thinkers and philosophies of the Western world, but with Abraham setting out from his "city" for the unknown—a pathetically simplistic and historically inaccurate notion.

The humanly singular tradition of independent thinking—the process by which the individual is guided by his own independent judgement—did not begin with desert nomads folding their tents and striking out for greener pastures. Human beings had been making that decision for presumably hundreds of thousands of years. It began when homo sapiens began to think; and from that point, knowledge and independent judgement expanded into more and more complex areas, from the conquering of fire, to the planting of seeds in the ground, to the planting of the seeds of realism and reason in the fertile soil of Greece and Rome.

In the entire history of the world, only about a dozen civilizations capable of creating buildings, art, literature and philosophy still worth studying have grown up more or less independently. Only one—the civilization of Western man—did not halt and lapse into stagnation. Only in the West have people gone to the level of increasingly expanding science to a degree capable of exploring outer space and actually setting foot on the moon. To make the best use of the meaningful centuries of that development, needless to say, we had to vanquish most of the totalitarian efforts occupied by the "Mystical Body of Christ" to subdue, pervert and control the human mind and human nature.

Significantly, early Catholicism did at least try to move away from Judaism as it drew from all sources in the ancient world. For those who are naive enough to believe that the Semitic tradition was "diluted" by the Gentile tradition, however, I contend that the truth is far removed from that proposition. Rather than the phenomenon of the mystery-religion providing a foundation for the Jewish element in Christianity, the Jewish Scriptures were maliciously utilized to provide the miraculous and prophetic foundations upon which the WHOLE of Christism stands—with the NON-Christianized portions of the Old Testament providing, in addition, an alien legal system governing human behavior (many more "Thou shalt Nots!" than "Thou shalts!") sanctions for every form of cruelty in God's very own words, and 6,641 verses containing "signs of the times" prophecies (according to the convoluted interpretations of Christians) supposedly providing a detailed sequence of events antedating the Second Coming of the Messiah (the counterfeit Son rather than the Servant of Yahweh) and the utopian conditions to follow.

Thus, Judaism remained at the heart of the faith, with the West succumbing to the East. Moreover, the fateful attempt to integrate two inherently contradictory world concepts—the Semitic and the European, the Jewish and the Greek—whose institutional waters, regardless of any and all attempts to blend them, are still perfectly recognizable as they flow side by side in the same bed, evolved as the logical consequence of that surrender.

One of the more untenable Semitic contributions to that unholy union is the fact that the Israelites were the first people on earth to blend theology with aristocracy to the point of introducing racism and intolerance into the canonical equation, thus dividing the world into two kinds of people—the Jews and non-Jews, the good and the bad, the pure and the non-pure. As a result they have always preached that they are the Chosen people of God...that they are the true salt of the earth, intellectually and morally superior to all other peoples...that all good things of the earth should belong to them...and that Judaism is the perfect religion with the highest standard of wisdom and ethics developed by the human species.

Fully inheriting this aristocracy of religious emotions from the Jews, the Christians also divided the world into only two kinds of people—the Christians and the non-Christians, the good and the bad, the pure and the non-pure. As a result, the Christ-folk have always preached the immoral doctrine that Christianity is the only true religion...that only devout Christians can be saved from damnation...that as many non-Christians should be converted (by force, if necessary) as possible...and that all who refused, or who threatened the faith should be punished or destroyed.

Well into the 20th century, the Catholics were still promulgating these intolerant attitudes. As late as 1956, the Very Rev. Francis J. Connel, was quoted in Time magazine as follows: "However much we may esteem our non-Catholic brethren personally, and admire their sincerity and fervor in the practice of their religion, we must remember that their religion is false and that its practice is opposed to the commandment of Jesus Christ that all men profess the one religion which he established." And ponder the measured, chilling words of one Cardinal Billot, spoken in 1922: "We must say that material force is rightly employed to protect religion, to coerce those who disturb it, and generally speaking to remove those things which impede our spiritual aim: nay, that force can have no more noble use than this."

What is the state of Christianity today?

In this most scientific and literate of ages, the vast proportion of Christian people have not allowed rational thinking to affect their conditioned beliefs in the virgin birth, miracles, prophecies, the death and resurrection of their savior-god, and a never ending parade of predictions advising them of the approximate day and hour of the glorious return—the RAPTURE. Unaware of the principles of Synoptic criticism, they have never read a single objective critical word about the living magisterium of the Church; and they would be incensed beyond words if they were to hear that every stone in the wailing wall of their faith is a calculated lie.

The simplistic wanderings of the mind to which those who are handicapped by credulity and tradition are eternally subject, have given life to, not only the countless sects and cults of Christendom, but also to such charismatic con-artists as faith healers and televangelists who are forever telling their gullible congregations about their private conversations with God.* To their duplicitous practices can be added the many books dealing with prophetology, angelology and demonology, written and sold by people who profess to solve the practical problems of civilization and theology outside of the boundaries of all principles of Synoptic criticism and historical interpretation.

Much of the ponderous inertia that has resisted change for the better in the world has always been, and still is, rooted in the mythology inherent in ALL faith-centered systems of belief. Imagine abandoning self, reason, knowledge, curiosity and extension of imagination just to be part of the mystical and magical worlds of Yahweh, the Holy Virgin, Zen, Jesus, Marx, Mary Baker Eddy, the Dalai Lama, Mao, and Jim and Tammy Bakker. To give up so much for so little, the ego must be faith-inflated to the point of blissful nuttiness.

Tragically, we in the Western world are still measuring ourselves to a disquieting degree by the superstitious, childish and sometimes evil explanations of the primitive or ancient mind...still enchanted with the "antique fables and fairy toys" of mind-numbing mythology...still continuing to believe in religious traditions and dogmas that insult man's mind and spirit.* What we call Christianity today is a kingdom of lies and wishful thinking filled with people who believe in that kingdom through indoctrination and conditioning. It is a kingdom of deception, a perverse realm in which knowledge and insight have been warped, and in which spiritual megalomania and falsehood rule. No one can ever begin to assess what the ravings of the prophets and the barren curse of renunciation have cost us—and will continue to cost us for just as long as so many of our people remain fixed and lost in the infantile obsessions of the Christian-Judaic faith.

* Are there any creatures on earth more pathetic than those white Gentiles—members of the same race that produced Aristotle, Shakespeare and Thomas Jefferson—who spend their lives preaching that the beginning of wisdom is the fear of the Jewish God?...or that the sins of the unjust can only be cleansed with the blood of the just?...or that the cosmic powers of darkness (Satan and his demons) are responsible for illegal drugs, pornography and the "militant force of the Islamic movement."?

Before terminating this little study, I would like to emphasize once again that orthodox Judaism did not play an ACTIVE role in the establishment of the Christian system. It did play an OBLIQUE role in that development, however, via the existence of the Septuagint. Remember, the legends that are supposedly "fulfilled" in the New Testament are nothing more than crude Christianized interpretations of ancient Jewish Scripture; and, until the Catholic had finished transcribing their own Christian-biased Old Testament, the Septuagint—a compendium of Jewish law, commentary, history, and folk-lore—was the Old Testament to the far larger part of the Christian Church. It was the chief source of the writings from which the Catholics drew their proofs and precepts.

And that brings us to this salient consideration: What would the Church have done without the Septuagint? Where would the New Testament authors have turned to find a miraculous foundation for the Jesus and the Christ stories? Without that treasure-trove of information from which they could extract, at any time, inspirational "prophecies" and "miracles" that might contribute to the Christian cause—what, indeed, would they have done? They might have been able to acquire some bits and pieces of Jewish Scripture here and there, although nothing comparable to the Septuagint would have been available to them. And it must be acknowledged that orthodox Judaism would never knowingly have contributed to the expansion of a heathen Gentile religion.

In truth, the value of Septuagint contribution to Christendom simply cannot be overestimated. Without it, the Christianity that we know could never have developed and succeeded. What conjugation of ethnic, spiritual and cultural principles might have evolved instead, no one can say; but it logically follows that the Western world would have been spared the Jewish God, the cosmic Christ, the Christianized Old Testament, and the Christian-Judaic totalitarian system.

On that, awesome note, I would like to close this testament with a few remarkably well-chosen words by two of the many Higher Critics who have my undying admiration and respect.

I do not doubt for a moment that Albert Jay Nock speaks for most of the great scholars who have persued the origins of Christism when he describes the history of the religion as > the most depressing study I ever undertook, and also one of the most interesting. I came away from it with the firm conviction that the prodigious evils which spot this record can all be traced to the attempt to organize and institutionalize something which is in its nature incapable of being successfully either organized or institutionalized.

Finally, no one has provided a more philosophically concise, literary period, to the intriguing study of Christendom than Charles Guignebert, for twenty-five years professor of the history of Christianity at the Sorbonne:

> The rise of the Galilean prophet marks the beginning, however accidental, of the religious movement from which Christianity sprang. The lowly spring which pours a slender trickle over the stones neither promises nor foresees the great river to which it gives rise: nevertheless, from it the river has its origin and being.

HISTORICAL COMMENTARY

COULTON, C.G.: "Aquinas never erred worse, perhaps, then when he judged the ideal state to need a peasantry strong in arm, dull in intellect, and divided among themselves by mutual distrust."

FISHER, VARDIS: "If man is ever able to build a civilization worthy of that devotion which he seems richly endowed to give, he will first have to accept in the full light of his mind and soul the historical facts of his past, and the mutilations and perversions which his hostility to these facts has made upon his spirit."

FRANCE, ANATOLE: "The Middle Ages frightened us with a lugubrious phantasmagoria of devils snapping at a sinner's soul as it passed."

GREGORY the GREAT (Pope from 590 to 604): "The bliss of the elect in heaven would not be perfect unless they were able to look across the abyss and enjoy the agonies of their brethren in eternal fire."

GUIGNEBERT, CHARLES: " 'I am innocent of the blood of this just person, see ye to it'. And the Jews cried with one voice, 'His blood be on us and our children'. Few of the sayings of the Gospels have done more harm than these, and yet they are only the invention of the redactor."

LAKE, KIRSOPP: "The Church conquered the world by offering salvation through a redeeming Lord...Catholic Christianity conquered because it was popular, not because it was true, and failed for the same reason."

LECKY, W.E.H.: "The fierce declamations of St. Jerome afford a terrible picture of the disorders prevalent among those vowed to celibacy, and of the hideous crimes resorted to in order to conceal or remove the consequences of guilt...The Church of Rome has inflicted a greater amount of unmerited suffering than any other religion that has ever existed."

Ibid.: "For about two centuries, the hideous maceration of the body was regarded as the highest proof of Christian excellence."

LEO X (Pope from 1513 to 1521): "What profit has not that fable of Christ brought us!"

MICHELET, JULES: "Many women surrendered themselves to Satanism because Satan elevated them above the position assigned to them by the Church...The Church keeps her down at the lowest level of degradation—she is Eve, and sin incarnate."

Ibid.: "Women died of the terror of being walled up in the little black hole...One word recurs continually, like a bell of horror tolled, and tolled again, to drive the dead in life into despair—always the same word, Immured."

REINACH, S.: "Monasticism was essentially the egoistic effort of the individual to ensure his own salvation while repudiating the duties and responsibilities of life."

ROBERTSON, J.M.: "If the merits of Christianity as a civilizing force are to be in any way determined by its influence in working bloodshed, its record in the matter of witch-slaying alone would serve to place it, in that regard, lower than any other creed. Classic paganism knew no such infamy."

ROBINSON, JAMES HARVEY: "For six or seven centuries (after 467) very few outside of the clergy ever dreamed of studying, or even of learning to read and write. Even in the 13th century an offender who wished to prove that he belonged to the clergy in order that he might be tried by a Church court, had only to show that he could read a single line."

ROBINSON, VICTOR: "It was a time (the Middle Ages) when the intellect of Europe was so clouded by monkish fables that the monasteries were buying milk purporting to come from the breasts of the Blessed Virgin."

SCOTT, E.F.: " 'Spiritual' speaking with tongues has probably been commonly due to the loss of rational self-control on the part of primitive, ignorant, highly excited individuals in a crowd which has been stirred religiously to its depths...the outpouring of broken words and inarticulate sounds under the influence of uncontrollable feeling."

SCHWEITZER, ALBERT: "The critical study of the life of Jesus has been for theology a school of honesty. The world has never seen before, and will never see again, a struggle for truth so full of pain and renunciation as that of which the Lives of Jesus of the last hundred years contain the cryptic record."

Ibid.: "The word 'Jehovah' was made, early in the 16th century, by a friar, who was ignorant of the rules of synagogue reading. It never was and is not a proper name for Israel's God, though some Jewish scholars use it.

SMITH, HOMER: "For the sense of the dignity of man, fundamental to the precepts of the Stoics and of Cicero, Seneca, Marcus Aurelius and other Roman moralists...(Christianity) substituted the doctrine of personal inadequacy, the sense of guilt, and the habits of self-doubt and self-abnegation. In its cardinal doctrine of sin, for which it crucified the Christ, it promulgated a belief which was to crucify the whole of the Western world for centuries to come."

SMITH, H.W.: "The Church in the Middle Ages was a vast corporation ruled by the Pope and the Holy Congregation through coercion, force, fear and theological formulas...concubinage and its implied hypocrisy were the accepted rule, and indolence, mendicancy and extortion were characteristic of the clergy generally."

WEIGALL, A.: "Nobody in his senses now believes that Jesus ascended into heaven in 'His body, with flesh, bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature'...ascension into the sky was the usual end to the mythical legends of the lives of pagan gods."

WEISS, J.: "Is it not a depressing thought that these fundamental facts of the Christian religion were no more than delusions, fancies, hallucinations?"

FOR MY LEGIONARIES. The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $8.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. THE ANTI-HUMANS, by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented 'Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. A GAP IN THE PASSING CROWD

Thoughts on the Death of Comrades Never Met

It has now been two years since a young man named Tony Wydra left his home near Fayetteville, North Carolina and never returned. He was murdered in a car on Highway 17 near Jacksonville, N.C. under circumstances which have never been satisfactorily explained and probably never will be. The two individuals with him at the time were shady characters who operated on the fringe of the White resistance movement and who later proved to have certain, sinister ties with the Zionist regime in Washington. Both of these men have been whisked off the stage into a quasi-legal, bureaucratic mass of spaghetti which effectively obscures and defeats any attempt to get at the truth behind Tony Wydra's death and several others, including the muitiple homicide with which his brother, Robert Eugene Jackson, has been so cynically and falsely accused.

I have been asked by Jack Jackson to offer some remarks upon the second anniversary of Tony's murder. I'm at a disadvantage because I never met him personally. I don't know what he looked like, what his thoughts and beliefs were, what his personality was like. Everything I have heard indicates that he was a younger version of Jack. I do know that he voluntarily went alone and unarmed into a dangerous situation which put him in a car on a rural back road at night with men he knew he could not trust. He took this risk because he thought there was a chance he might gain information from them which would free his brother from unjust imprisonment. I think this tells us all we need to know about his character, and yet any observations I make must necessarily be of a general nature.

My first feeling when I contemplate Tony's death is one of anger and revulsion. I object to Tony Wydra's dying and I object even more to the manner of his death. Tony was murdered by an enemy so pusillanimous that he carries out his business of oppression and destruction of those who oppose him in the wee hours of the morning on a darkened rural highway. He later ties up his loose ends with a procession of paid perjurers and jailhouse snitches who parade up onto a witness stand and tell contemptible lies in order to punish innocent men for crimes carried out by the hirelings of the United States government. We live under such a petty, sneaky little tyranny. No style, none of the bold panache of other regimes who flaunt their cruelty and wave the bloody shirt of their victims aloft in snarling triumph. No doubt our brothers in Eastern Europe and Russia would disagree with this, but I find the sneaking and senile tyrannies of bureaucrats in three piece suits to be far worse than the iron hand of the uniformed commissar.

My second feeling is one of loss. Not just the loss of a young man whom I wish I had known as a friend, but a generic loss to myself, my race, my Southern homeland, and my culture. There is now one more missing link in the chain of accumulated life experience and historical continuity which stretches back to the time when our race began moving out of the sea of grass and across the world, those thousands of years ago. There are so few Aryans left now, so terribly few, and in Tony's murder we have been robbed of one more little chunk of our birthright. There is one less tiny, clear drop of pure water in the shrinking, drying lake of our gene pool, a lake surrounded by encroaching shoals of oozing, polluted mud.

Those of us who are racially aware know of this depletion. We see it every day in the increasing number of black, brown, and yellow faces on the streets. We confront it far too often when we see some tragic White slut sashaying down the street with her congoid lover's black arm around her. We read it almost every day when the newspapers report another White child or maiden butchered by the congoid beasts. Now there is one more empty space in the crowd, the space where Tony Wydra should stand and walk. Soon enough it will be filled by a shuffling, bubble-lipped subhuman or a sly and grasping Oriental.

When one looks at all those black and brown and yellow faces whose numbers increase every year, (Raleigh is now almost a Third World city), and one realizes that every one of those faces should be White, then one starts to get an idea of the enormity of our racial loss. There are millions upon millions of our racial brothers and sisters who should be filling those gaps, but who no longer exist or who never existed because we have thus far failed to find the courage to do what we all know is necessary and take the required physical, bodily risk to bring about permanent change. Those gaps in the crowd indict us every day for our cowardice and our sloth. We are missing the millions of descendants of the seven hundred thousand Aryans who died in the American Civil War. We are missing the countless untold millions who would have been born of those who fought and died during the two European Civil Wars of this century, the victims of monkoid crime, the victims of Communist murder, the infants ripped screaming from the wombs of weak and misguided mothers who didn't want to be bothered with the responsibility for their existence.

To contemplate this for any length of time is so terrible that it can drive one mad. How many cancer cures, how many Martian explorers, how many research scientists and poets and statesmen and great authors do we lack now, because we cannot summon the kind of simple, basic courage to face armed enemies which was the most common virtue of our ancestors? If Tony Wydra had to die, as it is certain all men must, then he should have died in open battle against Judah and his hirelings, his brothers and comrades about him. Instead, we let him go into that dark night and get into that car alone. Now he is one more gap in the crowd, and our shame is one more ounce the greater.

I can offer but this one small small crumb of comfort to Jack and to his and Tony's mother, to all those who see and understand the meaning of those gaps in the crowd. That is this: I know with utter moral certainty that one day the scales will be balanced.

This is not some kind of threat on my part, nor is it simply a wild peroration promising divine vengeance on sin. It is a simple, valid observation based on clear, historical foundations, on information readily available to anyone who, like myself, does not own a television and reads books instead of dulling his brain with society's electronic drug.

The simple, historically demonstrable fact is that ZOG doesn't have what it takes to survive in the long run, because the principles of liberalism and Zionism and the other ideological underpinnings of our oppressors do not have any foundation in the real world. They can exist and function only in an artifical, wealthy, and stable social environment of consensus and high prosperity to keep the masses doped up with toys and consumer goods. Those conditions will cease to obtain very shortly, and Judeo/liberalism will collapse. At some point thereafter Aryan man will recover his collective wits and his ancestral courage, since we are genetically the same men our ancestors were, and when we have once more acquired the simple physical valor necessary to confront and defeat our enemies in armed conflict, the days of ZOG and all ZOG's allies are not only numbered, they are short.

This is not a prediction. It is not a prophecy. It is not a wild fantastic guess. It is a simple statement of something which is historically inevitable and which is going to happen, quite possibly within this decade if the Persian Gulf situation turns into as cataclysmic a disaster for ZOG as it may well do.

When that time comes, even if the New Order is not able to locate and punish those responsible for Tony Wydra's murder, then I would hope that at least the truth will come out and we will be able to learn from captured enemy files and so forth who gave what orders to whom, who made the decision to kill, what money changed hands, what was done to shield the killers and cover up the crime. It is not much consolation to those left behind, but it is some.

I don't blame ZOG for cracking down with "hate laws," show trials, thought police on the university campuses and all the other latest developments. They know what's coming even if some of us can't see it, and they understand far better than we the heavy reckoning they will have to pay. There are many Tony Wydras, and their corpses hang around the neck of Judah like albatrosses. For all their wealth, their luxurious lifestyles, and their arrogant power, I wouldn't want to be a servant of this regime. Payment may be deferred and deferred yet again, but someday the bill will come due.

When that terrible time has come and gone, and when the new day of an inconceivably glorious future has dawned for Aryan man, then Tony and all our dead will rest at last.

The "Principles" of George Bush

In attempting to justify sending tens-of-thousands of American soldiers to the Persian Gulf and Saudi Arabia, President Bush stated that he was acting in accordance with traditional American values. He said: "Standing up for our principles is an American tradition..." Now whenever a politician speaks about "principles," you'd better count your change and check your silverware. Politicians appeal to principles only when they want to take advantage of us in some way, such as getting us to fight an unnecessary war.

The reason Mr. Bush gave for involving us militarily in the Middle East is that big, aggressive nations shouldn't gobble up their neighbors. Recall where the domino dilemma took us in Southeast Asia and the war with Vietnam. Bush's words sound familiar, don't they?

Our government's way out of a serious economic slump is to stage a war; this necessitates borrowing huge amounts of money, pumping up the economy with explosive force!

President Bush and VP Quayle, should be impeached and removed from office and made to apologize to the American people and perhaps to the world for what they have plotted against us thus far. Our soldiers should be brought home immediately, rather than being used as pawns for Israel, the international power brokers and the profiteers.

Saddam Hussein is no saint but he is no devil either. No one has ever accused Hussein of seeking to enrich himself. In fact he has carefully redistributed Iraq's oil wealth among the Iraqi people who enjoyed the highest standard of living in the Middle East. This is the reason why the Palestine people overwhelmingly support Hussein. He has promised to redistribute the oil wealth of Kuwait to all the oppressed Arab people.

Even without Middle East oil, the other oil-producing areas of the world can adequately supply the entire world's needs. There is nothing in our Constitution that assigns responsibility to the U.S. to protect the world's oil supply, or for the U.S. to be involved in any foreign war. Neither God nor the American people appointed President Bush to be the world's policeman.

Why should we care who sells us oil? Hussein is desperate to sell oil. We say buy Iraq's oil, stay out of the Arabs' disputes, bring our men home, stop this despicable war mongering against Iraq.

Kuwait and Iraq were one country during the 400 years of rule under the Ottoman Empire (1514 to 1914). As Turkish power waned, the British appointed the Al-Sabah family as the ruling Sheiks over the local Arabs who began moving into Kuwait seeking work.

In 1899 Mubarak Al-Sabah made a deal with England. In exchange for protection and trade, Britain would control Kuwait's foreign policy. Thus Kuwait became a vassal state under British rule for the next 70 years. This began England's policy of establishing Sheikdoms in Bahrain, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, etc. These are actual family dictatorships in which the few became billionaires while most of the Arab world languished in poverty.

After World War I, Britain seized all of Arabia including Iraq. In 1921, they installed King Faisal as their newest puppet to rule over Iraq. Iraq gained its independence in 1932. Kuwait continued to be ruled by the dictatorial Al-Sabah family under British military protection.

Kuwait is about the size of New Jersey. It is a flat desert area with no vegetation and no fresh water. To survive citizens must depend on desalinization plants. Oil and natural gas are their only resources; 1.2 million foreign workers are employed in this industry. There are some 700,000 Kuwaiti residents who are citizens, but they have no political rights. Sheik Jaber Al-Sabah has over $100 billion invested overseas. He is one of the richest men in the world.

Oil Discovered in 1938

Kuwait suddenly became a prize to be cherished after oil was discovered. The British Petroleum Company (B.P.) and the Gulf Oil Company were given exclusive rights to begin massive drilling and the Al-Sabahs went from being millionaires to becoming billionaires.

It must be stressed that throughout this period Iraq continued to make public its claim to Kuwait.

The British were in the process of dismantling their empire worldwide when in 1961 they granted Kuwait independence. A few weeks later Iraq's ruler, Gen. Abdul Kareem Kassim, announced that his army was going to take back Kuwait. He declared: The people of Kuwait are the people of Iraq. The era of Sheikdoms is over.

This brought the British rushing back to the oil fields with troops and tanks to protect the holdings of Gulf Oil and BP. Iraq then broke diplomatic relations with the U.S. briefly when we backed up the British against Iraq's claim to Kuwait in 1961. They had their B.P. and we had our Gulf Oil!

Our young men must know that they are sweating it out in 120 degree, desert heat, placed there to fight and die for the purpose of defending the U.S.'s and U.K.'s billion dollar oil investments! There are no democracies in the Middle East and this includes Israel. The Palestinians on the occupied West Bank have absolutely no rights and those on the East Bank (Israel) have no equal rights.

Iraq is a dictatorship, there is no question about that. However, Christianity was long ago legalized there. In fact, there are over 200 Protestant and Catholic churches operating freely in Iraq! There is even one Synagogue in Baghdad. The local Jews have in no way experienced any persecution. (There goes the smear that Hussein is another Hitler.)

Women in Iraq have been granted full rights with men. They do not have to wear veils or be isolated from society, etc. If you want to order a mixed drink with a meal it is perfectly legal in Iraq while it is considered a serious crime in the Sheikdoms! Women in Saudi Arabia are not allowed to drive a car. They can carry no money and must have a man with them before they can purchase anything. When walking by a man on the street they must look down at the ground so that their eyes do not meet.

The British controlled the Persian Gulf after WW I and appointed all the "royal families" who today control the oil rich Sheikdoms of Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, Oman and the United Arab Emirates. Paid handsomely, they hold these lands for the big oil companies.

The House of Saud has clung tenaciously to Wahhabism, the puritanical strain of Sunni Islam. In keeping with the Wahhabi tradition, liquor, pornography and gambling are forbidden. Movies and dancing are also not permitted. Videos, books and publications are heavily censored; copies of Western news magazines are banned from the kingdom.

There are 200 "princes" in the phony entity of Kuwait. (All related to Sheik Jaber Al-Sabah.) Mr. Marshall W. Wiley, who assisted companies which once could carry on business with Iraq, says at least "You don't have to find a prince to bribe to obtain a contract in Iraq."

The Saudis enforce Islamic laws of justice to the letter. In the city squares, adulterers are stoned to death, murderers and rapists are beheaded, and the lesser offenders are flogged.

The U.N. Commission on Human Rights has condemned both Saudi Arabia and Albania as being two of the most brutal tyrannies in the world. If you are caught stealing in Saudi Arabia, they will cut your hand off. If you utter an insult about the king you can be beheaded. Thus we're certainly not fighting for justice in Arabia!

Why Are We In Arabia?

There are at least four objectives that caused Mr. Bush's sudden brush with morality: 1.) To remove (kill) Hussein from Iraq because he is perceived to be a threat to Israel; Israel, with The Bomb, must remain the most powerful force in the Middle East, and, at all cost, the Jews must be allowed to maintain hegemony throughout the Arab world, and the best way to do this is to strangle the Arabs' only strong leader; 2.) Profits and to appease the international bankers so there will be collateral in the pipeline to back past loans, and to satisfy the Bush belief in the need to raise the price of oil from the teen$ to the twentie$; 3.) The Movement in step with the United Nations toward a World Government "The New World Order;" 4.) The need to avert an impending depression in America and to quickly shift America's attention away from domestic problems such as the S&L crisis, the race issue, Third World debt to American banks, foreign competition, etc.

What Principles?

Recently you may have read of a Saudi "prince" who lost $12 million gambling in Monte Carlo in one night. Are we supposed to fight and die to maintain his high living extravagance in countries where such "royalty" have left their own people living on the brink of starvation?

The Saudi government is a closed shop. There is not a single elected official and not a single political party. Where are these principles that President Bush is talking about?

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

A FATEFULLY FAILED ALLIANCE?

I have not yet succeeded in procuring a copy of a book by Lenni Brenner, The Iron Wall: Zionist Revisionism from Jabotinski to Shamir, which was published in London by Zed Books in 1984.[1] According to the German periodical, Recht und Wahrheit (Bad Kissingen), the book contains the text of a proposal made to Adolf Hitler by the present Prime Minister of Israel, Yitzhak Shamir, in January 1941. The periodical published a German translation of the English text, and the German translation was translated into French by G.-A. Amaudruz, who is publishing it serially in his invaluable Courrier du Continent (Case Ville 2428, Lausanne).

From the installment published in the December 1990 issue of the Courrier, which has just come to hand, it is clear that Shamir proposed to Hitler an offensive and defensive alliance between Germany and Jewry against Great Britain.

Shamir begins by pointing out that the objectives of German National Socialism and Zionism are complementary and virtually identical. The Germans want Germany, and eventually Europe, to be Judenfrei. The Zionists want Europe

1. The title refers to Vladimir Jabotinski, a Jew from Odessa, who went to England to help promote the infamous Balfour Declaration and organize a Jewish army for eventual seizure of Palestine. His terrorism in Palestine, where the British were half-heartedly trying to protect the Palestinians, resulted in his conviction by a British tribunal, which sentenced him to fifteen years in prison—but, of course, world Jewry began to wail and the faint-hearted British released him. In 1923 he founded the more openly violent branch of the Zionists, the World Union of Zionist-Revisionists, and soon formed the famous secret army of terrorists and murderers called Irgun Zvai Leumi ("Nationalist Military Organization"), now generally known as 'Irgun.' He died in the United States in 1940, and his corpse was later entombed on Mt. Herzl (!) in Jerusalem. It is typical of the Jews' continual dissimulation that Webster's Biographical Dictionary describes Jabotinski as "British."

cleared of Jews by transferring all the Jews to Palestine, and Irgun is working actively to that end. Therefore, Hitler's Germany and the Zionists are striving to achieve the same result, and an alliance between them is logically indicated.

An alliance between Germany and the new Hebrew Empire, founded on the same racial, nationalistic, and totalitarian basis as National Socialism, would guarantee German interests in the Near East. The new Jewish state, once formally recognized by Germany, would ally itself militarily with Germany and enter the World War as her ally.

The new allies would consider the opening of a Second Front in Palestine, where the Jewish armed forces, directed by Irgun and, no doubt, supplied with weapons by Germany, would purge Palestine of the Palestinians and British.

The alliance, furthermore, would make obvious to the whole world the high and undeniable moral basis of the New Order in Germany and the rest of Europe.

The excerpt closes with praise of a recent address in which Hitler announced his determination to defeat Britain. (By 1941, of course, Hitler had learned with chagrin that the English, whom he had always admired and with whom he had hoped to form a close alliance based on the two nations' common racial interest in preserving the British Empire, were too crazed to perceive their own best interests, and too morally obtuse to appreciate his chivalrous act in permitting the British Army to escape from Dunkirk, instead of annihilating it and thus effectively ending the War against Germany.)

Hitler obviously refused the proffered alliance. What if he had accepted Shamir's proposal?

We need not ask whether Shamir was sincere in proposing that alliance. We may be sure that he was as sincere as his race ever is in dealings with the despised and stupid goyim. That, however, does not mean that it is inconceivable that Shamir would have thought it expedient to form the alliance and act upon it. Germany could thus have been used to destroy the British, whom the Jews equally hated, and there would have been a reasonable basis for the alliance between Soviet Russia and Germany into which Hitler did enter, though reluctantly. It is even conceivable that the foul monster in the White House would have organized a "lend-lease" program to assist Germany, since he is known to have hated the British (including, of course, his half-English stooge, Winston Churchill) as much as he hated the Germans.

As soon as I have located a copy of Lenni Brenner's book and obtained photocopies of the relevant pages, I shall suggest to the editor of Liberty Bell that he publish the full text of one of the most remarkable diplomatic documents of modern times. It is a proof of what I have always stressed, the common interest, in present circumstances, between the American people and the Zionists, provided that the Zionists really intend to carry out their proclaimed purpose to free the Aryan peoples of the Jews now parasitic upon them.

THOSE AWFUL PROTOCOLS

You will be glad to know that the courageous French periodical, Révision, which I mentioned in June (pp. 52-59), continues publication despite constant harassment[1] by the Jews' governor of France, Mitterand and his gang. I have received the issue for November 1990.

Révision published in May 1990 an important article on the famous Protocols by the editor, Alain Guionnet. Before I report on it, however, I should summarize what is indisputably known about that document.

(1). In the last days of August 1897 the first Zionist congress met in Basel, Switzerland. It was evidently so successful that in the following week the organizer and chairman of

1. One cute trick was to invoke against the magazine the laws against pornography and pretend that truth would corrupt the minds of French moppets. The same excuse was used by the German traitors in Bonn when they first restricted dissemination of Professor Arthur Butz's fundamental The Hoax of the Twentieth Century and the German translation of it, Der Jahrhundert-Betrug (Richmond, Surrey; Historical Review Press, 1977). These are facts that should be pondered by those who are now clamoring for foolish laws against pornography.

the meeting, Theodor Hertzl, in a highly confidential letter, boasted: "In Basel, I founded the Jewish State."[2] The proceedings of this Congress or such part of them as it was deemed expedient to make public were published in Vienna by a firm called "Erez Israel" under the curious title, Protocols. The word was evidently used with its common meaning: an informal statement of the points which have been agreed on in a conference or diplomatic negotiation and which are to be embodied in a formal treaty between the contracting parties.[3]

(2). Sometime after the Congress and before 1901 at the latest, through channels that are variously described,[4] a manuscript reached Russia and was said to be the secret part of the Protocols of the Congress at Basel. The manuscript may or may not have borne the title, Protocoles des sages de Sion, by which it became subsequently known.

2. "In Basel habe ich den Judenstaat gegründet."

3. The word originally designed a strip of parchment that was glued to the first page of a manuscript or, if it had been bound, its cover, listing its contents. From this was derived the Table of Contents of modern books. The term was also used in diplomacy (1) to list and limit the subjects that were to be discussed in a conference, and (2) to formulate the diplomatic etiquette to which ambassadors and other diplomatic representatives were expected to conform. The word is sometimes used to designate what is to be taken for granted in a written discussion or in a meeting (e.g., in this country, Robert's Rules of Order), whence the peculiar American use of the term in the southwestern states, where, in abstracts of title under the American government, the protocol is the original grant of land to an individual by the Spanish Crown, which is thereby recognized as the basis from which the legal title is derived.

4. The most common and plausible account is that given on pp. 100-102 of the larger of the two English editions I shall cite below. There are many variants, some probably arising from the habitual practice of intelligence agencies to conceal their sources. Some may have been devised to discredit the revelation of Jewish strategy. That must account for the wild story that the text was found, and translated from, a parchment written in Hebrew (a mistake for the Rabbinical dialect of Aramaic?), found in a library in southern Russia—unless the story arose from a confused recollection of a letter, anticipatory of the Protocols, similar to a letter written by the Prince of the Jews to rabbis in Spain in 1489, which I shall mention shortly. Such a letter, written to Jews in the Ukraine, might well have been in Rabbinic.

It was written in French, purportedly the language of the original.

The document is no longer available. It and all copies of it were probably destroyed when a Jew, whose real name may have been Adler (depending on whether or not his mother had been legally married to his father) but who disguised himself by taking the name of the stupid Russian who had married his mother, Kerensky,[5] wormed his way into the position of Prime Minister in 1917 to prepare the way for the Bolsheviks under Lenin. He immediately used the powers of the Russian government to silence opponents of his predatory race and suppress whatever documentation they possessed. He is known to have destroyed all copies of the book by Nilus, which will be mentioned below.

It is significant that the document was in French. That creates a certain presumption of authenticity, for all of the leaders of Zionism, Herzl, Wolfsohn, Kellner, Weizmann, et al., all wrote and spoke German for serious communication,[6] and the Zionist periodical, Die Welt (a title which foreshadows a determination to occupy the whole world, not merely a small part of Asia Minor), was published in German in Vienna. Anyone undertaking to forge such a document (e.g., the Russian Secret Police) would naturally have produced it in German, rather than use an unlikely language, French, which would immediately raise questions about a document attributed to persons who normally and almost exclusively wrote in German. (Modern Hebrew, which is now used, in addition to English and Rumanian, by many Jews in Israel, was not invented until later. It is more commonly written than spoken.)

5. The Jews have attained such effective control of even responsible publications that, for example, two of our most common reference works, Webster's Biographical Dictionary and the Columbia Encyclopaedia, lie to their readers and call "Kerensky" a Russian.

6. Yiddish, which is a dialect of German corrupted with words and expressions taken from the dialect of Aramaic current among Jews in the Middle Ages and perhaps from Hebrew, is too crude a language to be used in discussion of topics requiring philosophical and intellectual terms. Educated Jews naturally used German in writing on such subjects and even in their diaries and personal letters about trivial matters. See, for example, Herzl's Tagebücher (3 vols., Berlin, Jüdischer Verlag, 1922-1923).

(3). The French text was translated into Russian, perhaps by Mlle. Justine Glinka, who is said to have purchased the French text from a Jew and transmitted it to General Orgevskii in the Czar's Ministry of the Interior, reportedly in 1885 (obviously long before Herzl convened his Zionist Congress at Basel in 1897!). The French text may or may not have been the text of secret proceedings at that Congress which is said to have been obtained for the Russian Secret Police by Eno Azev, a rabbi who had defected from his race and eventually became a Christian monk in a monastery in Serbia, where he is said to have vigorously insisted that he knew that the Protocols were genuine and gave only an outline of the world conquest that Jewry was systematically carrying out. That text, in an unspecified language, was presumably translated into Russian by Eno Azev or another. I have no information that would enable me to discriminate between the two original versions of the Protocols, assuming that there were two.

(4). A Russian translation of the French Protocols, presumably Mlle. Glinka's, was given by her to a Russian nobleman, Sukhotin, in 1895 (note date) and privately published, s.a.l.n.t., by one of his friends at Orel in 1897. No copy of this anonymous publication is known to exist, but the fact of publication was attested by the amateur publisher, who escaped from the Judaeo-Bolshevik seizure of Russia and executed an affidavit to that effect. This is the Russian version that Professor Sergius A. Nilus inserted in his book on Jewish influences, published in 1901. Professor Nilus again published this translation in 1905, and he or someone else sent a copy of this second edition to the British Museum, where it was received and catalogued in 1906.

(5). Nilus's text was translated into English by Victor E. Marsden, who had been the representative of the Morning Post (London) in St. Petersburg, and who escaped from the doomed land only with great difficulty after torture by the enemies of mankind.[7]

Marsden's English translation was first published in London in 1920 under the title, The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion. This text has been reprinted many times.

A copy of Nilus's book also reached Germany and the text was translated into German by Gottfried zum Beek, if I am correctly informed, and published under the title, Die Geheimnisse der Weisen von Zion, in 1919. The Protocols have been translated into many languages, including Japanese, and some years ago I was sent a copy in Turkish. I assume that most or all of the translations into other languages, with the possible exception of the French, were translated from either Marsden's English or Herr zum Beek's German.

(6). Two English reprints of Marsden's text are available from Liberty Bell Publications, viz.: (a) a booklet of 72 pages, Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, containing only the text without commentary and a few pages of excerpts from other Jewish manifestos of similar purport; $3.50 plus postage. (b) A book of three hundred pages, The Protocols of the Meetings of the Learned Elders of Zion, with preface and explanatory notes; $8.00 + postage. This edition, first published in 1934, is much later than the booklet and contains a wealth of material illustrative of the application of the Yids' strategy and tactics to the date of publication. Everyone who is interested in the possible survival of our race or even in his own chances of dying a natural death should have a copy of the Protocols at hand for reference, and this is the edition which I now recommend—unless you read Spanish with ease.

(7). I owe to a generous reader of this magazine a copy of what is by far the best edition of the Protocols known to me: Los Protocolos de los Sabios de Sión, 1898-1990, comentados por Joaquim Bochaca Oriol (Bogotá, Colombia; Editorial Solar, 1990). The text was probably translated from Marsden's English, but Señor Bochaca, in his commentary after each paragraph, has abundantly and cogently illustrated the operation of the Jewish strategy during the past ninety-two years, and has considered (pp. 511-521) even the now fashionable comedy of 'perestroika' and 'glasnost' with which Gorbachev and Bush entertain "conservative" children and excite frenzied applause from simple-minded "intellectuals," with, of course, the coöperation of all the jewspapers and boob-tubes. This vaudeville act, which has inspired some intellectual mammothrepts to assure us, for the *n*th time, that the Sheenies have lost control of Russia, is simply a phase in the gradual consolidation of the two principal techniques of subversion, Communism and Capitalism, in preparation for the New World Order clearly planned in the Protocols, to establish which our War Lord proposes to use our weapons to blast the whole world into bloody and "peace-loving" submission to our enemies.

7. It seems that he had prudently sent his Russian wife to England before the Jews took control of Russia, while he remained, hoping, perhaps, that the Bolsheviks would have some wish to imitate the behavior of civilized nations to foreign visitors.

Señor Bochaca has added an excellent preface in which he frankly confronts the obvious problem: Are the Jews, who have devised and so successfully applied the methods described in the Protocols, a race so mentally and socially superior to our own that we Aryans, despite all the courage and all the scientific prowess of which we gave abundant proof in past centuries, will necessarily undergo the fate of all inferior species in the struggle for life that is the only law of the planet on which we live? If that is so, then we, as Aryans, may regret and deplore our irremediable inferiority, but, as members of the only race capable of philosophical objectivity, we may also not only recognize the inevitable but even approve it as probably a stage in the eventual progress of our planet to the Jews' Biblical ideal of a "desolation of desolations," such as we now find on all the other planets of our solar system. I commend Señor Bochaca's thoughtful discussion to you with the hope that the exiguous grounds for hope that he gives us may prove to be substantial.

(8). Ever since the first publication of the Protocols in a European language, the Sheenies have been yelping that they are a "forgery," i.e., not actually composed by Jews. That contention, of course, is, for all practical purposes, irrelevant. If we are given a map that purports to be taken from the London Time's great atlas, whereas it was compiled by someone else and is thus a forgery, all that will really matter to us is whether or not the map is accurate.

Whoever wrote the Protocols produced a minutely accurate description of the Jews' conquest of the world by deceit. A cogent argument in favor of their authenticity is the obvious fact that they show an attitude toward goyim that is precisely that of the Babylonian Talmud and the authoritative epitome of it, Caro's Shulḥan 'Aruk, Jewish scriptures of which no one can dispute the authenticity.[8]

That contemptuous hatred of goyim appears in many other Jewish compositions, not all of which, surely, can be dismissed as forgeries by nasty Aryan pigs.

The Jewish plan of world conquest by economic looting and by using hirelings and dupes to befuddle Aryans is certainly not an invention of wicked "anti-Semites" in the Nineteenth Century. It has been attested long before that, for example, in a letter of instructions written by the Prince of the Jews, who then resided in Constantinople, to the Jews in Spain in 1498, when there was already prevalent the popular sentiment that resulted in the expulsion of "unconverted" Jews by Ferdinand and Isabella four years later, in the year of Columbus's fateful rediscovery of the Western Hemisphere.

A facsimile of what is probably the first printing of this letter, in a book published in Spain in 1608, will be found following page 98 in the edition of the English Protocols that I recommended above. The letter is in Spanish, as is natural,

8. For a convenient conspectus of some characteristic passages in the Talmud, see the Christian News Encyclopaedia, which I cited in Liberty Bell, November 1989, pp. 1-7. It reproduces those passages photographically from the Jews' official English translation. So far as I know, there is no English translation of the epitome, but it was translated into German by Dietrich Hoffmann, Der Schulchan Aruch (Berlin, 1895).

since the Jews of the Mediterranean lands all spoke Ladino, a Jewish dialect of Spanish, just as Yiddish is a Jewish deformation of German, while educated members of the international tribe used Spanish for serious writing.[9]

The letter, as I have said, anticipates the essentials of the Protocols and attests the vampire race's determination to exploit and ultimately destroy the hated goyim. The Sheenies will wail, of course, that there is no proof that their Prince actually wrote that letter in 1498, but that is irrelevant, because the orders given in the letter, whoever wrote it, were in fact followed by the Yids in Spain at that time.

The Prince, for example, orders his subjects in Spain to feign conversion to the religion of the stupid Aryans, and then slither upward into positions of power in both church and state so that they can dominate Spain and drive it to destruction. That is precisely what most of them did.

The majority of the Jews in Spain obeyed their Prince's command and masqueraded as converts to Christianity. That is made absolutely certain by the fact that in one typical small town, Borja, almost all of the c. 300 Jews infesting it professed the religion of their hated Spanish hosts to avoid emigration; see Miguel A. Motis Dolader, Los Judios de Borja en el siglo XV (Borja, Centro de Estudios Borjanos, 1987), based on the municipal records. One nice detail is the conduct of some of the Yids: they apparently intended to emigrate, sold their property to Christians, and left the town, but, probably on the advice of their superiors, changed their minds, had themselves sprinkled with the Christians' magic water, and returned to Borja to reclaim their property.

Yahweh's race, from their first appearance in history, perpetually snivel about the "persecution" they have suffered

9. It is curious and perhaps significant that the version of this letter published in the Rothschilds' Revue des études juives (of which an English translation appears on p. 7 of the shorter edition of the English Protocols) oddly and implausibly substitutes the King of France for the "Rey de España" of the original. There was an obvious reason why the Prince should give sage instructions to his subjects in Spain in 1498, but he had no reason to advise the Jews who were battening on the French in that year.

(and richly deserved) in every civilized nation into which they have penetrated, but the next time you hear them wailing about the cruel "expulsion of Jews" from Spain in 1492, just remember that (a) it was the expulsion of c. 5% of the Jews who then infested Spain, (b) the five percent went to Holland (where, by the way, they continued to speak and write Spanish among themselves) and became suddenly wealthy; and in the next century Holland, having become Protestant, revolted against the Hapsburg monarchy in a civil war that bled Spain for a century, and (c) the 95% who remained in Spain so successfully masqueraded as Christians that we need not wonder why Spain, after becoming the richest nation in Europe and the dominant world power, lapsed into the irremediable economic, moral, and intellectual decadence that was most perceptively and bitterly described by the great Spanish satirist and moralist, Francisco Quevedo.

Quevedo, who, by the way, was a close and loyal friend of the great Jesuit, Juan de Mariana, the most learned Spaniard of his time,[10] understood what had been done to his nation. In the "Isla de los Monopantos," the thirty-ninth and penultimate chapter of his Hora de todos (not later than

10. Mariana, the son of a ranking ecclesiastic by his concubine, is best known for the stylistic brilliance of his Historiae de rebus Hispaniae libri (first edition, Toleti [= Toledo], 1592; augmented edition, Moguntiae [= Mainz], 1605; reprinted with supplement, Hagae Comitum [= The Hague], 1733). His essay, "De monetae mutatione," one of his Tractatūs VII (Coloniae Agrippinae [= Cologne], 1609), may have been the first treatise on economics to expose the irremediable defect of fiduciary currency: it inevitably leads governments to swindling their citizens (as, of course, it has done in the United States). It earned him the hatred of the Spanish Prime Minister and the bureaucratic gang. Mariana's sound views on education (as distinct from brainwashing), set forth in his Discursus de erroribus Societatis Jesu (placed on the Catholic Church's roster of forbidden books in 1627; I do not know of a trustworthy translation) earned him the hostility of his own order, which therefore did nothing to obtain his release when the Dominicans, with the cordial assent of the Spanish government, threw him into the dungeons of the Inquisition and then into a monastic prison, in which he suffered and languished until he was released, a broken old man of 75. He received the usual reward of intelligence that is not inspired by knavery.

1636),[11] Quevedo describes the looting and corruption of Spain by an alliance of Jews and financiers, and attributes to the Jews precisely the purposes set forth in the Protocols.

In the transparent fiction of the "Isla de los Monopantos," Quevedo first describes a Congress of leading rabbis from all parts of Europe, who have met in Salonica (then Turkish territory) to plot further means of destroying European civilization. The rabbis were evidently the leaders of Jewry in their respective countries at that time, and Quevedo gives them names that are anagrams of their real names or significant references to them.[12] To the Jewish Congress come the Monopantos, who are the international sect (Quevedo's term) of governmental ministers and financiers who dominate all the nations of Europe and are in fact the masters of the kings in whose names they rule. The Spaniards among them are designated by anagrammatic names or transparent allusions.[13]

The governmental financiers and thieves are an international sect because they have rejected Christianity and become atheists after the example of Machiavelli (Quevedo was a staunch Christian),[14] and their purpose is to rob their subjects

11. It is likely that this, like many of Quevedo's other works, circulated in manuscript for years before his final revision of it was printed.

12. Luis Astrana Marín, in his thorough study of the works he edited, says that the names of the Jews are "imposible hoy de descifrar," but if there is a goy who has made a study of the intrigues of Sixteenth-Century Jews, I wish he would try to identify some of the rabbis who could have written their own set of "protocols" at Salonica.

13. E.g., Pragas Chincollos = Gaspar de Guzmán, Conde-Duque de Olivares, one of whose territorial titles was Zúñiga y Conchillos. Then Prime Minister, he was believed to be at least partly of Jewish descent and is known to have favored many Marranos. Philárgyros ('lover of money') is obviously Guzmán's henchman, Juan Bautista Sáenz. Danipe = Juan de Pineda. Etc.

14. Quevedo's philosophical premises were fairly close to those of the famous Bishop Berkeley, and on this basis he refused to doubt Christianity as taught by the Catholic Church, and saw in application of it the only means of maintaining collective and individual morality. His political opinions were formed by Roman history; see his essay on Marcus Brutus, which takes the form of a commentary on the biography by and reduce them to penury and hence slavery. Their purposes are thus sufficiently close to those of the Jews to permit the two groups to conspire together against civilization. Each party mistrusts the other, of course, but the Jews intend to use the financiers for their own ends and then betray them, while the atheistic politicians, better called Argyrotheists because their god is money, intend to use and betray the Jews in the same way.[15]

One could compile a very long list of sagacious Aryans who have perceived and identified some of the Jews' operations against our race and culture, and a very short list of Jews who have defected from their race and exposed, at least in part, its hatred of us, but well-trained Americans will shudder at the thought that there could be persons so evil that they do not adore the innocent darlings of God's race, who are so vilely persecuted just because they are incapable of wrong-doing.

If one examines the Protocols, which obviously must have been written before 1901, one finds a detailed exposition of events that have taken place long after that date. The plans for looting a nation through a central bank, for example, are almost a blueprint for the Federal Reserve, which was devised by the Jew, Warburg, who conspired with greedy financiers of our own race to grab control of our currency in 1913. Consider the plans for an "international Super-Government" and compare them with the "New World Order" that Bushy is creating by Plutarch (it was written in Spanish, but a Latin translation, published in 1660, was widely circulated in Europe); it to some extent supersedes his earlier Política de Dios. The greater part of his numerous writings consists of mordant satires directed against the moral corruption of all ranks of Spanish society in his time.

15. It is a curious coincidence that Quevedo satirically predicts a rupture of the criminal alliance, as was recently done by Hans Schmidt in the December issue of his GANPAC Brief, in which he advances a theory that Bush's invasion of Saudi Arabia and projected attack on Iraq is in the interests of the "Trilateral" financiers and adverse to the interests of the Sheenies, with whom they were formerly allied, so that "the Jews have been had." Whether Schmidt is right will doubtless become apparent early in 1991.

making the "United Nations" the arbiters of peace and war and of our daily life. And who could have imagined in 1901 that a nation would ever fight a war without intending to win it, as the American cattle have done in Korea and Vietnam?

I shall not argue that the Protocols were an authentic map of what was in the future when they were written. Read them and judge for yourselves.[16]

Having thus summarized, I hope adequately, the problem of the Protocols as I understood it, I come to the two important amendments made by Révision.

First and most significant is the finding that there were two independent Russian translations of the Protocols, the one published by Nilus and another, differing in some particulars, published by a man named Boutmi in 1905.[17] It is the latter from which was made the French translation published by Révision: Protocols des sages de Sion (1989).

It is obviously of the utmost importance to collate the two versions, and I confess with embarrassment that I have not done so. A letter to the French periodical either miscarried or

16. There is only one passage which may arouse misgivings. It is the statement in Protocol 2, "Think carefully of the successes we arranged for Darwinism, Marxism, Nietzsche-ism. To us Jews, at any rate, it should be plain to see what a disintegrating importance these directives have had upon the minds of the goyim." This may seem like Christian propaganda, such as a "fundamentalist" holy man might have inserted in a forged document. The English is somewhat awkward—remember that you are reading a translation of a Russian translation from the French—and you should not take 'directives' literally. There is no implication that our enemies invented or inspired the doctrines of Darwin and Nietzsche, and it is quite true that those doctrines, intellectually sound as they are, did serve to increase the disruption of a society that had befuddled itself with Christian superstitions. The Jews, you must remember, are not in the least interested in the truth or falsity of ideas, only in their potentiality for use as weapons to destroy us. There is a highly significant declaration in Protocol 5: "Nowadays it is more important....to catch up and interpret the ideas of others than to eradicate them." You should ponder that statement, especially if you share my dismay at the present state of scientific knowledge and research.

17. Cf. the English edition I have recommended, p. 101, where it is stated that Boutmi merely republished the text used by Nilus.

was intercepted by the Jews' government of France. I shall continue to seek a copy of the translation from Boutmi's translation, and, if I succeed, I will collate it with Marsden's version and report on the result. In the meantime, I thought it much more important to call attention to the existence of two Russian translations of the same text.

Second, M. Guionnet discounts all reports about the existence of a text of the Protocols before 1897, including, of course, the accepted story about Mlle. Glinka I mentioned above (unless the dates given in that story are erroneous). He further proposes that the French original was the manuscript or a stenographic record of a discourse, delivered in sections on 30 August 1897 and the following day by Theodor Herzl, who simply explained to the other Zionists what they would have to do. He spoke in French because during the four years he spent in France he had come to do his political thinking in that language,[18] and perhaps also because he wished to be understood only by the minority of Zionists who were competent in French but would explain his discourse to the others. That is what happened, according to an author whose identity is prudently concealed under the pseudonym, l'Aigle Noir, and who claims to have been present at the Congress in 1897 and, one assumes, must therefore have been a Jew.[19]

This account does not really exclude the possibility, which may have occurred to you, that Herzl, instead of reading a discourse of his own composition, read one naturally composed in French by Isaac Moïse, alias Adolphe Crémieux, who held high office in several French governments, and who

18. "Le fait qu'il ait reçu sa véritable formation politique en France a dû l'influencer dans son choix [de langue]."

19. L'Aigle Noir is quoted from an unspecified source as having written that when Herzl "commença à donner ses directives," he spoke slowly and with attention to each word. "Dans l'auditoire nombre de congressistes ne comprenaient que des bribes des phrases qu'il prononçait. Mais il leur suffisait d'attendre pour avoir les explications nécessaires de leurs coreligionnaires qui parlait français, à l'occasion des nombreuses pauses qui eurent lieu durant ces deux jours pendant lesquels fut prononcé le discours aujourd'hui connu sous le nom de Protocole [sic] des sages de Sion."

founded in 1860 the Alliance Israélite Universelle with a programme of achieving eventual world dominion, or by his successor, Narcisse (!) Leven, who succeeded him in 1880. In that event, Herzl's discourse "était bien celui d'un autocrate" because he was speaking, not in his own name, but in the name of a Jewish monarch whose orders had been transmitted through "Crémieux."

In any event, you will have seen immediately the drastic implication of the claim that the Protocols are the text of Herzl's discourse in Basel. The Protocols obviously contemplate the conquest and ruin of the whole world, not the occupation of a shabby piece of unattractive territory in Asia Minor. That means that Zionism is itself just a gigantic hoax, like the "Holocaust," devised to cover and facilitate policies designed to liquidate our race and annihilate the civilization it created.

Forward, to the abyss!

PLAYBOYS AT WORK

If you are no longer young, you may have read as a child a book about the aborigines of the Western Hemisphere, who entered a new world at a time when the level of the oceans was lower and it was possible to walk across the gap that is now the Bering Straits. And you probably learned that those first immigrants had, like the famous Cro-Magnon people of Europe who were our ancestors, artistic instincts, as witness a sketch drawing of a mammoth on a whelk shell known as the Holy Oak Pendant.

If you are a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and receive their general periodical, Science, you saw that "pendant" reproduced on the cover of the issue for May 1976 to introduce the lead article, by two American anthropologists, who rejoiced that the 'Palaeoindians,' as they are now called, had artistic talents,[1] and who thought the precious artefact must be at least eleven thousand, and might be forty thousand, years old.

1. It was, strictly speaking, the only evidence of the Indians' capacity for the mimetic arts, which are efforts to portray realistically in painting or sculpture living beings or natural scenes. The Indians of North America produced more or less geometrical designs on wampum or blankets, and the far more advanced Mayas and Aztecs did produce

The precious "pendant," according to the records, was discovered in Delaware, at a place called Holy Oak, in 1864 by a young American, precociously interested in the vestiges of the aborigines, who did some excavating a few years before he went to Paris to study fine arts and archaeology. He returned to this country and was Dr. Hilborne Cresson when he became a member of the staff of the famous Peabody Museum at Harvard in 1887. In 1889 he gave his treasure, the engraved whelk shell, to the curator, Professor Frederic Ward Putnam, who accepted it for the Museum but did not become greatly excited by the discovery, although it was proof that (a) "palaeolithic" Indians had reached this hemisphere before the mammoths became extinct, and (b) that they resembled the palaeolithic Cro-Magnons in one uncommon characteristic.

Although the matter was in doubt in 1889, it is now known that, at least in the western part of North America, Indians coëxisted with mammoths for a fairly long time before the latter became extinct about 10,500 years ago. Some anthropologists, indeed, credit the "Clovis people" with having hunted the great animals to extinction. The shell, therefore, retains significance only for the drawing on it.

The discoverer of the artefact was born, at a date of which there is no record, as Hilborne Jones and must have had parents who could finance his years of study (and, no doubt, pleasure) in Paris. In 1875, however, he replaced his too common gentile name with the more distinctive and "aristocratic" name of the girl who was attached to the money he married, thus becoming Hilborne T. Cresson. He was the assistant director of field work for the Museum and presum-representations of human figures, all of which, with the exception of some examples that are the subject of debate about possible visitors from the Eastern Hemisphere, are so grotesquely distorted that they are symbols rather than art. The Mochica of Peru are admittedly exceptions: their pottery, now famous, perhaps because so much of it depicts sexual activity, does essay to portray human beings and animals, and their Nazca conquerors may have learned from them.

ably flourished, both scientifically and socially, until he was discharged for theft of some of the artefacts discovered in excavations. In 1894, evidently brooding over his disgrace, he blew out his brains, leaving a note that stated that he was being hounded by the Secret Service, which suspected him of counterfeiting.

The article in Science aroused the scepticism of William Sturtevant, Curator of North American Ethnology in the Smithsonian Institute. He and his younger associate, David Meltzer, undertook an investigation and noted that the drawing of the mammoth on the unique pendant was practically a copy of drawings made by the Cro-Magnons, and, on the basis of other evidence, suggested that the whelk shell probably dated from c. A.D. 1000. They expressed their doubts in 1985, to the indignation of the authors of the featured article. The shell was then dated by the technique that was used to prove that the "Holy Shroud of Turin" was a hoax, i.e., by spectrometry to fix a radiocarbon date, at a laboratory in Zürich. The whelk formed its shell around A.D. 885 or possibly, given the margin of error in the determination, as late as c. A.D. 1000. That, of course, settles the question; Jones-Cresson, like the manufacturer of the "Piltdown man,"[2] was a forger who sought eminence by perpetrating a hoax.

The determination of the date was published in American Antiquity, July 1988, and the affair was summarized by David Meltzer in the New Scientist, 14 July 1990. The authors of the feature article in Science were polemically irate in 1988 and presumably still are. That will tell you something about the present state of scientific research.

Jones-Cresson forged to make himself prominent. There is, so far as I know, no indication of a purpose to exalt the aborigines. That acquits him of a more serious offense, complicity in efforts to denigrate our race by lying about the achievements of savages, a kind of mental poison that I shall consider on another occasion.

2. Cf. Liberty Bell, September 1990, pp. 10-19.

In my article on the Piltdown hoax I expressed the opinion that Professor Smith Woodward was probably the dupe, not an accomplice, of the forger. I am glad to see that opinion confirmed in a letter to the editor of the New Scientist, published in the issue for 24 November 1990. The writer quotes from an article published in that magazine in 1981.

One of the persons on the margin of the Piltdown affair was a shrewd young man named Martin Hinton, who was not deceived by the hoax, but whose efforts to expose it were ignored because he lacked the academic credentials to qualify as an expert and partly, no doubt, because he did not behave with the courteous respect for others' opinions that was required by gentlemanly exercise of scientific investigation.

Hinton finally procured a leg bone of an extinct species of elephant and carefully carved it in the shape of one of the bats used in playing cricket, the British analogue of American baseball. (The bats used in cricket are more distinctively shaped than the ones used in baseball.) He then planted it where Professor Smith Woodward would be sure to find it.

Hinton, we may be sure, expected Woodward to explode in wrath as he recognized the obvious hoax, and also, on reflection, to become more cautious in joyously accepting such "finds" as the Piltdown skull as authentic.

What happened was that Professor Woodward "found the artefact, just as he was meant to, but instead of turning red with chagrin or apoplexy, he solemnly pronounced it to be 'a supremely important example of the work of palaeolithic man.'" What is more, the learned scientist not only accepted the hoax but "went to great length in describing its details, and even thought he had found the remains of a hole pierced through it in which a thong had been threaded to hang it from the imagined Piltdown man's waistband"!

"At which point," the writer of the letter remarks sardonically, "Hinton gave up the unequal struggle with the experts."[3]

3. I wish it were known whether or not Hinton's hoax and exposure of Woodward's gullibility to those who knew of it was reported to the one first-rate scientist who, given his belief in the integrity of Dawson and

That is more than an amusing story: it exemplifies a phenomenon that is all too common. There are many men in whom an accumulation of knowledge in their own field of study blights their common sense and renders them far more gullible than observers who have only a superficial acquaintance with their subject. Of this we have had many recent proofs; probably honest men of scientific training have been bamboozled by the tricks of such charlatans as the clever Jew boy, Uri Geller,[4] and it was necessary for a real magician, notably the indefatigably incredulous James Randi, to expose the swindle. The moral to be drawn is that we should never lightly trust a specialist.

We must, however, sympathize with poor Martin Hinton, whose best efforts to restore common sense were unrewarded.

According to the myths in the "Old Testament"—and we need not here inquire what substratum of historical fact underlies those tales—the twelve tribes of God's Chosen, after they got possession of Palestine, split into two kingdoms, Israel[5] and Judah, the former containing ten tribes and the latter, two, much holier than the others.

The ten tribes of Israelites were deported by Sargon II of Assyria in 721 B.C. and became "lost."[6] courteous respect for the work of Woodward, was deceived by the Piltdown forgery, Sir Arthur Keith. (Cf. Liberty Bell, September 1990, pp. 17-18.) I like to believe that if Sir Arthur had learned how gullible Woodward was, he would not have had to confess in his old age that the hoaxers had "made a fool" of him.

4. Cf. Liberty Bell, June 1987, pp. 4-5.

5. There was a kingdom called Israel: it is mentioned on the famous Moabite stone as having been defeated by the King of Moab.

6. This is nonsense, of course, an early manifestation of the mentality that creates Holohoaxes. Sargon deported only the ruling class, a small fraction of the population; his purpose was to halt the endless trouble created by the pests as they professed loyalty to him and intrigued with the Egyptians

In Jewish story the ten tribes are usually lost, but pop up again when needed. In the Christians' favorite horror story, the Apocalypse attributed to a John, each of the twelve tribes contributes its share to the swarm of 144,000 male homosexual Jews for whom old Jesus, after he has smashed up and junked the whole universe, will create a new, all-male Paradise, in which they can have fun endlessly without those nasty animals, women.

Ignorant Christians believed the tale about the oddly "lost" ten tribes, and discovered them in all sorts of distant regions. In 1644 a Jew who called himself Antonio de Montesinos (his real name was Aaron Levi) turned up in Holland with the exciting story that he had found the Lost Tribes: they were the Indians of the Western Hemisphere; in proof whereof he claimed to have found in Ecuador a tribe that spoke Hebrew. The story was probably just a typical hoax,[7] but it was believed, at least for its value as propaganda, by Manasseh ben Israel, a Jewish scholar who participated in the negotiations with Cromwell for the readmission to England of undisguised Jews, who then joined forces with the horde of Marranos who had infested England ever since the expulsion of the "unconverted" Jews by the great English king, Edward I.[8]

Manasseh ben Israel, calculating the probable effect on gullible Englishmen, published Levi's discovery in 1650, first to invade Assyrian territory. If you yearn to meditate on the "lost tribes," you may do so at great length with Professor Allen H. Godbey's The Lost Tribes, a Myth (Durham, North Carolina; Duke University Press, 1930).

7. There is a bare possibility that Levi was deceived by the fact that tones of the voice and gestures often convey meaning when words are not understood. That is one explanation of the well-known report that the Mandan Indians understood some words of Welsh. Since the tribe is now extinct, verification of the story is impossible and we cannot determine the accuracy of the lists of Welsh words that are said to have been in use by the tribe. If you are interested in the possibility that Welsh colonists reached North America long before Columbus, see Richard Deacon, Madoc and the Discovery of America (New York, Braziller, s.a. [1966]).

8. Cf. Liberty Bell, May 1985, pp. 7-10. 13; November 1985, pp. 24-28.

as Esperança de Israel in Spanish for the benefit of his fellow Sephardim,[9] and then in Latin for general distribution in England. He thus set off a landslide of fantasies, including Joseph Smith's Book of Mormon.

Now if ten tribes of God's Own really hied themselves to the Western Hemisphere as soon after 721 B.C. as they could get away from the wicked "oppressor," Sargon, they must have left memorials of their identity, and it was only a work of piety to provide the necessary artefacts.

In 1860 one David Wyrick, who had a revelation that the numerous Indian mounds in the Ohio Valley must be the work of the Ten Tribes, duly "discovered" a number of small stones, inscribed with Hebrew characters.[10] A few more stones, all bearing short inscriptions in Hebrew letters, were promptly discovered by others, two by a man named John H. Nicol.

Since the wondrous little inscriptions were found near Newark, Ohio, they are known as the "Newark Holy Stones" and viewed with awe by the credulous. Notably among our contemporaries, Professor Robert Alrutz of Denison University uses the Holy Stones to prove that the Holy Race discovered the Western Hemisphere, although he prudently refrains from hauling in all the savages who peopled the two continents before the coming of our race.

I learn from the Skeptical Inquirer, Winter 1991, p. 118, that Professor J. Huston McCulloch of Ohio State University has recently read two of the Holy Stones, which evidently

9. Although they spoke Ladino among themselves, they understood Spanish, for Ladino was, for all practical purposes, just a dialect of Spanish, as Yiddish is of German. I have not seen either the Spanish or the Latin text of the little book.

10. I have not seen the stones. If, as is likely, the letters are the square letters used in printing Hebrew today, that is sufficient to reveal the fraud. Although derived from the Aramaic alphabet when that language replaced the Canaanite dialect of Old Phoenician ('Hebrew') as the common language of Jews in Palestine, the square characters came into use in the Eleventh Century and were not really standardized before the introduction of printing in the Sixteenth Century. The Israelites (Ten Tribes) would have used the alphabet you have seen in pictures of the Moabite Stone.

contain the inscribed Hebrew letters Y H NCL. Now the Hebrew letter which is now represented by Y was earlier represented by J in transliterations, and, as you know, in most Semitic languages only consonants are written, thus making possible endless hanky-panky in altering Biblical texts without even changing the spelling, e.g., in the well-known fraud by which the name of the mythical conqueror of Palestine, 'Jesus,'[11] became 'Joshua' in most English Bibles.

The Holy Stones have doubtless given rise to many learned translations by holy men who were impressed by them, but Professor McCulloch simply supplied the right vowels. The two stones read J. H. N(i)C(o)L.

Poor Mr. Nicol! I do not know how old he was in 1860. He seems never to have had the satisfaction of hearing some learned divine expound the abstruse meaning of that stone in Hebrew and then torpedoing the fakir by reading his own signature. But perhaps he heard such a disquisition with a knowing smile and enjoyed a tacit laugh in his own bosom. I hope so.

CORRECTION

In what I write for publication I strive to be strictly accurate in all statements of fact. I shall, therefore, devote a little space to correcting an error that some readers will think trivial.

In Liberty Bell, March 1987, pp. 19-20, writing from memory, I remarked on some internal contradictions in the works of renowned authors, and adduced as a particularly impressive instance Edgar Allan Poe's Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym, in which Pym is made to say, early in the story, that he received certain information from his friend, Augustus, only long after the conclusion of the adventures that he will describe, and then proceeds to a chapter in which he recounts the harrowing death of Augustus at the very beginning of that adventure.

11. 'Jesus,' needless to say, is the English form derived through Mediaeval Latin and correct Latin from the Greek approximation of the sound of the Hebrew YŠW^{c}. (For clarity, I use ^{c} instead of ' in transliteration; neither character suggests the guttural sound that Aryans cannot utter, except, perhaps, after long and unpleasant practice.) The Greek alphabet no longer had a letter that corresponded to the Semitic Š, a sound which did not occur in Greek; hence s instead of sh in 'Jesus.'

I am satisfied that my explanation of the amazing discrepancy was substantially correct. The early chapters of the Narrative were published serially in the Southern Literary Messenger while Poe was its editor, and I believe that although Poe had undoubtedly outlined and even elaborated the whole plot of the story in his own mind, the chapters which he published in the journal were all that he had written before he severed his connection with it.[1] When he decided to complete the long story, he reconsidered its plot. When he wrote the chapters in the Southern Literary Messenger, he had intended Augustus, Pym's schoolmate and closest friend, to accompany Pym in a voyage to the South Pole, but when he took up the story to complete it, he decided, for any one of the several reasons that may be conjectured, to make Pym's only companion a crude and ignorant sailor, Peters, a half-breed, ugly and deformed, but prodigiously strong and with some of an Indian's peculiar instincts. He accordingly killed off Augustus early in the continuation of the narrative.

After having given the explanation that I consider almost certainly correct, I tried to account for so remarkable an oversight in the work of a writer of unsurpassed critical acumen, and I proceeded to suggest how the inconsistency might have occurred, speculating about the channels through which Poe's manuscript could have reached England, where the Narrative was published as a book that enjoyed considerable success and was reprinted more than once.

1. This inference is corroborated by the fact that his Journal of Julius Rodman was left incomplete at the episode it had reached before Poe severed his connection with The Gentleman's Magazine. Unlike the tale of Pym's marvellous adventures in the then unknown Antarctic, the Journal is a story that did not give Poe scope for his greatest talents and it must have been undertaken only as part of his editorial responsibility, which, that day, included writing part of each issue of a periodical as well as selecting contributors and judging their contributions. He accordingly did not consider it worth completing after he left the magazine, although I suspect that the plot he had sketched in his own mind was to terminate in some highly dramatic episode for which his preliminary depiction of Rodman's character (like Pym's, suggested by his own) was a preparation.

In thus speculating, I relied on my recollection of the monumental Virginia edition of Poe's works by Professor James A. Harrison, who provided a critical apparatus in which he recorded every variation, even of punctuation, in the several versions of each work published during Poe's lifetime or, in important editions, after his death. Professor Harrison printed the text of the British book and could collate with it only the chapters that had been published in the Southern Literary Messenger. He believed that Poe's book had been published only in England.

In making the assumption on which I based my speculations, I also relied on other recollections of my youth. Before I entered college, I had read all seventeen volumes of Professor Harrison's edition and had examined the critical apparatus for Poe's poems and great short stories to learn how Poe revised his work before he published a later edition of it, and I had been particularly impressed by his meticulous attention to every detail of diction and characterization. I was therefore especially interested in Poe when I was in college, and read and heard the investigations of an American scholar who was reading through the principal British periodicals to ascertain how Poe's work first became known in England, including the unknown circumstances of the publication of the Narrative in that country.

When I speculated in the pages of Liberty Bell, I would have been more cautious, had it been a matter of a short story, for I knew that some of Poe's work had first appeared in American periodicals of which Professor Harrison had been unable to find a surviving copy, but it did not occur to me that a book published in the United States could have escaped the researches of Harrison and others. I was sadly in error.

Poe's Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym was first published in the United States by Harper & Brothers in 1838. The book was evidently unsuccessful and copies of it are now quite rare. One copy, however, was obtained by one of the two gentlemen who lent their collections of Poe's writings for exhibition in the library of Yale University, recorded in the catalogue of that exhibition,[2] which I did have at hand when I wrote but did not think of consulting.

This, of course, cancels my hypothesis. The British volume was simply copied from the book published by the Harpers.[3] Since so respectable a firm would not have resorted to piracy and could not have done so without detection and exposure by Poe, it follows that Poe almost certainly read and approved the proof-sheets of his book before publication.

One could, of course, conjecture that the Harpers, respectable as they were, did not send to the author proofs of a book that was to be published anonymously, or that the proof-sheets somehow miscarried, or that the printers ignored corrections made by Poe, but all of these desperate hypotheses are extremely unlikely.

We must conclude, therefore, that Poe, despite his undoubtedly great critical acumen and attention to detail, overlooked in his own work a glaring inconsistency and internal contradiction[4] that he would infallibly have detected and

2. The Yale University Library Gazette, XXXIII (1959), pp. 138-190; simultaneously published as a booklet.

3. This, however, raises another problem. The compilers of the Yale catalogue state that the American edition has a conclusion that was omitted in the British reprint. But the concluding paragraphs of the story are quoted by Professor Arthur Hobson Quinn (op. cit. infra), presumably from the American edition, and they agree verbatim with the corresponding part of the British edition as reprinted by Professor Harrison. If I could spare the time, I would obtain photostats of the last pages of Harpers' edition, and, if I found that the compilers of the catalogue were mistaken, speculate about the likely causes of such a blunder.

4. In Chapter V of the Narrative, Pym, referring to the events of the night of 29-30 June, says: "Many years elapsed, however, before I was aware of this fact. A natural shame and regret for his weakness and indecision ridiculed in a novel that he was reviewing. That is astonishing, but it will tell you something about the operations of even the best human minds.

This, however, brings us to something that is even more astonishing. Since I like to believe that what I write in Liberty Bell is of some service to my few contemporaries who want to understand the present plight of our race and culture, I cannot suspend that activity for two or three or four months to read all of the books and articles about Poe published in recent decades. I have, however, consulted the two biographies that are works of diligent research and have established for the first time many crucial facts about Poe's career: Hervey Allen's Israfel (New York, Farrar & Rinehart, 1934) and Arthur Hobson Quinn's Edgar Allan Poe, a Critical Biography (New York, Appleton-Century, 1941). I have also looked at the most recent biography, William Bittner's Poe (London, Elek, 1963 [=1962]). Without reading each of the large volumes from cover to cover, I have looked up and examined every reference to the Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym listed in the indices. Each writer has much to say about Poe's methods of composition, but, so far as I can tell from the works I have cited, no one of them seems to have noticed the flaw in the narrative that I have not improperly called astonishing. So far as I know, I am the first to comment on it. That, of course, is most unlikely—is incredible,—but, as I have said, I cannot now take the time to read everything that has been published about Poe since I was in college, long ago. □ prevented Augustus from confiding to me at once what a more intimate and unreserved communion afterward induced him to reveal." In Chapter XIII, two months later, on the first of August, the already putrescent remains of Augustus are thrown overboard and devoured by sharks, thus effectively precluding confidences to be given many years later.

CONCERNED VOICES ON THE "GULF CRISIS"

STOP THE MIDDLE-EAST WAR!

by

Colin Jordan

Since August last a deadly dementia, a Middle-East madness, has taken hold of Britain at large, as of the U.S.A., drawing these countries into a mental maelstrom the most likely outcome of which is hideously unnecessary carnage and enormous economic disaster.

Nothing short of derangement indeed can account for the fact that a Britain normally given to denouncing as despicable any manifestation of warlike ardour; seemingly incapable of resisting the invasion of her shores by virtually every non-European breed under the sun, and the dictation of her affairs either by Hebrews within the country or the same tribesmen plus other aliens outside; so short of cash that her National Health Service has had to give up 4,500 hospital beds to economize, which can cause the waiting list to reach one million; and seemingly incapable of mustering the strength to exterminate the murderous I.R.A., is at the same time a Britain which has deposited some 25,000 of her young men, plus all their martial equipment, at a cost exceeding £300 million and expected to reach £600 million by March (Armed Forces Minister, reported in the Daily Telegraph, October 16, 1990) way out in the sands of the Middle-East ready for battle.

Alongside them in the desert languish several hundred thousand Americans condemned to the same crazy enterprise, and with them in dusty array an assortment of Saudis, Syrians and others. Behind them and bestowing its blessing is that misbegotten offspring of World War II, the United Nations Organization, whose Security Council at the end of November issued an ultimatum by way of its Resolution 678 which authorized the use of force by the U.S.A., Britain and their allies, if their aims are not achieved by other means by mid-January. What, then, is this fast approaching date with death in the desert really all about? Such is the gravity of the situation, and the importance of this question, that we feel no apology is due for departing from our original schedule of contents for this issue in order to deal principally with it.

To begin with and thereafter to demolish the official answer in all its simple superficiality, it all began on August 2 last when Iraq, under Saddam Hussein, invaded and occupied Kuwait, thereby perpetrating a monstrous aggression menacing the stability of the region, and affront the moral code of mankind; and will all end when this monster either withdraws, or is driven out by force most righteous, in fulfillment of United Nations decisions; and the Emir of Kuwait, its former ruler, is restored. Bush and his British satellites insist that it is just as plain as that; nothing else involved. The truth, the whole truth, is as you might expect something much further reaching than this.

Flaws in the Anglo-American fabric of self-justification are readily discernable and numerous. To start with, what of the credentials of the sanctifying body, the United Nations? It is 23 years since its Security Council called on Israel to withdraw from the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Israel has never complied, but nothing has ever been done about it. Israel invaded Lebanon. Israel annexed the Golan Heights. There was no ultimatum then, and no Anglo-American force to secure compliance. The ultimatum now against Iraq is thus peculiar, partisan, and as such unwarranted.

What of the chastity of the U.S.A. as an avenging angel of the national sovereignty of others? This line of investigation could take us through quite some space, so suffice it to refer to Panama in 1989 which America invaded in order to overthrow its ruler and assert its dominance. Then the argument was different because the invader was.

What of the virtues of those for whom and with whom Britain proposes to fight? Kuwait under its Emir, Sheik Al-Sabah, was a feudal plutocracy with no political parties allowed. His wealth is reputed to include $100 billion invested overseas; his wives number 50 and his children are so numerous he does not know their names. All his 200 male relatives are called "princes" and are multi-millionaires, mainly playboys with villas in Monte Carlo where they work hard at night, gambling at the casinos. One of them was recently reported to have lost $12 million in just one night playing blackjack, while the ordinary Arabs of Kuwait struggle to survive in squalor. Is this regime worth the death of thousands of Britain's and America's young men to restore?

ISRAEL'S GRIM REAPER

Says a statement before us from the Iraqi Ministry of Information in a leaflet it has issued: "The government of Iraq is prepared to allow the inhabitants of Kuwait to decide for themselves via a plebiscite whatever state they wish. We will allow international supervision and pay indemnity to families which suffered war damages." This sounds to us more in keeping with the professed and pretended principles of democracy than the despotism of the Emir.

Of Saudi Arabia, the West's ally, the Sunday Telegraph, August 12, 1990 said "... the West's armoured columns are now lined up to defend the most anachronistic and incompetent of all the Arab regimes, the house of Saud."

Alongside Saudi Arabia, arm in arm with the Anglo-Americans, are troops of President Hafez Assad of Syria, President Bush's past denunciations of his misdeeds cheerfully put aside in favour of the current enterprise. With Syria, political opponents are hanged from lamp-posts, public demonstrations suppressed by tanks, and teams of highly trained terrorists sent to roam the world assassinating those exiles who dare to criticize. Do these sort of allies look to you like fitting representatives of a noble crusade for decency and democracy against a satanic Saddam? Their presence proves Anglo-American hypocrisy.

President Bush on a visit to the troops in the Middle-East told them that Iraq's potential for developing nuclear weapons was one reason for the confrontation (Daily Telegraph, November 23, 1990). This is yet another misleading partisan argument. Washington has supported nuclear deterrence between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R., but will not countenance the Arab world having a similar counter to Israel which is reputed to have an arsenal of 50-200 nuclear weapons, and which, in 1981, committed clear aggression against Iraq without any Anglo-American interference, bombing a nuclear power station near Baghdad which it claimed was intended to produce weapon-grade plutonium, an allegation which Iraq denied, saying the purpose of the plant was entirely peaceful.

Play is made of an alleged threat to American oil import, as though Iraq wants to deny oil to the U.S.A., instead of merely charging more for it. However, when O.P.E.C. imposed big price rises on the West in 1973 and 1979 there was no rush to arms, so evidently higher prices are acceptable when they enrich feudal sheiks who expend the money in Western hotels and casinos and on call-girls, but intolerable when Saddam Hussein, who has shown no interest in Western fleshpots, wants to keep the price up in order to develop his country.

From this much alone it is amply evident that the "just war" projected by the West is a phoney one, the real reason for which we have to look for elsewhere than in the self-laudatory effusions of its protagonists. What does the other side, Iraq, have to say about it?

Iraq presents an historical claim to the territory of Kuwait. It argues that during the 400 year rule of the Turkish Ottoman Empire up to the First World War territories which later became the states of Iraq and Kuwait were joined, the latter being subordinated to Basra Province and its Turkish Governor. In 1899 Britain concluded a secret agreement with Sheik Al-Sabah of Kuwait which asserted British influence in that territory (where back in 1775 the British East India Company had received Turkish permission to establish a trading post); Britain to control Kuwait's foreign policy, and Kuwait not to relinquish any of its territory without British approval; this in return for protection, trade and an annual payment. However, says Iraq, in 1900 Britain was brought to acknowledge Ottoman sovereignty over Kuwait, and in 1913 Britain and Turkey signed an agreement granting self-administrating rights to Kuwait, but under the Ottoman flag, which was not ratified when the First World War broke out a year later and involved both countries as enemies with Turkey being defeated and losing its Arab lands to Britain.

Iraq was then created by Britain from the former Ottoman provinces of Baghdad, Mosul and Basra, and its boundary with a separate state of Kuwait laid down by Britain, but continually disputed by Iraq. Delay in agreement as to the boundary persisted till and through the 1930s, the Iraq Defence Ministry being opposed on strategic grounds to the inclusion of the islands of Warba and Bubion in the territory of Kuwait. (Saddam Hussein has built a new oil terminal port at the head of the Gulf, but has not hitherto controlled the sea approaches because of Kuwait's possession of Bubion.)

In 1932, the year in which Britain at the insistence of the League of Nations gave Iraq independence, a letter of the then Iraqi Prime Minister conceded the British view of the Kuwait boundary, but Iraq today contends this letter was no valid commitment since constitutional procedure was not fulfilled through ratification by the then legislative authority; and the same applies to a joint Iraq-Kuwait statement in 1963 centred on the 1932 letter. In 1939 Iraq formally approached Britain for re-adjustment of the border and annexation of the two islands to provide a deep-water anchorage, but Britain refused. Various discussions thereafter between Iraq and Kuwait led to no agreement, and there were brief Iraqi incursions into Kuwait in 1961 and 1973. In 1990 Iraq revived its claims and Kuwait first of all stalled on talks, later agreed to hold them, and then in July refused Iraq's claims.

Britain contends that Kuwait, ruled from 1756 by the Al-Sabah dynasty which she appointed, was, while nominally subject to Basra Province, in practice virtually autonomous under the Ottoman central authorities; that the 1899 agreement with Britain rendered it virtually independent, and that this was formalized in 1914 when Kuwait became a British protectorate, later being granted independence in 1961. What can be here added by us is that in 1938 oil was discovered in the desert there where hitherto few had lived, and British Petroleum and the Gulf Oil Company acquired exclusive rights and became de facto rulers for the West behind the Emir and his extensive brood of gluttonous parasites. So much for Gulf freedom and democracy per the West! Whatever the otherwise balance of historical argument between the two sides, the fact is that Iraq took to deciding the matter of Kuwait by force, this being the means by which Britain had acquired this and other territory from Turkey who in turn had earlier acquired it by the same time-honoured means, so in this respect there is nothing to choose between them, and contention to the contrary is a matter of hypocrisy.

Not territory alone but oil is part of the Iraqi case also. During the Iran-Iraq war the latter suffered the virtual destruction of Basra and the oilfields around the city. The combination of Iranian attacks and Syria's closure of a pipe-line to Banias caused Iraq's oil revenue to fall from $29 billion in 1980 to $7 billion in 1983. Foreign debts soared to between $60 and $80 billion; the greatest debts being to Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. Yet Iraq's economic situation, while grave, was not desperate providing there was no big slump in the price of oil on which revenue it so heavily depends to repair and expand the economy after the war with Iran.

But within O.P.E.C., the association of Middle-East oil-producing states, there were interests and demands contrary to those of Iraq who—producing well within its production capacity—wanted a price increase, whereas Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates—with a higher production capacity than their export quota—wished to maintain the existing oil prices or even reduce them. Early in 1990 Iraq lobbied the Gulf states to lower production and increase the price, but this they refused to do. Kuwait, says Iraq, sought to flood the market with excessive oil production contrary to O.P.E.C. quotas, thus to cause a sharp fall in prices to the disastrous detriment of Iraq while to the delight of American consumers; and to this end announced that an increase in production quotas would be sought at the next O.P.E.C. meeting in October 1990.

There has also been the matter of the Rumaila Oil Field, one of the largest in the world, part of which extends from Iraq two miles under Kuwait, and which Iraq claims in its entirety, but from which Kuwait, sitting on only 10% of the oil deposit, has nevertheless been draining 50% of the oil by way of B.P., thus stealing, says Iraq, several billion dollars of oil. In this connection, the New York Times September 23, 1990 reported that the U.S. Ambassador to Iraq, April Glaspie, led Saddam Hussein to believe he could, without American resistance, move his forces 20 miles across the border and seize the rest of the Rumaila Oil Field. (See The Truth At Last No. 345)

Having perceived by now some considerable part of the story behind the Iraqi seizure of Kuwait last August, sufficient at least to discredit the Anglo-American polarized presentation of unsullied and unselfish virtue on their side and overwhelming wrong on the other, we now have to uncover the great, albeit veiled, instigator of the crisis. That is Israel.

Israel became a state by the theft of Arab land with the connivance of those powers now in the forefront in menacing Iraq, namely Britain and the U.S.A. where today to a decisive extent Jewry rules the roost. Consider the U.S.A.! President Bush says: "The whole world knows that the U.S. has a very special relationship with Israel" (Jewish Chronicle, November 16, 1990). His Secretary of State, James Baker, says: "This administration remains committed to Israel's security, you can count on that!" Israel receives more U.S. aid than any other country in the world: more than $3 billion each year, and $45.8 billion in direct aid since 1948. Bush is preparing to transfer $1 billion worth of advanced weapons to Israel to buttress it against Iraq, this on top of $1.8 billion of military aid planned for this year before the seizure of Kuwait. This is because Jews, adherents of Israel, so dominate the U.S.A. today as to call the tune, frightening opposition into silence, commanding the avenues to office, bullying and bribing politicians into servile submission to their interests and service of their overseas offshoot.

While quite content at an earlier stage to use Iraq against Iran in the well-proved policy of divide and conquer, Israel has since scheduled Iraq as its No. 1 target precisely because Saddam Hussein has shown the capacity to unite Arab peoples against the common enemy, which is expansionist Israel,in their midst, appealing directly to the Arab masses against their mercenary, dynastic exploiters, and aspiring to make Iraq the centre of a pan-Arab union. With the Palestinian Arabs betrayed, dispossessed, dishonoured and degraded, no wonder the overwhelming majority of them, along with ordinary Arabs in general elsewhere, look upon Saddam Hussein as a hero and possible saviour.

Thus it is that the former head of Israeli military intelligence, Major General Shlomo Gazit, has declared "Saddam Hussein has to be destroyed ... Someone has to find him in his bunker and kill him," and "Israel is urging the United States to take decisive military action against Iraq, even at the cost of risking the lives of Western hostages" (Daily Telegraph, August 23, 1990). Echoing the sentiments of their spiritual homeland, we have American Hebrews in plenty slavering their bloodthirsty desires, such as Henry Kissinger calling for "a surgical and progressive destruction of Iraq" and Washington Post columnist Richard Cohen (September 11, 1990) declaring "I want Baghdad bombed instantly." Naturally these extraterritorial Israelites in stars and stripes, while manifesting their tribal talent as fight promoters, do not propose to be around in the front line when their war starts.

Israel is no peace-loving, benign and beneficent haven of "Holocaust" sufferers as gullible, Gentile Jew-lovers have been programmed to believe. Instead, it is a vicious product of terrorists, headed today by former Stern Gang stalwart, Yitzhak Shamir, boss of its global terrorist organization, the Mossad secret service, which, as just one item from its copious catalogue of skulduggery, in 1954, with the approval of the then Prime Minister, Pinhas Lavon, sought to bomb a U.S. Consulate library in Egypt and place the blame on Egyptians in order to turn American public opinion against Egypt, then standing up to Israel as does Iraq today. Shamir, as did his preceding fellow gangster, Menachem Begin, stands for an expansionist "Greater Israel." His government is committed to "a State of Israel between the Mediterranean and River Jordan" (Jewish Chronicle November 23 1990) for the benefit of future millions of new, Jewish immigrants. The Soviet Union, which one research writer has recently estimated to have 3.5 million Jews despite the "Holocaust," is viewed as a main source of supply. Jets have recently been arriving in Israel bringing 300-500 Jews a night from all over the Soviet Union, and the Knesset (parliament) immigration committee has calculated that 200,000 Russian Jews will arrive before next April. So far 140,000 have arrived (Daily Telegraph November 21, 1990).

Behind the scenes Israel is the ultimate cause and catalyst of the Middle-East crisis, acting through its British and American lackeys, and with the aim of supremacy in the Middle-East as a base for Jewish supremacy throughout the world. Naturally it seeks to keep its hand hidden as far as possible. Hence President Bush insists on concentration on the simple fact of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, regardless of all prior and attendant circumstances, whereas the Iraqi case is that this must be seen, discussed and settled within the context of an examination and settlement of the problems of the Middle-East in general, including the anti-Arab aggressions and repressions of Israel. Hence, also, the evident agreement between Israel and the U.S.A. that at least at this stage Israel must keep a low profile so as not to give the game away, and so the renegade Arab elements in the Middle-East who have been wooed to join the anti-Iraq front will not be alienated. With the U.S.A. slipping into recession and the national debt growing at $380,000 a minute and his popularity plummeting at the opinion polls, Bush has happily grabbed at the opportunity to serve his Jewish masters through the classic distraction of a martial exercise abroad.

We now come to a matter which has ranked high and raucous in the tirade of Western denunciation of Saddam Hussein: that of the Western "hostages." Iraq was a signatory to the four 1949 Geneva Conventions. Under them foreign civilians may be interned, but the taking of hostages is prohibited under Article 34 of the fourth of these, and "under no circumstances should internees be transferred from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying power," says Article 49; and they "may not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations," says Article 38. On the face of it, this puts Iraq in the wrong. However, it may be questioned whether these stipulations apply to citizens of countries other than Kuwait, which countries have not as yet become involved in war with Iraq, and whose citizens will only be placed in jeopardy as hostages in fact if their countries make war on Iraq and so place them in that category. Whatever the fine interpretation of international law on this point, Iraq has at the moment of writing decided to release those detained.

Sanctions against Iraq while initially proclaimed with ardent confidence, and while certainly by now causing shortages of food and medicine and other things have now been seen by the servants of the Zionist design to be incapable of bringing proud and resolute Iraq to its knees soon enough, meaning before—with the 30-day Moslem ritual of Ramadan coming up in March to handicap operations, and followed by the start of the desert summer to handicap even more—sand and sun shrivel the enthusiasm and capacity of the Western servicemen, and the waiting corrodes the will to war of the Western civilians at home. Thus, notwithstanding the hardships of sanctions, time is on the side of Saddam Hussein, if hostilities can be delayed. Hence the anxious procurement of the mid-January U.N. deadline, accompanied by the initiative of Bush for talks with Iraq, calculated to give the advantageous semblance of peace-loving negotiations to avoid war as a justification in the event of war, while in substance only intended to serve as an instrument for demanding unconditional surrender under threat of immediate war.

Thus on present showing the stage seems set for an onslaught on Iraq in the second half of January as Zionism's New Year gift to mankind. Since it is now conceded by the U.S. Deputy Chief of Staff for Intelligence that, contrary to initial disparagement, the Iraqi army is "one of the best equipped and most combat-experienced in the world ... distinguished by its flexibility, unity of command and high level of mobility" (Sunday Telegraph, November 11, 1990), Colonel David Hackworth, America's most highly decorated soldier of the Vietnam War, may well be right in forecasting at least 50,000 casualties among the attackers during the first two weeks. Warmonger Bush now claims that a tremendous air strike initially will quickly settle the matter and avoid such casualties, but one thing which is certain is that he will find it far easier to start than to stop a conflict which will sooner or later mobilize the bulk of the Arab world against the West.

As if this prospect is not awesome enough, we have to contemplate as the price of confrontation amid more than half the world's oil resources, the destruction of huge stocks of oil which the West needs, and with the raging refinery and oil well fires providing an environmental catastrophe, and the reduced supplies causing prices to rocket, trade and living standards to decline, and the world to be plunged into the deepest recession since the 1930s.

Thus it is imperative that we do all we can to stop this threatened Middle-East War starting, or, if and when started, continuing. Saying that does not imply that we vainly imagine our ability to influence events is more than minute, but it does imply that we do see even a minute opposition from us to be worthwhile as well as being an absolute necessity of integrity better by far than doing nothing, and better by further still than the deplorable attitude of the remnant of the National Front in this country whose latest issue of its Vanguard magazine (No. 32) says that, if hostilities break out, "and Britain is at war, and our servicemen fighting and dying ... then ... we as patriots must stand by our armed forces once committed to conflict." This purblind, petty nationalism is exactly the same ideological inadequacy which caused Mosley at the outbreak of the Second World War after so rightly telling his followers for years how abominable the old parties and their system were, and how wrong it was to go to war with National Socialist Germany, whose great achievements he upheld, then to turn round and tell them that, because war had broken out, they should do nothing against the country and its war effort, meaning a country under the sway of the Jews waging war on behalf of the Jews and thus a "country," a "Britain," a distortion of nature, which no true National Socialist could identify with and uphold. It was this concept of misidentified "country" before and above the conclusions of the creed and the community of the race which caused many Mosleyites to accept, even volunteer for, service in the British Forces of avenging Jewry, and so to go and fight and kill on behalf of the real enemy those who in reality were their comrades of cause and race.

It is appalling that British soldiers should be in the Middle-East today for the purpose in mind, and horrifying that they may be killed and mutilated for that purpose. It is also horrifying that they may kill and mutilate for the benefit of Israel soldiers of Iraq who are anti-Israel. The inescapable and overshadowing fact is that the British Forces in the Middle-East are there in an utterly wrongful cause. However much we feel sympathy for them in their situation, this cannot lead us for one second to give support to them in it for which they have their own responsibility of participation to bear. We help them best by fighting to prevent or to stop the Middle-East War, not by aiding and abetting a wrongful war as the National Front advocates.

In the 1930s we were plunged into a war for Jewry which proved a genuine holocaust for the Aryans. Again today we are being manoeuvred into a war for the benefit of the same people in the shape of Israel. The tabloid press of the Jews Murdoch and Maxwell, with a flourish of kosher patriotism, is urging on the conflict as did their predecessors half a century back. The Sun has run a frontpage in red, white and blue with screaming headlines on the background of a Union Jack "Our boys go in; paras to take on madman; ships, planes on their way." Not to be outdone, The Star has published a colour photograph of a mushroom cloud and promised Iraqis "We'll nuke you!" Saddam Hussein is labeled another Hitler in the best traditions of the Hollywood caricature of the latter, and has been told he may be put on trial, as were German leaders at Nuremberg, if war comes and the West wins. The musical merry-go-round on the circuit of death and destruction is in full swing as these lines are written. Can sanity yet prevail?

The real war mongers, who want to expend the lives of American G.I.'s to destroy Iraq and seize the oil wealth of the Near East, are Israel and a clique of Zionist-controlled politicians in the U.S. government (like oil-rich George Bush) and the prostituted mass media. These ruthless cynics have utterly no respect for human life and wish to erect a global super-state under U.S. hegemony. Real patriots cannot sympathize with such goals. (Part of a message from Saddam Hussein and his government in a leaflet issued by Iraq's Ministry of Information, particularly addressed to the American people.)

Dr. Charles E. Weber

21 January 1990

As an American I am deeply concerned about the moral culpability of my country in its unprovoked military measures against Iraq, a country of modest size which was no military threat to the United States. To many people throughout the world, but especially in the Islamic countries, Americans now seem like brutal, irrational bullies who are intent on seizing the property of other countries by force. ("Blood for oil.") Such a crime is commonly called robbery. Bush's vulgar, sadistically uncompromising, hypocritical posturing about having our armed forces in Arabia for the purpose of undoing "aggression" is so disgustingly absurd that even a ten year old child could see through it when the facts are fairly presented. The United Nations had long ago condemned Israel for its annexations of territories of its neighbors, but the United States did not act upon the resolutions of the United Nations, although it could easily have done so simply by cutting off the huge contributions of arms and money which it has been giving to the parasitic Jewish state in Palestine since 1948. There have also been the aggressions in Tibet and Afghanistan, against which our supposedly idealistic government did little or nothing. Such obvious hypocrisy and inconsistency must be an embarrassment to any thinking American with a conscience and moral sensibility.

The origins of the annexation of Kuwait by Iraq go back centuries, but more recently they are rooted in the rôles played by England and France after the defeat of Turkey during the First World War, after which very extensive parts of the former Ottoman Empire came into British and French hands as mandated or occupied territories. These included Palestine, Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, (Trans-)Jordan, Egypt and Kuwait. The boundaries of these predominantly Islamic states were more or less arbitrarily drawn by the British and French, who largely disregarded historical, ethnic and economic realities. With the later development of the exploitation of petroleum reserves in the region, the economic aspects were even further distorted, since the oil reserves were not evenly distributed in the earth. Even more recently Kuwait exploited oil deposits belonging to Iraq by larcenous drilling procedures. The ruling family of Kuwait squandered the huge income from its oil production by vulgar spending, which must have been especially irritating to poor Arabs in the region. Iraq claims that its government would have permitted a supervised plebiscite by the Kuwait population as to whether it wanted to regain its independence or to remain part of Iraq. To many Arabs, Saddam Hussein appears as an heroic figure, as personally ruthless though he might be.

As far as the American government is concerned, it must also be held responsible for the origins of the annexation. According to an article in the New York Times of 23 September 1990, the American ambassador in Baghdad, April Glaspie, told Saddam Hussein that the United States had no defense treaty with Kuwait and regarded the quarrel between Iraq and Kuwait as not being its business. Was this simple honesty on the part of the American ambassador or was it bungling or was it part of a deliberately dishonest representation of American intentions to the government of Iraq in order to tempt it to use force to resolve its quarrel with Kuwait? Perhaps bungling is the most likely explanation, but be that as it may, the annexation of Kuwait by Iraq is now being used as a pretext for a destructive and costly war whose real purpose is the destruction of one of the main enemies of the Jewish state in Palestine, which had already committed an unprovoked act of war against Iraq by bombing its atomic energy facility in 1981. Iraq claims that this facility was intended for peaceful purposes. The feeble bombings of Israel (notably of Tel-Aviv) which have taken place during the past several days could very well be justified as an act of retribution, if they were indeed committed by Iraq. (It seems strange that they caused no deaths. Could they have been done by the Israelis themselves for their propaganda effects?)

The unprovoked bombing of Iraq in 1981 seems to symbolize the arrogant, self-righteous deportment of the Jewish state in Palestine, which assumes that it is the only state in the region entitled to have atomic weapons and which, alas, has so much influence by means of Jewish control of the American media (especially television) and Jewish control of the American Congress. (See the very important and now especially timely book by Paul Findlay, a former member of Congress, They Dare to Speak Out.)

The war has already brought forth a plethora of atrocity stories and even a book to discredit the government of Iraq. Perhaps some of the stories are true, some exaggerated and others simply well calculated lies. In any event, though, Saddam Hussein had a good enough moral character for the United States to support him over a long period of time during his war with Iran.

There is a striking contrast between the manner in which the Jews' media (especially television) portrayed the war in Vietnam and the manner in which the war against Iraq is now being portrayed. The frightening aspect of this contrast lies in the power of television to influence public opinion that is thus being revealed. Our efforts in Vietnam were effectively sabotaged by the media Jews and their despicable hirelings, the Jane Fonda types. Those who control television were able to make our military efforts in Vietnam so unpopular that they made young Americans who had served their country in good faith in Vietnam the objects of reproach, while they are now making our actions in the Gulf region a popular amongst the unthinking masses who have been seduced into thinking that the war has something to do with keeping the price of gasoline low.

Perhaps the greatest immorality of all is to be found in the personal and political motivations of George Bush himself. One of his sons is involved in the oil business in the Arabic region. A war also provides George Bush with an ideal opportunity to distract attention from the troubles of his son, Neil Bush, who is involved in a banking scandal, and to distract attention from the present economic developments in the United States which threaten to cause a severe recession or even depression. In 1939 (or earlier) to 1941 Roosevelt's efforts to provoke a war in Europe and get the United States involved in it were no doubt an immoral attempt to overcome massive unemployment by means of war, a war from which the Aryan population of the world has suffered immensely and is still suffering. The long-range results of Bush's war against Iraq can still only be a matter of conjecture, but they can hardly be good for the already heavily taxed and demoralized Aryan component of the population of the United States.

The moral responsibility of the people of the United States is alleviated to some extent by virtue of the many impassioned protests against the war that have been made in various parts of the country even before the body bags have started to come back and by the fact that there was a rather close vote in the Senate on the authorization of military force against Iraq, a relatively poorly armed country with a quite limited capacity to produce highly advanced weapons. As of this writing, however, the defense forces of Iraq might still be able to inflict painful, economically costly losses on the United States, which had been obtaining a mere 2% or so of the petroleum it was consuming from Kuwait.

No matter how short or how long the war, no matter how few or how many Americans killed or maimed for life, the war represents the triumph of the objectives of Zionism over the interests of the American people as a whole.

What is Behind the Kuwait Affair?

by
Manfred Roeder

I am writing this letter on the day the ultimatum for Iraq ran out, nobody knows what the situation will be when you get this letter. But the crisis will last for some time to come and will somehow influence all of us, the least will be the price of oil.

What is behind the Kuwait affair? Certainly not what the press and our governments tell us. It has nothing to do with defending international law or stopping a dictator. There have been much better opportunities to do that. What happened when Stalin invaded the Baltic states? Nothing. On the contrary, he became the darling of President Roosevelt. What happened when China invaded Tibet? No breach of international law? No brutal dictatorship? And what about the annexation of East Germany by Russia and Poland? Why all that moralizing quibble about Iraq? Just to turn the attention away from the real reasons.

There are two different questions: why did Hussein invade Kuwait? And why did America jump onto that relatively minor issue and concentrated a bigger military force against Kuwait than it did for the landing in Normandy 1944?

Saddam was worried about three things: the massive immigration of Soviet Jews into Israel, the enormous Israeli arms build-up, and the increase of oil production in Kuwait. All this was a direct threat to Iraq. If up to a million Jews would come to Israel, the population pressure would rise to a point where Israel would look for more land and never give up the occupied part of Palestine. Israel is a constant threat to all the Arabs around, for Israel has robbed other peoples' land and is thirsty for more all the time. It is obvious that one day Israel would expel the Palestinians or attack Jordan or any other Arab country. Besides, Israel will attack any Arab country that might get too strong, and it has already done so with air raids against Baghdad and Libya.

Israel has secretly amassed $25 billion of 'washed' drug money from Panama and elsewhere to build up a new arsenal of nuclear and chemical assault weapons against Iraq from submarines. Two of those boats are now under construction in Germany, ready in 1992. In addition, the Bush administration stopped the export of electronic devices to Iraq at the same time Israel got 810 of such krytrons that can be used as detonators in nuclear bombs from a Jewish firm in California.

The third thing that got under Saddam's skin was that Kuwait suddenly started pumping oil like mad far above their OPEC quotas, thus pushing the price down from $18 to $12 per barrel whereby Iraq was losing $1 billion a year for each drop of $1 in the world price. Kuwait's provocation was caused by a conspiracy between the Sheik of Kuwait and CIA director Webster at the end of November 1989, a few weeks after the opening of the Berlin Wall.

Saddam was in a trap: if he did nothing, the Israelis would build up their war potential and sooner or later attack him or Jordan. And Kuwait was causing his economy a disastrous loss every day. If he did something, he risked an Israeli or U.S. reaction. So he inquired in America and heard that there was no interest in this affair. A colossal lie to provoke him.

Why did Bush want to make this little Kuwait affair his own? The main reason: America is looking for another chance to demonstrate strength as a world power. In order to do that, you need an enemy. Gorbachev was no good for that anymore. He released the East European satellites from the Moscow yoke and gave the green light for the re-unification of Germany, thus demolishing the status quo of 1945. Disarmament was under way and sooner or later most of the military might in Europe would be there without any purpose and would have to be withdrawn, or at least reduced. Then what? Back to America at high costs? Never. Destroy it? Very costly. Well, isn't there a tiny little Hitler, a very, very small one we could name? Yes, of course, there is one: Saddam! Hallelujah! Let's call him a new Hitler and mobilize the whole world (and all our useless war equipment) to put him in his place. Huge quantities hardware could be sold to the Saudis (what a profit!) and lots more could be shipped to the Gulf. Even more important probably is: America could take the lead in a world action and proclaim its moral and military leadership as never before. For the first time all the nations united, including the Soviets and most Arabs. Is this not the idea of a genius?

Let us not talk of the personal profit for Mr. Bush, who has his shares in one of the biggest oil companies and got his share as soon as the crisis was declared and the oil price went up and up. And, do you expect that all this war materiel will be withdrawn from the desert once the crisis is over? You can be sure that for years to come America will keep its foot in the Middle East door, especially after satellite photos have shown the biggest oil fields in the Arabian desert, the biggest in the world, a supply for decades.

America was rapidly driving into a great economic depression as a result of Reagonomics. The richest country and creditor has become the greatest debtor. Now, a new push for the industry, at least the war industry, is coming. What a fallacy! Of course, some firms will make big profits, but you cannot cure a sick nation with a war. And America is sick to the core, and not just its economy. Instead of looking for foreign enemies and world leadership the president and all those who love the country should deal with the drug and crime issues, juvenile delinquency, and racial slums. And, most of all, the Jewish stranglehold on the country should be broken and freedom of speech should be restored. If you are openly against Jewish control and race-mixing you are a dead man in America. What a freedom! There is more freedom of speech in Russia on these points. Try it!

I repeat it again and again: Gorbachev is in a mess and he may fail, but he is sincere and he is selfless and stands high above all other politicians in the world. And what he is doing to the Baltic states is a trifle compared with what Bush does against Iraq. Gorbachev has released all Communist satellites, he has agreed to German unity, has broken up the Berlin Wall, has stopped financing Communist countries and parties around the world. And he has generally agreed to autonomy of the various states, but he cannot do it overnight without causing a military revolt.

Would Bush allow any American state to proclaim its sovereignty as is laid down in the Constitution? Never. What happened when the South seceded? The bloodiest war in American history. Why didn't they let them go? Why does Britain hold on to Northern Ireland? There are so many English. But the same goes for Latvia; there are already more Russians than Latvians. Don't get me wrong: I am all for restoring freedom to the Baltic or other states who want to be free. But don't start pointing fingers, there are three pointing back at you.

And what kind of freedom do we have in the West when I or Mr. Tyndall or a former officer in the German army or Mr. Waldheim or any businessman is refused entry into the land of the free? To hell with Western democracy and human rights if this is the result. Russia will go through years of utter misery. But what do you expect after 70 years of Bolshevik tyranny and hundreds of years of the Czarist whip? They never had a free society but may create one. But we are rapidly losing all the freedom we once enjoyed. Let us stop arguing about Gorbachev and let us change the conditions and governments in our own countries. That's the real thing that matters, nothing else does!

Dr. William Pierce

Why is George Bush hell-bent on war against Iraq!
He has given us four reasons:

- Saddam Hussein, by invading Kuwait, has threatened America's supply of imported petroleum, and we must force him out of Kuwait to safeguard that supply—and with it the oil-dependent American way of life.
- Saddam Hussein committed an act of aggression by invading Kuwait, and America is obliged to punish acts of aggression whenever and wherever they occur.
- Saddam Hussein is a brutal dictator of unparalleled malevolence—a new Hitler, Mr. Bush has called him—who has kidnapped hundreds of American citizens, tortured Kuwaiti prisoners, and done any number of other nasty things, so that any right-thinking American should want to squash him like a poisonous spider.
- Saddam Hussein has built up Iraq's military capacity—including weapons of mass destruction—to the point where Iraq threatens the stability of the entire Middle East. Saddam Hussein and Iraq's military capability must be eliminated now for the sake of future peace in the region.

Depending upon the circumstances and his audience, Mr. Bush switches from one of these reasons to another. The American people, however, are having a hard time believing any of them is a sufficient reason for going to war—or that any of them is Mr. Bush's real reason for threatening a war and sending hundreds of thousands of American troops to the Persian Gulf to back up his threat.

When we examine his arguments for war one by one, they are seen to be manifestly hollow. In the first place, Saddam Hussein did not and does not pose a significant threat to America's supply of imported oil, either before or after his annexation of Kuwait. Iraq's principal source of revenue has come from its export of petroleum to America and other countries. It is hardly conceivable that Saddam Hussein would voluntarily cut off that source of revenue. He might with more justice be accused of wanting to force Kuwait to stop producing more than its OPEC-allotted quota of oil, thus cutting into Iraq's share of the export trade. But even if he shut Kuwait's oil production down completely, he could hardly threaten the American way of oil consumption: America was importing just one per cent of its total petroleum consumption from Kuwait before Saddam Hussein's invasion, and just another 2.6 per cent from Iraq.

One might theorize that Saddam Hussein could eventually follow up his annexation of Kuwait with attempts to take over Saudi Arabia and other oil-exporting countries in the region. Even if he controlled all the oil flowing from the Arab countries of the Persian Gulf to the United States—Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates—that would be only 11 per cent of US consumption. He might be able to force up the price of oil a bit—although it is hard to see how he could be more successful at doing that than OPEC is now. In any case, the theoretical possibility that Iraq might at some future time control 11 per cent of the petroleum we use, perhaps hiking the price we pay for gasoline and forcing us to conserve energy, switch to other sources, or develop our own reserves, is not a compelling reason to start a war.

We import many commodities, some of them critical to our economy. Is it to be our policy to go to war against any country which we suspect may raise the price it charges us for its exports? The United States is entirely dependent on other countries for its supply of chromium ore, for example. Without chromium much of American industry would grind to a halt. Zimbabwe, headed by a thuggish Black dictator-for-life, is our principal supplier of this essential mineral. Does anyone imagine that Mr. Bush would send an invasion force to Zimbabwe if that country announced that it intended to double the price it charges us for chromium?

Certainly, the damage now being done to the U.S. economy by the Persian Gulf crisis is not the result of Saddam Hussein's denying us Kuwait's oil. He would be only too happy to sell us that oil, but Mr. Bush has instigated an embargo to prevent his doing so. And Saddam Hussein did not force up the price of oil by annexing Kuwait; the oil wells there remained undamaged and in production. It is the prospect that Mr. Bush will start a major war in the Persian Gulf and thereby disrupt the output of oil from the entire region which has led oil speculators to raise prices. If the recession the United States is now entering becomes much worse, it will be due in part to the tens of billions of dollars being drained from the U.S. economy by Mr. Bush's troop buildup in Saudi Arabia, in part to the increased cost of energy this disruption of the oil market has caused, and in part to the enormous bribes he is paying from the U.S. Treasury to keep his anti-Iraq coalition together (seven billion dollars to Egypt alone, and more than two billion dollars promised to Turkey). The loss of jobs by American workers will be George Bush's doing, not Saddam Hussein's.

The excuse that it is America's responsibility to punish Saddam Hussein's "aggression" by starting a war against him is even more anemic and shows George Bush up as a liar and hypocrite. The boundary between Iraq and Kuwait was drawn in 1923 by British colonial administrators, who did not leave the region and permit full self-government there until 1961.

Iraqis have long considered the territory designated by the British as Kuwait to be part of Iraq, and the annexation of that territory is not aggression in the same sense as, say, Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon or Israel's continued military occupation of seized Palestinian land. Perhaps Saddam Hussein should have gone about rectifying this relic of British colonialism in a more diplomatic way. No matter how he did it, he would have made some people angry—at the very least the Kuwaiti Al Sabah ruling family. But, really, a Middle Eastern squabble of the sort existing between the government in Baghdad and the Al Sabah clan is not a very good cause for moral posturing about "aggression" by the politicians of the West. It certainly is not a good excuse for George Bush to send 400,000 troops to the Persian Gulf to start a war.

Is Saddam Hussein a nasty fellow? It's hard to guess where the truth lies when Bush calls him a "new Hitler" and the media eagerly recite the atrocities and brutalities he supposedly has committed. If we judge by the general rule for leaders in that part of the world, however, he probably is a mean, tough S.O.B. He probably has ordered the execution of political opponents. His secret police interrogators probably torture prisoners. That's the way life is in the Middle East. The leaders of Lebanon in recent years have been bloody-handed gangsters who could have stepped right out of the pages of The Godfather. Yitzhak Shamir, the present prime minister of Israel, is a former terrorist leader who planned cold-blooded assassinations and bombings. So was Menachem Begin, the former Israeli prime minister. The Israelis and Arabs both torture prisoners to extract information. They both arrest people arbitrarily and imprison them without trials. If Saddam Hussein were a gentleman or a humanitarian or someone who flinched at the sight of blood, he would be out of place in the Middle East. But is it America's mission to stamp out the world's S.O.B.s? If so, why don't we sever all relationships with the likes of Yitzhak Shamir and wash our hands before going after the Saddam Husseins of the world?

It's only in Mr. Bush's fourth reason for going to war against Iraq that we can see a bit of truth. Saddam Hussein must be killed and Iraq's military capabilities permanently eliminated, otherwise there will be trouble later, say Mr. Bush and the other advocates of war. Iraq has weapons of mass destruction; it soon will have nuclear weapons. So let's wipe out the Iraqis now, before they become really dangerous.

Before we buy that argument we should ask, dangerous to whom? Certainly not to Americans. To Iraq's Arab neighbors and to Iran, perhaps. Should Americans go to war now to head off possible future inter-Arab or Arab-Iranian squabbles? Of course, not.

There is one other country which is worried about Iraq's growing strength, however. That country is Israel. And in that fact lies the hidden motive behind all of Mr. Bush's phony and unconvincing explanations of the necessity of a war against Iraq.

Israel is at this time the only country in the Middle East with nuclear and biological weapons, and the Israelis are determined to keep it that way. Only by maintaining an overwhelming military superiority over her neighbors can Israel hope to hang onto conquered Arab lands and keep the Palestinian people in subjection. This necessity has become more acute than ever in the past, as the Palestinian interfadeh has heated up. The Israelis are realizing that all of the methods of terror and brutal repression they have been using to hold the Palestinian people down are not working, and that the situation is likely to evolve into a full-scale uprising within the next year or two. As long as no Arab country can stand up against Israel's nuclear-armed might, the Israelis can hope to deal with the Palestinian uprising through genocide and mass expulsion, but if any Arab country is able to match Israel militarily, then an Israeli attempt at the extermination of the Palestinians will bring on a new war in the Middle-East—a war which Israel conceivably could lose. Israeli leaders, therefore, consider the elimination of Iraq now as absolutely essential to the continued Israeli domination of the Middle East. The only question in their minds is, who will undertake that dangerous and bloody task? Will Israelis have to sacrifice men and money to do it—or can they manipulate Americans into doing it for them, much as they have manipulated Americans into doing so many other things?

It would be helpful for a public understanding of the situation if Yitzhak Shamir and George Bush had held a joint press conference and announced to the world that Shamir has asked Bush to destroy Iraq for him in order to save Israel the trouble and that Bush had agreed to do so. That would fit right in with the policy of the U.S. government in recent years in bowing to the enormously powerful Jewish lobby and putting Israel's interests ahead of America's. But, of course, in the matter of the Persian Gulf crisis it is essential to both Shamir and Bush that the public not understand what is going on, and so there has been no such public announcement. In fact, the Israeli government and Jewish groups in America have carefully kept a low profile since the beginning of the Persian Gulf crisis. They very much want to remain unnoticed by the public, so that the pretense can more easily be maintained that they have nothing to do with the crisis.

Nevertheless, the evidence is abundant. The joy in Israel is unrestrained, and even though Shamir has been rather discreet in his statements, other Israelis have been less so. The byword there is "Iraq must be destroyed." And in America prominent Jewish spokesmen, from Henry Kissinger to former New York Times editor Abe Rosenthal, have been beating the war drums and claiming that America must destroy Iraq for the sake of the American way of life, with angry accusations of "anti-Semitism" ready to hurl at anyone who suggests that a war against Iraq can only be for the sake of Israel, not America. On November 17, 1990, in San Francisco 700 delegates to the Council of Jewish Federations, representing every major Jewish group in America, passed a resolution unanimously affirming support for Mr. Bush's war policy against Iraq. The Christian churches, by way of contrast, have almost without exception protested the rush to war.

The National Alliance and other truly patriotic American groups also oppose a war against Iraq. War should be resorted to only when it serves a compelling American interest. Neither restoring the Emir of Kuwait to his throne nor preventing Saddam Hussein from having a say in the sale of another one per cent of the oil we use is a compelling American interest. And, most assuredly, having young Americans die in the desert so that Israeli's won't have to is not in America's interest.

George Bush may think that he can fool the American people with his reasons for leading them into a war and a deeper recession, but if enough patriotic Americans speak out now and let him know that they're not being fooled he may be forced to rethink his policies. Every concerned American should express himself forcefully and repeatedly, with letters to newspaper and magazine editors, with calls to radio talk shows, and with every other means at his disposal (including copying and distribution of this leaflet). The message should be loud and clear:

No war for oil.
No war for monarchy in Kuwait.
AND NO WAR TO DO ISRAEL'S DIRTY WORK!

Whose "NEW WORLD ORDER" Are We Fighting For?

Dr. William Pierce

As we continue to carpet-bomb Iraq into rubble—and our Marines continue to die in the desert—we still haven't heard a single valid reason for George Bush's great military adventure in the Persian Gulf. Why is this war necessary? How does it serve American interests?

Mr. Bush says the war is to establish a "new world order." Do our Marines and airmen in Saudi Arabia know that? Are they prepared to put their lives on the line for Mr. Bush's "new world order"?

Mr. Bush started by telling us that we had to attack Iraq in order to protect the "American way of life" and to save the jobs of Americans. When that didn't wash he said that the war was to punish "naked aggression." His reasoning was that if we don't fight Saddam Hussein now in Kuwait, we'll have to fight him later on Main Street, U.S.A. Naked aggression can be nasty stuff if you let it get out of control! As far-fetched as that sounds, we had half a million troops in Saudi Arabia willing to accept it as their excuse for being there.

And now we are told that the real reason for the war is a "new world order"! It may have been dumb of George Bush to have told us that, when he already had managed to get his war started with his phony excuse about saving Americans' jobs and keeping Iraq's "naked aggression" away from our shores. But we should be grateful that finally he's telling us something with at least a grain of truth in it.

The fact is that George Bush and a number of other people with whom he works have been planning a "new world order" for some time. They want to re-draw the map of the world and change the power relationships between nations. They want to force the peoples of the world into a new mold. Throughout history other men have lusted after a "new world order" of one sort or another. All too often they have been willing to resort to war in order to satisfy their lust. Most Americans, on the other hand, believe that war is justified only when it is necessary to defend vital national interests. If George Bush had not tricked them by telling them that Iraq is a threat to the "American way of life"—if he had told them from the beginning that the purpose of his war is a "new world order"—they would have told him, "Hell no, we won't go!"

The worst of it is that if Americans really understood what George Bush has in mind when he babbles about his "new world order," they would be horrified and disgusted. They would be willing to go to war to prevent such a "new world order" from being born. George Bush's "new world order" clique consists of men who see a central rôle for the state of Israel in the "new order." In their vision of the future Israel will rule a Middle Eastern empire stretching from the Nile to the Euphrates, in accord with the Jewish territorial claims set out in the Old Testament (Genesis 15:18). The purpose of the present war in the Persian Gulf is not to protect the "American way of life"; it is to remove a threat to Israel's domination of the Middle East.

This is not to say that George Bush is a religious fanatic who sees any validity in ancient or modern Jewish imperial claims. But the people who do believe in those claims are very powerful; in particular, they control most of the news and entertainment media in America. Through their control of the media they wield a large measure of control over American public opinion—and hence over the political process. And George Bush is, above all else, a politician.

When we understand who is behind George Bush's "new world order" scheme, we can understand why Mr. Bush was do determined to start a war against Iraq, and we can understand many other things as well. We can understand why he puts on a great show of moral indignation about Iraq's annexation of Kuwait (to which it has an arguable historical claim) and remain silent when the Soviet Union massacres patriots demonstrating for freedom in Lithuania. We can understand why he expresses outrage at Iraq's feeble attempts to defend itself, saying that Saddam Hussein has "sickened the world" by firing a few Scud missiles into Israel and Saudi Arabia, and remains silent when Israeli police turn their machine guns on unarmed Palestinian civilians in Jerusalem and massacre more people in five minutes than all of Iraq's Scuds have killed. We can understand why he claimed in his January 29 State of the Union speech that he wanted to "lead the world away from the dark chaos of dictators" while seeking alliances against Iraq with dictatorships like China.

When we understand that the essential element in the "new world order" to which Mr. Bush pays lip service is the elimination of every threat to the continued expansion of Israel, we can understand the deceit and hypocrisy surrounding the whole scheme. And we can understand that to order American servicemen to give up their lives for the sake of that scheme is nothing but treason and murder.

No patriot who understands what George Bush means when he says we are fighting for a "new world order" in the Persian Gulf can support this war. Let him know that that's how you feel about his war. Let him know by writing letters to your local newspaper and by telephoning every radio talk show you can. Let him know by reproducing this flyer and posting it wherever people will see it.

A SALUTE TO A VALIANT NATION

by

Harold A. Covington

One of the characteristics of the true Aryan is that he admires and respects the martial virtues of courage, endurance, discipline, and loyalty—even when those characteristics are to be observed in people not of our race.

The people and the armed forces of the Republic of Iraq have over the past few weeks withstood the most massive and total aerial bombardment in the history of warfare. The only event in history which compares with the current Zionist air assault on Iraq is the attempted aerial genocide directed against the Third Reich during World War II by the same Zionist puppet regimes who are for the most part involved in the present Gulf war. And yet these Iraqis have endured the loss of their homes, the murder of their families, and the destruction of the holy places of Islam with a stoic bravery and unflinching devotion to their country and their leader which is slowly, irresistably stirring the admiration of the world. It is now admitted even by the "allies" that Saddam Hussein is simply holding back the bulk of his air force and coolly, deliberately refusing to be drawn into an unequal high-tech battle of super-expensive weaponry, patiently taking everything ZOG dishes out and waiting to lure us in on the ground where his battle-hardened veterans can take on our MTV-raised illiterates, our niggers, and our bitches of war in a genuine battle. Iraq is displaying in this time of crisis an iron discipline and an inflexible will not seen in the world since 1945.

I can only wish that our grand and glorious "movement" could find within itself one fraction of the valor and the dedication that these alleged "racial inferiors" of ours are displaying. I think of these clowns who do-se-do down the streets of Hootertown on a Saturday afternoon wearing Mardi Gras costumes while hundreds of screaming Reds and niggers and hebes and degenerates throw rocks and bottles and bellow filthy words. Would such scum be allowed to go unpunished in Iraq? And yet we, the "big, bad, tough Klan and Nazis," willingly put up with it like little lambs, even seek it out as if we get off on it. (I have long entertained suspicions that certain so-called "White leaders" DO get off on mass abuse, in some bizarre, kinky way.) I think of all these drunken macho men who wave hog-leg .44s and Armalites in the air at cow-pasture rallies, generally after starting in on their second six-pack of the evening, and vow that they will never be taken alive and fight for the White race to the end. Yet at the first hint of heat from ZOG these same big bad dudes blubber like babies for mercy and can't crawl on their bellies fast enough through the office door of the U.S. Attorney or the grand jury room to sell out their friends.

In the name of God, let SOMEBODY come right out and SAY it, for once: our problem is that we are as soft as butter from luxurious living, as weak-willed as water and as cowardly as rabbits.

We have never faced the rubber bullets of the West Bank or the bombers overhead in the night, and we couldn't, because we have spines of jelly. On the few occasions when we actually do something to inconvenience the enemy our courage generally comes from a beer can or a whiskey bottle and we are utterly appalled when we sober up and realize what we have done. It is no wonder that our enemies hold us in such contempt. It is deserved. They know us too well.

But the Arabs they fear—because they know that the Arabs know no fear. It is significant that Meir Kahane operated for years in the United States, advocating murder and terrorism against Whites and spreading his filthy poison with impunity. So far as I know Meir never received even so much as a gentle tap on the cheek from any of us big, bad Nazis. Oh, to be sure, back in the old NSWPP and NSPA days we had a good few tangles with the Jewish Defense League and we invariably whipped them down into jelly. We have generally been able to hold our own in brief bar-room-brawl style encounters, fair enough, although these generally entailed months and years and thousands of dollars of legal consequences which we could have done without. Yet the fact remains: when Meir's final coda was writ, it was an Arab who put paid to the obnoxious little kike. If it had been left up to us, our worst enemy would have lived until his beard was long and white.

What am I trying to say here? Simple. LET US HAVE AN END TO PRETENSE. Let us allow words like "Viking" and "Aryan warrior" and all that pseudo-militant horse manure to disappear from our vocabulary and cease trying to pretend that we are the men our ancestors were. We are not. Let's quit buying guns and stocking up on ammunition and survival gear which we have no intention of ever using. It's a waste of money that would better be spent on written and electronic propaganda material and on creating a genuine separatist philosophy and way of life.

The vast majority of us are not "Vikings" or anything of the sort. We are products of the American consumer system whose main objection to the present system is usually that we have been left out of it and we're not getting our fair share. This is not to say that revolution is impossible for Americans or that we are all totally useless twits who can be of no use to the White race. (Even if some of us are...but I digress.) But we have a long, long way to go in moulding and shaping our character, our political and philosophical direction, and our strategy.

Robert Mathews and the Order showed us that it doesn't have to be like that. Aryan Americans CAN find within themselves the necessary courage to act, to place their physical bodies at risk in order to resist ZOG. But let's either fish or cut bait, shall we? Either DO IT—hit hard, act alone, and understand that death is the inevitable result—or DON'T PRETEND. Sell your guns and your survival gear and buy a PC with desk-top publishing software. Hang your Klan robe or your Nazi uniform in the closet and go buy a three-piece suit and drop in on your local Republican committee meeting.

If you are one of those rare Bob Mathews types who is going to fight, then make like the Nike ads and JUST DO IT. Don't mail out a little newsletter for years telling us how you're going to do it. Remember those three provisos—act alone, or else you will be betrayed by some chickenshit White coward; hit hard and make ZOG buy your life in Jewish blood; and accept death as inevitable. When you are caught, don't surrender—shoot and die and give the rest of us a martyr to name our sons after.

And if you're not going to DO IT, then stop pretending. Stop lying to yourself and stop lying to the rest of us. Pop the top on that six pack, sit your butt down in front of that TV, cheer for the Iraqis as they fight the true fight which we cannot as yet enter. Then tomorrow throw the beer cans in the trash and hit the streets with a car-load of good leaflets or stickers. You'll find that there is a good deal of satisfaction in doing all that you know in your heart you are really capable of doing.

No one expects White American men to behave with the same fearlessness and the same toughness that the Iraqis are displaying. We have not been through what they have as a nation. And yet genetically we are Vikings, or can be once we get our minds right. Some people, like Bob Mathews, can perform that cleansing and tempering and hardening of the soul as an intellectual process, but men like Mathews are rare. For most of us it will come with experience—the experience of joblessness, of grinding poverty, of losing that color TV and that six-pack and of losing that house and that car and having to pound the streets looking for work, competing with niggers and spics and Yuppie Barbie dolls who get jobs on affirmative action quotas. Having to root in garbage cans for food. Having to collect other people's beer cans to sell for recycling in order to buy some Hamburger Helper to feed your family. Sweating in the summer because your air conditioner has been repossessed and you couldn't afford the electric bill to run it anyway. Freezing in the winter, stealing wood from construction sites for the fireplace. Above all, that hardening will come when we realize that there is no hope, and that at long last we have nothing to lose but our lives and life is no longer worth living; we would rather die than see the Zionist system go on for one hour more.

Each nation confronts evil in its own historical context. Iraq is doing so now. We will do so tomorrow. Not that we have any choice. We are all caught up in history's tide and it's coming whether we like it or not.

For now, let's do what we can to hinder ZOG's war effort against a little nation of brave and tough people who have decided they will no longer be pushed around by the Jews and their American bully boy. Non-White or not, they deserve a hand. The time may well come when we need their help, and they will be justified in asking us, "Where were you when our Iraqi brothers were dying under the bombs of Bush?" Let's make sure that when that time comes, we all have an answer to that question.

No War For Oil!
No War For A Corrupt Monarchy In Kuwait!
AND NO WAR TO DO ISRAEL'S DIRTY WORK!

THE LEUCHTER-CONGRESS

The great European Leuchter-Congress is now on track to take place on 23 March 1991 in Munich.

The usual initial difficulties in the form of meeting hall rentals, cancellations, possible change of venues, legal moves, etc. that we in our the movement are all too familiar with had to be overcome. However, perseverance has paid off!

A hall with a seating capacity of 2000 has now been rented. The deal is signed, sealed and delivered, as well as pre-paid! Lawyers insist that all is thus secure, and our one-day marathon spectacular is on track—and now we must make up for the delays caused by the legal wrangling. People from all over Europe, guests and speakers from Canada, the U.S.A., France, England, Sweden, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Spain, Belgium, Austria, United Germany, Eastern Europe, and hopefully, from Latin America, South Africa and several Arab states will meet for the first time ever to share their research findings with friend and foe as well as the invited media! This is to be a conference like no other and in competition with no one.

This gathering, it is hoped, will be the 'break-out' from the intellectual and ideological ghetto onto the center stage of history now in the making. We will see if the ideological 'left' and the wobbly 'center' have the courage and the ability to defend their convictions or if they wish to hide a little longer in their ivory towers and snipe at us from behind the paper walls of their phony 'foundations', their one-man 'newspapers' and commie fronts.

Those of you who have the money to go should register now! The admission fee is only DM50 for the entire day. If you need help in finding accommodation and/or would like to stay in the home of a German family, please contact the organizers at once! DO NOT DELAY! Everything is on a first-come, first-served basis. Two thousand seats will be filled quickly.

DATE: 23 March 1991 TIME: Conference begins at 10:00 A.M. & ends at 10:00 P.M. PLACE: MUNICH. ORGANIZER: Ewald Althans, Postfach 2, W-8125 Huglfing/Obb.-Federal Republic of Germany.

The organizer will supply you with further details. Because of tight security requirements, the location of the meeting hall will only be given to you at a certain time and place after your arrival in Munich. There is no other way if we wish to avoid 10,000 demonstrators in front of the place!

A SHORT, IRREVERENT HISTORY OF THE WORLD

by

A.N. Outsider

The Jews really are a remarkable people, but not for any of the reasons they claim. For example, in some mystical pre-existence phase, before the Beginning, they invented their great God Yahweh, created in their own brutish image. Eventually He became bored with the vast void and emptiness of space, and 5994 years ago decided to create a universe with some interesting inhabitants to amuse Him. To make it even more interesting, He created night and day. After looking it all over the following week, he pronounced it good, and He made the Jews his favorite creation—His Chosen People. In fact, they were the only true human beings; all other tribes and animals are goyim, created only to serve as slaves, beasts of burden, or sources of food.

God's Chosen People then proceeded to replenish the earth, and except for a few mistakes, migrations, and massacres, things appeared to go reasonably well until some tribes from the North, not being aware of their subservient status, wandered down and foolishly occupied territory which Yahweh had destined for His Chosen. Obviously, this could not be tolerated, so old Yahweh trumpeted His orders from the mountain, came down, and joined His People in slaughtering millions of the sub-human intruders. (Several of these genocidal holocausts, whether real or imaginary, are still celebrated in Jewish holy days.) This kind of bloody warfare continued intermittently for a few centuries without eliminating the insolent goyim, so a new tactic had to be found to supplement the sword.

Greek language and culture, as well as several of the older religious legends were studied for ideas, and many possibilities appeared. Quite conveniently, tough old Yahweh, with the help of a nice Jewish girl, now begat a son, an emasculated, feminized semi-god who espoused such semi-appealing traits as meekness, humility, poverty, altruism, chastity, mercy, peace-making, honor, trust, truthfulness, integrity, tolerance, and loving one's enemies. What wonderful traits to find in one's enemies!

It might be a bit difficult to sell this bill of goods to the goyim, so several inducements were incorporated, with many more to come later. This new Savior would assume the guilt as well as the punishment for any infractions of the rules, including the Original Sin of not being born Jewish. All converts were assured of endless bliss in an indescribably beautiful Heaven after death, if only they would whole-heartedly believe. Furthermore, rebirth into the new life was alleged to bring such peace and satisfaction that living in this vale of pain and tears would be not only tolerable, but actually enjoyable. On the other hand, those who never heard the salvation message, along with those who heard it but were unable to believe, were doomed to spend eternity being mercilessly tortured in a fiery pit of burning sulphur. That ought to really get them!

Somewhere in the dim, forgotten past the Jews has formulated and faithfully practiced their Golden Rule that "when you learn to fake sincerity, you've got it made." It was recently quoted on television by a well-known Jewish writer-philosopher, so it is still considered current and useful. This made it easy for the Great Teacher to attract a few missionary-helpers, and before long things were going great. In fact, some of the new converts were so zealous that it was feared the infection might spread to God's Chosen. Some of the female goyim appeared attractive and submissive, which also posed a severe temptation to the young hot-bloods of the Tribe.

The Learned Elders were equal to any emergency threatening their People, so they added more ground rules to the convoluted Mishnah already at hand. Among them it is stated that female goyim are available to the Chosen, and fair game for labor, entertainment, and gratification, but nothing more. If a Jew-boy weakens and marries one, he is to be publicly and officially declared dead by his family and the tribe, with appropriate mourning, funeral ceremonies, and subsequent shunning. If a goy aspires to cultivate one of God's Chosen Females, he is to be promptly eliminated. Anyway, killing goyim is recommended whenever feasible, since that is not considered murder. The Ten commandments and the Golden Rule are not involved, since they were admittedly never intended to handicap the Jews. This brings to mind old Moses, one of their most Venerated Figures. After a hundred years of archaeological digging and exploration and careful study of the Dead Sea Scrolls, no evidence has ever been found that Moses ever existed, although there are at least three older sects with legends of a baby prophet being found in a basket in the bulrushes. Similarly, there is no trace of evidence for Abraham, Solomon, David, Joshua, Saul, John the Baptist, or Jesus the Christ. Israel has maintained exclusive custody of the scrolls, and other scholars and translators have no access to them. Could it be that this secrecy is due to fear that revelation of the sordid origin of these religions would cause a total collapse of the house of cards, without which Israel probably could not survive?

In order to keep the new religion under control without destroying it, appropriate insults and obscenities were devised and applied from time to time, with occasional massacres to keep the goyim in line. But in spite of all of its contradictions and inconsistencies, the religion spread to Europe, with many adherents so zealous that they were willing to suffer and die for their faith. The new doctrines were ambiguous and unclear, so many different interpretations appeared, resulting in the formation of opposing sects. The sects sometimes became so antagonistic that, with some outside agitation, major wars developed between them, with casualties running into the millions. Here these mixed-up fools were slaughtering each other in righteous indignation or wrath, while at the same time treating their real enemies with kindness and consideration! This was even better than the Learned Elders ever had reason to hope for.

Strange as it seems, the new religion survived and spread among the Aryans, but it had to be updated and enhanced to meet the aesthetic, intellectual, and cultural requirements of advancing civilization. And in order to meet the religious needs of more people, the new deity was fragmented into three parts, known collectively to the clergy as the Tri-Une God or Trinity, and the clergy were the only ones presuming really to understand his complex nature. The common people understood only that if they needed a Father-figure to lean on or to answer their ultimate questions, He was there in Heaven, a distant relative of old Yahweh and probably having the same nebulous residence. If they wanted love, wisdom, companionship, forgiveness, or salvation, the Son was also there, always ready to come to their aid. If their needs were more complex, the Holy Spirit could guide them heavenward in the mysterious ways of righteousness and holiness.

Joint committees of rabbis, priest, scholars, and kings were convened to decide which of the many religious legends, fables, and lies would be acceptable to the now more educated masses, and which were so ridiculous or repulsive that they must be discarded. There never was a true consensus, but a compendium of translations, interpretations, truisms, and wishful thinking was finally formulated and transcribed in the most elegant language and poetry of the time. Of course, it had to be re-done periodically, but there was no shortage of volunteers for the job, Men of God with their Divine Revelations.

As sophisticated music was coming into vogue, great poets, composers, musicians, and fine instrument makers appeared, all for the glory of God. The music took many forms and was very effective, majestic, joyful, prayerful, or imploring, depending on which mood the clergy chose to induce at the time. The rituals became very impressive, and the cathedrals with spires reaching almost to Heaven were truly inspiring. Artists and sculptors contributed their finest work and there was competition and rivalry to see which city-state could build the tallest, the most magnificent, or the most intricately carved structure. The poor serfs and artisans were taxed and enslaved for years to build these edifices and to maintain their popes and bishops in the style to which they aspired, all for the Glory of God. If the Great Teacher were to return to earth, as many of the followers claimed to expect, he would be puzzled as he sought in vain for evidence of his simple teachings in the lives of the people.

This inborn knack for faking sincerity has been a tremendous asset in the Jews' campaign to bring about Yahweh's will on earth. It has made them perfect masters in the theater, which they have exploited with great skill to inculcate countless nefarious ideas into the minds and lives of the unsuspecting goyim, while making fortunes for themselves. With their duplicity and fanaticism (enthusiasm) the Jews are the greatest salesmen, regardless of the value of their product. If they fail in fulfilling a promise, contract, or vow, they have annually renewed (Kol Nidre) their right to perfidy and perjury renouncement in advance. If they are threatened by unhappy clients (victims), they usually have brethren in high places who will come to their aid, legally or otherwise. With typical audacity they have invaded the various fields of art, music, literature, entertainment, economics, politics, philosophy, ethics, justice, law, and medicine. With the unfailing help of their news media they have attained positions as critics and arbiters in every field, even including etiquette and protocol. They appear to have convinced most of the goyim that the ugliness is art, discord is music, vulgarity and obscenity are the root of comedy, and degenerate licentiousness is the ultimate goal of sophisticated playwrights and novelists. Poetry is barely connected words without rhyme or metre. Unlimited indebtedness (to them) is desirable, and bankruptcy or fires are honorable and legitimate means for transferring their debts to innocent parties. All races (except Jews) are equal, and the ultimate crime is "anti-Semitism." As usual, they pervert or invert our language, this time by ignoring the fact that the only true Semites are the Arabs and the Sephardic Jews, while the Ashkenasi Jews who predominate in Israel, Europe, and the United States, have no claim whatever to being anti-Semitic.

The Gentiles have tolerated and/or adopted so many of the Jews' ideas that we should be wondering if we really are as stupid as they claim us to be. At one time or another they have been physically expelled from nearly every civilized country in the world for infiltrating and corrupting its morals, ethics, art, religion, economy, currency, and political system. Here, in the U.S., we allow them to dominate not only our Congress, but our news and entertainment media, our school system, our churches, our central bank system, our legal and medical professions, and our book publishing. We have the incongruous spectacle of a mediocre president (thought to be secretly "anti-Semitic") being subjected to a media-managed trial for relatively trivial offenses and finally submitting his resignation to a Jewish (dual loyalty) Secretary of State in an allegedly Christian nation.

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith (ADL), a tax-free, unregistered foreign agent, lobbying for Israel, publishes Sunday-School lessons, pictures, and other literature for the major Protestant denominations, all fostering the myth of Judaeo-Christian community of interest. It has been very successful in instilling and maintaining the idea, suicidal for us, that the Jews are God's Chosen People and we must support and protect them if we hope to survive and prosper. They also maintain massive files of up-to-date politically useful information with which they can, and do, foster, impede, or destroy the careers of rising young professionals as they see fit. Having a budget and staff rivaling that of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the League provides many other services, all for the benefit of Israel.

Almost without exception their ideas bring disaster when we adopt them. Their control of our immigration policies has ignited the fuse for an inevitable explosion in our country, not in theirs. Our schools are another good example, after integration, busing, permissiveness, new socially oriented textbooks, and "progressive" teaching methods. Socialism, which they promoted here and established by revolution in the Soviet Union, is now an obvious failure. Integration was promoted as a noble cause, but actual race relations in the U.S. are probably worse and more dangerous now than they have ever been. Major businesses are required to hire a quota of "minority" employees, but all too often they find it necessary to hire duplicate white personnel in order to get the work done. Integration has made a mockery of the judicial system; we aren't supposed to notice it, but most of our crimes are committed by blacks, so should they be tried by a jury of their peers—or our peers? There is no way for justice to prevail with such different standards of behavior. We don't want more riots, do we? Who arranged a black U.S. Capital and two black Miss Americas?

Three decades ago the entertainment and news media, literature, and theater were glamorizing the use of certain mood-altering drugs, claiming in some cases that they were not addictive. Some of the same media are now pretending to deplore the widespread use of drugs and the concomitant crime, and advertising a nearly-futile "war on drugs." For years these same media have been glamorizing and encouraging recreational sex without regard to the consequences. Now they are forcing sex education and instruction on many young children who otherwise would not have given it serious thought before reaching adolescence. So we wonder why there is an epidemic of venereal disease, pregnancy in school girls, and AIDS, which latter can't even be reported as a communicable disease. Homosexuality is just another "perfectly normal" lifestyle, and "gays" are just a little bit nobler and nicer than other people.

There are so many other ideas that people ought to add up to get the results that now threaten us. Whose idea was the atomic bomb? Who were the spies who gave it to the Soviets? Who were the lawyers who defended the spies? Who was head of the Communist Party USA? Who founded and supported the NAACP? Who got us into two unnecessary world wars, and who benefited from them, and who is now urging us to start another one? Who are the leaders in most of the demonstrations against some of the policies the country really needs? Who screams loudest for free speech—except when it involves Israel or their beloved money-making Holocaust? Who but Jew lawyers, judges, and like-minded jurors would create the existing chaos about medical malpractice insurance?

It appears that Yahweh's Chosen People have eventually won almost every round, and that David Ben Gurion's peaceable kingdom, ruled from Jerusalem, is almost here, if only we will whip those nasty Arabs for them and hasten the climax of the Greatest Story Ever Told!

This eventuality would probably be the greatest set-back ever to befall humanity, since it would effectively end the era of mankind's greatest achievements. Under the new regime, governed by the all-powerful tribunal sitting in Jerusalem, the former great nations, already impoverished by wars to please Israel, would be permanently enslaved by taxation to support greater Israel, "Eretz Ysrael," extending from the Nile to the Euphrates River as promised by old Yahweh in the Beginning. Their massive police force patrolling most of the world is going to be very expensive, and certainly God's Chosen People are deserving of the finest living that can be provided by wealth stolen from the despised (and envied) goyim.

If this scenario appears too stark to be credible, people should become aware of the recorded maps and plans drawn up by the current Learned Elders of Zion, available to anyone interested enough to look for the unpleasant facts. These Elders, while still unidentified, are real people, they are deadly serious, and they wield more power than you would ever want to believe.

If the American people continue to be governed by Jewish ideas, influenced by religion-based love of Israel, constrained by an age-old fear of the Jews, and allow themselves to be led into another insane, unnecessary, Jew-contrived war, we can expect nothing but national disaster of whatever kind. In fact, it appears that the disaster point has already been passed, and unless we have an instant mass awakening and new leadership it is too late. Too bad!

If you question some of the statements reported here, please consult relevant sections of the Talmud, and your Holy Bible. The evolution of religions, music, and culture are adequately reported in various histories of the Middle Ages. More recent history, though frequently biased, is helpful for study, and current events of historic significance are recorded from time to time, often incompletely, by the Washington Post, The New York Times, and other such accredited sources.

If one only superficially ponders the State of the Union in 1990, two disturbing questions may come to mind. First, why are grown-up, educated, otherwise normal Christians still unable or unwilling to distinguish between fantasy and reality? Second, if the Jews effectively impoverish and destroy the major nations, who will provide sustenance for Israel, since all true parasites require a viable host?t. Think about it all–if you are still able to think. ❑

In 1780, when George Washington became President, there was a king of France, a Holy Roman Emperor who ruled much of Europe, a czarina in Russia, a shogun ruling Japan, an emperor in China, and a king of England. Of all these powerful offices, only the American Presidency and the British monarchy still exist.

The map above is from a 1951 State Department publication. Please note the "POLISH ADMINISTRATION" and "SOVIET ADMINISTRATION" designation for the German territories east of the Oder-Neisse rivers. As of today (November 9, 1990) no valid treaty has been signed changing the 1951 situation. The passage of time does not by itself legalize theft, not even after 45 years. The treaties of Warsaw (1970) and Moscow (1990), referring to the German territories, have no legal standing since they were signed under duress, and while all of Germany is still (until 1994) occupied.

The essential premises of this Position Paper are as follows:

1. Both superpowers are in decline, and have to abandon their hegemonial positions deriving from victory in World War II.

2. Due to its economic and hence political influence on the European continent, Germany will become a major power there, surpassing England and France. So much so, in fact, that one eventually will use the term GERMAN HEGEMONY IN EUROPE. This can be of tremendous benefit not only to the Germans and other Europeans, but to all other peoples of the world.

3. Throughout this century, the relationship between the United States and Germany has been fraught with difficulties. The cause can be found in the fact that U.S. ruling circles regarded the U.S.A. as the lawful successor of the British Empire, and interference in European affairs was the natural result.

4. Unfortunately, the United States also claims some special mission on earth with almost religious overtones. This has led to a situation where many Americans are unable to view their own wrongful actions, or those of their government, dispassionately, resulting in a holier-than-thou attitude which in turn has contributed to the erosion of moral and ethical values long held by other peoples of Western Civilization.

5. The American "crusader" spirit came to the fore after the defeat of Germany in 1945. It led to the criminal attempt to alter the German psyche through so-called reeducation, to the forcible imposition of an unwarranted guilt complex upon the German people, and to the anomaly that, 45 years after the conclusion of a war, so-called "war criminals" of the defeated are still being persecuted, obviously under the supposition that all war actions by "America" were just and without wrongdoing.

6. A new and better relationship between the U.S. and Germany can only be created if non-interference of both nations into the affairs of the other is assured. Furthermore, the United States should stop producing anti-German World War propaganda. It is demeaning not only to the Germans but also to the tens of millions of Americans of German descent.

7. Also, in an era when even the Soviet Union opens its archives and admits its crimes (as in Katyn), it might behoove the U.S. to also look into a mirror and view past American actions more critically. This would lead to a better understanding among peoples, facilitate the research into the causes of wars, and provide chances for a lasting peace.

8. The relationship between Germans and Jews is greatly hampered by the aforementioned propaganda emanating from the United States. The leaders of the Jews living in Germany now do not act as Jews living in Germany but like specially privileged conquerors who have the full backing of the world's largest power, the United States. American Jews are unfortunately under heavy pressure by their own activists to view Germany with misgivings, and no serious attempts are made to come to an objective view of history, resulting in unnecessary hate and animosity.

9. German-Americans are the largest ethnic group in the United States. Regretfully, due to their typical German characteristics, they do not actively participate in the game of politics (except while voting in larger number than others), and this has led to a situation where the interests of this minority are rarely ever considered in the halls of Congress or in the White House. Now, that Germany is again on the ascend, we can expect a rise in German-American political activity also. One hopes that the Washington establishment takes note of this, and does not continue to take its Germans for granted. "German" surprises may be in the offing not only in Central Europe and Russia.

10. According to international law, the German Reich is still in existence. The Treaty of Moscow, signed by the four major World War II allies and the two remnant states of Germany, and ratified by the United States Senate on October 10, 1990 is generally accepted in lieu of a formal peace treaty between victors and vanquished of that great world conflagration. However, this Position Paper shows conclusively that due to various circumstances mainly based upon existing international law, not only is this "4 + 2 Treaty" fraught with illegalities and of dubious permanent value, but a proper peace treaty between Germany and her erstwhile adversaries will eventually have to be negotiated and signed regardless of any inconveniences that may arise, or what Pandora's box this may open.

Preamble

On September 12, 1990, the four major allied victors of the Second World War—Great Britain, France, the Soviet Union and the United States—agreed with the two remnant states of the former German Reich—namely, the West German Bundesrepublik and the East German Democratic Republic—to sign a "Treaty on the final settlement with respect to Germany", thereby formally relinquishing their occupation and other rights and obligations deriving from their victory over Germany in 1945. Thus concluded a development that began on November 9, 1989 with the opening of the Berlin Wall (but which had its genesis in earlier occurrences), and which led inexorably to the reunification of the two German states in the center of Europe by October 3, 1990.

One can assume that with the signing of the September 1990 treaty in Moscow World War II finally came to a formal conclusion, although still no proper peace treaty has been negotiated. A new era of European and World politics has begun, one in which Germany will play the role for which, due to various factors, she is destined. Undoubtedly, these factors will lead to a German hegemony in much of Europe, not because the German people desire it, and not because others in Europe want it, but simply because it is the inevitable result of geopolitical evolution. Since both World Wars had to a large extent been fought to prevent a superior German influence in Europe an influence that would automatically reach throughout the world one can state that these wars were fought in vain, for without the technical advances that might not have been made without the challenges of war, the world today is certainly NOT a better place in which to live than it was in 1913. One is saddened for the tens of millions of dead and the incredible destruction on all continents of the age-old cultural heritage that was wrought by this carnage.

This Position Paper deals mainly with future relations between Germany and the United States, with emphasis on the new relationship between these nations. For instance, while most Americans applauded the reunification of Germany, there are undoubtedly many U.S. citizens, especially in certain ruling circles and those controlling the mass media, who look upon a German hegemony in Europe with misgivings. This paper is mainly addressed to them. Despite all, one important fact remains: GERMANY HAS NEVER THREATENED THE WELL-BEING OR THE EXISTENCE OF THE UNITED STATES! Neither on its own territory nor anywhere else in the world. Neither in the 19th Century nor in the two World Wars. A Europe economically and hence politically dominated by Germany will never be a threat to "America" unless the United States Government feels compelled to play a role for which it is neither entitled nor destined.

The United States is a large and powerful nation mainly due to its sheer size and large population, and because, over the centuries, there had been a constant influx of highly trained people from all over the world (but especially from Europe). Our nation could have been a paradise on earth for most of its citizens. Instead, it now totters on the edge of depression; its savings are depleted; millions are homeless; and the crime rate is the highest of the Western nations. And, when leading U.S. politicians speak of "preserving our way of life", one assumes this does not include cultural vulgarity or the living conditions in America's inner cities. The fact remains that our nation has squandered its wealth and its moral standing in the world through constant interference in the affairs of other countries, principally Germany. In the process America prolonged wars, overthrew legitimate governments, destroyed ancient cultures and invariably left conditions much worse than they were before.

At present our nation stands on a threshold of history. Clear choices are possible. The United States can continue on the "internationalist" course set shortly before the turn of the last century and attempt to assume the heavy burden of world supremacy as an heir apparent of the late British Empire with its many obvious dangers. Or it can take the high road of justice and worry first about the incredibly difficult internal situation in this country. If the latter course is taken, then "America" will adhere to the American adage "may the best man win", and will wisely do nothing to interfere in the current developments in Europe which will soon lead to a German economic and political dominance on that continent.

Unquestionably, this will cause some economic rivalry between Europe and America. However, that need not be a negative. Peaceful challenges in a peaceful and generally just world should be our goal. For those governing the U.S.A. the time has come to reconsider ALL the articles of the Monroe Doctrine!

1. Past relations between the United States and Germany

For the first hundred years of the existence of the United States the relationship between the new nation and the various German states then in existence was good to excellent. The American experiment generated great interest in Germany and, once large scale immigration to the New World was possible, millions of Germans left their homeland to create a better life for themselves and their new fellow citizens. Eventually, this tide of German immigrants would total over seven million, with the result that Germans are today this nation's largest ethnic group with nearly a quarter of the U.S. population being "German Americans". It also bears mentioning that one of the first major treaties which this new country was able to conclude was The Treaty of Amity and Commerce signed in 1785 with the King of Prussia. George Washington's evaluation of this treaty was stated in a letter to Comte de Rochambeau on July 31, 1786, a few weeks before the death of Frederick the Great, the Prussian king whose imprint can be seen in the treaty:

> The Treaty of Amity which has lately taken place between the King of Prussia and the United States, marks a new era in negotiation. It is perfectly original in many of its articles. It is the most liberal Treaty which has ever been entered into between independent Powers; and should its principles be considered hereafter as the basis of connection between nations, it will operate more fully to produce a general pacification than any measure hitherto attempted amongst mankind.
> George Washington

(In gratitude, the United States was 162 years later the major force in removing the State of Prussia from the map, a state that had been known for its religious tolerance at a time when other European nations forcefully suppressed religious dissidents. The Edict of Potsdam of 1685 was a prime example of wise Prussian legislation in this regard.)

Germans played a major and loyal role in the battles which led to America's independence and greatness. Names like von Steuben, Sigel, Pershing and Nimitz, are indelibly connected with the shaping of this nation. They stand for the hundreds of thousands of anonymous German-American soldiers who fought under the Stars and Stripes in places like Yorktown, Gettysburg, Manila, in the Argonne forest and on the beaches of Okinawa. Germans as farmers, craftsmen, laborers, city builders and inventors left a lasting imprint on the face of America, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Northern to the Southern frontier, and it was German Protestantism that became the major religious denomination. Who remembers that the Declaration of Independence was first published in a German language newspaper in Philadelphia, and that German was a contender with English to become THE language of the new nation? Who but a few students of journalism know that the first and foremost American fighter for freedom of speech was a German immigrant, John Peter Zenger?

However, there is also the unalterable fact that the United States was never able to shake its ties to the British "motherland". Even as the American population in general assumed German rather than English national characteristics and cultural attachments, the language, the adherence to certain basic judicial principles, the standards of commercial and international behavior, and the literature and the history taught in America's schools, remained British. Furthermore, the American (WASP) upper class always retained its admiration for England's royalty and uppercrust, perhaps forever longing to be part of it.

This Britishness of the American ruling class, the so called "Eastern Establishment", finally led to the assumption by the United States Government of a long term world strategy that was entirely based upon the policies and experiences of the declining British Empire, especially in regard to the other major nations on the European continent, one of which was—after the German unification under Otto von Bismarck in 1871—the Second German Reich. In the process the United States had to abandon the principles and ideals promulgated by the founding fathers of this nation, nearly all of whom had warned against "foreign entanglements".

The war against Spain (without doubt artificially created by American internationalists) can be counted as the official entry of the USA into "World" politics, and the notice that the United States regarded itself as the heir apparent not only to the British Empire but of the other European nations as well. Unfortunately, Europe, especially Germany, was seemingly unaware of this danger to European culture and heritage arising across the Atlantic. Nothing was done to stop the interloper. The two World Wars, which could also be named "Wars of the European Succession", were the horrible result.

The sinking of the Lusitania gave the impetus for America's entry into WW I against Germany. Today we know that this event was cleverly staged by the British Admiralty with connivance of American friends in high places. Unfortunately, to this day American school children still are not taught about this infamy. Similarly, they learn of Germany's invasion of Poland in 1939 but they are not being informed of the Polish transgressions against the German minority in Poland that occurred before the German attack, transgressions culminating in thousands of murders that were far worse than the alleged threats against some Americans that led to the American invasion of Grenada in the 1980s. And few Americans born after World War II know of Franklin Delano Roosevelt's shooting order against German warships which predated by several months the German declaration of war against the United States after Pearl Harbor.

When we consider the relations between the United States and Germany (and the United States and Europe!), we must not forget that "America" was ultimately responsible for the creation of rigid political states with strong inter-ethnic tensions, such as Poland, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia (Woodrow Wilson's and Walter Lippmann's Fourteen Points), whose very existence led to incessant strife and injustice, and whose raisons d'étre are now being questioned again by the very people living there. Furthermore, a country with a proven inability to govern itself (Poland) was used by the United States to further its own, more nefarious aims in a continuation of British continental policy. While European wars would probably have occurred with or without the participation of the United States, it is unlikely that they would have descended into such barbarity as they finally did had American soldiers not set foot on European soil. (Without American support Great Britain might have made peace with Germany in 1917. Without the hope for American support the French might not have let it come to the carnage at Verdun.) In short, without the deviously arranged U.S. entry into World War I it would not have come to the destruction of the German Empire (including the blockade-caused starvation of the German people), and to the imposed Treaty of Versailles which irrevocably led to the second great world conflagration.

America's rôle against Germany in World War II was worse. Even before the war between these two nations broke out, and while anti-American propaganda in Germany was almost nil, there were books and articles printed in the United States that called for the sterilization of all German males (Nathan Kaufman's Germany Must Perish, 1941) and for the introduction of non-Germans into Germany to dilute the genetic substance of the German people ("The Hooten Report"), and a map was published in October of 1941 showing the dismemberment and division of the Reich uncannily along the lines of the postwar occupation zones ("The Gomberg Map"). Andrei Gromyko, the late, long-time foreign minister of the Soviet Union, stated in his memoirs that it was the United States and Great Britain which, at the conferences at Teheran and Yalta, insisted on the dismemberment of Germany. And it was "FDR", the American president, who in 1943 insisted on the insane "Unconditional Surrender" that unquestionably prolonged the war and caused the death of additional millions and incredible destruction. It must also be mentioned that America as the "Arsenal of Democracy", must bear the burden of having been ultimately responsible for the terror bombing holocaust of the German cities. (This monstrously evil slaughter of more than a million women, children and old men, and not the now discredited "as chamber" nonsense, was, of course, the real "Holocaust" of World War II): Apart from U.S. bombers, it was the British who caused the greatest damage, and the British could not have built their large bomber fleet and used it in thousand-plane raids—for the purpose of killing civilians—without lend lease assistance from the U.S.

When the shooting was over, the United States embarked on a policy vis-à-vis the Reich that seemed a replay of the infamous re-construction period during which the defeated Southern States of the American Union were humiliated after the Civil War. It must be mentioned that it was especially in the American zone of occupation where former criminals, and later carpetbaggers from abroad, were put in charge of the hapless Germans. Also, from America emanated the more obnoxious methods of the treatment of the defeated, among them the clearly illegal "Denazification Courts" and, finally, the program of "reëducation" by psychiatrists et al, that to this day has done so much damage to the German psyche. Much has been said of the Marshall Plan and how it helped Germany to get back on her feet. True enough, but before one considers this point one must mention that for some years after the German capitulation, the barbarous policies of the vengeful Morgenthau Plan were imposed, causing tremendous and unnecessary hardship for an already impoverished and famished population. Thankfully, there was a belated recognition, especially by the smaller neighboring states of Germany (including some that had formerly been enemies), that Europe could only recuperate if Germany got its health back.

The establishment of the West German Bundesrepublik in 1949, and, soon thereafter, of the now deceased GDR, seems, in retrospect, to have been the natural outcome of the different occupation zones/Cold War combination. As if there had been no chance to retain a unified Germany "in spite of the best efforts of the allied lovers of peace and justice"! It must be mentioned, however, that it had been French policy for centuries to strive for a dismembered Reich, and the aforementioned Gomberg Map of 1941 proves that certain influential forces in the United States worked along the same lines. In other words, the wrongful division of Germany and Europe for more than 40 years could not have occurred without the tacit agreement, if not the wholehearted connivance, of men in high places of the United States Government.

(Today it is still claimed that the events surrounding the erection of the Berlin Wall on 13 August 1961, with the resulting splitting of the German capital in two for 28 horrible years, were also a logical sequence of political events that just got out of hand. But there are indications that the whole unjust endeavor might have been mutually planned by behind the scenes forces (in Washington and Moscow) who believed that the Germans had not suffered sufficiently for their alleged crimes in World War II. One can only hope that future historians will have access to hitherto secret archives that shed some light on these happenings. It might be a good idea to delve into the files of former "Soviet" and "American" disarmament negotiators who, throughout the Cold War, held fairly regular meetings in Geneva or Vienna, never forgetting that the prevention of a resurrected Reich was still in their mutual interest and, probably, at the top of the agenda.)

The reunification of Germany taking place at this very time is NOT the result of any correct or benign action by any or all of the four WW II allies. It has occurred only because of circumstances that made a change in the allied posture necessary. As a matter of fact, up to the summer of 1989 the preservation of the 1945 status quo in Europe (i.e. the political reality that was based upon the wrongful division of Germany) was the foundation of allied, including American, policy. It was the U.S. Government that seems to have put the least number of obstacles in the way of the Germans once reunification became inevitable. Considering the dismal record of nearly one hundred years of U.S. policy vs. Germany, and with a view toward a more just and better future, this was the least that could have been done.

2. Glasnost

What does the Russian word "glasnost" have to do with the relationship between Germany and the United States? Simply this: while in the Soviet Union there are at least tentative efforts afoot to "fill in the blank spots of history", to quote Mikhail Gorbachev (although we note that such "filling in" has not, as yet, included admitting Stalin's plan to attack Germany (the primary reason for Hitler's preemptive strike), one must regretfully state that "America" cannot be budged to dismount to the slightest degree from the high moral horse upon which it climbed sometime around the turn of the century and onto which it is still holding fast in spite of the fact that some of the most horrible war crimes ever perpetrated were committed in the name, or with the tacit agreement, of this nation. In other words, "glasnost" and repentance are needed in the United States also!

In the fall of 1989, the writer James Bacque published a book in Canada entitled Other Losses, which made very serious charges of responsibility for war crimes against one of America's war heroes, former President General Dwight D. Eisenhower. Bacque, in his well-researched book, came to the conclusion that Eisenhower was responsible for the killing through hunger, disease and intentional neglect of approximately one million German POWs at the end of World War II.

Soon after its publication Other Losses became a best seller in Canada, and in translation under the title Der geplante Tod, in Germany also. Especially in Germany, Bacque's revelation reawakened memories of former German soldiers who had fallen into American hands at war's end, and also of civilians who had lived near "Eisenhower's death camps" in 1945. Many of the stories confirmed that which hitherto had been a tightly kept secret, a secret to the keeping of which the West German Government must have been an accomplice for policy reasons.

"America" reacted to Other Losses in a manner which is directly contrary to the very ideals of this nation, among them being the freedoms of expression, information, the press and of the eternal quest for the truth. Other Losses was withheld from the American people easily enough since no U.S. publisher dared to add it to its line. A few newspapers wrote articles concerning this surprising book that became a bestseller in neighboring Canada, but, since Other Losses stayed unavailable in the major book stores of this country, it was as if it had never been published at all. U.S. censorship by silence was as effective as was the former prohibition of the great Russian writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn's books by the Soviets. (As this is being written, Other Losses is still generally unknown and unavailable in the U.S. There are rumors, however, that St. Martin's Press will bring it out "soon". The delay may be caused by piety, so as not to interfere with the 100th anniversary of the birth of the accused president in the middle of October 1990).

German American organizations mailed copies of Other Losses to well-known newspapers and columnists, and asked them to review the book. The declining answer was always based on the same excuse: "Bacque's charges were unproven, probably exaggerated, difficult to ascertain, and so far have not been accepted as serious by 'reputable' historians." This came from newspapers that print everything and anything including the most ludicrous "Holocaust" stories laid against World War II Germans. But all this was topped by a letter from the Department of Defense wherein someone pared Bacque's "about a million German POWs killed" figure down to "at most 25,000 German POWs succumbed to the unavoidable deprivations connected with the chaos at war's end".

Our organization has within its ranks former members of all the services of the armed forces of World War II Germany. A number fell into American hands or voluntarily went into American captivity in the spring of 1945. The experiences of these ex-soldiers were generally much alike, and prove a nearly complete disregard for the articles of the Geneva Convention of 1929 pertaining to the treatment of Prisoners of War by the United States Army. Prisoners were purposely starved although more than ample food was available. Many were beaten and their personal effects, including blankets, spoons and tents, taken away. Many were prevented from contacting their families for up to two years. Hundreds of thousands were "given" to the French and British as slave laborers (tens of thousands of these died). Many others were turned over to the Soviets, to succumb in the wide reaches of Siberia. The holding pens for hundreds of thousands of POWs in the notorious Rhinemeadow "camps" had no shelter whatsoever (although frequently nearby unused factory buildings could have been used), no sanitary facilities, and no means to cook what little food was given out. Daily, the many dead were removed on pushcarts and unceremoniously thrown into mass graves. No one counted them, no one took down their names. Often they died anonymously only a few miles from their families, each just one more addition to the 800,000 or so German soldiers of World War II who remain missing to this day.

If James Bacque claims 1 million dead German POWs, and the DOD assumes the number to be about "25,000", why doesn't the United States Army, in the interest of preserving the honor of its highest ranking World War II general, come out with the exact number of German POW casualties of that time? The reason is obvious: the exact number of Germans who died in American captivity is unknown because German lives counted for nothing. But this is the same army that took it for granted that losses of American POWs in German hands amounted to only about 1% (vs. approx. 50% who died in Japanese captivity), and it is also a fact that at war's end the Germans were able to account for nearly every American who was captured by the Germans. (All this in spite of nearly unsurmountable difficulties connected with the breakdown of German power. Several thousand of the Americans who were in German hands remain missing to this day because they were "liberated" by America's Bolshevik allies, and probably ended up in the Gulag). It must also be brought out that most of the Germans who died in American POW cages succumbed after the cessation of hostilities. It is one thing to inflict losses on the enemy during the fighting; it is entirely another matter if unnecessary deaths are purposely caused after the fighting has ceased. That is plain murder!

Those who served in the German Wehrmacht in that great war wonder how their American adversaries of that long ago era can keep a straight face, and retain a good conscience, when they read in American newspapers of 1990 that "another 'Nazi war criminal' was discovered, and deported from the United States". Is the American conscience so numbed by incessant propaganda (the heroes vs. the villains) that nobody ever wonders why no allied war criminals are ever called to account? Or, is there really the inherent belief that whatever crimes Americans and their allies did commit during the war were just, since they were committed in the furtherance of "democracy"? Now that Eastern Europe is being liberated from Communism, and the true story of that insane system is being told, should not ALL former U.S. soldiers remember that the Bolsheviks would have been able to conquer ALL of Europe had it not been for the heroism and the sacrifice of the German World War II soldier? Imagine, the Russian steamroller overrunning Europe in the summer of 1941, and, with the tacit assistance of the United States, reaching the Atlantic by the onset of the winter in the same year! Would "America", safe behind thousands of miles of water, ever have been able to liberate Europe again?

Individual former U.S. soldiers have come out and have acknowledged American responsibility, if not guilt, for transgressions committed in the name of our nation. And there are many examples of individual G.I.s in 1945 and 1946 taking it upon themselves to circumvent particularly obnoxious or unethical orders from their superiors thus saving the lives of German men, women and children. These individual American soldiers did more for a future good relationship between Germany and the U.S. than all Marshall Plans and other seemingly magnanimous government initiatives.

One should consider, for instance, the fallacious belief among many Americans that the "Peace of 1945" was truly generous and proof of America's kindheartedness. How little does the population of this nation know! Consider all the transgressions of the allied victors; the millions of rapes (by contrast, Germans were by far the most gentlemanly of all the major combatants); the indiscriminate pillage; the torching of entire towns (yes, by the Western allies also!); the expulsions and wholesale murder of millions; the planned starvation; the cruel treatment of the German POWs; the elimination through murder and other methods of Germany's natural élite; the theft of all German foreign assets; the destruction by dismantling of the industrial capacity (and places of work!); the thievery inside the Reich; the wanton destruction of Germany's cultural heritage; the "reëducation" and resulting demoralization of the entire people; the arbitrary "denazification" and hunt for alleged "war criminals"; the artificial division of Germany; the destruction by "demontage" and, through the use of dynamite, of the remaining factories; the theft of Germany's most valuable patents; the confiscation of what remained of the German fleet, of the rolling stock of the railroads, of each and every single plane; the "sale" of German soldiers as slave laborers to other nations, and, not the least, the purposeful refusal to sign a peace treaty for more than four decades... May God prevent that the United States should ever suffer such a "magnanimous" peace at the hands of her enemies, should this nation lose a war! (Please note Appendix 1 for an allegory on this subject matter.)

How to conclude a proper peace even with an "aggressor nation" (which Germany was alleged to have been in the Second World War) one could learn from the way Germany treated France in 1815 after Napoleon's defeat, and again in 1871. Or how Bismarck's Prussia treated vanquished Austria in 1866.

The greatest war crime ever of European history occurred between 1945 and 1947, after the cessation of hostilities, when about 15 million Germans were forcibly driven from their ancestral homes, villages and cities beyond the Oder-Neisse rivers and the Sudeten Mountains, deprived of all their possessions, and when about 3 million of them, mostly women and children, were killed in the process. The United States Government was a willing partner to this crime. To this day American school children learn nothing of this event; no docu-dramas about it are ever made for TV; no books telling of the sufferings of the expelled and murdered East Germans are being translated and sold in American bookstores. In the "Land of the Free" one doesn't want to be reminded of this event, presumably because these brutalized Germans were "guilty" of something. After all, they were Germans and had generally supported the war effort of their own country.

Apart from being a partner in the crime when it occurred, the United States Government compounded its unjust behavior when it never, ever, made amends, nor called for a rectification of the injustice when the occasion arose after the breakdown of Communism in Eastern Europe. Instead, in 1990 this government was an accessory in blackmailing the West German Kohl Government: "Either recognize the loss of the German lands beyond the Oder-Neisse Line, and write off the individual claims of millions of Germans to their homes and farms in the east, or you will miss the chance for Germany to be reunited!". Chancellor Helmut Kohl, in making this allied condition public and thereby pointing out that his government was acting under duress, he thusly declared, perhaps unwittingly, the "4+2 Treaty of Moscow" null and void. Any lawyer can confirm that.

Is Poland, which currently possesses about a quarter of the territory that had been German for 800 years, now more secure in its borders? Has the German Polish border really become a "Friedensgrenze", a "Border of Peace", as the Communists called it? Below we shall quote the words of a German patriot:

> Certainly, the Poles shall—like all other peoples in Europe—be able to live in secure borders. And, precisely because that is my wish for them, I cannot agree that the Oder-Neisse line become the permanent German Polish border. This is a border based upon injustice, and cannot possibly secure peace for our coming generations.
> I do not want another war over the German-Polish border. But no German parliament, no German government can know how future generations will feel about the Oder-Neisse border, and therefore nobody is really able to give "eternal" guarantees pertaining to it. An Oder-Neisse border may mean that one day a strong Germany will not only take back the territories that rightfully belong to the Reich but, in a replay of current allied practice, annex in addition a quarter of truly Polish territory including the cities of Cracow and Czestochowa, up to the gates of Warsaw. And Germans would have the "right" (because it was done to them before) to remove from these age old Polish terrritories all the Poles living there, taking into account that several million of them may succumb in the process. For, so far not one Polish politician or prelate has expressed his regrets to the Germans for the crimes associated with the expulsion, and for the criminal expulsion itself. On the contrary, Polish priests go so far as to claim that the theft of the 800 year old German provinces was a "restitution of formerly Polish lands". In light of this, the question must be asked, whether we shall be able to build a new Europe based upon such flagrant lies and injustice.

M.R.

It is time for the United States to fully investigate its rôle in this war crime and to forego short term (imagined!) political advantages vis-à-vis Poland in the interest of greater justice, and to assure that a stance according to prevailing international law is assumed in this matter. (It is perhaps too much to hope that the National Endowment for the Arts could be induced to allocate some of the hard-earned tax dollars of German-Americans away from pornography and insults to Christianity, and fund a docu-drama that informs the people of this nation of what really transpired in Central Europe in those fateful postwar years.)

Regarding the alleged German "war criminals", and the ethnically prejudiced OSI (Office of Special Investigations) of the Justice Department, the question can be asked as to whether it might not be wise to create a German-American or Arab-American staffed subdivision of the OSI with a main objective of ferreting out Mideast war criminals frequently entering the United States. For instance, those who gained expertise in breaking children's bones during the Palestinian Intifada, and the dynamiters of the Palestinians' homes? And those even tangentially associated with the torture of Palestinian prisoners, the massacres at Sabra and Shatilla, the bombing of the U.S. Marine barracks in Lebanon, and the murderous attack on the U.S.S. Liberty? Or, how about a Polish-American, Ukrainian-American, (real) Russian-American staffed OSI division that searches for the KGB criminals responsible for Katyn (and a thousand other places where the skeletal remains of alleged victims of Germans or German victims lie)? We are bringing this up since we fervently believe in the constitutionally guaranteed "equality before justice". Could one trust the present team of OSI prosecutors to delve into the crimes against humanity of the original Bolsheviks and their genetically related NKVD murderers? One cannot conceive that such atrocities have ever been bared to the American public via its media services!

Eternal justice may play a rôle in the regrettable fact that currently NASA, the American space agency, is having serious problems in getting its space shuttles aloft. As this occurs, German Americans cannot help but think of Dr. Arthur Rudolph, one of the men most instrumental in getting an American to walk on the moon, who was ignominiously railroaded out of this country as a "Nazi" war criminal by so-called "American" OSI war crimes investigators. But what should hundreds of international passengers in airports around this country think when ambitious inspectors of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, following the orders of that small band of fanatical zealots of the OSI, keep them behind the gates for up to five hours after their arrival in the United States, as happened recently to people arriving from Switzerland at Los Angeles airport? (Why do we not hear from the "free press" and other media about this?)

Do American government officials, Congressmen, journalists, academicians and captains of industry feel especially proud of their country and its Constitution when they read that an elderly German traveler on a world trip was "nabbed" at an overnight stay at the airport in Honolulu and incarcerated for many months because he had not fully stated his German wartime service on an application for an American transit visa? Or, that another elderly German in the same predicament was fined over $50,000 for the same offense? How would former USAF bomber pilots feel, if, 45 years after World War II, they were incarcerated in Germany or Japan for not telling the Germans or Japanese on a visit that they had "partaken in the 'persecution' of unarmed civilians" when bombing Dresden, Hamburg, Tokyo, Hiroshima and a thousand other "targets"?
Enough of that. We believe that we should bring up these things to lead more Americans to view both sides of every story and definitely try to put away the mantle of holiness, and of that 1944 crusader spirit, that seems so prevalent in this society. We close this chapter with a reprint of part of an article by Edgar L. Jones, entitled "One War is Enough", that appeared in the Atlantic Monthly in February of 1946, at the very time when the infamous Nuremberg kangaroo court show trials were being held. We bring it up to show how little progress has been made since then: Mr. Jones' words are as valid today as they were then. But how many Americans acknowledge this truth, and accept the consequences? (See APPENDIX II for additional comment on this matter.)

3. A matter of law

As of the writing of this Paper, no Peace Treaty has as yet been signed between Germany and the allied victor nations of the Second World War. There is no need to go into detail why this is so; it suffices to say that this state of affairs came about because the victors found it in their interest not to permit the shaping of such a treaty, and the Germans, the vanquished, were powerless to insist on it. The result is that, like it or not, as of now, a State of War still exists between the United States of America (and others) and Germany.

On September 12, 1990 the "Treaty on the final settlement with respect to Germany" was signed in Moscow by the "4 plus 2" powers, and it was subsequently ratified by the United States Senate on October 10, 1990. Everyone hopes this treaty can be accepted in lieu of a peace treaty by all the nations concerned. But will it? Or should it?

Most of Germany has sufficiently recovered from the ravages of war that it can now be counted as one of the major nations of the world. It should be immune to foreign blackmail. However, a correct reading of the "Treaty of Moscow" shows that in severity it even surpasses the notorious "Treaty of Versailles" of 1919! As noted, that this new treaty has also the makings of a "dictate" can be clearly seen by West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's statement: "If we (Germans) do not accept the present German Polish border as final, then we miss our chance for reunification". At any rate, the "united Germany", as it is so coyly named in this new treaty, had to agree, among other things, to the permanent loss to the German nation of over 25% of its territory, and to sacrificing the rights of the many millions of those Germans (with the loss of all their private property there) who lived in those ancestral lands. Will future German generations accept this dismemberment of their nation?

Is the September 1990 "Treaty of Moscow" legal and internationally binding? The answer might be found below in the translation of a treatise on the current legal status of Germany as written by Professor Dr. Muench of Heidelberg, an expert on international law:

1. The German Reich continues its existence under the name BUNDESREPUBLIK DEUTSCHLAND, which is, however, only a partial successor. NO PARTIAL SUCCESSOR MAY ACT IN THE NAME OF THE REICH! (West German Supreme Court judgments of 1973, 1975, 1987).

2. Since 1945, the right of self determination has been part of international law (ius cogens), and it became a part of the Vienna Convention of 23 May 1969. Therefore, no present German Government has the right to relinquish German rights to annexed areas such as the Sudetenland (and Silesia, Pomerania, East Brandenburg, Danzig and East Prussia, HS) as long as the right to self determination of the expelled Germans (or their heirs, HS), and that of the Germans still living in these areas, has not been taken into consideration.
   Every treaty which does not recognize the right to self determination of the population in question, and does not address itself to the legal right of these people to be part of the Reich or its successors, is, according to the above named Vienna Convention (which was ratified by the United States also, HS), null and void. The rights granted by this Vienna Convention cannot fall under any Statute of Limitations (UN Convention, 27 November 1968), nor be unilaterally abandoned (Geneva Convention of 1949, Art. 8)

3. The internationally binding borders of the German Reich are those of 1 August 1914, plus those of 1 September 1939. (However, the Czech Republic was a protectorate and not part of the Reich),
   a) Because the Treaty of Versailles was formulated without the contribution of the German Reich, and was created to the disadvantage of a third party (res inter alios acta), and was signed under duress (Vienna Convention of 1969, Art.52), it was from its inception null & void.

b) The unilateral delineation of the legal border of the German Reich under the 31 December 1937 date by the Berlin declaration of the four (victor) powers on 5 June 1945, is, according to international law which prohibits unilateral agreements to the disadvantage of third parties, null and void. (Vienna Convention of 1969, Article 34). In fact, only the occupation zones were legally established at that time.

4. The rights and obligations ("supreme power") which the allied victors assumed in 1945 could only have been those of occupation powers, according to the The Hague Laws of War of 1907, of which the 1945 victors were signatories. Therefore, the following actions by the victors were transgressions against international law:
   a) The incarceration of the Reich Government on 21 May 1945.
   b) Military tribunals which were held under a complete disregard of the most basic judicial principles and which led to death sentences resulting from faked documents. (The London Agreement of 8 August 1945 is null and void since it created hitherto non existing legal principles on which the judgments of the IMT at Nuremberg were based.)
   c) Interference in inner affairs of the Reich for instance, the eradication of the State of Prussia.
   d) The annexation by others of German Reich territory.
   e) The expulsion of the Germans from the annexed territories and the confiscation of their private property (Geneva Convention of 1949).
   f) The resettlement in occupied or annexed German territories of non Germans. The latter have no permanent rights in these areas (UN agreement regarding the British organized elections at Gibraltar, Geneva Convention of 1949, Article 49).

   (Incidentally, the Hague Convention of 1907 in which the Laws of War was promulgated, was convened by President Theodore Roosevelt of the United States, and the Russian Czar. One more reason for the U.S. to abide by it. HS)

5. Local treaties are only valid in so far as they pertain to agreements to prevent the use of force but not if they concern any renunciation of German territory (West German Supreme Court, 17 July 1975).

6. The elimination of the German people as the "Staatsvolk" of the Bundesrepublik (and Reich, HS) through massive immigration of non-Germans and the granting to them of German citizenship, and through the right of domicile (anywhere) as a result of the "European integration", is unconstitutional. The Basic Law (Constitution of 1949) proscribes the duty to the continued existence of the identity of the German "Staatsvolk". (West German Supreme Court, 21 October 1987.)

Thus goes Dr. Muench's treatise. Interestingly, the four allied victor nations who were the signers of the Moscow Treaty seem to acknowledge these finer points of international law. Reading excerpts of this treaty as published on 13 September 1990 by the London Financial Times, and reprinted in facsimile below, makes this clearly apparent. Note the term "united Germany". It was cleverly chosen to circumvent the rights and obligations of The Reich that de jure are still in existence. What we see here is the continuation of the status quo of 1945, and thereby the policies of the major victors, by other means. THERE CAN BE NO QUESTION ABOUT THIS FACT: THE SEPTEMBER 1990 TREATY OF MOSCOW IS SERIOUSLY FLAWED, AND CANNOT WITHSTAND CLOSE SCRUTINY IN REGARD TO INTERNATIONAL LAW. EVEN NOW, 45 YEARS AFTER THE CAPITULATION OF THE GERMAN WEHRMACHT (but not of the Reich!), IT CANNOT BE REGARDED AS A TREATY OF PEACE. THAT IS STILL IN THE OFFING.

"Nothing is settled permanently unless it be settled fairly and amicably."
Abraham Lincoln

The victorious allies stated in their Potsdam Agreement on the 2nd of August 1945 that "the German (Eastern) territories are being put under Polish and respectively Soviet administration, pending a formal delineation of the border through a peace treaty between all parties concerned." And, the three Western powers agreed as co signers of the 1954 "Deutschland Vertrag" (Treaty on Germany) that was ratified by the U.S. Senate, to do nothing that would interfere with this interpretation of the situation. In other words, to this day the German territories beyond the Oder-Neisse rivers are merely under Polish and Soviet administration, pending a formal peace treaty. The current "Treaty of Moscow", however, cannot be accepted in lieu of a peace treaty, since under international law the German people are presently not free and sovereign (and therefore are not entitled to sign "eternally" binding treaties) as long as foreign (occupation) troops are on German soil. The claim that American, British, French and Soviet troops are in Germany "as friends and allies" doesn't hold under the international statutes.

Furthermore, the Atlantic Charter of 12 August 1941, the UN Declaration on Human Rights of 10 February 1948, and the UN Declaration concerning the expulsion of people from their ancestral lands, AND the unanimous vote of the UN Security Council of 22 November 1967 regarding the illegality of unilateral annexations, make abundantly clear that, at this moment in history, nobody, including the parliaments of "East" and West Germany, or (soon) that of "United Germany", has the right to relinquish German vested rights in the territories in question.

FINAL SETTLEMENT FOR GERMANY AT 2 PLUS 4 NEGOTIATIONS

TEXT OF EXCERPTS FROM THE LONDON FINANCIAL TIMES, 13 SEPTEMBER 1990

THE Federal Republic of Germany, the German Democratic Republic, the French Republic, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America...

Convinced that the unification of Germany as a state with definitive borders is a significant contribution to peace and stability in Europe...

Recognising that thereby, and with the unification of Germany as a democratic and peaceful state, the rights and responsibilities of the Four Powers relating to Berlin and to Germany as a whole lose their function...

Have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1

1. The united Germany shall comprise the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany, the German Democratic Republic and the whole of Berlin. Its external borders shall be the borders of the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic and shall be definitive from the date on which the present treaty comes into force. The confirmation of the definitive nature of the borders of the united Germany is an essential element of the peaceful order in Europe.

2. The united Germany and the Republic of Poland shall confirm the existing border between them in a treaty that is binding under international law .

3. The united Germany has no territorial claims whatsoever against other states and shall not assert any in the future.

4. The governments of the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic shall ensure that the constitution of the united Germany does not contain any provision incompatible with these principles...

5. The governments of the French Republic, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America take formal note of the corresponding commitments and declarations by the governments of the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic and declare that their implementation will confirm the definitive nature of the united Germany's borders.

> 'The united Germany has no territorial claims whatsoever against other states and shall not assert any in the future'

ARTICLE 2

The governments of the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic reaffirm their declaration that only peace will emanate from German soil. According to the constitution of the united Germany, acts tending to and undertaken with the intent to disturb the peaceful relations between nations, especially to prepare for aggressive war, are unconstitutional and a punishable offence...

ARTICLE 3

1. The governments of the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic reaffirm their renunciation of the manufacture and possession of and control over nuclear, biological and chemical weapons. They declare that the united Germany, too, will abide by these commitments. In particular, rights and obligations arising from the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons of 1 July 1968 will continue to apply to the united Germany.

2. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany, acting in full agreement with the Government of the German Democratic Republic, made the following statement on 30 August 1990 in Vienna at the negotiations on conventional armed forces in Europe:

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany undertakes to reduce the personnel strength of the armed forces of the united Germany to 370,000 (ground, air and naval forces) within three to four years. This reduction will commence on the entry into force of the first CFE agreement. Within the scope of this overall ceiling no more than 345,000 will belong to the ground and air forces which, pursuant to the agreed mandate, alone are the subject of the negotiations on conventional armed forces in Europe.

The Federal Government regards its commitment to reduce ground and air forces as a significant German contribution to the reduction of conventional armed forces in Europe. It assumes that in follow-on negotiations the other participants in the negotiations, too, will render their contribution to enhancing security and stability in Europe, including measures to limit personnel strengths.

The Government of the German Democratic Republic has expressly associated itself with this statement..

ARTICLE 4

1. The governments of the Federal Republic of Germany, the German Democratic Republic and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics state that the united Germany and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will settle by treaty the conditions for and the duration of the presence of Soviet armed forces on the territory of the present German Democratic Republic and of Berlin, as well as the conduct of the withdrawal of these armed forces which will be completed by the end of 1994...

ARTICLE 5

1. Until the completion of the withdrawal of the Soviet armed forces from the territory of the present German Democratic Republic and of Berlin in accordance with Article 4 of the present treaty, only German territorial defence units which are not integrated into the alliance structures to which German armed forces in the rest of German territory are assigned will be stationed in that territory as armed forces of the united Germany.

During that period and subject to the provisions of paragraph 2 of this article, armed forces of other states will not be stationed in that territory or carry out any other military activity there.

2. For the duration of the presence of Soviet armed forces in the territory of the present German Democratic Republic and of Berlin, armed forces of the French Republic, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America will, upon German request, remain stationed in Berlin by agreement to this effect between the Government of the united Germany and the governments of the states concerned...

'The governments of the Federal and Democratic Republics reaffirm that only peace shall emanate from German soil'

3. Following the completion of the withdrawal of the Soviet armed forces from the territory of the present German Democratic Republic and of Berlin, units of German armed forces assigned to military alliance structures in the same way as those in the rest of German territory may also be stationed in that part of Germany, but without nuclear weapon carriers. This does not apply to conventional weapon systems which may have other capabilities in addition to conventional ones but which in that part of Germany are equipped for a conventional role and designated only for such. Foreign armed forces and nuclear weapons or their carriers will not be stationed in that part of Germany or deployed there.

ARTICLE 6

The right of the united Germany to belong to alliances, with all the rights and responsibilities arising therefrom, shall not be affected by the present treaty.

ARTICLE 7

1. The French Republic, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America hereby terminate their rights and responsibilities relating to Berlin and to Germany as a whole. As a result, the corresponding, related quadripartite agreements, decisions and practices are terminated and all related Four Power institutions are dissolved.

2. The united Germany shall have accordingly full sovereignty over its internal and external affairs.

ARTICLE 8

1. The present treaty is subject to ratification or acceptance as soon as possible. On the German side it will be ratified by the united Germany. The treaty will therefore apply to the united Germany...

ARTICLE 9

The present treaty shall enter into force for the united Germany, the French Republic, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics , the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America on the date of deposit of the last instrument of ratification or acceptance by these states...

Perhaps this is the place to ask the following question: If a "Europe without frontiers" is supposed to be created that reaches from the Atlantic ocean to the Ural mountains, a Europe which permits freedom of movement and open trade between all its nations, why this irrational insistence on the permanence of the Oder-Neisse line as the "eternal" Polish-German border? Is is not sufficient that the Germans declared of their own free will NOT to alter this border through means of war? Or, is there a general assumption that the Helsinki Agreements between most European nations (of which the United States was also a signatory), which disavowed war as a means to further political ends—but which permit the alteration of borders through negotiations—were not worth the paper on which they were written? And, can one create a new Europe through such anomalies whereby the Germans acknowledge Jewish private property rights on their territory even after more than 55 years have elapsed (and pay compensation if no reinstatement of the property is possible) while the Poles do not acknowledge any claims of the millions of Germans driven from their ancestral lands after only 45 years? How valid will Polish assurances of respect for private property rights be in the future?

At a time when the American ruling establishment seems to have communal apoplexy over the annexation of a sparsely populated desert sheikdom in the Middle East by a blood-related neighboring country, it seems very odd that absolutely no concern for the legal rights of the millions of expelled Silesians, East Prussians, Brandenburgers and Pomeranians is expressed. Well informed politicians in Washington must know that most of the Poles currently living in the German territories were not expellees themselves as is frequently claimed by Polish authorities; only about 1,5 million Poles were after the war transferred from so-called "Eastern" Poland (an area in which the Poles had always been a minority anyway). The other Poles moved to (true) East Germany from Central Poland since the (then still existing) infrastructure of the German lands was so much better. They can be compared to the Soviet Jews settling now—against almost everybody's will—on the Palestinian West Bank. One cannot suppress the suspicion that the failure of the 1945 victors, and especially of the United States Government, to help settle the German-Polish border justly can only derive from a desire a) to keep a potential trouble spot in Europe aglow, and b) to keep Germany from becoming too strong (a united Germany with the additional territory rightfully belonging to the Reich would be less dependent on imports and exports, and hence be less susceptible to political blackmail).

Also, and this concerns German hegemony in Europe directly: Over decades, it may cost the West Germans up to 1,000 billion marks to bring so called "East"-Germany (actually middle Germany, "Mitteldeutschland") up to Western standards, an incredible sum of money that can only be raised because West Germany is economically and socially one of the most progressive nations on earth, and because the "East" Germans are, after all, Germans. Poland, however, is in worse shape than is the former "GDR". Although nearly the size (85%) of the reunited parts of Germany, and in possession of some of the richest provinces of the German Reich (including all of the Silesian industry) and with a population of nearly 38 million, it has the living standard of a third world country.

There is not the slightest chance that the Poles can, without outside help, lift themselves out of their economic and social morass. And, logically, there is currently only one nation that could help (after its own needs due to the reunification are taken care of): Germany! The Soviet Union is out of the picture. The United States is already hard pressed for cash and will eventually have to curtail its foreign aid programs, including the massive help for Israel. France and Great Britain may assist the Poles somewhat (probably in gratitude for services rendered in 1939), but not on the scale needed. Yet, the Poles still believe that they can blithely overlook German legal and cultural claims to Silesia, Pomerania and Eastern Prussia, while asking for German handouts. Might one coin the word "Unrealpolitik" for the policies of the Polish leadership?

What would Americans say if one day Amerindians and the Eskimos with the assistance of their genetic relatives the Chinese—all anthropological kinsmen as Mongols—would claim and eventually recover about a quarter or more of the United States western territory? After all, the initial 13 states of the Union have been in existence for 200 years only; not to speak of the additional 37 states, most of which have been added as late as in the course of the 19th century. Considering the potential weight of more than one billion of these Asiatic cousins, such a scenario could indeed develop into an ethnic devolution leading to a demographic rout in the future political arena. South Africa is already under the spell of a similar predicament. Indeed, such an American scenario would readily amplify the ruthless expulsion of 15 million Germans expelled after the Second World War from their homeland which they civilized and cultivated for nearly a thousand years.

The United States would do much better to accept the Germans' return to their territories east of the Oder-Neisse rivers not only for cultural, economic and political considerations but because of the strategic importance of the pincer-shaped defense line of the Reich's eastern border (from Silesia to East Prussia) which in view of the unavoidably mounting Asiatic population explosion virtually guarantees consolidation and stability for the European security system, including Russia as well! No unbiased Western security system can overlook with impunity the basic truth that Germany is already the powerhouse of Europe. Today Poland may capitalize on anti-German envy, on overblown pride and never ending claims vs. Germany, and she is again under the spell of British bifrontal intrigue. Yet, age-old geopolitical factors determining her unstable existence unmistakably prevent her from becoming the heartland of Europe. For Poland too it would be much better to work for a realistic formula of coexistence with Germany. After all, 700 years ago the joint German Polish knighthood was capable of stopping the Tartar invasion at Liegnitz (1242), and it is also true that the first Polish kingdom was essentially a creation of the First German Reich.

> The fact that the victorious powers of World War II decided at the end of that great world conflagration to impose such a hard fate on millions and, with the utmost of brutality, proves how unprepared they were (morally and ethically) for the great task to create a better and more just new order.

In defense of their dishonorable rôle in this greatest European war crime ever, the Western allies frequently like to point to Joseph Stalin as the main culprit. Be that as it may, it is one of the main tenets of Western jurisprudence that an accessory to a crime is as guilty as is its originator, especially if the accessory was an active participant in it, as was the case with the expulsion of the East Germans.

Furthermore, the Western powers, and especially the United States, undoubtedly have cemented their culpability in the outrage 45 years after the fact when the issue was not raised in 1990, at a time when a return to justice would have been possible through the simple expedient of insisting on the strict adherence to international law by all parties concerned, in other words, including Germany, Poland and the Soviet Union. And, how can one seriously insist on correcting the wrongs committed by Stalin (for instance, in the Baltics and inside Russia itself) when one permits one of his greatest criminal triumphs to stand unchallenged?

4. "Letters to the Editor"

The relationship between the United States and Germany also deeply affects the relationship of this government with its own German minority, the largest ethnic group in the union. If one were to ask the average American how he thinks German Americans are treated by this society, the answer would probably be "good" or "fairly", exactly the same response one would get from the majority of German Americans themselves. (It seems to be a German trait to accept injustices done to them or sufferings caused by others without complaining, rather matter of factly. We know of Germans whose entire families were killed in American air raids during the war, and who will merely state, without any rancor, that their parents and siblings "had perished in the war". Yet these same Germans will get emotionally upset when hearing stories of so-called "Holocaust survivors" that more often than not ought to be questioned for veracity).

Are German Americans treated fairly? One only has to turn on the television set on any given day and select one of the numerous programs that ostensibly pertain only to "Nazis" (but which in fact denigrate all Germans, including German-Americans) to find an answer. The fact that this still continuing World War II propaganda affects all Germans and the entire German culture can be clearly seen from just one instance: The learning of the German language in American high schools has been steadily declining, and a correlation with the "anti-Nazi" programs can easily be found. Who wants to learn the language of brutal murderers and incompetent fools? The hundreds of millions of dollars the West German "Goethe Institute" has been spending every year to promote the German language and culture is squandered uselessly so long as Bonn and the Goethe Institute are unwilling to tackle those who produce that garbage. If someone doubts the facts of this matter, one should only consider taking any Hollywood script pertaining to WW II Germans, and making a movie replacing the word German or "Nazi" with the name of one of the more vociferous minorities... We can hear the complaints already.

John Peter Zenger was America's first and foremost fighter for freedom of the press. Little did he realize that his own "tribe" would someday be almost totally shut out by the American establishment press, and that writers and journalists of German descent would only have a chance at being published and for advancement if they did not delve too deeply into their own national background or defend their heritage (the same holds true for the Germans in the Soviet Union).

Those who read this Position Paper should ask themselves when was the last time they saw a "Letter to the Editor" in one of the better-known U.S. newspapers pertaining to politics, written and signed by an officer of one of the thousands of German-American organizations? You, undoubtedly, cannot recall such a letter.

For the past several years some of our organizations have made a concerted effort to send short, well composed letters to the major newspapers in their area anytime such a statement was deemed necessary in order to set the record straight, or to inform the public. Some organizations even went so far as to "test" newspapers by writing a Letter to the Editor on any matter of public interest every week for nearly a year. The result was always the same, everywhere: Letters by German-American organizations (and well known German American political activists), rarely get printed. To test this matter further, fake letters allegedly written by "Holocaust" "survivors" were sent to the same newspapers, telling the most absurd tales and frequently containing such impossibilities that a second grader could discern the falsehood. Yet these letters were invariably printed as long as the signers were named Rosenblum, Levy, Cohen, etc. The few "German" letters one sees in print are usually written by "Neu-Deutschen" born after World War II who express their shame to be Germans, and acknowledge their eternal guilt.

In light of this we reprint below an editorial from the New York Times of October 3, 1990 the day the two remnants of the Reich were reunited. This editorial needs a point by point answer. Judging by our past "decades" of experience with the NYT, it is useless to try to get a Letter to the Editor printed. We therefore use this unique opportunity to place our comments in this Paper, hoping that those in power will have a chance to peruse the comments as if they were printed in the American "newspaper of record" whose "all the news that's fit to print" does not include the other side of the story of World War II.

Germans, First Class and Second

Today, the two German states become one. But will the two German peoples, having grown apaert for 41 years, come together, and what values will they share? Much of Europe's future hangs on that German question. And only Germans can answer it.

Some of their answers so far are not very reassuring. A West German salesclerk complains: "They think that because theu haven't had anything for 40 years they can demand it all now."

Every time we hear West Germans talking about unity, it's always, "what will it cost?" says an East German banker. "We're second-class citizens and it won't stop Oct. 3."

West Germans who have known unparalleled productivity and prosperity may have the empathy to respond to what their East German cousins have endured, and with generosity. But if they treat Easterners as poor relations, they're certain to cause lasting resentment.

Successful unification involves more than sharing wealth. It als requires an honest confrontation with history. After the war, the East's Communist master Protrayed West Germans as the sole heirs to Nazism and absolved East Germans of all blame. Until last semester, East German schoolchildren were indoctrinated in the virtues of Communism; now they are suddenly and without explanation taught to extol democracy.

Walling off the past is dangerous. Talking about it could help foster the openess, tolerance and patience that democratic politics demands. Taking responsibility for the past is an important step tp taking responsibility for the future.

That responsibility extends beyond the borders of Germanyt. The world is not only counting on the Germans to get unification right this time; it is also hoping that a reborn Germany can help bring all of Europe together.

Neighbors rightly wonder how Germans can reach out to them while begrudging each other. That's especially troubling to those east of Germany, beyond the Oder-Neisse border, which threatens to become the poverty line of Europe. West Germany's leaders have for the most part responded to these worries with sensitivity, showing comity and compassion. Now it's up to new Germany to avoid becoming so preoccupied with its own problems that it ignores the needs of a new and larger Europe.

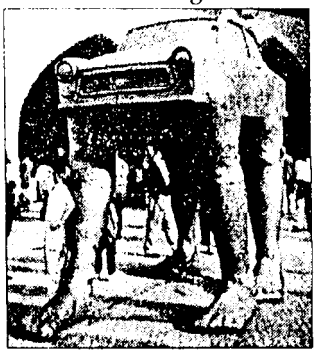
A sculpture in Prague's Old Town by a young Czechoslovak, David Cerni, depicts a unified Germany in the form of a clunky East German Trabant car mounted on four muscular human legs, presumably symbolizing West Germany strength. The car's license plate reads, Kam kracis?—Czech for "Where is it going?" There's good reason to believe the answer is toward a responsible Germany in a unified Europe.



Where is it going?

Our comments to this NYT editorial:

"Walling off the past is dangerous. Talking about it could foster the openness, tolerance and patience that democratic politics demands. Taking responsibility for the past is an important step to taking responsibility for the future."

How right! However, do these admonitions only count for Germans? So far we do not recall ever having read in the New York Times an apology to its readers for the lies and distortions of its correspondent Walter Duranty. At a time when all of Europe knew what was going on in the Stalinist empire, and while the courageous and far-seeing Germans were fighting a desperate and lonely battle against Communist agitators, effectively preventing a red takeover of their country, the New York Times did its best to keep this knowledge from the American people, and belittled Stalin's and his henchmen's crimes.

And, since the New York Times is an obviously Jewish newspaper, a reminder is in order that it was Jewish activists and agitators who, more than any other ethnic or religious group, fostered Bolshevism on the hapless peoples of Eastern Europe. Since the Germans collectively accept (or are being forced to accept), responsibility for "Hitler", and whatever is connected with his name, ought not the Jews, including those at the New York Times, also accept collective responsibility for "Marx", and whatever is connected with this name?

"That responsibility extends beyond the borders of Germany. The world is not only counting on the Germans to get unification right this time; it is also hoping that a reborn Germany can bring all of Europe together.

"Neighbors rightly wonder how Germans can reach out to them while begrudging each other. That's especially troubling to those east of Germany, beyond the Oder-Neisse border, which threatens to become the poverty line of Europe."

The first paragraph probably is an admonishment that Germany should become the milk cow to many other countries that, without outside help, are not viable. Israel is one, but others easily come to mind. Certainly, "a reborn Germany can bring all of Europe together". Under German leadership, which means—like it or not German hegemony.

What lies "beyond the Oder-Neisse border"? Poland, obviously. The New York Times would like united Germany, with the "sense of responsibility" (combined with a hefty guilt complex) to do its best to prevent the allied imposed Oder-Neisse border from becoming THE poverty line. Here an analogy is in order:

Let us assume that as the result of a war lost by the United States, the New England states were annexed by "Quebec", the entire native population of this region relieved of their real estate and other worldly possessions, and subsequently expelled to the other states of the union (with the associated murder of 20 percent of them). Soon, people from "Quebec" were moved into the New England homes and towns, claiming them as their own.

A few decades passed but not enough that all those who were dispossessed so criminally were dead. And it happened that, due to their thrift and work ethic, the real New Englanders prospered in their involuntarily adopted new "Heimat", while those who stole their land from them, and their offspring, descended into ever greater poverty. Appealing to their "responsibility for their fellow man", "world opinion" finally demanded from the now again prosperous dispossessed original New Englanders that they help those people from "Quebec" now in dire need in their old homeland.

What would be the original New Englander's answer to this impertinent request? We believe that this doesn't have to be spelled out, does it? But that is what the New York Times is asking, and we can imagine how many (most?) Germans feel about the Poles at this moment.

In this regard, an old German proverb comes to mind: "Unrecht Gut gedeihet nicht!"

"A sculpture in Prague's Old Town ... depicts a unified Germany in the form of a clunky Trabant car mounted on four muscular human legs, presumably symbolizing West German strength. The car's license plate reads, Kam kracis? Czech for 'Where is it going?' There is good reason to believe the answer is toward a responsible Germany in a unified Europe."

The catch is found in the last sentence: "a responsible (here is that word again!) Germany in a unified Europe." We can surmise that the New York Times means a unified Europe without borders and including Turkey and Portugal, with special immigration privileges for all inhabitants of Europe's former colonies (especially from Africa) and most certainly with a special relationship and "responsibility" toward Israel.

Where, really, IS Germany going? Most definitely Germans will first see to it that their own brethren in the now defunct GDR will be taken care of. It will take years to create normalcy over there. Furthermore, we can, nay must, expect that Germany will institute German policies, and this will almost invariably lead to an assumption again of the central position in Europe, in other words, "neither East nor West". The currently often-read claim that "Germany is now forever tied to the West" is obviously nonsense. For a thousand years or more Germany, not Italy, Spain or France, and certainly not England, was the heartland of Western Civilization. To insist that Germany has become part "of the West" merely as a result of its defeat in World War II is insulting. What is obviously meant is that the Western allies were able to institute a Western style "parliamentary" democracy in Germany which, judging by the successful performance of the Bonn regime, seems to be working. In this regard it bears remembering that it is a German characteristic to make the best of anything and any occasion. But there is no assurance that this imposed system, this imposed constitution, will retain its alien features.

For Bonn politicians and others it is easy to proclaim their peaceful intentions today. "They have disavowed (German) militarism", it is said. The fact is that we are living today in a different world than that existed 50 or 100 years ago. If everybody arms, you have to arm. If everybody disarms, you can disarm. It is indisputable that Great Britain and France, for instance, had standing armies long before some German princelings had the same idea. Now militarism and anything connected with it is out, and economic competition is in. It merely proves that one cannot judge the past from the vantage point of the present. However, economic measures or sanctions can be just as devastating and cruel as actual combat. It has happened that two lowly, poisoned grapes used determinately brought unemployment and misery to tens of thousands of workers on the other side of the globe, and gained a similar political result as the dispatch of the "White Fleet" many decades ago.

It is noteworthy that in the New York Times editorial reprinted above so much emphasis has been put on the word "responsibility", German responsibility, that is. A perusal of numerous other articles and editorials pertaining to the October 3, 1990 official date of German reunification shows that "as if on cue" other American newspapers and columnists also used this term, while the hitherto ubiquitous emphasis on German "guilt" (imposed on the Germans by the allies, according to President Reagan) seems swept away as if it had never been there. One must wonder wherefrom comes this unison in the use of terminology. Perhaps a clue can be found in West German President Richard von Weizsäcker's October 3rd speech to the all-German parliament in Berlin, wherein he also spoke of German "Verantwortung". Since Herr von Weizsäcker quite obviously does perform a valued function for some powers (not necessarily the German people), one ought to consider the same source. In any case, the matter proves the new direction of the steered "world public opinion" toward Germany. One can assume that the insistence on the unique German war guilt has been quietly dropped since the recent exposures of combined allied war crimes and the revisionism of history, as in the case of Katyn, make the real German transgressions during World War Two seem puny indeed.

5. The Future.

In his address to Congress in mid-September, on the occasion of the US involvement in the Middle East as a result of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, President Bush spoke in glowing terms of the future and several times used the phrase "The New World Order". Most members of Congress in attendance applauded heartily, obviously being caught up in the enthusiasm of the moment, and probably not realizing what the terminology was all about.

Judging by the actions of the United States Government since then, it becomes apparent what The New World Order entails: The United States will jump from a hegemonial position in the Western world to that of policeman of the entire earth, and the other industrialized ("rich") nations, especially Germany and Japan, had better play along, "or else". There is little doubt that the other nations, but especially the two major former Axis powers Germany and Japan, are being blackmailed to participate, at least financially and with some men and materiel, in the first great adventure of the new self-appointed "Guardian of the New World Order". No wonder President Bush looked so smug when he spoke of the prospects concerning this NEW ORDER.

But is this the kind of world we really want? Is this the kind of world on whose threshold we are standing at the moment?

The answer is a resounding NO!

Anybody who has had the opportunity of spending some time recently in that part of Europe just being liberated from Communism comes back shaken, angry and full of contempt for those responsible for that insane political system. "East" Germany, for instance, the showcase state of Bolshevism, is in shambles. The entire infrastructure of this part of Germany (actually the center of the nation) has been totally ruined. The élite of the country has been destroyed. The middle class, the very foundation for Germany's cultural, economic and social supremacy, is gone. It will cost far more than anybody can imagine at the moment to bring this area up to modern Western standards. But it is doubtful if the harm done to the people and to the cultural heritage of the Germans can ever be made good. Too much has been annihilated.

We mentioned earlier that the reunification of Germany—in fact the collapse of Communism—was an unplanned fluke of history. Therefore, one is entitled to ask what would have happened—how would Central and Eastern Europe have looked—had Boshevism been able to remain in power for another 45 years?

This Position Paper deals with Germany and concerns mainly the relationship between that country and the United States. Yet, speaking of Communism and its horrible after effects, we cannot neglect to mention the other hundreds of millions of Central and Eastern Europeans who suffered under that slave system for so many decades, many of them their entire lives. And, in this conjunction, the ignominious rôle played by "America" in fostering this brutal system onto unsuspecting peoples MUST be mentioned. Is it not true that most of the several hundred important early Bolsheviks, the very people from whose satanic minds sprang that godforsaken ideology, embarked before the end of World War I (when travel for ordinary citizens was severely restricted!) from New York, having been provided by certain Wall Street entities with sufficient funds to "take over Russia"? And, is it not true that it was the major mouthpieces of the US press that first began to promote Communism and give it some legitimacy? Is it also not a fact that, at this very moment, thousands of "American" college professors are still propagating Marxist ideology, the "religion" of Communism, thereby befuddling the minds of America's (OUR!) children?

Germany was THE major goal of the Communist world revolution from the beginning. The numerous attempts of Communist takeovers of Germany after the 1918 capitulation are a matter of record. Most Germans never had any illusions about the final goals of the Bolsheviks; their incredible brutality, their atheism, their culture-destroying actions, and their attempts to reform people to robot-like creatures: into the New Soviet Man.

It was the Germans who received the first accounts of the wholesale murders of the Russian, the Baltic, and the Ukrainian élites by the Reds. It was the German "Freikorps" volunteers who, in 1918, went to the Baltic countries to help these small and newly independent nations stem the Red menace! That was at the very time when huge sums of American dollars went to the murderers of entire peoples so that they could purchase arms and ammunition. (In this connection it must be made clear that the German-Soviet Pact of August 1939, whereby Soviet and German "spheres of interest" in Eastern Europe were delineated, did not mean a German sell-out of the Baltic Republics, or an agreement by the Reich Government that these Republics be incorporated into the USSR, as is usually depicted today. If that had been the German intent, then the Reich Government would have acted in similar fashion (i.e. through occupation, ultimate annexation, and a total alteration of the political system) regarding Hungary, Rumania and Bulgaria, all of which remained constitutional monarchies while allied with Germany. Finland did not even have to relinquish its democracy while having large German troop contingents on its territory.)

Recently, the KGB admitted (meaning an actual number far higher) that about 750,000 people had been executed in the Soviet Union before the Second World War broke out. To these one must add the many millions who were starved to death in the Ukraine before 1933, the year the Germans themselves eliminated the danger of a Communist takeover of their country! With the full knowledge of these facts, with a tremendous amount of Communist agitation going on in the Reich, and with an army of only 100,000 soldiers (for a people of sixty million!) to defend itself against these clear prospects of their own mass murder, what were the Germans supposed to have done? Depend on the United States from whence came only lofty words for the peoples in danger but hard cash for the murderers?

The German people arose immediately after the 1918 capitulation, then in the early 1920's (in Munich and Berlin), and finally in 1933 to end the Red threat to their own nation. The rest is history. Once the Germans reasserted themselves, war became inevitable. But in retrospect, and in the light of 45 years of brutal suppression of Central and Eastern Europe by the Communists that led to the near total devastation of these formerly culturally advanced territories, this question must be asked: Was it not the heroism of the German worker (in the twenties) and the German soldier of WW II that prevented ALL of Europe (and perhaps the United States) from falling to Bolshevism? If that had occurred, we can be certain that a new dark age would have descended over Europe that would have lasted for centuries, for with absolute power in Europe, Bolshevist terror would have been even worse than in the recent past. Ever since its inception, it was Bolshevism that strove for world revolution; the German answer was but a national/nationalistic reaction without world wide ambitions, born out of necessity and the people's natural instincts. Unfortunately, most of "America" did not see the grave danger to our mutual civilization that emanated from Bolshevism, and this led to the fact that millions of Christian American G.I.s fought ipso facto for the spread of that most brutal, atheistic ideology over half the globe.

Some Americans clearly saw the danger which Bolshevism presented to this nation and its ideals. Former President Herbert Hoover warned in a radio address on June 29, 1941 as follows:

> If we go further and join the war and we win, then we have won for Stalin the grip of Communism on Russia... Again I say, if we join the war and Stalin wins, we have aided him to impose more Communism on Europe and the world. At least we could not with such a bedfellow say to our sons that by making the supreme sacrifice, they are restoring freedom to the world. War alongside Stalin to impose freedom is more than travesty. It is a tragedy!

President Hoover was obviously right. Unfortunately, it took some Americans over 40 years to discover this plain truth. In spite of the anti-war sentiment of the majority of Americans, the then government of this nation managed to bring the United States into the war on the side of the enemies of Germany and, therefore, also on the side of Bolshevism. This gave traitors and Communist sympathizers the opportunity to mobilize the manufacturing capacity of this great nation in the service of one of the most ruthless and brutal political systems the world has ever known. Once America had entered the war,the outcome was hardly in doubt.

Tragically, World War II was not the first time in European history that European nations attacked the German Reich in the West for their own gain while German and other Christian soldiers fought off invaders from the East (thereby saving Western Civilization from oblivion). Who can forget the Battle for Vienna in 1683 when Germany saved Europe from Islamic conquest—and lost the German province of Alsace to the invading French at the same time? Was 1945 much different? What would have happened if the Red Army had then reached the Atlantic through the generous assistance of the United States? The deplorable condition of former "East" Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, the Baltic countries, and the entire area of the Soviet Union and that which has transpired there since 1917—present the answer.

The United States has had almost absolute hegemony over the Americas for a long time. The dismal state of this basically rich continent, the extreme poverty of most of the inhabitants of Central and South America, and the never ending exploitation of man and nature present ample witness to New York's or Washington's inability to rule fairly and well. And people with such a record want to be the arbiter of a New World Order?

There is also the fact that the United States, more than any other nation on earth, was responsible for the destruction of the old world order that had evolved in Europe over so many centuries. By now, almost all moral and ethical restraints of international behavior are gone, and a future world-wide conflict would probably be especially brutal and without restraint because the U.S., or people emanating from this country, had earlier set the standards (or a lack of them). It might be mentioned that today's international terrorism evolved directly from the U.S. supported partisan movements of World War II, and that the current pillage of Kuwait by the forces of Iraq closely resembles the pillage of Germany at the end of World War II by the United States Army, its allies and associated carpetbaggers. (Will Saddam Hussein introduce something akin to the Marshall Plan for the impoverished Kuwaiti population once all valuables have been removed from that country?) In February of 1990, for instance, the United States Supreme Court created new international law through its judgment in the UNITED STATES vs. URQUIBEZ case. The court decided that American law enforcement agencies in foreign countries are not tied by the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution which prevents unlawful searches and seizures and prohibits the introduction of evidence obtained through such illegal methods. The Court's majority held (with a six to three decision) that the guarantees of the Fourth Amendment and of the Bill of Rights cannot be used by foreign nationals if the (illegal) actions of U.S. officials occurred on foreign soil. A nation whose Supreme Court comes to such an unethical decision (a decision that must be seen in conjunction with American kidnappings of foreign nationals abroad!) has minimal call to a world leadership role!

Current developments all over the world show what the future will really look like. The much decried nationalism is on the rise everywhere. Racial consciousness is growing in spite of all counter propaganda by the people still in power. Blood and genes (exemplified by looks) count for more than stupid Marxist ideology and pie-in-the-sky socialist and egalitarian dreams. Nation-states based upon homogenous populations will become stronger, while "multicultural", "multi-ethnic" and "multi- racial" empires are failing. The Soviet Union is already in its last throes. No "United States of Europe" based upon the American political system will ever evolve from the "European Community" headquartered in Brussels. "1992" will not happen as planned. The United States of America itself will—of necessity—implode rather than expand.

There will not be the kind of New World Order President Bush envisions. On the basis of the experiences of the Twentieth Century, future generations will not be enticed into utopian schemes based upon "humanistic" ideals. Instead, people all over the globe will realize that God and nature show the way to a better and more peaceful world.

Specifically with regard to Europe, the United States should consider the following:

1. Abandonment of all political and military interference on the entire continent.
2. Prompt withdrawal of ALL troops and closure of all military and intelligence service bases.
3. Discharge of all U.S.Government supporters, and elimination of the support for official and private agencies that still disseminate false World War II propaganda.
4. Support for the appointment of a neutral and philosophically balanced commission to investigate the real causes of both world wars and all war crimes.
5. Support for a 1648 style 'tabula rasa' concerning war crimes of all nations concerning the world wars.
6. Taking the initiative in eliminating from the United Nations Charter articles No. 53 and 107 that are both discriminating and insulting to Germany and Japan.

One final thought regarding this chapter: For 45 years the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, had nearly absolute hegemony in "their" halves of the earth. Due to their size, their natural resources, their geographical position, and their large population, both empires should have lasted for hundreds of years. Instead, both are in dire trouble and on the verge of decline or dissolution. The Soviet Union is, for all practical purposes, gone already, and while the decline has not been as obvious in the United States, it is only a matter of time until the fragmentation along racial and ethnic lines will be apparent here also.

Why did this decline happen so quickly in spite of all the obvious advantages? The answer can only be found in higher justice: The "peace" of 1945 was no peace; the entire edifice of the 1945 world order was based upon injustice and lies. IT COULD NOT LAST!

Imagine, if you will, a future all-German government developing strategies toward other nations such as had France and Great Britain and, by the extension of the latter, the United States developed against Germany. For centuries, and certainly since the era of Cardinal Richelieu, it had been French policy to keep Germany weak and dismembered. The destruction of Germany in the Thirty Year's War as a direct result of this policy is well remembered. Great Britain began meddling in continental affairs long ago, and finally settled on the simple expedient of never allowing a European power to become too strong. Numerous wars were the result, not the least was dominant British complicity in the beginning and expansion of both world wars. (This complicity, of course, extended beyond the Lusitania episode and the 1917 Balfour Declaration quid pro quo with the Zionists (and similar WW I intrigues), and the World War II guarantee to Poland (while simultaneously inciting the Poles to belligerence) and Churchill's long-time plotting with Roosevelt (which, as we now know, even extended to provoking—and then deliberately permitting—the attack on Pearl Harbor). To re-ignite flagging British war fever, Churchill, in 1940, cynically began bombing German cities to force Hitler to open (reluctantly) retaliation. And can it be denied that Rudolf Hess was incarcerated after his heroic peace mission—and eventually murdered (when his release by the Soviets was feared imminent in 1987)—to prevent his first-hand knowledge of British war motivations and machinations from becoming public?) The United States rôle against Germany has been told elsewhere in this Position Paper but we would like to reiterate that it was especially the U.S. entry in the European wars which made them brutal beyond imagination and which also created new conditions for "peace" from which the entire world suffers to this day.

In light of the above, and keeping in mind that it was almost solely the participation of the United States in the 1914 and 1939 wars which led to Germany's destruction and the eradication of the Reich, should a future German long term strategy not be based upon the premise of eliminating the United States as a political, military and economic rival to Europe? Certainly, that would be the policy developed by behind-the-scenes powers in New York and Washington if they were in charge of German long-term planning. Germans, on the other hand, are unable to think along this line because so much injustice is connected with it. The Bonn assumption of "eternal" friendship with the United States is probably for real- - -

6. The relationship between Germans and Jews.

On September 28, 1990 the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate held a hearing concerning the "Treaty of Moscow" which was dealt with in Chapter 3 of this paper. At that hearing one of the Senators asked the only person being questioned that day, a Mr. Robert Zoellick of the Department of State, whether the agreement also covered Jewish material claims on the territory of the "GDR" ("East" Germany, according to current American usage), claims that could, up to now, not be satisfied due to the intransigency of the Communist German government. Mr. Zoellick answered that the U.S. State Department was in close contact with a (named) Jewish organization in New York, and that the good offices of the United States were being used to press for a satisfactory settlement of the claims.

The fact that the U.S.Senator in question raised only the matter of Jewish material claims proved to us once more how much the United States Government has become an instrument of Jewish power, and this especially in regard to Germany and the German people. Therefore, the matter of the German-Jewish relationship deserves to become part of this Position Paper.

(It should be mentioned that two officers of German-American organizations attended the Senate hearings of September 28, 1990. They had given prior notice that they wanted to testify regarding the "Treaty of Moscow". Not unexpectedly, they were told that only one "expert witness" from the State Department was going to be heard. No explanation for the denial to testify was given. As a result, the text of the German-American planned testimony was presented to the general counsel of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, a Mr. Michael Epstein, with the request that the paper become part of the day's hearing. Can one imagine a treaty concerning the United States and Israel being discussed by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and not one of the multitude of Jewish organizations being allowed to testify? The person in charge would soon find himself working in a coal mine or worse...)

Considering the history of World War II, it is general knowledge that Japan attacked the United States on December 7, 1941 when it launched a surprise attack on the U.S. Naval base at Pearl Harbor, causing many deaths among the personnel of the navy vessels sunk or damaged. Germany, on the other hand, never attacked America, never even threatened this country, and the German declaration of war against the U.S. a few days after "Pearl Harbor" was as much a perceived sign of loyalty to the Japanese ally as it was the long delayed response to innumerable American transgressions against German vessels and the German armed forces ever since the war began in 1939. It is also known that the war in the Pacific was in some ways fought with even greater brutality than that in Europe, and our earlier reference to the extremely high losses of American POWs that fell into Japanese vs. those who were in German camps brought out this point, as did the words of Mr. Edgar L. Jones' quoted in Chapter 1.

Nevertheless, anyone reading American text books now, anyone viewing American war movies or reading U.S. newspaper articles, must get the impression that, for the United States, the fight against Germany was the more important one. Furthermore, there has been a determined effort to falsely depict the entire German war effort as one that was directed against the Jews (with the ultimate aim of total annihilation of the Jewish people), while everything else was being relegated to a secondary position.

The anomaly of the situation can be clearly seen from the fact that almost no American high school graduate knows even the approximate number of American casualties at Pearl Harbor, and few will know how many U.S. servicemen gave their lives for this nation in World War II, while almost every American student knows the mythical "Six Million" number of alleged Jewish "gas chamber" victims. In other words, the American educational system is being misused, not only to further Jewish political aims but also to generate irrational hate against Germans and German-Americans.

From a German or German-American point of view the Jews can name their active participation in World War II anything they want, (including "Holocaust"), if they raise, for their own religious consumption, their losses to astronomical numbers, so be it. Unfortunately however, the "Six Million" number, with all associated claims ("gas chambers", Zyklon B, murder through diesel exhaust fumes, killings through steam, soap made from human cadavers, lamp shades made from human skin, etc. etc.) was, from the start, intended as a continuation of the war by other means—in this case through psychological warfare that was intended to leave the Germans defenseless for "eternity", and (perhaps, most of all) enable the Jewish segment of the world population to exact a never-ending tribute from the German nation. And, willingly or not, the United States became the major political agent in pressing this Jewish policy against Germany.

The execution of the "American" wars against Germany was, from the start, heavily influenced by Jews in power. In passing it ought to be mentioned that, for instance, the active U.S. participation in the formulation of the punitive Treaty of Versailles was more in Jewish than in gentile hands. This may have been the underlying cause for the refusal of the U.S. Senate, then not yet totally subservient to Jewish interests, to refuse to ratify this "dictate".

It was an American Jew, Samuel Untermeyr, who, on March 24, 1933, declared the Jewish war against Germany, starting with a call for a world-wide boycott. The half-hearted German answer was a one day boycott (!) of Jewish stores in Germany on April 1,1933, pictures of which are still being reproduced in history books as proof of the brutality of the then political system in the Reich against its Jewish citizens. (Samuel Untermeyr's prior action descended into a memory hole.) Subsequently, the Jewish-American agitation against Germany continued at an ever increasing crescendo of hate and malice, reaching a zenith of sorts when Jewish gangsters were used to break-up peaceful meetings of the German-American Bund (using information given them by corrupt police officials).

It is no secret that the American movie industry was, and is, mainly in Jewish hands. This tremendous power to influence the politically gullible American public against Germany was used early and determinately. Anti-German hate films were made even before the war began, and their manufacture hasn't stopped more than 50 years later. By contrast, the German movie industry never produced even one anti-American film (not even during the war, not even under the "Nazis"), and of approximately 1,200 feature films made during the Third Reich, only three can be called anti-Jewish. The propaganda and "educational" movies made during the war for the United States Armed Forces were also written and produced by Jews. Even viewing them today, the venom clearly detectable is incredible. These kinds of films contributed greatly to some excesses by American boys when they came face to face with the enemy. A future American pilot who saw in a movie how a German flyer killed an American airman parachuting to the ground, would soon thereafter forget that he merely had seen an imaginary scene, and eventually he was only too willing to "repay those Krauts for what they had done to one of his own buddies", and really kill a disabled German soldier in cold blood. But this is only one example of how thousands of G.I.'s were conditioned to hate.

It is common knowledge that the "carpetbaggers" mentioned earlier who invaded Germany under the safe umbrella of the American occupation forces were largely Jews. From the start they and their brethren who had remained in Europe after the German capitulation received special privileges, starting with better housing, double pensions, double food rations, travel permits when Germans were not allowed to go more than fifty kilometers from their hometowns, etc. Needless to say, they got their properties back (which they had to sell to Germans before their departure in the thirties) and their organizations received community centers in most cities that are the best money can provide. Immediately after the cessation of hostilities Jewish American organizations even provided so-called displaced Jewish persons on German soil with goods to trade on the black market, so that they could take advantage of the already impoverished population. When the German currency reform of 1948 was instituted, every German was allowed to trade only 40 old Reichmarks against the new Deutschmark on a 1:1 basis (the rest at 10:1), but the Jews received as many new DMs as they had accumulated old Reichsmarks, giving many of them a headstart in business that is being felt to this day.

We are explaining this, not to begrudge Jews the help they had received after that long and horrible war, but to point out how it seemed American policy to advance Jewish interests.

A careful reading of the Nuremberg and other war crimes trials transcripts shows the predominance of Jewish legal assistants, translators, assistant prosecutors, interrogators and even psychiatrists at these proceedings. It was mainly Jews who did the torturing to obtain "confessions" (a prime example was the so called "Malmedy Trial" at Dachau). It was they who called the shots and set the tone. We also know that the entire vile "enterprise" was the brainchild of two Jewish brothers from Lithuania, and the finer details were worked out by an office in Great Britain that, even before the invasion, had been staffed almost entirely by Jews. To its everlasting honor, the U.S. Army did not at first contemplate the prosecution by spurious legal means of its former enemies, and did so only reluctantly when forced to do so on orders from Washington.

Names like Marcuse, Horkimer, Adorno, and others are indelibly connected with the so called "reëducation", the generally successful attempt to brainwash the German people. Needless to say, most people connected with this criminal activity were Jews, and many of them had been associated one way or another with the Marxist "New School for Social Research" in New York, which originated in the twenties in Jewish circles in Frankfurt, before being declared unwelcome by the Third Reich Government. The men mentioned above, and others, had been able to infiltrate the reconstituted German educational system after the war, again with the knowledge and the connivance of American military authorities, and thereby became instrumental in brainwashing hundreds of thousands of men and women who eventually became the spiritual élite of the Bundesrepublik. Most of these poor, brainwashed creatures are self-hating Germans, full of guilt complexes, imbued with an eternal sense of responsibility toward their "masters", and, in fact, Germans only in name and language. They are totally bereft of the traditional values which had made Germany the center of Western culture and civilization.

The result can be gleaned from this:

> One evening, I visited a left wing Protestant youth club (in Germany), named for a murdered German Jew. When I asked the teenagers gathered there whether they had felt national pride when the (Berlin) wall opened, they laughed. I looked at those young people, slumped on old couches and arm chairs, their faces blank at the mention of German identity; and I thought of the exuberant, unself-conscious teenagers I knew in Israel...

(America can be proud of itself. It brought "democracy" to Germany.)

Few people realize that the present West German constitution, the so-called "Grundgesetz", is actually the brainchild of American Jews who had been assigned to the American military authorities. General Lucius Clay, the US plenipotentiary in Germany at the time, and some of his assistants, were instrumental in convincing the Germans to accept this "basic law", but a careful reading shows its Jewish philosophical background. Current German troubles with the incredibly high number of refugees from Third World countries seeking to immigrate into the Bundesrepublik as "political asylants", and the near impossibility to deport them, can be directly traced to the Jewish thought-process inherent in this legal instrument. Unfortunately, so far there have been no earnest attempts by patriotic Germans to replace this Ersatz constitution with one written by and for Germans.

Ever since the war, all German-speakaing areas of Europe (Germany proper, Austria and Switzerland, even Luxemburg and Liechtenstein) seem to have become the fiefdom of American Jews. U.S. Army intelligence in Germany, the Voice of America operating in Munich, the Central European desk at the State Department, and all war claims commissions (including the US Government agency managing (and finally disposing of) German confiscated properties in the United States), were mostly staffed by Jews. This went so far that, at one time, every single U.S. ambassador to the major German-language countries was "of Jewish faith". And, the State Department insisted that this was pure coincidence!

Jewish influence in all matters concerning American policy toward Germany could be felt throughout the half century of the post war era. A typical example is Secretary of State James F. Byrnes' famous "Stuttgart" speech of September 6, 1946 in which he gave the millions of Germans expelled from beyond the Oder-Neisse rivers hope that eventually they might be able to return to their ancestral areas. In his speech, Byrnes made it a point to emphasize that, according to the Potsdam agreement, the Polish and Soviet administration of the German territories was temporary, pending a formal peace treaty. Only now, 44 years later, it becomes clear that the speech was made in order to placate the politically gullible Germans with false promises. Who remembers today that the speech had been written for Byrnes by a State Department counselor named Ben Cohen?

On April 29, 1945 soldiers of the U.S. 45th Infantry Division liberated the concentration camp at Dachau. They promptly shot, in cold blood, approximately 600 uniformed but unarmed Germans in its vicinity (most of them ordinary soldiers assigned as temporary guards—the regular guards had run away) and medical personnel, including doctors and nurses from a nearby hospital. (No war crime this: one cannot fault G.I.s for getting angry, seems to have been the attitude.) Then something odd happened: within weeks a sign was erected for everyone to see that stated "from 1933 to 1945 over 238,000 human beings were murdered in this camp". This sign and the almost immediate display of the chamber to fumigate louse-ridden clothes as a "gas chamber to kill people" became focal points of allied postwar propaganda. Tens of thousands, or possibly hundreds of thousands of American soldiers newly arriving in Germany for occupation duty were forced to see the former concentration camp, and they obviously had no way of knowing that both the "238,000" sign and the "gas chamber" were absolute lies.

It was on orders of American authorities that the defeated Germans were prohibited by law from questioning or disputing these outrageous propaganda claims. Such inane laws are to this day still in force in the Bundesrepublik. Denying that which, by now, everybody knows are absolute lies or exaggerations, can bring fines or jail terms. (The reason the Bundesrepublik insists on enforcing these laws instituted by the victors is simply because the discovery of the truth would undermine the legal pinnings of the allegedly "freest state that ever existed on German soil".) The 238,000 number of Dachau dead (vs. fewer than 30,000 who actually succumbed due to various causes) was reportedly the brainchild of a Jewish administrator named Auerbach, put in charge by the Americans in Bavaria, who was later convicted of fraud in connection with a Jewish war claims swindle. It took some brave Germans nearly fifteen years to have the plaque with the 238,000 swindle figure removed. But one can imagine the damage that was done. There are still tens of thousands of U.S. ex-soldiers alive who swear; "I know the Holocaust happened, I saw the gas chambers at Dachau!"

There is no day when in the United States some newspaper or columnist does not mention the "Six Million Jews killed in Gas Chambers by the Nazis." It doesn't seem to matter that only recently, at the former Auschwitz camp, the sign telling of "4 million" dead was removed for the simple reason that the tale was untenable. It also doesn't seem to matter that the Soviet Union finally released the so called "Auschwitz death books" containing approximately 74,000 names and official death certificates, thereby enabling true historical researchers to get closer to the truth. However, for American establishment writers the findings of the so-called LEUCHTER REPORT do not seem to exist, findings wherein the only U.S. expert on gas chambers proved to the satisfaction of clear thinking people all over the world that neither at Auschwitz-Birkenau nor at Majdanek could the alleged gas chambers ever have been used for mass killings of human beings. Current attempts by American Jewish organizations to ruin Mr. Fred Leuchter's professional reputation merely prove that they have no rational arguments against this expert's important forensic discoveries. (The claim of alleged "gas chambers" in concentration camps on Reich soil was dropped a few years after a sufficient number of Germans had been hanged for operating them.) The answer to this partial discovery of the truth (which patriotic Germans and intelligent German-Americans always knew) came recently from a Polish (Jewish) editor, Ernest Skalski: "The official lowering of the number of Auschwitz victims from 4 million to a little over 1 million does not alter the essence of the crime. The figure of 6 million Jews murdered by the Nazis still stands!" (DER SPIEGEL, 30/1990). How this can be, Mr. Skalski does not explain, nor does he suggest a thorough search for the truth in order to clear the inconsistencies.

It is tragic that the "American system" did permit itself to become part and parcel of this gigantic defamation of the German people. No U.S. journalist ever expresses doubt about even the most ridiculous tales. Not one of them ever asks: Where are the bones? Where are the mounts of ashes of the coal that was necessary to cremate millions of human cadavers (since Germany had neither oil nor natural gas to operate the furnaces, coal could have been the only fuel that was used)? Since we now know where are the mass graves of the nearly 15,000 Polish officers killed by the NKVD near Katyn and elsewhere (but for which crime German officers were executed in 1946) and while mass graves of Germans murdered by the allies after the war have recently been discovered, it should certainly be possible to find the much more gigantic sites containing remains of Jewish victims that MUST be somewhere if the "Holocaust" tale is true. Where is any legitimate physical or documentary evidence of any kind whatsoever?

It must have been in the U.S. interest to perpetuate this slander against Germany. We do not fault individual Jews for believing all the stories that are told, just as one cannot fault millions of Germans for feeling guilty for something of which they have only "imbued" knowledge. Both peoples are the victims of the lies. But it must be asked, whether the whole myth was not (also) invented to forever create hate and animosity between Germans and Jews? Now only truth, the absolute, unvarnished truth, can set both peoples free. Since only recently the United States Government made an official complaint in Austria when a newspaper printed things of questionable veracity, and since, also recently, the West German Government took strong (official) issue with former Chilean President General Pinochet when he described the current West German Army in less than flattering terms, perhaps both the U.S. and the Bonn Government could get together now, and try to discover what really happened to the Jews in World War II. Now, with the Soviet Union and the International Red Cross opening its archives, a factual account bereft of untenable claims ought to be obtainable. Most people associated with the writing and presentation of this paper will be glad to assist in such an endeavor. One need only ask...

7. Germany, the new (old) Empire State of Europe.

In conjunction with the impending reunification of Germany, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher assembled, early this year, a group of German "experts" from the United Kingdom and America to consider future options, and, especially, delve into the "German character". The result was an uproar in Britain, bad feelings in Germany, and a paper whose contents are laughable. Thankfully, the West German Government didn't take the 'faux pas' too seriously, and by now the matter is almost forgotten.

If the President of the United States had the need to learn the true character of the Germans, he would have a better opportunity than almost anybody in the entire world (including the German Government) to discover the truth.

Are the Germans aggressive? The United States is a nation of many peoples, races and ethnic groups. All are different, all carry within themselves the accumulated experiences of millenia of their ancestors. Yet, of all the population groups in this nation, there is only one that has survived almost intact since its arrival from the European continent and is arguably the least aggressive of all ethnic groups in the U.S. Peaceful, honest, hard-working, unspoiled by modern influences, God-fearing and deeply religious—we are writing, of course, of the Pennsylvania "Dutch", the Amish, a group of people of German descent.

No American minority asks less from general society than do the Amish. Their pastoral, well-kept lands are living proof of how man can live close to nature without the accoutrements of modern society, and without the wars and confrontations that beset their fellow citizens. The area around Lancaster and Gettysburg in Pennsylvania, where the Amish live, is known for its low crime rate, and, if a crime is committed, the source is usually found in neighborhoods where non-Amish reside. The Amish also still speak their German mother tongue, a dialect that is akin to the dialect of the Germans living in the Palatine area of West Germany. This much is certain: If all societies, all the various groups of people in the United States, were to live as do the Amish (or their more worldy kin, the Mennonites), then no army and only a few policemen would be necessary, and, certainly, life would be simpler for the rulers in New York and Washington (provided said rulers did not try to seek fame and fortune through interventions abroad!).

And, beyond these specific instances, surely it can be stated as a general proposition that German-Americans-included among them the majority of American farmers—are, and always have been, among the most peaceful, honest and hard-working elements of American society.

Another proof of the true German character can be found on the international scene. Where in the world are things most orderly, most peaceful and most secure in a landscape where man enjoys the beauty of nature to the fullest? Certainly in the German-speaking areas of Switzerland, in Austria and in the alpine provinces of Germany.

For centuries, since its actual beginnings at the time of Charlemagne, the German Reich was the spiritual, cultural and administrative center of Christianized Europe. England and France were at first but inconsequential border states. Rarely in the annals of mankind has a great empire existed that was as tolerant and benign (and less nationalistic) than was the "Holy Roman Empire of German Nation", the First Reich. Apart from the ubiquitous toll houses collecting taxes on highways, bridges and city entrances, travel was for many centuries less restricted all across the heart of Europe than it is now in our modern age. Reading the biographies of famous Europeans of the Middle Ages ("the" German age) one is struck by the fact that most of them had studied not just at one university but at several (for instance in Heidelberg, Prague, Bologna and Paris), all in different countries. For young men of the time it obviously presented no problem to travel from one nation to another. Latin was the lingua franca. Other languages, including German, were at first considered only "dialects" used by the simple "Folk". In that atmosphere one cannot speak of a suppression of languages like Czech or Polish, since the native tongue of the Reich's rulers was not treated any differently (the aforementioned Prussian king, Frederick the Great, preferred to read and write in French!).

The experience of the First German Reich and the associated German hegemony over much of Europe proved the German ability to rule fairly and well. One could wish that the United States Government could point to a similarly tolerant record within the borders of our nation. The assimilation of the millions of immigrants in our country, and their subsequent dissolving into the melting pot, was not as peacefully and benignly accomplished as is generally assumed.

For at least a thousand years there has always existed a German hegemony in Europe (if not in the entire Western world) in the fields of culture, science, social progress and, not the least, in philosophy. Other European nations have also contributed their share of advancement to these human endeavors, but not one country has been as predominant in these fields as have been the Germans. The German political hegemony now beginning is merely the result of natural progression, and is mainly based on present-day Germany's economic power. Certainly, there is less to fear from German supremacy (in any field) than from the hegemonial rule of both of the superpowers since 1945.

In Europe it was countries such as France and England which promoted their own brand of egotistical nationalism first. Hundreds of years passed before the Germans awoke to the same phenomenon. One wonders, whether, for instance, Denmark would still exist as an independent, fully sovereign nation after a thousand years, had it adjoined, again for instance, England (or the United States) instead of "Deutschland"? Note the fate of Scotland.

German hegemony in Europe is unavoidable, if only for the reason that there is no nation, or groups of nations, on earth that can prevent it. The only "rival", so to speak, of this powerful Germany on the old continent may be the government of the United States. Let us hope that this country will not once more "try to rescue Europe" from something entirely natural and European, and supplant it with alien ideas, alien culture, and alien social organization emanating from this side of the Atlantic. What was done with America's consent and active complicity during and after the two world wars should be a warning to us all. One more American "crusade"—and not German hegemony—may prove the death knell of our mutual civilization!

The rapid growth of an increasingly economically, politically and morally more powerful Germany on the world stage, juxtaposed with the continuing progress of Japan, will squeeze the United States from both sides, East and West. In such an ever more competitive world previous chimeras of the past 50 years will evaporate and the basic inherent cultural and indigenous traits of intelligence and creativity will come to the forefront. If the U.S. continues on its present self-deceptive and destructive course, it will soon be relegated to a fourth rate power. It must return to the rigid laws of nature, and discard the political and socially contrived lie of "equality" of all mankind which has been used as a lever to elevate and promote the non-productive and indolent elements of our society at the expense of the productive.

The United States will not be able to compete in the world arena with the onerous burden of a fast growing dependent segment of our society. Especially not in comparison with Germany and Japan, both of which will become less encumbered as they throw off their foreign-imposed shackles. These nations are rooted in pragmatic reality and basic truths in contrast to our rapidly deteriorating pluralistic and polyglot country, and will soon eclipse us. Any creation, whether animal, plant, state or nation which fails to eliminate its accumulating waste is destined to die...

Germany must not be punished for its obvious industrial and cultural potential and for its creativity! Other nations of the world, rather than envy the Germans and the Japanese for their all-too-apparent successes, should try to emulate them. If they cannot, due to their own "natural" limitations, then they should admit this without rancor, and not carry within them the hate and covetousness of the now (one hopes) disempowered Bolshevik ruling class. And, one should not allow the mere evocation of "German hegemony" to be a negative term!

Once the United States has liberated itself from the "special relationships" that bind it to England and Israel, and has abandoned the idea of controlling Europe through NATO, the leaders of this nation should realize one of the greatest assets "America" still has: the good will of the German people. For, in spite of what happened, even in the sight of the churches and castles that still lie in ruins as a result of American (and British) terror bombings during World War Two, and even though the negative, destructive influence of "American" culture is felt by everyone, the natural grandeur of our country, and the dreams of freedom it has represented for millions in the past, still serve as a magnet, especially for the politically simple and generally good-natured Germans. For them, obviously, no "Never forget, never forgive" philosophy is possible in spite of all sufferings. Treated correctly, the newly resurgent Germany will become the best and most loyal aily the United States of America has ever had!

The leaders of our nation, including its President and his cabinet, have all sworn to serve the best interests of the United States and its people. Unfortunately and obviously, there has in the past been disagreement as to what was in the best interests of "America", and now we know. It behooves the American leadership to recall the decline of the Roman, the French and the British empires, and their associated woes. A current example is that which is happening in the changing Soviet Union at this very moment.

U.S. policy pertaining to Germany in the first ninety years of this century was wrong and often unjust. Paul H. Nitze, the former State Department official, wrote in the Fall issue of Foreign Affairs magazine that "should nationalistic tensions in Europe erupt into civil or cross-border conflicts, no other country (but the United States) would seem as well qualified to play the rôle of honest broker..." Judging by the past actions of the various U.S. Governments in this century, exactly the opposite is true. At no time since its active participation in European affairs was the United States an HONEST broker. To put it bluntly, American policy in Europe was always directed against the Central powers, namely, Germany and Austria. This came to the fore in the two World Wars and in their aftermath, when some influential circles saw material advantages in American belligerency vs. the Germans. The short-term advantages of this policy, particularly the confiscation (twice) of all German assets in the U.S., and the theft (twice) of all German patents, cannot outweigh the (now possible) fragmentation of our American nation resulting more from "foreign entanglements" than from anything else. If this fragmentation of the United States occurs, then it will be clearly the result of unjust policies, especially against the Germans, and other erroneous judgments that were caused by the betrayal of our nation's basic ideals.

It is to be hoped that a more just and sound relationship between the United States and Germany, based upon the sincere friendship still existing between both peoples, and cemented by the faith and good will of millions of German-Americans, will provide the foundation for a bright future for all in the years ahead.

The advantages of a healthy and peaceful Germany assuming THE leadership rôle in Europe can be clearly seen by men of good will, whereas those whom one must consider anti-Germans will continue to repeat such erroneous clichés as "Germany started two world wars", "the aggressive tendencies of the German people..", "the dark chapter of German history", ad nauseam, and speak of the past 45 years of a Germany on probation while in reality it was they who were on probation, and they failed miserably...

In an article entitled "The Vanishing Germans", written for The Spectator of London (May 6, 1989), G.M. Tamas, an Eastern European, rhetorically asks:

> What's all this talk about a new "Central Europe" arising in Post-Communist Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia? There will not be another Central Europe. The old Mitteleuropa was created over a millenium by Germans, but now they are gone—murdered, expelled. The only thing these three countries formerly had in common was a massive German cultural presence. When people wonder how the spirit could vanish, they forget that the body—the Germans themselves—has vanished as well.

This is Eastern Europe's dark secret, said Tamas.

> A universe of culture was destroyed. The West within the East, that intriguing mystery, was simply the civilizing work of our Germans of different denominations. Our supposed "common" culture does not make sense without them and never will.
>
> Misguided tourists, when they admire Polish or Hungarian Gothic cathedrals, forget that the proud spires were built by and for Germans. These Germans were no colonisers, but peaceful settlers invited by our kings as missionaries of Western Christendom, civilization, crafts and agriculture. The Eastern half of Europe, from Prague to Dorpat (Tartu) and from Danzig (Gdansk) to Agram (Zagreb), was full of German cities, the monasteries full of German monks, the markets of German reaped wheat, the offices of diligent German bureaucrats.
>
> The Jews were murdered and mourned. There was some soul searching and self criticism. But who has mourned the Germans? Who feels any guilt for the millions expelled from Silesia and Moravia and the Volga region, slaughtered during their long trek, starved, put into camps, raped, frightened, humiliated? . . . Who is revolted because the few Germans left behind, whose ancestors built our cathedrals, monasteries, universities and railway stations, today cannot have a primary school in their own language?

SUMMARY

We, who have "miterlebt" und "miterlitten" (lived to see and suffered) on both sides of the conflict, would like to put a morsel of truth in a time-capsule to preserve it for successor generations.

Those who won our independence by revolution were not cowards. They did not fear political change. They did not promote order and stability at the cost of liberty.

To courageous, self-reliant men, with confidence in the power of free and fearless reasoning we say, there is no danger flowing from speech that can be deemed clear and present, unless the evil apprehended is so imminent that it may befall before there is opportunity for full discussion.

If there is time to expose through discussion the falsehood and fallacies as we attempt with these Position Papers, and to avert more evil by the processes of education, the remedy to be applied is more speech, not enforced silence, by the U.S. or others. Such, in our opinion, is the command of the U.S. Constitution.

America After Armageddon

an allegory by H. Schmidt

The United States of America had lost the War of Armageddon, the greatest war in history. At the end she succumbed to the material and numerical superiority of her enemies, and found herself occupied from coast to coast.

The country was devastated. There was no large city that had not been laid to ruin. Millions of soldiers and civilians had perished, millions of others (almost the whole male population over 17 years of age) found themselves in enemy POW camps.

It had been the aim of the enemy nations to destroy once and for all the willpower and unity of the United States because that was the only thing that stood in the way of world supremacy. In order to accomplish this America had been forced to fight to the very end, to "complete surrender," and now she was at the mercy of her enemies.

Soon after the American capitulation the two major enemy leaders, the Soviet dictator and the head of the Third World Alliance, met at the former U.S. Military Academy at West Point to lay down their conditions for the future. The result was a peace so brutal, so harsh that for a while the existence of the American people had to be questioned.

The enemy split the United States into various parts: All states west of the Continental Divide were separated from the union. The USSR received Oregon, Washington and parts of Idaho and Montana (also the city of San Francisco). Red Mexico was allowed to annex California, Arizona, Nevada, Utah, New Mexico, Texas and part of Colorado.

U.S. PARTITIONED

New England became a separate entity and was prohibited from ever again joining the union (not even by a free plebiscite of the people!). The states of Maryland, Delaware, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and the District of Columbia became a new and separate nation called "New Africa." Florida had been taken over by the Cubans during the war, and was formally added to that country.

Immediately after these new borders had been drawn following the West Point Conference, the enemies commenced to expel all Americans (except blacks and those with Spanish surnames) from "New Africa" and the other "transferred" states, about 40 million people in all. The expellees were brutally moved with just a few personal belongings to the remaining U.S.A., a "nation" located between the Appalachians and the Continental Divide, and there resettled in often desolate areas. During this population "transfer" (a typical Marxist euphemism used) about nine million civilians, mostly women and children, died or were murdered by the enemy. Millions of American women and girls were brutally raped. Soon foreign nationals moved into the homes just vacated by the Americans.

The remaining U.S.A. was split down the middle along the Mississippi River. After a little while this demarcation line also became a national border with enemy guards on both sides. The occupation forces were supposed to remain on American soil as long as the enemy leaders deemed necessary, perhaps a hundred years or more.

It was the intent of the enemy that America should not have any armed forces, and no means whatsoever to wage war. Not even for defense. She was not allowed to have any large ships, any airplanes at all, any weapons. She was prohibited from producing these implements even for peaceful uses.

All Americans industries, but especially those in which the country was dominant worldwide, were dismantled.

Most of the undestroyed factories and such goods as railroad stocks and power plants were taken away as reparations. For thousands of miles only one track remained even on the most important lines stretching the land.

RESOURCES GUTTED

Huge tracts of American forests were denuded, the lumber shipped to many nations—free of charge—across the world. All further industrial production was strictly controlled with special emphasis that America should not become a competitor with enemy nations.

All American foreign assets, and investments, all her gold and properties (even those held in neutral countries) were confiscated. The same happened to all American patents. American inventors were prohibited from using their own patents and trademarks (such as Coca-Cola) abroad. Even the most secret formulas had to be disclosed for enemy use. All further research in innumerable fields such as computers, nuclear science, rocketry, weaponry, chemicals and even oil exploration and forestry was henceforth prohibited.

Under the guise of "eradicating American militarism and nationalism" everything was prohibited that could be interpreted as furthering American patriotism. All books, flags, emblems, paintings, songs, poems, sculptures and other works of art based on patriotic themes as well as newspapers, books and magazines concerning the American past were banned, burned, confiscated, destroyed or otherwise removed from the states. The historical standards and documents held in Washington were taken to Moscow along with hundreds of tons of documents pertaining to U.S. history. Any further writing expounding the American view was punished by law.

Under the order to root out so-called American "war criminals" the whole elite of the American nation (all her best minds included) was incarcerated in camps outside of Red Cross jurisdiction. Many of the best and most intelligent men and women of the nation succumbed to the cruelty of these camps. Not one mayor, police chief, legislator, judge or other political or public figure of national, state or local governments was permitted to remain at his post. Every policeman was fired from his job because he had supported the American war effort. The same was true of the industry managers, trade union officials, Red Cross personnel and anybody connected with the American media.

'WAR CRIMES'

In order to destroy the pride in the accomplishments of the American nation the vilest accusations of misconduct and criminality during the just concluded war were raised against America, against her leaders, against her brave soldiers and against the civilian population that heroically had supported its fighting men to the last. Amidst the ruins of her devastated cities, atop the graves of millions of murdered innocent American women and children, the citizens of the nation had to pay homage to those who, because they had given aid and comfort to the enemy, had been incarcerated during the war.

When the fighting stopped all American adults about to resume work or desiring food ration coupons were forced to fill out an extensive questionnaire issued by the enemy military. They had to lay bare their whole life history (under the threat of imprisonment) and thereby contribute to the greatest brainwashing operation in the long history of man. Henceforth no American could afford to speak freely, to defend his country or to attack those that had betrayed the nation in a time of war. To do so would have invited the loss of a job, the withholding of food coupons or, worse, death. Any criticism of enemy misconduct during and after the war (and in the present) was strictly prohibited and led to jail terms for "inciting the population." Americans learned to keep their mouths shut and not even speak to their children about the true happenings of the war. As a result a whole American generation grew up believing everything the enemy propagandists told them. When this generation became of age the blank spaces of their minds had been filled with self-hatred, historical distortions and intolerant dogmas. The idea of a United States of America as it had existed for such a long time seemed ridiculous to them. The ideals of the enemies had become their ideals, also.

In the first years immediately following the war the enemy states used hunger as their most effective weapon. Millions of Americans starved to death. Things improved only when there was a serious threat that hunger typhus could spread to enemy soldiers. In the meantime, though, a black market had developed that undermined even the last vestiges of decency and morality that had remained. The degradation of American survivors soon could go no further: Returning soldiers fought among themselves for a single cigarette butt thrown flippantly by an occupation soldier. War widows became whores to support their children, and parents were forced to sell the last belongings of their sons languishing in enemy POW camps.

The hypocrisy of the victors knew no bounds. At the very time when after the cessation of hostilities they committed the most horrible crimes, they instituted on American soil a court of justice that was to sit in judgment of all known American political, military and economic leaders. Even years later it could never be established how many Americans had become victims of these kangaroo courts but it became known that over a thousand general officers alone were executed and some American prisoners of war remained incarcerated for over 40 years. Never since biblical times had such a vengeance been wrought onto a nation.

A TRUE STORY

Could such horrible things happen to America? Hopefully, we will be spared what Germany went through. For this is an allegory, and everything written above is exactly comparable to the experience of the German people in our time.

APPENDIX II

Keynote address for the October 1990 IHR Conference by Mark Weber

Looking Toward the Future

Since our last conference in February 1989, the entire world has been joyful witness to dramatic and almost unbelievable historical events in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Above all, we have seen the breakdown of Soviet Communism, and with it, the end of Soviet domination of eastern Europe. These world-historical events, which were all but unthinkable just a few years ago, mark the welcome end of the Cold War, and of the postwar era in Europe, including the artificial division of the continent. Along with these developments, including the steady withdrawal of both American and Soviet military forces from Europe, a new age of freedom is dawning on Europe. The people of that continent are on their way to once again being masters of their own destiny.

Perhaps the most dramatic and symbolic expression of these changes was the opening of the Berlin Wall last November 9th. Just ten days ago, we witnessed the formal unification of the German Federal Republic and the German Democratic Republic into a unified state of almost 80 million people. We are witness to not only the collapse of the Communist political order, but also to the complete bankruptcy of an ideology, Marxism, that tried to impose an artificial equality in social and economic life, and which tried to stamp out national consciousness and national freedom. It will not be long before long-suppressed national feelings will find expression in the re-birth of the independent nation states of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Croatia, and perhaps Ukraine, Slovakia, and Slovenia. The breakup along ethnic-national lines of artificial, multi-ethnic states such as Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union is likewise inevitable.

Anyone who does not understand the importance of historical revisionism, or the relationship between political freedom and historical awareness, should look to the full-scale historical revisionism that has swept across eastern Europe and the Soviet Union during the past year. This process of historical revisionism is an inseparable part of the radical political and social transformation in that part of the world. In schools and universities throughout eastern Europe and the USSR, the subject in the curriculum that has undergone the most radical transformation has been history. In the Soviet Union, school exams were even postponed until after the old history textbooks could be thrown out and replaced with rewritten new ones purged of the accumulation of 70 years of official lies and distortion. Soviet newspapers and magazines, have been casting new light on one suppressed chapter of history after another, revealing in horrible detail the full scale of what Soviet Communism has meant in practice, particularly during the Stalin era. What has been emerging is a story of terror, mismanagement, death and suffering on a scale even more terrible than most of us here in West had ever realized.

In April 1990, the Soviet government finally admitted that the thousands of Polish officers killed in the Katyn forest near Smolensk during the Second World War were victims not, as had been claimed for decades, of German forces, but rather of the Soviet secret police, the NKVD. In Germany, the full extent of the terror of Stalinist rule in the Soviet zone of occupation in the years after the end of the war was brought to light. Earlier this year, mass graves were uncovered of tens of thousands of German civilian victims of Buchenwald, Sachsenhausen, and other postwar Soviet-run concentration camps. In Buchenwald alone, it was confirmed, at least 16,000 people perished in the years after the war.

Of course, this process of historical revisionism has been, for the most part, confined to a drastic re-evaluation of the history of Soviet or Communist rule. A similar reassessment of American history has not been undertaken. For example, almost nothing has appeared in the American media about the implications for OUR society of the truth of the Katyn massacre. Next to nothing has been said about the United States role in the historical coverup. The four Allied governments, including the United States, that staged the Nuremberg Tribunal of 1945-46, accused Germany of responsibility for the Katyn massacre in their joint indictment of the surviving German leaders. Witnesses and official reports — the same kind of evidence used to supposedly "prove German guilt for the murder of millions of Jews at Auschwitz and Majdanek — were presented at Nuremberg to supposedly prove German guilt for the Katyn massacre. To point up the truth about the Katyn massacre is thus implicitly to discredit the entire Nuremberg process. It is perhaps natural for people to want to suppress embarrassing chapters of their own past. A kind of self-righteousness about history, similar to that which prevailed in the Soviet Union until very recently, still holds sway here in the United States.

One of the most important works of revisionist history to be published since the last IHR conference is a book entitled OTHER LOSSES, which was published in Canada in September 1989. In this book, Canadian author James Bacque presents compelling evidence to show that American and French military forces were responsible for the deliberate deaths of about a million German prisoners of war. The principal figure responsible for this atrocity, Mr. Bacque shows, was Allied Commander, and later U.S. president, General Dwight Eisenhower. By removing German prisoners of war under American control from the protection of the International Committee of the Red Cross, Eisenhower broke international law and committed an act for which, under the standards of the Nuremberg Tribunal, he could have been hanged.

Bacque's book also documents the complicity of the New York Times and the International Committee of the Red Cross in suppressing the truth of this atrocity. Bacque's book has prompted a flood of letters and reminiscences by many former German prisoners and American GIs who have provided detailed further confirmation of the essential truthfulness of Bacque's book. I mention this revisionist book, not merely because of its important revelations about a suppressed chapter of history, but for its implications about the social climate that makes the work of the IHR so important. It is highly significant that this book was written not by a well-known and tenured professor at Harvard, Yale, Stanford, or the University of Wisconsin, or by an established historian at any major American university, but was instead the work of a non-professional. In the forty years since the end of the war, no establishment historian dug up what James Bacque was able to find. The reason, it seems, is that all too many American historians are simply not able to conceive that such an atrocity could have been carried out by the people who are assumed to have been the "good guys" of the Second World War. Each one of us operates on the basis of certain assumptions about life and society, and most historians of twentieth century history seem to operate on the basis of certain set assumptions about historical morality in the history of this century. James Bacque's book is an indictment, therefore, not merely of Eisenhower or the U.S goverment forty-five years ago, but also of the American historical establishment today.

OTHER LOSSES has been or soon will be published in Canada, France, Germany, Japan, Britain and even Turkey. It has been a best-seller in Canada, and in both Canada and Germany it has received widespread attention in newspapers and on television. Here in the United States, it has been the subject of numerous newspaper reports, and even the "CBS Evening News with Dan Rather" presented a rather fair report about it during its broadcast on October 10th, 1989. And yet, in spite of virtually certain substantial sales and profits, at least thirty U.S. publishers have turned down the book.

OTHER LOSSES has so far been effectively banned here America, the victim of a spirit of bigotry and prejudice that seem pervasive in the American publishing establishment. The editor of one U.S. publishing firm considering the manuscript wrote that his superior "felt, [quote,] he simply couldn't muster enough sympathy for all those dead Germans to want to publish the book.", unquote. Another major U.S. publisher responded to Bacque's description of how German prisoners had little to eat and almost no shelter by stating, quote, "They should have taken their God damn clothes away as well." unquote. Lewis Lapham, editor of Harper's magazine, declined to publish anything about Bacque's book because Americans are, he wrote, "future-oriented," quote, unquote, and are not interested in what happened forty years ago. Well, I wonder what Mr. Lapham would think of the millions of Americans who avidly followed the recent sweeping public television series on the Civil War, or of those who insist that we must forget what happened forty-five years ago to the Jews of Europe. Another expression of the prejudiced spirit that seeks to suppress Bacque's book appeared in the September 1989 issue of the journal of the Canadian section of the B'nai B'rith organization. Quote, "Is a possible motive behind the writing of this book an attempt to belittle the Holocaust by concocting a similar genocidal catastrophe directed against Germans, so that somehow, the Jewish Holocaust loses its uniqueness? Is this book merely another form of Holocaust denial?," unquote.

Thirty-five years ago, the great American revisionist historian Harry Elmer Barnes protested against the "blackout" tactics practiced against revisionist history by the group of people he called the "Smearbund." Sadly, it seems that little has changed since then in the publishing or academic history establishment. While it is difficult to believe that the informal boycott will succeed in permanently preventing an American edition of Bacque's book, particularly in light of the almost certain profits to be made, what has already happened reconfirms the importance of the work of the IHR, and of independent scholars such as Bacque and the historians whom we are pleased to welcome here this weekend.

Since the last IHR conference, there have been significant developments on the revisionist history front, both here in America and abroad. A family in a Chicago suburb made headlines last May when they publicly protested against an Illinois state law that requires compulsory "Holocaust studies" throughout the state. Mr. and Mrs. Sarich withdrew their daughter, Sanya, from the objectionable classes, and circulated 6,000 copies of an articulate open letter in which they explained the reasons for their decision. Their brave stand resulted in newspaper articles around the country, including a lengthy and relatively objective piece in the Chicago Tribune. In recent months, Holocaust revisionism has received a good bit of attention as a result of an acrimonious dispute involving Patrick Buchanan, a nationally-syndicated journalist and former White House speech writer and communications director. In a column published in March, Buchanan wrote that the story that Jews were gassed at the Treblinka camp with exhaust from a diesel engine is not credible, because such engines do not emit enough carbon monoxide to kill. Harvard university professor Alan Dershowitz responded with a vitriolic syndicated column charging that Buchanan has "apparently become a full-fledged, card-carrying member of the 'revisionist,' school." More recently, Buchanan was attacked as evil and dangerous by New York Times editor and columnist Abe Rosenthal, setting off a furious debate that is still going on. Commenting on the dispute, the weekly magazine U.S. News and World Report claimed a couple of weeks ago that Buchanan's writings have been "providing aid and comfort to those who still consider the Holocaust a myth." The daily New York Post also attacked Buchanan, and in this context, referred to Holocaust revisionists as, "flat earth types."

Every friend of the IHR is aware of the importance of the investigations by American engineer Fred Leuchter of the alleged extermination gas chambers in Poland. In the months since he addressed the last IHR conference, there have been significant developments in the Leuchter case, which will be described in detail tomorrow afternoon. Earlier this year, a teacher of history at Indiana University-Purdue in Indianapolis, Mr. Donald Dean Hiner, was dismissed from his teaching post because he had questioned the standard view of the Holocaust story in his classes. Here in American, in the name of free speech and academic freedom, we permit university professors to spout the most absurd nonsense in their classrooms. For example, some professors seriously claim that the AIDS epidemic was invented by the U.S. government as part of a genocidal plot to exterminate Americans of African origin. But casting doubt on the Holocaust extermination story is not tolerated, and it is worth noting that the normally so vociferous defenders of free speech have had nothing to say about this case. Well, as a result of these and other developments in recent years, most well-informed Americans are now at least vaguely aware of Holocaust revisionism. More importantly, a small but steadily growing minority of Americans are sympathetic with the revisionist view of the extermination story, or are at least skeptical of the more sensational Holocaust claims.

Since the last IHR conference, historical revisionism has continued to make steady progress in other countries. New revisionist periodicals and new translations of IHR leaflets have appeared in a number of countries. In France, where Holocaust revisionism has made the most impressive inroads, a handsome and well-edited new revisionist quarterly was launched earlier this year. In Belgium, an attractive Flemish-language revisionist quarterly journal has been launched. Holocaust revisionism has taken root in Poland, where a professor of social sciences at the University of Radom has launched a new pro-revisionist periodical. A growing circle of bright young Polish academics have been laying the foundations for solid revisionist growth in that country. Important revisionist work has also been quietly going on in other eastern European countries, and in the Soviet Union. British historian David Irving has spent a good bit of time this past year speaking to packed halls in different European countries. More will be said about this tomorrow afternoon.

Since the last IHR conference, the impact of Holocaust revisionism has been acknowledged in a backhanded way by some prominent Holocaust historians. We have seen some drastic concessions by historians who might be called "establishment revisionists." For one thing, the supposedly authoritative claim that four million people were put to death at Auschwitz was acknowledged to be a propaganda myth. In September 1989, Israeli Holocaust historian Yehuda Bauer declared that not four million, but perhaps 1.6 million died at Auschwitz. To maintain the completely untenable four million figure, he warned, would play into the hands of revisionists, because, after all, he conceded, the revisionists can easily demonstrate that this figure has absolutely no basis in reality. Bauer went on to pin the blame for the phony four million figure on the Poles, who were motivated by what he called a misguided Polish "national myth." Last July, the historical director of the Auschwitz State Museum in Poland announced that instead of four million, one million or perhaps one and a half million died at Auschwitz. He did not say just how he had calculated these figures, nor did he say how many of these people he thought were killed, and he gave no figures of the numbers of supposedly gassed. The tone of American newspaper reports about this drastic revision tended to pin blame on the Soviets or the Poles for the mythical four million Auschwitz figure. What was routinely suppressed in American papers is the fact that this four million figure was certified by not merely the Soviets, but also by the governments of the United States, Britain and France at the great Nuremberg trial of 1945-46. The joint Nuremberg indictment by the four Allied governments charged that four million were killed at Auschwitz alone, and another one and a half million at Majdanek. These figures were also widely, and uncritically repeated in the American press. What was also suppressed in the media accounts is that the newly revised Auschwitz figure implicitly discredits the postwar statements of Auschwitz commandant Rudolf Hoess. He supposedly "confessed" to killing two and a half or three million people at Auschwitz. Hoess' statements have been and still are widely cited as key evidence for the Holocaust extermination story. But if fewer than two million died at Auschwitz, as is now officially conceded in Israel and Poland, the Hoess "confessions" are implicitly fraudulent. Even though two and a half or three million people have now been officially un-gassed at Auschwitz, and maybe a million or so have been un-gassed at Majdanek, not even Yehuda Bauer has yet had the courage to draw the obvious conclusion that the magic victims were steamed to death — a story that no reputable historian now accepts. Also on this same page is a story about mass killings of Jews at the Belzec camp. Here again, we find more ADL disinformation. Citing a supposed "eyewitness account", Jews were put to death at this camp, the ADL claims, not by gassing, but by electrocuting the victims in a special hydraulic electrocution device. This is yet another phony story that no serious or reputable historian of the subject now accepts.

In an effort to lend credibility to this publication, there is a photograph on page eleven of a door with a sinister skull and crossbones emblem, and the words in German: "Caution! Gas! Dangerous to Life! Do Not Open!." Underneath this photograph is a caption, quote, "Door of a gas chamber, typical of ones through which millions of Jews passed to their deaths." unquote. In fact, what is shown in this photograph is actually the door of a non-homidical gas chamber at Dachau used to kill lice in clothes. It was never used to kill people. On the next page of this tabloid, is a reprinted article written in 1945 by New York Times journalist C.L. Sulzberger claiming that quote, "more than four million persons were systematically slaughtered in a single German concentration camp," unquote, referring here to Auschwitz. As already mentioned, this once authoritatively accepted claim of four million Auschwitz victims has now been officially consigned to the trash heap of history.

Since the ADL is usually so keen on keeping track of what is said here at IHR conferences, whoever is monitoring this for the ADL might want to take a note to clean up this act a little bit, or run the risk of looking even more ludicrous than usual. But perhaps I'm too optimistic. This ADL publication calls to mind an apt quotation from the Talmud: "How many pens are broken, how many ink bottles consumed, to write about things that have never happened.

Of course, our friends at the ADL are not the only ones who practice this kind of deceit with regard to twentieth century history, including attaching false or misleading captions to photos that actually show something quite different. When it comes to movie stars, Elvis Presley, and anything having to do with Hitler and the Third Reich, is seems that many people are ready to believe just about anything. A few weeks ago, the supermarket tabloid Weekly World News, provided a memorable example of such sensationalism in its issue of September 18th. A big frontpage headline proclaimed, quote, "Hitler Captured! Nazi madman trapped on way to Iraq to help Saddam Hussein. Nazi hunters catch Fuehrer boarding ship in Peru!" If you don't believe this story, just take a look at the proof provided inside. There's a photo here of a bungalow and yacht, which, the caption explains, is the house where the one hundred year old Fuehrer was hiding out, and the boat that he was getting ready to board when he was captured. Photographic proof!, just as authentic, Ladies and gentlemen, as that photograph of the gas chamber door in the mass-circulation ADL tabloid.

Because we are meeting for the first time here in Washington, DC, it is appropriate to mention the great Holocaust Museum that is being built not far from here, in the shadow of the Washington Monument. Interestingly, the initial decision in 1977 to build this Museum was motivated, as the influential business magazine Regardie's reported in its November 1988 issue, by fear of the growing influence of revisionist historians. The U.S. government may have trouble these days finding money to maintain our National Parks, or keep open the Library of Congress. And the government seems utterly unable to clear the streets of what are euphemistically called the "inner cities" of armed street gangs. But priorities are priorities, and the crowd here in Washington that makes our laws has decided, in its great wisdom, that taxpayer money must be kept flowing to keep in operation the "United States Holocaust Memorial Council," the taxpayer-funded federal agency that is putting up the $150 million dollar Holocaust museum. By the way, if you have the time and the inclination during your visit here in Washington to see some more of your tax dollars at work, you can stroll down to the offices of the U.S. Holocaust Council, located not far from here, at 2000 L Street, Northwest, where you can pick up lots of free Holocaust literature.

The July 1990 issue of the monthly newsletter of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, expressed alarm at the growing impact of Holocaust revisionism. It went on, "... the educational danger inherent in the dissemination of its pseudo-scholarly literature must not be underestimated." The government newsletter went on: "It is this literature of denial that compels the Museum to present the history of the Holocaust not only in a coherent and easily understandable way, but also in one that is historically unquestionable. It must not only tell the story, it must also prove the historical veracity of the story by using exhibits as evidence." To that end, the newsletter reports, the Holocaust Museum people have been busy collecting such convincing exhibits as: A few bricks from the Warsaw ghetto wall, a boat used to ferry Jews from Denmark to Sweden in 1943, some wartime toothbrushes, an eating table and some stools from an Auschwitz camp barracks, the entrance door to the Lodz ghetto hospital, and some Jewish wartime identity cards. Well, all this very interesting, but not quite evidence of extermination in gas chambers of millions of European Jews. This effort reminds me of the Georgia backwoods story of the "good old boy hunter," who bragged to his friends: "Last week I treed me a 300 pound possum, and if you don't believe me, I'll show you the tree!"

To be fair, the Holocaust agency has announced one exhibit that will be displayed in the Museum as evidence of extermination. What is it? To quote the March issue of the Council's newsletter, it is, quote, "a casting of the door that sealed one of the gas chambers at the Majdanek killing center in Poland." unquote. The newsletter includes a photograph of the sinister door. What about that? When we consult the thick book published late last year by "Nazi hunters" Serge and Beate Klarsfeld, we learn from the author, French Holocaust historian Jean-Claude Pressac, that this door did indeed close a gas chamber at Majdanek. However, as Mr. Pressac concedes on page 557 of his book, this chamber was used only to gas clothing. Pressac acknowledges that the only living things killed in this gas chamber were lice. Oh, these poor Holocaust Museum people. The Museum is months away from completion, and already they're having trouble getting their story straight. We will have fun with this Museum, because we intend to do what we can to help visitors to better understand what is on display. The Museum is supposed to open sometime in 1993, and when it does, we do not intend to be merely watching passively from the sidelines.

There is no question but that Jews suffered terribly during the Second World War. They were rounded up, taken from their homes, and deported to horribly overcrowded ghettos and camps, Many died, and many were killed. No one of good will can object to a museum or monument in memory of those who died. It is right and proper to memorialize the dead, and it is fitting to remember the victims of terror, prejudice and oppression, whether in this century or another, whether they be victims in Europe, North America, China, Japan, or even Palestine. But this Holocaust Museum will be much more than a sincere memorial to the dead. It will be the centerpiece of the seemingly perpetual campaign that Jewish American historian Alfred Lilienthal has very appropriately called "Holocaustomania."

This Museum which will ultimately be remembered most of all, not as a memorial to the suffering of six million innocent victims, but rather as a manifestation of the illicit power and influence of the small minority group that pushed for it, and of the political expediency and twisted priorities of the venal and unprincipled politicians who sanctioned it. This museum, the first of its kind in United States, is dedicated to the memory, not of dead Americans, but of dead Europeans. There is no comparable national Museum here in Washington DC dedicated to keeping alive the memory of the American Civil War. There are no imposing monuments or vast museums dedicated to the tens of millions of victims of Soviet Communism even though, as is well known, Stalin's victims vastly outnumber Hitler's. I am sure that if they are given the plain facts, most Americans would agree with us that this entire "Holocaustomania" campaign is out of line and entirely inappropriate, that it is a betrayal of our traditions and, in short, un-American.

Three years ago, in the summer of 1987, a syndicated article that appeared in newspapers around the country reported that the IHR was on the ropes, and suggested that it was only a matter of time before the IHR would either collapse or became utterly ineffectual. The article quoted an official of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, who said that the IHR, "is not fooling many people anymore.", Well, these days the ADL is singing a very different tune. Since our last conference, the very inappropriately named Anti-Defamation League has issued two propaganda booklets designed to discredit the IHR. The latest of these, which is entirely devoted to a misrepresentation of the last conference, all the same acknowledges that the impact and influence of the IHR is now greater than ever. And indeed, since the last conference, the IHR has continued its steady progress. Our popular series of envelope size leaflets has been expanded, and (many) hundreds of thousands are circulating in greater quantities than ever. The IHR's mailing list is larger than ever. Since the last conference, several important new books have been published, including a moving memoir, Why I Survived the A-Bomb, by Mr. Albert Kawachi. An attractive new edition of Dr. Staeglich's book about Auschwitz, and a new edition of Paul Rassinier's pioneering work on the extermination question, have also been published. A translation of Henri Rocque's brilliant doctoral dissertation has been brought out under the title, The Confessions of Kurt Gerstein. The IHR's quarterly Journal of Historical Review has reached an impressive level of editorial quality, giving it greater influence among those who influence others. IHR media director Bradley Smith has continued to reach many hundreds of thousands of new people across the country with the IHR's "Glasnost" message of historical awareness.

The Institute for Historical Review is dedicated to furthering historical truth, historical awareness, and understanding among nations. The IHR is not an enemy of any ethnic, racial or religious group. Our enemies are ignorance, prejudice, closemindedness, and intolerance. As I believe the presentations of this weekend will confirm for any intelligent and open-minded person, the work of the IHR deserves the support of all men and women of good will. We have no illusions about the great obstacles still before us. But at the same time, we are gratified by the measurable progress that has been made during the last several years! With pride in what we have accomplished, and with confidence that together we will achieve even more during the months and years ahead, we meet together this weekend, here in the nation's capital, in a spirit of fellowship and solidarity.

FOR MY LEGIONARIES. The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $8.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. ("Solzhenitsyn would appear to have not the slightest inkling of who conquered HIS country!"—B.C.) FOR MY LEGIONARIES, Order #06003, single copy $10.00, 3 copies $25.00, 5 copies $35.00

THE ANTI-HUMANS, by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented 'Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti-Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. Single copy $7.00, 3 for $15.00, 5 for $20.00.

For postage and handling add: On domestic orders, $1.50 for orders under $10.00, 15% of order total for orders over $10.00. On orders from abroad, $2.00 or 20% respectively. Sample copy of our monthly magazine Liberty Bell and copy of our huge book list containing hundreds of "Eye-Openers," $5.00. Subscription for 12 hard-hitting, fact-packed issues $35.00 (U.S. only). WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?
SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the rôles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. For your copy of Which Way Western Man? send $17.50 (which includes $2.50 for postage and handling for the softback edition (Order No. 22003).

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980—except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. For your copy (Order No. 03014) send $10.00 (which includes $1.50 for postage and handling). Sample copy of our monthly magazine Liberty Bell and copy of our huge book list containing hundreds of "Eye-Openers," $5.00. Subscription for 12 hard-hitting, fact-packed issues $35.00 (U.S. only). A NAVAL ENIGMA

The great and probably decisive victory of the Jews and their janissaries in 1945 was, needless to say, the result of many contributory causes, but, as has been repeatedly emphasized in the pages of Liberty Bell, the primary causes all lay within Germany. Foremost was the noble weakness of Adolf Hitler, who felt the peculiarly Aryan sense of gratitude, a desire and obligation to reciprocate loyalty given him in a time of adversity. That was why Admiral Canaris, who was probably a disguised Yid and certainly the Yids' secret agent, was made the chief of German Military Intelligence and was thus able systematically to betray all of Germany's military secrets to her enemies until it was too late. That is why Göring, loyal but incompetent, controlled the German Air Force and was, at least in large part, responsible for the fatal loss of supremacy in the air that made the nation's defeat inevitable.

Another prime cause was the prevalence of treason among Germans. Traitors in the Air Ministry sabotaged German aviation, undetected by Göring. Traitors made several attempts to assassinate Hitler, and may have infected him with the disease that made him helpless at the crucial point in the invasion of Russia and the Ukraine. Traitors in the army did their best to ensure defeat while remaining undetected.

A friend for whose judgement I have the highest respect has raised the question of treason in the German Navy, with particular reference to the loss of the great battleship, the Bismarck.

Before we discuss that question, let us remember that, as Thucydides observed, in no human activity does tyche—chance, luck, fortune, coincidence, fortuity, the random element, Tyche,[1] call it what you will—have so great and often crucial power as in war, where the results of military operations are often determined by factors that no human mind could have foreseen and anticipated. Great and even competent generals know that; the genius of the former lies in knowing when and at what odds to gamble with Tyche; the excellence of the latter lies in leaving as little as possible to her caprices.[2]

Of the possibility of incalculable coincidence we have a good example in the case before us. While the great battleship was undergoing its final fitting for action at sea, a gay young lieutenant, who was to command a new submarine, the U-556, as soon as it was commissioned, thought of asking a favor from Captain Lindemann, the commander of the Bismarck. He excogitated a sportive jest, and, with skill as a cartoonist and scrivener executed a legal document in the court of Neptune certifying that his submarine has adopted the great battleship as its protégé and would protect it from its adversaries. Captain Lindemann and his staff laughed heartily at the joke and sent the Bismarck's band to lend dignity to the ceremony of commissioning the submarine, which soon departed on a mission assigned to it.

Now if you enjoy playing with the famous binomial theorem, calculate the chances that, out of all the German submarines then at sea, the U-556 should surface to periscope-depth at a crucial moment and, with amazement, see before it, unescorted and perfect targets for torpedoes, the British battle cruiser Renown and the airplane carrier, Ark Royal. Given the age and construction of both ships, well-aimed torpedoes would probably have sunk them

1. If you are religious, you will recognize the divinity of Tyche, Fors Fortuna, the great goddess who shapes the destiny of mortals with her cold, immortal hands. She is worthy of your worship.

2. Thucydides illustrates this in his account of Nicias, who was a competent (but only a competent) general, and who, by the way, also illustrates the irony of events in war. A prudent man, he devised a political plan to prevent the Athenian democracy from embarking on the madly hazardous Sicilian Expedition, but he miscalculated the character of his compatriots, and, as a result, he found himself forced to assume supreme command of the expedition that he deprecated. One wonders what were his sentiments as the great fleet of proud triremes set sail from the Piraeus, destined to sail down the ocean of eternal night.

and would certainly have disabled them, thus quite possibly saving the Bismarck, for the Renown played a part in the final battle, and an airplane from the Ark Royal launched the torpedo that destroyed the battleship's rudders and so left her largely at the mercy of her attackers, who closed in, seeing that she could not turn promptly or maintain even normal speed. And it was a bitter irony that the heart-broken young lieutenant had no torpedoes to launch at the perfect targets, having fired the last of his in an attack on a convoy. Well, put that in your binomial theorem.

On the loss of the Bismarck we have two recent books. The first and, for our purposes, best is by Robert D. Ballard, who located the sunken ship and, with his robots, inspected and photographed her where she lies on the floor of the North Atlantic at a depth of 15,500 feet: The Discovery of the Bismarck (New York, Warner Books, 1990). He gives a complete account of the great ship's career, and, incidentally, established that the British did not, as they claimed and no doubt believed, sink her; she was scuttled at the order of her commanding officer. The point is a very minor one, however, for when scuttled, she was so terribly battered by huge cannon to which she could not reply that the end was inevitable.

The second book is a general account of German naval warfare, with a large section on the Bismarck, by anonymous editors: War on the High Seas (Alexandria, Virginia; Time-Life, s.a. [1990]).[3]

3. Given the reputation of Time-Life Books, I should note that this book is essentially fair in its approach. For example, it specifically notes that German commanders began the war intending faithfully to observe the ethics of warfare as determined by civilized nations before 1914. That is a great concession to truth. Educated readers will not need to be reminded that the Anglo-Americans had contemned and flouted the civilized code in 1914-1918, and, with their progress to barbarism, did not even think of it in 1939-1945, except when they could use the old standards to make propaganda for boobs. I except a few old-line British commanders, who, however, usually had reluctantly to obey orders from their criminal superiors. — The anonymous editors of this book also point out with emphasis the enormous odds against the German Navy in a conflict with the British. Even so, the Germans would have accomplished more, had it not been for the great heroism of British commanders, who often fought to the bitter end with admirable courage, and not infrequently thus prevented the Germans from exploiting a tactical victory.

In considering the question of treason, we must, of course, assess the character and conduct of the men who could have been guilty of it.

We must acquit Captain Lindemann, who, by the way, was last seen, standing at attention and saluting, as the waves closed over his ship. He was subject to the orders of his superior, Admiral Lütjens, who was in command of the tiny "squadron," that consisted of only the Bismarck and the heavy cruiser, Prince Eugen. Lindemann differed vehemently from Lütjens on every question of strategy and most matters of tactics, and it is the latter, whose authority was paramount, who must bear the responsibility for what happened.

The appointment of the two men, temperamentally and professionally antagonistic to each other, to serve together was obviously a mistake, but one that is often made in military and naval circles (remember, e.g., the Charge of the Light Brigade!) on the assumption that rank determines authority and responsibility and that the inferior officer will loyally obey his superior, whatever his personal opinion of the man or of that man's competence. That is correct, but since officers immediately below the commander are also expected to point out any data or factors he may have overlooked, the resulting friction is apt to perturb the judgement of the superior.

When we come to Admiral Lütjens, who appears to have been a cold-blooded and reserved aristocrat, and who was probably killed at his post before the end, we have three points to consider. He made three mistakes, two of them grave, viz:

(1). He twice neglected or refused to have the Bismarck's fuel tanks filled to capacity. This is a relatively minor point; a few hundred tons of extra fuel seemed unimportant at the time, although after the first battle, the ship, partly for that reason, had to take into account a coming shortage of fuel. We may gratuitously conjecture that in the first instance, Lütjens was unwilling to delay departure, and in Norway, he may have known or believed that the available fuel should be left for German vessels that might have greater need of it.

(2). Over the vehement protests of Captain Lindemann, he broke off the action after sinking the Hood, instead of pursuing (and probably sinking) the seriously damaged and fleeing British battleship, Prince of Wales. We may conjecture that Lütjens either (a) mistakenly believed that before he could overtake and sink the Prince of Wales he would be brought into contact with an overwhelmingly superior British force, for he knew that every available capital ship was frantically combing the North Atlantic in search of the Bismarck, or (b) have overestimated the damage his own ship had sustained and been unwilling to strain her in pursuit, or (c) have pedantically adhered to his orders, which were to avoid all unnecessary combat with capital ships, and to concentrate on the urgent task of intercepting the convoys that were bringing vast quantities of supplies from Canada and from the United States—supplies which the foulest War Criminal of all time, the mass of venom called Franklin Roosevelt, was sending, partly without the knowledge of his American subjects, at a time when he had not yet succeeded in driving his herd into the Jews' War.[4]

(3). After he, by a brilliant manoeuvre, successfully eluded the British fleets that were searching for him, he made the disastrous mistake of breaking radio silence to inform Germany of (a) the sinking of the Hood, (b) the British possession of some extraordinary equipment that made it possible to track ships out of sight over the horizon or hidden in fog banks, i.e., radar, and (c) his own decision to go to Brest for repairs. The radio message enabled the British to locate the Bismarck once more. We may conjecture that the Admiral either (a) thought that the importance of his news (especially that about radar) outweighed the risk, or (b) overestimated the power of the radar that had taken him by surprise, assuming that the British were still aware of his position, so that a message to Berlin would tell them only what they already knew, or (c) had concluded that the situation was, as he had anticipated from the first, hopeless and that he and his ship were ineluctably doomed, so that it did not matter, or (d) simply made a blunder, perhaps after another heated debate with Lindemann.

Now against these three errors, all readily explicable, we must set the Admiral's prescient order detaching the Prince Eugen in time and thus saving that valuable cruiser from destruction, as no traitor would have done.

We must furthermore remember that Lütjens had to his credit the most successful exploit and strategy of the German Navy in the War, since he directed the two smaller battleships, the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, when they created havoc among British convoys for two months and, eluding all of the available British Navy, escaped safely to Brest, and then, again outwitting the British, sailed for home, right through the British Channel. (He must have also played a part in the successful naval action that enabled Germany to anticipate the planned British occupation of Norway.)

That great accomplishment was in keeping with the gallant devotion of his last message (and farewell) to Berlin, and we must acquit Admiral Lütjens of all suspicion.

That is confirmed by the fact that he advised against the mission on which he was sent, seeing that, barring a miracle, it was certain to end in defeat and would be suicidal. We have conjectured above about Lütjens' reasons for certain decisions; we would know his reasons, had he succeeded in sending home a special log and commander's diary, in which he accounted for his strategy and tactics. We may be certain that he also emphasized the folly of the orders which sent him, his ships, and his men to almost inevitable defeat and death.

So now we come to Admiral Raeder, who gave those orders and even concealed from Hitler what he had ordered, instructing Lütjens not to disclose them when Hitler inspected the Bismarck before she sailed on a mission in which she was lost, having achieved nothing, except sinking the Hood, and that was no great accomplishment, as is obvious to everyone who has even a superficial knowledge of the Battle of Jutland (Skagerrak) in 1916.

Obviously, that could have been an act of treason, and our suspicions may seem to be corroborated by the fact that the American savages did not murder Raeder when they forfeited forever their precarious claim to civilization[5] by foully and most obscenely murdering German generals and civilians to please the sneaking enemies of all mankind. Raeder, however, was, with open mockery of all standards of civilized conduct, lawlessly sentenced to life imprisonment by the denatured and depraved creatures who were the Kikes' stooges.

We must look for evidence to confirm or disprove a strong suspicion.[6]

My friend emphasizes the facts that Raeder forbade naval officers to use the National Socialist salute in place of the traditional military salute, refused to dismiss Jewish officers in the Navy, and protested the famous Kristallnacht, as did Dönitz, Lütjens, and, for that matter, Hitler himself.[7]

5. Their claim to civilization was always dubious after they not only perpetrated the war of aggression against the Southern States, but gloried in the ferocity with which they treated their usually chivalrous and conquered opponents in the outrageous attack which they themselves called a Civil War, a false term, but one which should have mitigated their sadistic lusts. Americans, however, can argue in their defence that in 1861-1865 they were fighting a holy war, proclaimed by their howling dervishes, and it is a grim fact that the most potent of all hallucinatory drugs, Christianity, always crazes Aryans and suppresses their racial instincts, producing the bloody fury of the Thirty Years War and all other religious wars in Europe. This generalization is, of course, subject to exceptions: in 1860, for example, there were honest clergymen, but they were unable to counter the blood-lust excited by their vulgar and unscrupulous colleagues.

6. I must add the caveat that I have not read Raeder's memoirs, published in 1957, which I do not have at hand, and so cannot judge his efforts to exculpate himself.

7. About a year ago, I saw a typical Yiddish yelp entitled "We Must Never Forget the Kristallnacht." That is true. We must never forget that neat illustration of the hereditary and instinctive talents of the race that is conquering the world by massive deceit. What really happened? The official explanation by the German government, made immediately after the event, was that some German civilians, possibly incited by an overly enthusiastic Gauleiter, indignant because a Kike had assassinated an eminent German in Paris as an act of racial vengeance, broke some windows and destroyed some Jewish property. To

With all respect to my friend, these facts are of no significance.

The navies of civilized nations had an aristocratic tradition, which they maintained, far longer than did land forces, in the civilized world's headlong rush to barbarism. Naval officers retained the Aryan's instinctive respect for brave enemies, and honored them for their valor. One thinks, for example, of the British captain of the Duke of York, which had suffered heavy damage while participating in the action against the Scharnhorst: when his ship, limping back to Britain for repairs, passed over the spot where the German ship sank, a special honor guard stood at attention and a wreath was thrown on the water as a tribute to and in memory of opponents who had fought valiantly against overwhelming odds. This peculiarly Aryan chivalry is, of course, actually incomprehensible to Sheenies and their Judaized goyim.

Raeder, a veteran of Jutland, where he had been chief of staff under Admiral Franz von Hipper, represented the aristocratic tradition of the Imperial Germany Navy, and doubt-be sure, the windows were holy because they belonged to the holy race before which Americans cringe in mindless awe, but the incident was far less destructive and far less significant than the evening in New York City when there was a failure of electric power and, under the cover of darkness, the niggers sacked and looted hundreds of shops and stores and attacked Aryans on the streets. That is now forgotten because Americans think of themselves as such lowly swine that their betters have the right to do what they will with them and their property.

This official explanation, still believed by many who do not voluntarily drink Jewish hogwash, was made before relevant facts were disclosed by the subsequent investigation and the arrest and conviction of some Germans who participated in the event. It was false. The facts will lead you to just one logical conclusion, which the criterion cui bono? will make inescapable: the disorders were cunningly planned and created by the Jews themselves or, at least, the Zionist faction among them, utilizing at least one low-grade traitor or agent planted in a clerical capacity in the German Sturmabteilung. For the facts of the Kristallnacht, see the article by Ingrid Weckert in the Journal of Historical Review, Vol. VI, #2 (Spring 1985), pp. 183-206. In this article, the historian summarizes the evidence presented in detail in her Feuerzeichen, die "Reichskristallnacht" (Tübingen, Grabert, 1981).

less communicated that tradition to younger men under him. That was the tradition prized by Emperor Wilhelm II, and it had the typical weakness of aristocracies.

In all traditions, symbols are important, and Raeder's retention of the traditional salute was (almost certainly) a refusal to impair the long-standing tradition by a recent innovation. His and his colleagues' protest at the Kristallnacht may have been motived by perception of how the cunning Kikes would use it for propaganda, and was, almost certainly, motivated by the aristocratic insistence on discipline and repression of all disorders by a populace. And Jewish officers who seemed loyal were naturally to be retained by a service that resisted all civilian pressures and a tradition that conformed to the Germany of Kaiser Wilhelm II, who had many Jewish "friends" and even made one of them, a Warburg, the effective head of German Military Intelligence.[8] The naval tradition furthermore insisted that position and promotion must depend on demonstrated competence, to the exclusion of personal considerations.[9]

We have no reason to suppose that Raeder doubted the loyalty of his Jewish officers. They were competent and behaved like officers and gentlemen. Some of them probably were loyal to Germany; the others were protected by one of the Jews' great hoaxes, the claim that they are a religion, not a race. Raeder, who came from the middle class but, like Lütjens and others, had assimilated the aristocratic tradition, may well have believed that pretext. And there was also the example set by Wilhelm II.

8. It is likely that Warburg planted Admiral Canaris in the position which left him the commander of what was left of German Intelligence under the Weimar Republic, and thus in a position to ingratiate himself with Hitler by giving him secret support and information when Hitler seemed to be a negligible agitator with only twenty or thirty followers. Canaris was thought to be the son of a Greek father and an English mother, and his probable Jewishness was unsuspected when he was one of the advisers on whom Hitler most relied—until it was too late.

9. Such was the military tradition at one time. That is why the American army was so demoralized by the meteoric promotion of Eisenhower from a major almost overage in grade to supreme commander—not because Eisenhower was a partly Yiddish mongrel, but because he had thoroughly demonstrated his unreliability and utter incompetence as an officer, and was, as General McArthur said, a disgrace to a uniform he was unfit to wear.

It is quite likely that Raeder, Lütjens, and others, with the aristocratic dislike of all breaking of discipline by the lower classes, strongly disapproved of Hitler and National Socialism, which had been a mass movement, and, as aristocrats were apt to do, failed to realize the acuity of the crisis that made such a movement the nation's only salvation. The naval officers' disapproval did not affect their loyalty to their nation, especially when Germany had been attacked by enemy nations, who had forced on her a war for which she was woefully unprepared. The naval officers claimed to be apolitical, and in their actions they doubtless were, but no man can refrain from forming strong sympathies in national politics.

I have no relevant information, but I am prepared to believe that, on the whole, the naval officers' political sympathies were monarchical; that they would have welcomed a restoration of the Hohenzollern dynasty, and probably deplored the fall of the "monocled" cabinet of Fritz von Papen in 1932.[10]

Men of the aristocratic tradition, as I have said, probably did not fully perceive the acuity of the crisis with which Hitler had to contend, and they probably blamed him for a war for which they were not ready. That would not have affected their loyalty and conduct when the war was declared, any more than American officers would have behaved differently in action against the Japanese, had they known (as some of them probably did) that Japan had been tricked and even almost forced[11] to begin the war.

10. If you like to weave paradoxes, you can argue that Britain and France put Hitler in power by not making to Von Papen the concessions they had to make to Hitler a few weeks later. Von Papen, of course, lacked the political support in Germany that enabled Hitler to recognize that the Treaty of Versailles was, like all treaties, just a scrap of paper, and he probably also lacked the instinctive wisdom that enabled Hitler to know that the British and French would only bluster a little and do nothing.

11. Cf. Liberty Bell, July 1989, pp. 1-8.

This apologetic excursus should remind us, in passing, that all nations rot from the top, and that aristocracies are fatally vulnerable to Jewish infiltration and subversion. In no Western nation has the predatory race advanced from toleration to dominance before it has used its "democracy" to humiliate and subordinate the native aristocracy, and used its females to pollute the blood-lines.[12]

Aristocracies are sheltered by their prosperity, sometimes wealth, and their assured social position from many grim realities. They tend toward sentimentality, and many of them, especially women, have a tropism toward superstitions, while some men maintain a staunch fidelity to a traditional religion, as witness, for example, British Catholics and especially the Jacobites, for whom the religion was also loyalty to the Stuart dynasty. In the absence of strong political motives, however, the most intelligent level of the caste in all nations is apt to conform to the well-known aphorism about the British: "the religion of the upper classes consists in pretending to believe what they hope the lower classes will believe."

Aristocracies are, in a sense, international,[13] as were the monarchs of civilized Europe, who, connected by matrimonial ties and blood relationship, all knew and fraternized with each other, as required by protocol, even in the absence of personal liking. Some aristocrats, like their monarchs, may have family alliances with their peers in other countries, but all are international in the good and often ignored sense of the

12. One should note, however, that since human beings, given the complexity of genetic transmission, do not always or even usually breed true, aristocracies also decay from natural causes, since, as we all know, men often have progeny unlike them, but cherish even wastrels and wimpets because they are their sons. Genius is almost never inherited; a few British families maintained a comparatively high level of responsibility and competence for several generations, but they are exceptional.

13. Internationalism within the boundaries of the race is not by any means peculiar to the Europe that was once Christian. The upper classes of the independent Greek states knew one another, had hereditary relations of guest-friendship with families in other states, with whom they not infrequently intermarried, and sometimes extended the international relationship to non-Greek states that were culturally compatible (e.g., Lydia).

word 'cosmopolitan.' They have traveled in other lands and are aware of the character and peculiarities of foreign populations, and so know how to behave when abroad. (The word does not imply imitation of the foreigners, and true cosmopolitans are sometimes derided as carrying their native land with them, wherever they go.)

Aristocracies judge by manners and conduct and, we must admit, by income and resources, ceteris paribus. The manners of ladies and gentlemen, liberal culture, and a scrupulous adherence to a code of honor may all be simulated by artful poseurs, and can always be successfully copied by a race that exists by virtue of its genius for duplicity and simulation. Accustomed to consort with persons of similar social position in other nations, despite recognized differences in character and personal standards, an aristocracy will likewise accept even undisguised but seemingly civilized Jews, especially when deluded by the Christian dogma that the predators are a religion, not a race.

Having wandered so far, to dismiss the three charges against Raeder, let us return to our subject. We must examine his conduct as commander of the whole German Navy.

There is, so far as I know, no reason to suspect high-level sabotage in the impressive record of the Submarine Service, which was under the command of Admiral Dönitz, to whom Raeder apparently allowed a free hand.

Raeder undoubtedly sponsored the building of great battleships, the Bismarck and the Tirpitz, and many more which were planned. He claims to have submitted alternative plans to Hitler, who, with his well-known propensity for the grandiose,[14] chose the one that called for the construction of a whole fleet of such battleships, which, however, could never have matched the British Navy. It is not clear whether Raeder encouraged Hitler in that choice, or advised against it. It is not even clear whether he should have deprecated it.

14. This propensity is well illustrated by Hitler's plans for railroads vastly superior to anything now in operation even in major industrial countries, notably France and Japan. See Trains, August 1984, pp. 38-51. (There is no comparison with the railroads Americans have long sabotaged and are now junking.) Hitler's naval policy was probably sound, for he adopted the plan at a time when he believed the British were too sane to attack Germany, and he was thinking in terms of the Drang nach Osten of German expansion that has been traditional since the time of the Teutonic Knights. He wanted battleships that would, no doubt, have served very effectively in the Baltic when he moved, perhaps in 1943, to reclaim for civilization the Judaeo-Communist jungle east of Poland and win its most fertile territory for his nation.

It is easy now to say that such huge battleships were obsolete. It is true that when not adequately screened by smaller vessels, they were fatally vulnerable to attack from the air, as an American General, William Mitchell, declared in 1925, when he was court marshaled for his indiscretion and forced to resign from the Army. It was not clear, however, what replacement for such vessels was available.

Military and naval services are often accused of fighting the last war, not the current one. That is partly true, but they, like the rest of mankind, have no power to foresee the future in adequate detail, and it is well to remember that the American battleships that were left after Roosevelt destroyed some of them at Pearl Harbor won, together with submarines,[15] cruisers, and numerous supporting vessels, the war against Japan. Armies and navies cannot prepare for the next war because they do not know what it will be like. In 1939, for example, the Germans could not foresee the British invention of radar, the British could not foresee the German invention of the magnetic mine,[16] and neither side could foresee the eventual development of aircraft capable of flying long distances with a load of bombs or torpedoes.

Germany's strategic problem was to establish as much of a blockade of the British Isles as possible and thus deprive

15. Since Americans, when preening themselves on their phony righteousness, like to call submarine warfare wicked, they are usually not reminded that their submarines were extremely efficient and effective in the war against Japan. Anyone who watched the graph that recorded each week the tonnage of Japanese shipping that was still afloat, knew very well in 1943 how that war would end.

16. This invention was deadly to the British, and would have been even more effective, had not the secret of its construction been revealed by a blunder made by a pilot of the Luftwaffe. (Tyche, again!) It appears, therefore, that the secret had not been disclosed to the British by Admiral Canaris, who may not have known it, or who, since the Jews hated the British as much as they hated the Germans, may have included it only in the information that he reserved for the Soviets.

England of the vast supplies of foodstuffs, partly from Canada, and of fuel oil, munitions, other weapons, and machinery, chiefly from the United States, without which Britain would have had to surrender (and, by a nice irony, would thereby have remained a major world power).[17]

The convoys were beyond the effective range of all military aircraft at that time, and given the convoy system and the extraordinary efficiency of British destroyers, submarines alone could not do the work. It was therefore necessary to employ some kind of surface craft large enough to cover the distances involved and large enough to destroy the British destroyers and the cruisers that often protected them. The brilliant foray of the smaller battleships, Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, which did the work of scores of successful submarines, showed what could be accomplished, but probably could not be repeated, partly because the German Navy had always to operate under the eyes of Sweden, a nation filled with British spies and stupid Swedes who acted as volunteer spies, and partly because the British now detached capital ships to protect the convoys.

Given the overwhelming superiority of the British Navy, Germany's problem was perhaps insoluble, but it is just barely possible that the operation involving the Bismarck, if carried out as originally planned, could have disrupted the convoys long enough to force a British surrender. That was perhaps unlikely, but even an expert naval strategist could not tell you whether or not the operation would have succeeded: too much would have depended on the unpredictable caprices of the great goddess, Tyche.

17. Official British estimates were that an interruption of the convoys for four weeks would force Britain to surrender on any terms she could obtain (which, incidentally, would have been very generous). This vulnerability of Britain was not a recent development. Since the Industrial Revolution, Britain was absolutely dependent on imported foodstuffs and industrially dependent on imported raw materials. This fact underlay British insistence on naval superiority, especially the "two-nation" policy to which you may see references in histories, which was never quite formally enacted but represented the best military thinking. That policy was that the Navy must always excel the combined navies of any two other nations (in practical terms, the United States and Germany). The first real danger came from the invention and development of submarines. Some years before 1914, the creator of Sherlock Holmes published a "prophetic" and monitory short story, describing a blockade of the British Isles by German submarines and the consequent surrender of Britain to the evil incarnate in Kaiser Wilhelm II.

We cannot, therefore, convict Raeder on the basis of his predilection for large battleships, natural enough in an officer who had served on such ships and witnessed at Jutland what they did accomplish, with a projection of how much more they would have accomplished, had they been sufficiently numerous.

The nameless but able editors of Time-Life give, so far as I know, an adequately accurate and complete account of the naval operations carried out under Raeder's command, especially:

(1) The exploit of the Scharnhorst and Gneisenau that I have mentioned above, which a clever traitor could surely have sabotaged without great risk of detection.

(2) The German navy played the major part in carrying out the victorious occupation of Norway before the British could invade and capture that nation. There were some losses, of course, but losses are always inevitable in war, because Tyche is a greater goddess than Minerva.

(3) Raeder's policy of equipping mine-laying destroyers was highly successful, and there were no losses that could certainly have been avoided in the circumstances. There is, however, one noteworthy exception. One of the major defeats was the loss of destroyers that were bombed by the Luftwaffe because the Navy had failed to inform the Air Ministry that the destroyers were on that mission. This proves extraordinary negligence, and warrants a suspicion of treason, by someone in the Navy, but there is nothing to show that Raeder was implicated.

(4) Raeder's commerce-destroyers, operating in all the oceans of the world, accomplished more than could have been expected of them, given British dominion over the seas and the hostility of nations that did not foresee how much they would lose by a German defeat. There was, however, one episode that gives us pause.

When the small ('pocket') battleship (more properly classified as a heavy cruiser) Graf von Spee, after a duel with three British cruisers, entered the harbor of Montevideo for some repairs and needed supplies, as was her right under international law (which the Jews' stooges had not yet formally abolished), the British cannily contrived her destruction by sending, in a naval code the Germans were known to have compromised (if it had not been craftily given to them), messages which implied that a vast and insuperable armada, including one ship that had been sunk and another that was in dry dock at the time, had been assembled outside the estuary of the Plate to destroy the Graf von Spee when she emerged from neutral waters. Berlin, deceived by the trick (which was certainly unexceptionable as a legitimate ruse de guerre), is believed to have ordered the ship to commit suicide.[18] Now, even if the messages had been veracious, it surely would have been better for the Graf von Spee to go out and fight to the bitter and inevitable end against hopeless odds, as the great admiral for whom she was named had done in the battle off the Falkland Islands in December 1914. That would have meant the death of the crew that was saved and interned in Argentina, but it would have been in keeping with the Aryans' glorious tradition of military honor.

It is not entirely clear who was responsible for the order (assuming it was given). Certainly not Hitler, who is reported to have been furious when he learned of the ship's inglorious suicide. Could it have been Raeder? Or was the message a clever forgery by the British or a German traitor?[19]

18. The editors of Time-Life deny by implication that such an order was given, attributing the decision entirely to Captain Langsdorff after Uruguay had been bullied into abridging the provisions of international law. It was, however, known or, at least, believed in well-informed naval circles that Langsdorff had acted under orders from Germany. True to naval tradition, he did not survive his ship, but delayed his death until he had taken his men to safety in Argentina, which was less susceptible to bullying than Uruguay. On the basis of what I was told by competent officers, I am inclined to believe in the orders from Germany, although they may have been denied by Raeder in his memoirs.

19. At the time of the Kristallnacht (cf. note 7 supra), which had been scheduled for a time at which all ranking German officials would be present at a national celebration and away from their offices, the man

If Raeder gave such an order (and concealed his act when he saw Hitler would never pardon him), he was certainly breaching the proud tradition by which he set such store, and I would dismiss out of hand any plea that he acted to save the lives of the Graf von Spee's crew. That would bolster the suspicion of treason, but proof is lacking.

We are thrown back, therefore, to the orders which sent the Bismarck to her doom.

Epimetheus is always wiser than Prometheus, and often judges unfairly, but here, I think, examination of the situation at the time will give valid evidence, entirely independent of our knowledge of what actually happened.

If Germany had sent out a squadron consisting of the Bismarck, the equally mighty Tirpitz, and the two smaller battleships with all or most of her heavy cruisers, she would have committed virtually the whole of her navy except submarines[20] and destroyers to a desperate strategy, which, however, if blessed by Tyche, might have cut Britain's transatlantic lifeline for several weeks, conceivably even long enough to force surrender.[21]

The plan as finally drawn up by Raeder excluded the Tirpitz, which would not be ready for several weeks, but was otherwise essentially the strategic operation I have menon night telephone duty at a branch of the Sturmabteilung, instead of transmitting the order from headquarters that Jews were to be protected, forged and transmitted to some units an order for action against Jews. Then, his work done, the Jews' agent disappeared and could not be traced by the German investigators. He must have been smuggled out of the country by one of the Zionists' terrorist organizations. The possibility of a similar forgery concerning the Graf von Spee cannot be ruled out.

20. It would, of course, have been desirable to commit also submarines with a sufficiently large cruising range, but I do not know how many of these there were at that time. Everyone can see at once how effective would have been coördinated attacks by surface ships, which would disperse the convoy, and submarines, which would dispose of the defenceless sheep, one after the other.

21. Remember that at this time Germany still had a fairly effective command of the air, and that neither Roosevelt nor his partner and soul-mate, Stalin, was ready for an open attack on her.

tioned. The absence of the Tirpitz greatly reduced the chances of success, but the reduced force, if permitted by Tyche, could have sunk several convoys before it was hunted down and destroyed by superior British forces. The plan was even more desperate: it committed a large part of Germany's navy with a virtual certainty that that part would be sacrificed to inflict an unpredictable amount of damage on the enemy, but with no hope of a decisive action, short of a miracle.

Now it is quite true that a good commander will knowingly sacrifice part of his forces to gain a strategic position (not possible in the case we are considering) or to inflict on the enemy such severe damage as will gravely impair his future operations. I doubt that the projected operation could have been justified on those terms, but we need not debate the question.

What happened was that Raeder, when the other forces were not immediately available (for a variety of reasons we need not enumerate), decided to send out the Bismarck and Prince Eugen alone. It is conceivable that the two ships, if they set out undetected and were thus able to take the British by surprise when they commenced operations against the convoys, could have disrupted several convoys and perhaps sunk the ships in one or two of them. But a secret departure was virtually an impossibility when the vessels had to traverse the narrow body of water that separated Denmark from Sweden. Not even Tyche could have arranged a sufficiently dense and sufficiently lasting fog to permit that. It was therefore virtually certain that the vastly superior British navy would be alertly watching to protect the route of the convoys, which could be reached only by circling the British Isles from the north and proceeding down the coast of Greenland (as was actually done).

The chances that the two ships would be able to inflict any significant amount of damage were small. That they would be sacrificed was virtually certain.

Before he set sail[22] with his ridiculously small squadron, Admiral Lütjens knew that he was going to virtually ineluctа-

22. Note incidentally how a language's fixed idioms survive the conditions in which they arose, and become absurd, if not taken metaphorically.

ble defeat and death, and he so told Raeder. Raeder himself must have known that before he gave the order. And Adolf Hitler, despite his often confessed unfamiliarity with naval operations, would have known that and would have forbidden the desperate sortie, countermanding Raeder's order, had he known of it. Raeder knew that also, and kept Hitler ignorant of the operation until the German ships were far up the coast of Norway. And even then Hitler wanted to recall the ships, but was with difficulty persuaded by Raeder that a prudent recall would impair morale. He may even have given Hitler a wildly exaggerated estimate of the possible success of the operation—we do not know what was said.

Now what could have impelled Raeder to issue an order, which he must have known Hitler would not have authorized, for a predictably suicidal operation that would involve the loss of two of the small German navy's best ships?[23] (The Prince Eugen did survive and return safely, thanks to Admiral Lütjens and Tyche, but that could not have been expected.) He could, of course, have hoped for the partial success I indicated above, but even so the operation was a desperate gamble, comparable to playing Russian roulette with not one, but five of the revolver's six chambers loaded.

We have tried to appraise the situation fairly as well as realistically and with sufficient accuracy, and we are led to the conclusion that Raeder gave covertly a strategically indefensible order. It cannot have been a tactical part of a master plan, such as often results in a shattering failure, usually because some well-planned action is ill-timed when carried out in a suddenly changed situation.

23. He cannot have believed his own propaganda that the Bismarck was "unsinkable." By the unalterable facts of naval architecture no ship can be that, even in the absence of attack from the air. The goal of the naval architect was to build battleships so superior that in a battle at sea his fleet, for example, would lose only three, while the enemy lost six or seven. That is what would make the difference between victory and defeat. When modern battleships engage at a distance of fourteen miles or more, the best gunnery on one can do no more than hit some part of the other. The shell that inflicted noteworthy damage on the Bismarck was aimed by Tyche, and it is pointless to talk about a weakness of German naval architecture. All battleships have their weak spots and must rely on chance that the enemy's fire will not strike them. A battleship adequately armored in all of its parts would sink of its own weight.

(E.g., Pickett's charge at Gettysburg would have been successful, and might even have saved the cause of human freedom in America, had it been made a little earlier; when it was made, it was heroic but suicidal folly. "C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la guerre.") There can have been no such calculation when Raeder sent the Bismarck to its doom, and we know of nothing else that would have justified that act (e.g., the sailing of some supremely important convoy). There is no valid military defense for Raeder's order.

A political motive, to enhance the prestige of the Navy by doing something spectacular, or to solidify Raeder's position in the German hierarchy, is excluded. Failure never redounds to the glory of its author.

We are left therefore with grounds for suspecting that Raeder's act was treason. We can apologize for it only on the grounds that all men make mistakes, even costly mistakes, and sometimes inexplicable blunders, through the irremediable weakness of the human mind and human nerves. That is, however, a feeble defense in any given situation, and we should have a right to pronounce Raeder probably guilty, were it not for his record of well-planned operations and apparent loyalty, of which the principal chapters have been listed above.

As it is, we must conclude this long inquiry with the verdict that juries in Scotland, I suppose, can still give: Not proven.

HITLER AND THE ZIONISTS

Liberty Bell, March 1991, p. 1, citing a French translation of a German translation from English, referred to "a proposal made to Adolf Hitler by the present Prime Minister of Israel, Yitzhak Shamir," and promised publication of the original English text as soon as it could be procured.

The reference, although it accurately reproduced the meaning of the cited article in the Courrier du Continent, was inexact. Now that a copy of the English text is available, it appears that the proposal to Hitler was made, not by Shamir personally, but by Stern-Yair, the head of the notorious Stern Gang, of which Shamir was a prominent member. The story is told by Lenni Brenner, a Jew who represents a Zionist faction opposed to Shamir, in his book, The Iron Wall: Zionist Revisionism from Jabotinsky to Shamir (London, Zed Books, 1984). He notes that Shamir, in several inconsistent statements, denied participation in the Stern Gang, but dismisses the denials as only what was to be expected from an habitual liar.

According to Brenner, "Stern-Yair's...manifesto, Ikarei ha Tehiyyah (The Principles of Revival), defined their [the Zionists'] objectives: the Jewish people as the Chosen People were fully entitled to the entire Biblical patrimony as laid down in Genesis 15:88—everything from the brook of Egypt to the Euphrates. There was to be 'an exchange of population', i.e., the forced expulsion of the Palestinians, and the building of the Third Temple. Firmly convinced that the Axis were going to win the war,...the Sternists sent Naphtali Lubinczik to Vichy-controlled Beirut where, in January 1941, he met two Germans, Alfred Roser, a Military Intelligence agent, and Werner Otto von Hentig of the Foreign Office. On 11 January 1941 they sent the Sternists' memorandum proposing collaboration to their embassy in Ankara, where it was found after the war. As the document...places Shamir in the starkest historic perspective, it is obligatory to cite it in full."

Here follows that text, transcribed verbatim from Brenner's book, pp. 195-197:

FUNDAMENTAL FEATURES OF THE PROPOSAL OF THE NATIONAL MILITARY ORGANIZATION IN PALESTINE (IRGUN ZVAI LEUMI) CONCERNING THE SOLUTION OF THE JEWISH QUESTION IN EUROPE AND THE PARTICIPATION OF THE NMO IN THE WAR ON THE SIDE OF GERMANY.

It is often stated in the speeches and utterances of the leading statesmen of National Socialist Germany that a prerequisite of the New Order in Euope requires the radical solution of the Jewish question through evacuation ('Jew-free Europe').

The evacuation of the Jewish masses from Europe is a precondition for solving the Jewish question; but this can only be made possible and complete through the settlement of these masses in the home of the Jewish people, Palestine, and through the establishment of a Jewish state in its historic boundaries.

The solving in this manner of the Jewish problem, thus bringing with it once and for all the liberation of the Jewish people, is the objective of the political activity and the yearslong struggle of the Israeli freedom movement, the National Military Organization (Irgun Zvai Leumi) in Palestine.

The NMO, which is well-acquainted with the goodwill of the German Reich government and its authorities towards Zionist activity inside Germany and towards Zionist emigration plans, is of the opinion that:

1. Common interests could exist between the establishment of a new order in Europe in conformity with the German concept, and the true national aspirations of the Jewish people as they are embodied by the NMO.

2. Cooperation between the new Germany and a renewed folkish-national Hebraium would be possible and,

3. The establishment of the historic Jewish state on a national and totalitarian basis, bound by a treaty with the German Reich, would be in the interest of a maintained and strengthened future German position of power in the Near East.

Proceeding from the considerations, the NMO in Palestine, under the condition the abovementioned national aspirations of the Israeli freedom movement are recognized on the side of the German Reich, offers to actively take part in the war on Germany's side.

This offer by the NMO, covering activity in the military, political and information fields, in Palestine and, according to our determined preparations, outside Palestine, would be connected to the military training and organizing of Jewish manpower in Europe, under the leadership and command of the NMO. These military units would take part in the fight to conquer Palestine, should such a front be decided upon.

The indirect participation of the Israeli freedom movement in the New Order in Europe, already in the preparatory stage, would be linked with a positive-radical solution of the European Jewish problem in conformity with the abovementioned national aspirations of the Jewish people. This would extraordinarily strengthen the moral basis of the New Order in the eyes of all humanity.

The cooperation of the Israeli freedom movement would also be along the lines of one of the last speeches of the German Reich Chancellor, in which Herr Hitler emphasized that he would utilize every combination and coalition in order to isolate and defeat England.

A brief general view of the formation, essence, and activity of the NMO in Palestine:

The NMO developed partly out of the Jewish self-defence in Palestine and the Revisionist movement (New Zionist Organization), with which the NMO was loosely connected through the person of Mr V Jabotinsky until his death.

The pro-English attitude of the Revisionist Organization in Palestine, which prevented the renewal of the personal union, led in the autumn of this year to a complete break between it and the NMO as well as to a thereupon following split in the Revisionist Movement.

The goal of the NMO is the establishment of the Jewish state within its historic borders.

The NMO, in contrast to all Zionist trends, rejects colonizatory infiltration as the only means of making accessible and gradually taking possession of the fatherland and practices its slogan, the struggle and the sacrifice, as the only true means for the conquest and liberation of Palestine.

On account of its militant character and its anti-English disposition the NMO is forced, under constant persecutions by the English administration, to exercise its political activity and the military training of its members in Palestine in secret.

The NMO, whose terrorist activities began as early as the autumn of the year 1936, became, after the publication of the British White Papers, especially prominent in the summer of 1939 through successful intensification of its terroristic activity and sabotage of English property. At that time these activities, as well as daily secret radio broadcasts, were noticed and discussed by virtually the entire world press.

The NMO maintained independent political offices in Warsaw, Paris, London and New York until the beginning of the war.

The office in Warsaw was mainly concerned with the military organization and training of the national Zionist youth and was closely connected with the Jewish masses who, especially in Poland, sustained and enthusiastically supported, in every manner, the fight of the NMO in Palestine. Two newspapers were published in Warsaw (The Deed and Liberated Jerusalem): these were organs of the NMO.

The office in Warsaw maintained close relations with the former Polish government and those military circles, who brought greatest sympathy and understanding towards the aims of the NMO. Thus, in the year 1939 selected groups of NMO members were sent from Palestine to Poland, where their military training was completed in barracks by Polish officers.

The negotiations, for the purpose of activating and concretizing their aid, took place between the NMO and the Polish government in Warsaw—the evidence of which can easily be found in the archives of the former Polish government—were terminated because of the beginning of the war.

The NMO is closely related to the totalitarian movements of Europe in its ideology and structure.

The fighting capacity of the NMO could never be paralyzed or seriously weakened, neither through strong defensive measures by the English administration and the Arabs, nor by those of the Jewish socialists.—

As all readers of Main Kampf[1] well know, Hitler was fully aware of the Jews' racial technique of using words to conceal their thoughts and intentions, not to elucidate them, as is normally done by Aryans (except polticians and other crooks), whom God's Race despises for their gullibility. The German envoys, doubtless on instructions, replied politely that the interests of the Arabs would be respected by Germany.

Stern-Yair's envoy then professed, with characteristically hypocritical duplicity, that the Zionists would accept Madagascar as a "homeland," thus echoing the project that Hitler had approved when he found that the British, embarrassed by their treachery in signing the Balfour Declaration to obtain a copious supply of American cannon-fodder for their insane war against Germany in 1917, and still striving to retain the respect of the Arabs whom they had bamboozled, absolutely refused to permit emigration of Jews from Germany to Palestine. (Cf. Stern-Yair's manifesto, reported in our opening paragraphs, which demands all of Palestine, from Egypt to the Euphrates, but again with hypocritical concealment of the intention that this Palestinian "homeland" was to be the capital of One World in which all the lower anthropoids had been reduced to submission to their Yahweh-given masters—the capital into which, as promised in the Christians' Jew-book (Isaiah, 60.11) and the even more authoritative Dead Sea scroll (in Gaster's translation, p. 297), all the wealth of the entire globe is to be transported for the delectation of the god-like race to whom Yahweh gave the whole universe.)

1. See especially his perspicacious analysis of the Jews' basic method in Chapter Ten of Part One—pp. 252-254 in the well-printed, cloth-bound edition of the German text available from Liberty Bell Publications, $40.25 postpaid.

According to Brenner, the Sternists were not discouraged by the Germans' rebuff of their first attempt to negotiate an alliance, and made a second attempt in December 1941, which failed because their emissary, Nathan Yalin-Mor, was arrested while he was trying to sneak through Syria on his way to Turkey, bearing a new proposal to be made through German diplomats in that country.

Brenner notes that although Shamir now tries to disclaim a part in the attempted negotiations with Hitler, that is a "crude official lie," and that Shamir does admit comparable and successful negotiations with the Polish "anti-Semites" before the War, explaining that "It was a political agreement. They helped us for anti-Semitic[2] reasons. We explained to them, 'If you want to get rid of the Jews, you must help the Zionist movement.' " This is, of course, precisely what was said in the document quoted above, in the formulation of which Shamir now thinks it expedient to deny that he had a part.

His colleagues, perhaps including Shamir, eventually sacrificed Stern-Yair, who was killed by the British police in 1942, after which it became a useful trick to blame on the "Stern Gang" acts that had been too openly outrageous to public opinion among the stupid Europeans, and Shamir, one of the cleverest and most accomplished Zionist murderers and terrorists, rapidly made his way upward in

2. Note in this blatant misuse of the English language a typical Kikish deception. It implies that the Semites of Palestine and throughout Islam are "anti-Semitic," whereas the facts are that, as everyone knows, the Jews are today the most violently anti-Semitic people in the world, hating Semites as much as they hate Aryans.

the movement, which he now, as Prime Minister of Israel,[3] officially heads.

Brenner, who is, as we have said, a Jew and in his work repeatedly affirms the truth of his race's great Holohoax,[4] quotes his sources, but the best proof of the authenticity of the diplomatic document we have reproduced above is the fact that it is not even mildly astonishing to anyone who has systematically observed the ascertained conduct of Yahweh's Yids since they first appeared in recorded history to afflict civilized mankind. Less well-informed Americans, however, will probably be amazed by the Jews' attempt to cozen Hitler by offering him a military alliance against Great Britain, and for that reason the document was considered worthy of the space we have given it in Liberty Bell.

WHOSE COUNTRY?

Science Service, Inc., recently conducted, on behalf of Westinghouse Electric, a search for high-school pupils who evinced the talents requisite for distinction in scientific research and high technology and so deserved to be encouraged by being awarded scholarships in major universities. Contests were conducted in the various states, and forty young men and women of high intellectual potentiality were brought to the District of Corruption for a final contest. All will receive at least $1000, and some will receive as much as $40,000.

A roster of the forty winners was published in Science News, 26 January 1991. Here is a list of most of them:

Mehul Vipul Mankad
Welly Soong
Wel-Jen Jerry Shan
Rageshree Ramachandran
Don H. Kim

3. Note again the typical deception in the use of a name chosen for its emotional effect on mutton-headed Christians. According to the Biblical myth, the people of Israel were the ten tribes supposedly deported to Assyrian territory and "lost," while the Jews of today are the descendants of the inhabitants of Judaea, a kingdom that was often at war with Israel. The successful use of such verbal tricks is perhaps the best confirmation of the Jews' confidence that Aryans are infinitely stupid and idiotic.

4. Much as he dislikes Shamir personally, he offers a partial apology for the attempted negotiation with Hitler by observing that it was an ill-considered effort made before the Germans began to gas, incinerate, or vaporize millions or billions of innocent Sheenies.

In the entire list of forty, there are only two names that might have appeared in a roster of forty talented students in high schools fifty years ago, and we cannot be sure that even those two names are genuine and really represent the Americans of that almost forgotten time.

The remaining names are ambiguous: some could represent awkward Anglicizations of names of German, French, Italian, or Polish immigrants; some could be Americans whose parents had zany ideas about nomenclature; and some are most probably Oriental or Indian names ineptly disguised. Without photographs of the individuals, the whole set of odd names must be suspect.

Unlike the humanities, which have become a garden of poison ivy, scientific subjects still demand some genuine ability. The list of winners may therefore be taken to represent the crème de la crème of intelligent young persons who have attended high schools in this country.

Whose country? It isn't yours any more, American dunce.

THE VACANT SEE

My article, "The Stolen Church," in the December issue was read by a British subscriber who is a staunch Roman Catholic, and, finding its argument acceptable, he seems to have submitted it to a canon lawyer, possibly the Officialis of some diocese, who, given the present state of the Church, naturally prefers to remain anonymous, to avoid reprisals.

The report, of which he gave me a copy, concludes that, according to the established laws of the Church, with special reference to "the Apostolic Constitution, Cum Ex Apostolatus (1559)," and to the official Code of Canon Law, which was universally accepted and in force at the time of the last four conclaves, "Angelo Roncalli, Giovanni Battista Montini, Albino Luciani, and Karol Wojtyia (respectively known as John XXIII, Paul VI, John-Paul I, and John-Paul II)," given their undisputed record, cannot have occupied the papal throne legally and were therefore impostors, even though their spurious authority was widely accepted.

As my correspondent summarizes the argument, using the present tense for convenience in reference to all four impostors, the report "shows that the laws of the Catholic Church are in complete accordance with common sense: John XXIII and his three successors are not by any stretch of the imagination Catholics and therefore cannot be popes, as it is ludicrous to suppose that a person can be head of an organization of which he is not even a member."

It follows that, as the report states bluntly, "Therefore the papacy has been vacant since the death of Pope Pius XII in 1958."

This gives us a noteworthy parallel. The Constitution of the Roman Catholic Church and the Constitution of the United States have never been officially rescinded and abrogated, and there is an hypocritical pretense that both are still in force, but both are disregarded, scorned, and flounted by the two apparently quite different gangs of criminals and traitors who have effectively captured and defiled the Church that once was Christian and the country that once was American.

Why should two such fundamentally different and disparate organizations have been ruined in essentially the same way? And cui bono? One remembers the technique that the Jews have used so successfully against civilized mankind for twenty-five centuries: First defile and then destroy. ❑

An Open Letter to George Bush

George Bush
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Mr. President!

Congratulations on the outcome of your war! You really kicked the stuffing out of those Iraqi towel-heads, just like you promised you would.

Golly, it was a fun war! All of us television watchers got a real buzz watching your "smart" bombs blow those camel jockeys out of their bunkers and seeing your B-52s blasting the Iraqi population back into the Stone Age. Not that they had advanced much beyond the Stone Age even before you started the war—which is a good thing, I guess, because otherwise they might have been able to put up a real fight. You certainly know how to pick them, Mr. President!

As one ex-flier to another, let me tell you that when I saw our boys taking off in their jets from our bases in Saudi Arabia I was really itching to be sitting in the cockpit of an A-10, shooting up Iraqi armored columns with a 30-mm gatling gun. There's nothing like a blood sport to build public support for a country's leader, as the Roman emperors knew, and the show you gave us was every bit as exciting as anything that ever happened in the Colosseum. You're right up there with Caligula and Nero now. Nobody will ever call you a wimp again!

For a while I was worried that some of those meddling peacemakers would short-circuit your ground offensive with their diplomatic maneuvers before you could get it started. I guess you had the same worry, but you handled the situation superbly by giving old Saddam an ultimatum you knew he couldn't possibly comply with and then launching your attack immediately, before any of those diplomats could get into the act again. Smart move!

Even smarter, I think, is the way you convinced the American people that your war was their war: the way you made them believe that they were fighting for their interests instead of for you know whose! It took you a while, of course, to come up with a credible reason for starting the war, and I must confess that at first I was embarrassed every time I heard you switch from one rather transparent excuse to another. I'll bet the folks over at the Israeli embassy were really becoming impatient with you. But then you hit on your "naked aggression" slogan, and they swallowed it. I mean, you even had the boobs repeating what you told them about it being better to fight

Saddam in Baghdad now than having to fight him in the USA later! You were able to make them believe that old Saddam had the will and the means to pose some kind of threat to America, despite all of the plain evidence to the contrary. That shows real political skill! And when people are stupid enough to let themselves be manipulated like that, why shouldn't you do it?

I don't want you to think that I'm trying to flatter you, Mr. President: of course, we both know that you weren't able to trick the people into supporting your war all by yourself; without the help of the controlled news media you couldn't have done it. I mean, suppose some of the news reporters had wanted to create a little doubt in the minds of the American people about your motives in wanting a war and had asked you some hard questions during your press conferences. Suppose they had asked you just what you mean when you talk about fighting for a "new world order"; suppose they had made you really explain that one. Or suppose they had pressed you for an answer as to just what threat Saddam could possibly pose to America. Or they could have given you a hard time with questions about whether it was worth the life of a single American to put the Emir of Kuwait back on his throne. They might even have asked you whether you deliberately set Saddam up by encouraging him to annex Kuwait in the first place. (Remember how your State Department told him last summer that the United States had no treaty with Kuwait and did not consider a dispute between Iraq and Kuwait to be of interest to us? Remember? You and Jim Baker really slipped one over on him, eh?).

But the reporters never put you on the spot, did they? They never asked you, "Hey, Georgie boy, isn't it true that Yitzhak told you that if you wanted media support for a second term you'd better smash Iraq for him?" They never asked you why you were so concerned about the rights of Kuwaitis and couldn't care less about the rights of Palestinians. And when you would start talking about your "new world order" at press conferences they'd just study their shoelaces and then ask you a question about something altogether different. They didn't even give you a hard time about atrocities: there was hardly a mention about our pilots strafing those buses full of Iraqi schoolchildren, or bombing that baby-formula bottling plant in Baghdad you said was a poison-gas factory, or targeting that air-raid shelter full of civilians your generals claimed was a military command bunker. Quite a difference from the way they reacted to My Lai, eh? Really good to see the media people acting like Americans for a change, wasn't it?

But, hey, you had the fix in with the media from the beginning, didn't you? I mean, I saw the sly smile on your face when you said that you could guarantee that your war against Iraq wouldn't be like Vietnam. What you meant was that you knew the people in the controlled media would be backing you instead of bucking you, like they did to Nixon. You knew you could count on their collaboration, because, after all, the people who pay their salaries are the people you started this war for. That's why NBC's Garrick Utley was smirking approvingly while some idiot he interviewed for the NBC Evening News just before your Blitzkrieg started was babbling about what a threat Saddam's aggression was to America and how we had to stop him now.

Of course, the less said about the stringpullers behind your war the better, right? I just thought I'd mention it, because there have been some leaks. I mean, some of our people thought it was really too much when the Israelis claimed we owe them $13 billion for not hitting back at Saddam for his pathetically ineffective Scud attacks, and these taxpayers said, hey, what about the $50 billion you owe us for fighting your war for you? But I think that most of the voters didn't pick up on that; they were too busy tying yellow ribbons on everything in sight. If you and Jim Baker keep up the pretense of applying pressure to Israel (that'll be the day!) to help cool things over there, the boobs here will never figure it out. I just hope you haven't left any tapes of Oval Office conversations between you and old Yitzhak lying around where some anti-Semite might find them and start blabbing. Remember what happened to Nixon?

Well, I'm sure you do, and I doubt that the true story about why you were so eager for this war will ever come out. I mean, why should it? After all, everybody—except the towel-heads, of course—is really happy about the way things have turned out. Not only did you give the Jews what they demanded, but you also gave the American people a real treat too. I mean, it feels so good to be able to be patriotic and to wave the flag without being attacked by the media as fascists or rednecks. And it's been a while since we were able to give somebody a real stomping without having to worry too much about him hitting back. I think it's good for everybody to let off a little steam and forget about domestic problems by kicking the bejesus out of a bunch of foreigners every now and then, don't you? And, of course, it didn't hurt a bit that your war took the pressure off a lot of people in the savings-and-loan business for a while, including your son Neil.

There are some party poopers, of course, who worry about what you've done to the image of America as a peace-loving, civilized nation. They say you made a mockery of the whole concept of collective security through the United Nations by bribing some countries and twisting the arms of others to put your "coalition" together. They say that what you did in the Persian Gulf was nothing but old-fashioned gunboat diplomacy at its worst—that you've confirmed what Third World people have been saying for years about "Yankee imperialism" and "neo-colonialism." Some bleeding hearts even complained that your bombing of the fleeing Iraqi troops who were leaving Kuwait, just so you could run the body count up to 150,000, was a shocking case of overkill.

Well, what the hell! Everybody knows that all of that liberal talk about respecting the rights of smaller nations and "the rule of law" in international affairs is a crock. The only law that rules is the law of the jungle, just as always. Might makes right, I say. I know you can't afford to say that yourself—at least, not publicly—but you let everybody know what you really think about international law and the rights of smaller nations when you invaded Panama to arrest their sleazeball of a president more than a year ago. Good move! We both know that force is the only thing greasers and towelheads respect. We have to let them know that if they won't elect the kind of leaders who'll take orders from us, we'll kick their asses, as you yourself said so well during the (ha, ha) "diplomatic" phase of your war against Saddam.

Before I close this letter, Mr. President, maybe I should tell you about one little worry that I have. I know there's not much chance of this happening, but just suppose that some day this country gets a truly patriotic government—a government headed by people who put the genuine, long-term interests of the American people ahead of everything else, even the next election. Suppose such a government starts a formal inquiry into your war, and suppose you're still alive at the time. Suppose the truth comes out. It could be pretty embarrassing for you, if not downright dangerous.

I mean, your . . . how shall I say it? . . . your criminal use of American resources and military personnel—sending American soldiers off to kill and be killed for the benefit of a foreign power instead of to defend genuine American interests—might be construed as treason. And what you did to the Iraqis might be considered genocide. Not that I look at it that way, you understand, but some people might. Suppose people of that sort get into the government, Mr. President.

Where will you hide?

Sincerely,
William L. Pierce

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

THE NEW WORLD ORDER

By the end of January 1991 many of the purposes of Bush's War had become clear.

One objective was not only obvious but realized at the very first: the ruin of Saudi Arabia, which had never been more than a third- or fourth-rate military power, but was the Holy Land of Islam and the capital of Semitic resistance to Jewish aggression. The Saudis had yielded, of course, to the American invasion, just as many an American has yielded to a request to deliver his billfold made by a practically-minded social reformer with the muzzle of his gat pointing at the boob's belly. The only question was whether the invaders would withdraw and leave the Arabs eventually to a bloody chaos or would occupy the new colony permanently to protect the future capital of the world.

Some observers had thought it likely that Bush's War was to be a repetition of Korea and Vietnam, i.e., an operation arranged to kill many young Americans, to demoralize the Army by forcing it to fight in ways that ensured the maximum casualties and eventual defeat, to squander American resources for a pretext to increase taxation and accelerate inflation, and finally to demonstrate to the whole world what contemptible idiots Americans are. That hypothesis was improbable from the first, although another bloody "peace-keeping" operation was not impossible.[1] It implied

1. This, of course, could have been done as it was done in the past. American planes, which are necessarily manned by White men, could have been ordered to fly over enemy territory at half-speed and an elevation of a hundred feet, and to circle every target for half an hour, dropping bombs of peanuts and peppermint candy, before finally dropping a bomb made for Fourth-of-July fireworks. This could have been explained as a humanitarian policy of disseminating Love in keeping with peaceful intentions, and the American boobs would have been delighted—except, of course, the parents or wives or children of the dead that Bushy had arranged with his colleague, Gorby, to trap what was virtually the whole of the American Army after it had been placed in an exposed position, far from home, and it was hard to see how such a result could enhance the glory and displayed power of God's Race.

It was now clear that no such defeat to the glory of the fiction called "United Nations" was intended this time. The owners of the United States had a higher purpose in mind when they trapped Saddam and his Iraqis by assuring them that the "Americans" had no objection to his occupation of Kuwait. That the trap was thus set is now officially admitted, with the ridiculously feeble excuse that Bushy's boys were thinking of only a partial occupation of Kuwait, not the whole of that little spot on a map.

The only uncertainties, both of which have now been answered in the negative, were (a) Would the United States, as it has habitually done since 1945, avoid using its best and most modern weapons? (b) Would the Jews' other big colony, now managed by Bushy's colleague, Gorbachev, intervene, either openly or, as before, under a transparent disguise, sending only "technical advisers" and military equipment to the people who were being used to kill Americans and contribute to the profits of usurers and the eventual bankruptcy of the country the boobs gave away?[2] aviators, but they wouldn't matter, any more than do the corresponding relatives of the men whom we abandoned in Vietnam to give the sweet Orientals captive bears to exhibit in their carnivals.

2. That, though unlikely, was still a bare possibility at the end of January. If Gorbachev, the lovey-dovey hero of gullible "experts" on Soviet affairs, is not being systematically made, step-by-step, a new Stalin, he will eventually be effaced as the "old line" Bolsheviks and the Army take over, undoing the much advertised "economic collapse" of Communism. They could have hoped that the Arabs and other stupid Semites would again listen to hypocritical professions of sympathy, this time seemingly validated by intervention to check "American" aggression. The feasibility of the operation would have largely depended on the still unascertained technological power of the Soviet, but something could have been done by arranging an armistice in time to save Iraq from annihilation by the Americans.

By the end of January it was clear that Saddam had been trapped in the way the patriotic government of Argentina was trapped and destroyed by Britain when that Jewish bastion arranged the war over the Falkland Islands to install a Jewish government in Argentina. Saddam was trapped for the same purpose, to please Yahweh's Master Race.

Since this time the American part of Bushy's army was not forbidden to fight a real war, the outcome was a foregone conclusion. Despite the best efforts of professional liars, it was clear that the war between Iraq and the invaders of Saudi Arabia was exactly like a game of no-holds-barred football between the toughest team of professionals and the boys of the sixth grade.

If all other things were equal, no one could imagine an even match between the United States, a country with almost 250,000,000 inhabitants under complete control, and a little nation of less than 14,000,000[3] with uncertain loyalty to a comparatively recent and novel government.

Using the tattered scarecrow called United Nations to prevent stupid Americans from imagining they had won a war, a fairly large contingent of troops was obtained from the Judaeo-American subsidiary called Britain, and small contingents from other Islamic states were hired to advertise the shattering of the Moslem unity that had never been more than a tenuous possibility.[4] The war thus became one between 310,000,000 and 14,000,000, about 22 to 1, on the assumption other things were equal.

3. The actual population of Iraq is over 18,000,000, of whom only about 10,000,000 are males and females above the age of puberty. From the total of 18,000,000, however, one must deduct the numerous Kurds, who are internal enemies awaiting an opportunity to revolt again and stab the Iraqis in the back, the Turks, internal enemies who believe that the country belongs to Turkey, Jews, who control a part of domestic commerce and pretend to be anti-Zionist, and disaffected religious groups of various ethnic origin, including the Christians (chiefly Maronite) who want their god to strike down the wicked Moslems, the "Assyrian" (i.e., Nestorian) Christians who still expect their god to get busy, an enclave of Druses, and some other minor ethnic groups and heretical sects. These total about 5,000,000. — I assume that the two major sects of Islam, which divide the Iraqis, recognize that the American threat to their survival requires them to postpone their doctrinal antagonisms to a more suitable occasion, if they live that long.

The United States deployed 450,000± troops in the invasion of Saudi Arabia, which Iraq had to confront with its comparatively small army. One the Sheenies' periodicals in the United States affirmed that Iraq had "the third largest army in the world," and I happened to hear a professional liar claim over the radio that Iraq had a million men under arms. Any listener whose mind was not in cold storage must have wondered how so large an army could be recruited and maintained in a nation that had less than four million males above the age of puberty and below the age of senility. A probably well-informed source gave 79,000 as the size of Iraq's army, and that seemed quite plausible, as did the estimate of 85,000 from another source. Part of that force had to be used to keep the Kurds in check and to counter an actual or imminent invasion from Turkey. How many remained to face Bushy's bullies is conjectural.

But other things are far from equal. The United States, despite the sabotage of its industry and the financial slavery of its former owners, is still a rich and powerful country with all its resources at the disposal of the alien government to which it is slavishly obedient—contentedly obedient, except for a few fools who mumble or scribble impotent dissent. Iraq is a poor country, largely desert, with no important resource other than its petroleum, which it could no longer sell, and dependent, for most conveniences (e.g., automobiles, telephones, typewriters),

4. In addition to long-standing territorial, religious, and even ethnic antagonisms (the Semites of the Moslem world are by no means racially uniform, partly because they differ markedly in the amount of Arab blood they have absorbed), Saddam's occupation of Kuwait enabled Bushy to exploit the necessary antagonism between monarchical government by kings, emirs, and sheikhs, which is the form of rule natural to Semites, and awkward imitations of Western "democracy," to which the race is by nature ill-adapted. Saddam is, of course, a product of the latter, and, in the eyes of true Arabs, a tyrant in the original and specific sense of that word, a man who has illegitimately obtained power over a state.

all machinery, and all military equipment on imports, for which it has always had to pay very high prices.

The United States still has the capacity for major scientific discovery that is peculiar to the Aryan race, and the capacity for high technology that is shared only with the Japanese.[5] The Iraqis are Semites of various ethnic strains and belong to a race that is temperamentally averse to all high technology, which it accepts only as a weapon against its Aryan and Jewish enemies, and perhaps is intellectually incapable of genuine adherence to the scientific method and hence of scientific discovery.[6]

5. The Japanese are a hybrid race, but largely Mongolian. The commercial prosperity of Mongolians who, e.g. in Hong Kong, imitate the Japanese depends on the Aryans' willingness to sabotage their own industry to import cheap products from potential enemies. The Japanese, of course, have profited greatly from the same suicidal lust in Aryan populations and the decrees of their alien governments. (For example, I note in the Decatur [Illinois] Herald, 15 January 1991, a report that 600,000 Americans were thrown out of work when organized crime in Washington designedly shattered the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., thus ending manufacture of telephonic equipment in the United States. Such equipment, even for the Army, must now be imported from more advanced industrial nations, chiefly Japan.) But even without calculated sabotage of the United States by its present owners, the Japanese, I am confident, would have made themselves a great industrial nation. It is a little known fact that after Europeans in the late Sixteenth Century taught the Japanese how to manufacture firearms and cannon, Japan quickly became a leading producer of such weapons of war, but, after the Christian infection of some Japanese had been brought under control and there seemed to be no menace of European invasion, such weapons were chivalrously abolished in Japan as cowardly and beneath the dignity of bushidō, the samurai code of honor. I have often remarked on the odd similarities between Japanese and Aryan character in some fairly important matters. Cf. Liberty Bell, October 1986, pp. 16 f.

6. The Semites' aversion from science is generally attributed to the mentally paralyzing effects of their religion, but although Christianity had the same paralyzing doctrine, the superstition did not prevent the rise of scientific inquiry in Europe, and that cannot be entirely attributed to the revivifying influence of the surviving débris of Graeco-Roman culture. The Semites, especially the Arabs, did use and perhaps partly develop some simple and essentially banausic techniques, e.g., in navigation and construction of buildings, and there were a few men, such as Ibn Khaldún, who showed a memorable capacity for logical thought and investigation, but they were rare exceptions and of uncer-

The Semites have had to hire Aryan technicians and Aryan teachers, who have succeeded in training only a very few native imitators. The Semites have had to import not only technicians, including engineers, and even skilled labor, but all the mechanical, chemical, and electrical equipment needed for their work, and even all of the materials, with the exception of bitumen and sand, for buildings and roads. This they were able to do only because the stupid British bestowed sudden wealth on them by giving them possession of the petroleum that British and American geologists had discovered, and British and American corporations had made productive in their territories.

Bush's army, though of dubious value in hand-to-hand combat, and apparently made ineffective by its nigger admirals and nigger generals (including, God help us! a female nigger general), was efficient, since the niggers had under them competent military men for the actual work of command, and its most important part, technicians and aviators, were necessarily Americans. The strategy used was to avoid hand-to-hand combat, in which the army of Iraq might have had a chance, and to clobber them from a distance with weapons against which they could not defend themselves.

The last two weeks of January made it obvious why American technology and American military equipment had not been sabotaged at the time when its heavy industry was wrecked by its alien masters.

Bushy's army was equipped with the most formidable weapons produced by the world's highest technology, some of which, though theoretically known to be possible, have been produced with a perfection and power unanticipated by obtain genetic antecedents. What seemed to be a brief flowering of reason in the time of the falásifa under al-Ma'mún and his successors (750-847) was derived from Greek sources and imitative of them, and again one must be uncertain of possible genetic alloy of the Semites involved (some, reckoned as Arabs because they wrote in Arabic, were of Persian ancestry, which, at that time, implied a considerable admixture of Aryan blood). The stern repression of rational thought that followed was obviously congenial to the instincts of the race as a whole.

servers who had no secret sources of information. Iraq had only a relatively small amount of obsolete equipment that had been purchased, perhaps second-hand, at great expense from the Soviet and which required maintenance that was often not available. Despite all the exaggerations by liars and sensation-mongers, its offensive capacities were hopelessly inferior in quality.

Professional liars made some attempt to make the boobs believe that Saddam was keeping in reserve some potent weapon, perhaps biological, that might be effective against the overwhelmingly superior forces arrayed against him. There was particular mention of anthrax, the dire contagion that the unspeakably evil thing called Roosevelt and its half-English stooge would have used to massacre the entire population of Germany, had it not been discovered that the contagion would inevitably spread to adjacent territory. A moment's thought would have shown that even if he possessed the means of using anthrax, Saddam would not employ it for the same reason, since it would exterminate his own people and the Semites of adjacent countries, from whom he vainly hoped for assistance.

The enormous superiority of Bush's army in weapons produced by high technology and used by efficient technicians was ostentatiously advertised on television. That was the most significant event of January, and this was done even though it displayed for all to see the hopeless inferiority of Iraq and made Bush's war obviously an ignoble slaughter of opponents who were unable to make an effective reply or even defend themselves. Aryans find such slaughter objectionable—or did before their racial instincts were obliterated by poisonous superstitions and degeneracy. But, as Bush's invasion made obvious, the American people, having given away the country they once had, no longer have any influence in deciding what their masters will do with them and their property.

The crushing superiority of American technology was flauntingly displayed. American ground installations, fighter planes, and the odd hybrid machine called "Warthog," could destroy with total immunity Saddam's obsolete air force. High explosive bombs were guided by laser beams with such accuracy that they could be lobbed into the front door of a hospital or similar structure. Two bombs could also be dropped on air-raid shelters so that the first would shatter seven feet of concrete and the second, dropped precisely into the hole thus opened, would reduce the people who had taken refuge in it to sizzling blobs of protoplasm. Anti-missile missiles, deployed to protect the Holy Race in its lair in Israel, although of doubtful efficiency against really modern missiles,[7] destroyed all of poor Saddam's long obsolete "Scud" missiles, except when the operators of the American equipment were negligent.[8] American tanks, moving at relatively high speed and carrying guns of long range aimed by infrared rays, destroyed the slow, lumbering, and obsolete tanks which Saddam had purchased from the Soviet at great cost, and destroyed them long before they could come within range to fire at the Americans.

The Americans probably had available other products of high technology that they are not known to have used. According to Spotlight, one of these was the most fiendish weapon that human ingenuity has ever devised, a laser beam that destroys the eyeballs but leaves the blinded wretch alive and otherwise unharmed.

The Americans simply slaughtered the hapless Iraqis at no risk to themselves. Theirs is the glory won by the crew of a tank who have crushed beneath the treads of their massive machine a man who courageously stood in their way. The mentality peculiar to Aryans considers such an achievement disgraceful, but the pickled minds of most Americans would think it glorious if the victim had, like Saddam, said something that displeased God's Paranoid People. The net effect of the victory, however, was to make Saddam seem, in the estimation of persons who can judge dispassionately, an heroic figure, a man who fought for his nation against an overwhelmingly more mighty aggressor.

8. One of the most amusing scenes ever shown on television showed hordes of scared Sheenies fleeing from Tel Aviv at high speed in automobiles that filled the broad highways, almost bumper-to-bumper, in terror lest some drops of the divine ichor in their veins be shed by one of poor Saddam's clumsy missiles. This was an instructive contrast to the resolution displayed by the inhabitants of Baghdad when their city, already half-ruined, was again under attack by American bombers against which they had no defence. I am told that the Sheenies are now demanding twenty billion dollars of heart-balm from their American serfs, perhaps in compensation for their fright.

The arrogant display of American might, although moderated after it appeared that some of Bushy's subjects still had Aryan instincts,[9] had a purpose.

When the American boobs were being conditioned for their insane foray into Europe in 1917, expert liars invented a story of German Schrecklichkeit, a policy of military terrorism, attributed to the nation that made extraordinary efforts to protect the civilian population of Belgium and other occupied territory.[10] The Americans, who were indignantly horrified by that hoax in 1914-1916, have now committed

9. What may be another device to make Americans condone the disgraceful slaughter in Iraq was the despatch from Berlin, published in, e.g., the Chicago Tribune, 23 February 1991, reporting that Saddam had written, in Arabic and German, a book entitled Unser Kampf, obviously modeled on the famous work by Adolf Hitler and, like it, manifesting diabolical hatred of God's Perfect Pets. The book is said to have been published in Geneva in 1977. If there is such a book, printed in 1977 or more recently with a spurious date, it would not exceed the productive capacity of the C.I.A., which, as is now admitted, fabricated the Penkovskiy Papers in 1966. (I cannot resist the temptation immodestly to add that, so far as I know, I was the only reviewer who denounced the hoax when it was published by Doubleday. My article in American Opinion, April 1966, pp. 41-55, was enhanced by satirical cartoons drawn in Belmont.) What makes the present report so suspect is the claim that Saddam, who had in his own country excellent facilities for printing his book and disseminating it throughout the Arab-speaking world, should have had it printed in Switzerland at great expense and for no conceivable purpose.

10. The German efforts at conciliation sometimes approached the ridiculous. One thinks of the German general—I have forgotten his name—who gallantly halted an army column marching into Brussels to permit Belgian women to cross the street.

themselves to actual Schrecklichkeit to intimidate every nation that might otherwise seek to preserve itself from Bushy's New World Order.

Henceforth, in Egypt or Pakistan or India or China, if the natives show a velleity to resist the dominion of God's Race, a Sheeny, rubbing his pudgy hands, will tell them, "See how rabid our American dogs become when we sick them on someone! That's what our Americans will do to you goyim, if you disobey us, your God-given masters."

Bushy's New World Order is new only in the appointment of his American cattle to force it on all the rest of the doomed world.

The New World Order began operations in Russia in 1918, and it is a nice irony that two descriptions of its essential nature were published, almost simultaneously with Bushy's spiel about his righteousness, by two publications that cannot be suspected of bias in favor of Aryans.

Commentary, the official organ of the American Jewish Committee, published in its issue for October 1990 an article, "The Killing Fields of Kiev," by Marco Carynnyk. In England, The European, one of the many periodicals owned by a Jew who hides under a Scottish name, Robert Maxwell, published in its issue for 16 November 1990, "The Archaeologist of Terror," by Askold Krushelnycky. Both articles incidentally demolish a part of the Jews' Holohoax by demonstrating the responsibility for atrocities blamed on the Germans by both Jews and Soviets for forty-five years, but are chiefly interesting for what they disclose about the motivation behind the ghastly crimes committed by the Soviet Secret Police.

Mr. Carynnyk visited Bykivnia, a hamlet east of Kiev in the Ukraine and the site of some of the Judaeo-Communists' mass graves, some of which were so imperfectly covered over that boys in the streets now play football with skulls. Ten acres in a forest were reserved for such graves, to which each night convoys of trucks brought loads of corpses for disposal. The mass murders of Ukrainians began after Stalin in the early 1930s amused himself by forcing some nine or ten million Ukrainian farmers to starve to death on their own land. The site at Bykivnia was opened in 1937 and the trucks continued to bring their cargoes until November 1941, when the Germans captured Kiev and the villagers entered the enclosure and discovered the mass graves, pits over which only two feet of soil had been shoveled.

After the Bolsheviks retook Kiev in 1944, they appointed investigators of "war crimes," who, though not so far below the level of rabid bestiality as the Americans who perpetrated the obscene murders at Nuremberg, docilely "proved" that all the corpses were victims of the "Nazis." In the 1970s some of the residents of the village and their friends, who knew better, began to protest, believing that Khrushchev's denunciation of Stalin's rule was meant to indicate a change; they were soon quieted by having their skulls split open by unidentified assailants or in other ways. In 1987, another protest led to another "investigation" and the erection of a monument inscribed, with Jewish veracity, "To the Eternal Memory....of peaceful civilians killed by the Fascist invaders in 1941-1943." The villagers, of course, remembered that the convoys of trucks, some of them leaking fresh blood, had come by night during 1937-1941 before the Germans arrived, and the truth at last became so obvious that the lie about "Fascists" was effaced from the monument, although it continues to bear the lie that the total of dead in the mass grave was only 6,239; the actual number is estimated at 250,000. The article contains less detailed information about the many other mass graves scattered all over the Ukraine, all filled with corpses by the Soviet Secret Police.

Not all of the victims were dead when they were dumped into the mass graves. There is record of one man who was carelessly shot through the neck and remained alive, shamming death until he had a miraculous opportunity to escape; he succeeded in returning home secretly, but was denounced to the Secret Police by a neighbor who had the mentality of an American 'yuppie,' and the executioner who then took care of him made sure of his handiwork. There is evidence that some victims were alive when they were buried under corpses. One woman gave birth to a child in the grave, and another still had her baby at her breast. They may have been spared the fatal bullet and buried alive to increase the executioners' fun.

Mr. Carynnyk collected abundant evidence that the "Nazis" could not possibly have had anything to do with the murder of a probable total of millions of Ukrainians by the Soviet Secret Police in the period before 1941. A writer for Commentary could not be expected to remind his readers that the Secret Police, though known under various names and supposedly reformed at times, was always under the command of Jews, directed even locally by Jews, and largely staffed by Jews, although it included some especially vicious Mongoloids and Turkics (Tartars et al.) and Slavs, but he does remark that the murders, like the preceding starvation of Ukrainians, were specifically authorized by Stalin's brother-in-law, Lazarus Kaganovich (called the "Wolf of the Kremlin" by a writer who shamefully insults wolves[11]), and expresses concern lest that lead to some feeling against his race. He does not speculate about the motive for the endless killings under Bolshevik rule.

Mr. Krushelnycky went to Drahobych, a town that was in Poland, some seventy-five miles southwest of Lemberg (Russian Lvov, Latin Leopolis), until it was taken by the Soviets in 1939, when the N.K.V.D., as the Secret Police were then called, went to work at about the same time they were mur-

11. Cf. Liberty Bell, February 1991, p. 7, n. 5.. It must be remembered that Kaganovich was the most important Jew in Russia, comparable to such Super-Sheenies as Baruch and Kissinger, who governed the United States. There is informed opinion that believes that instead of being Stalin's expert on transportation and murders, Kaganovich was Stalin's master, a Jewish satrap and the real ruler of Russia, who controlled Stalin much as Kissinger manipulated Kennedy and Johnson. According to this view, Stalin was a mere figurehead, indulged in the panoply of power and vicious luxury by his masters, although in the end he made a futile effort to emancipate himself and promptly perished. Kaganovich is now living in retirement, but at the age of 96 he may well have sated his blood-lust and be content to live quietly in unobtrusive comfort.

dering the officers of the Polish Army in Katyn Forest and elsewhere, and joyfully began murders that continued until the Germans arrived in 1941, and were resumed after the German retreat in 1944 and throughout 1945.

The "archaeologist" mentioned in the title is a resident of Drahobych who, with the help of friends, is exhuming the corpses buried under the town's "teacher-training college" and in other mass graves in the community. According to Mr. Krushelnycky, Drahobych is only one of the scores of sites in the Ukraine and the adjacent part of Poland where similar mass graves have been opened by the local residents during the precarious respite afforded by the much publicized "reforms" of Gorbachev.[12]

The author does not estimate how many persons were murdered by the Secret Police in Poland and the Ukraine between 1935 and 1941 and between 1944 and 1946, but does quote an informed estimate of one million murders between 1939 and 1941. In "Maxwell's" British publication it would not have been tactful to mention that the Judaeo-Bolsheviks, together with their British subjects, for forty-five years swore that the Germans were responsible for the murder of the officers of the Polish Army and many Ukrainians, but Mr. Krushelnycky has confronted squarely the question of the motive for the Secret Police's homicidal mania.

It is perfectly obvious, of course, that the more than a million victims, many of them women and young children, could not have been engaged in agitation or intrigue against the Soviet government. And if complete extermination of Ukrainians as a nation had been the motive, the work was done less than thoroughly.

An authoritative answer is given by the "archaeologist," who has examined anatomically the remains of hundreds of victims. By no means all of them had been killed, doubtless 12. It is probable that there are very many other mass graves throughout Soviet territory which, so far as is known, the local inhabitants, perhaps mistrusting Gorbachev and his "reforms," have not cared or dared to open. It is most unlikely that the Secret Police confined their fun to Ukrainians.

after torture, by specially made bullets of soft lead fired into their heads. Many were hacked to death with cleavers.[13] Some were so totally dismembered that their scattered fragments could not be found and reassembled. The conclusion drawn by the expert is obvious: "These were not executions, they were sadism. The NKVD enjoyed themselves in their factory of death."

There you have an intimation of a fundamental truth about the real world. Killing is for some persons the most exquisite of delights.

That fact transcends the Jews' eternal and unappeasable hatred of our and other races, which may account for the particular animosity of the Jews' Secret Police against Ukrainians.[14] Although other species of mammals are incapable of sadism and kill only to satisfy hunger, to defend themselves, or rarely in provoked anger, all the varieties of anthropoids classified as human contain individuals who find killing a pleasure more intense and more addictive than the satisfactions given them by heroin, cocaine, and comparable drugs.

Of this there are innumerable examples. The word 'sadism' was derived from the name of the infamous Marquis de Sade, author of the dictum that "all men are created equal," whose spiritual satisfactions were derived from torturing individuals of both sexes and defiling them in all imaginable ways before killing them, if that was convenient.

13. Some of the victims whose corpses were found at Bykivnia had had their hands hacked off before they were shot. Women, if not very old, were certainly raped, doubtless with torture. Many victims had been strangled, evidently with care to inflict maximum suffering, which may have included the well-known device of reviving the victim when on the point of death several times before finishing him off. Some children of six or seven had two bullets through their skulls, as though one had not been enough to satisfy the murderer's enthusiasm.

14. The Ukrainians have always been hated with special fervor by God's Race, perhaps only because they are a nation that succeeded in remaining Aryan under the most adverse circumstances and at a time when the Slavs in Russia were partly mongrelized by their Mongol and Tartar conquerors.

There is an erotic element in sadism, but it should not be exaggerated.

Some of numerous crimes of this kind in the United States may still be remembered. The once famous Loeb and Leopold, a pair of homosexual Kikes, amused themselves by killing a young boy, but, since they selected as their victim a Jew boy whose family was, like their own, very wealthy, their sport was terminated by imprisonment. Also at Chicago, a seemingly normal man, said to be White, used homosexuality as a lure for an estimated number of fifty victims, whose dismembered remains he concealed in the cellar of a quite ordinary house and the garden behind it. A student at the University of Chicago wrote a diary in which he confessed that he could not prevent himself from indulging in the joyous game of surprising and killing women (easier and safer than attacking men; he was not interested in raping them). While the once noted gourmet, Albert Fish, doubtless relished the tender flesh of the children he ate, his gastronomic predilections obviously were not the reason why he felt such delight in torturing and mutilating children of both sexes before he served them up for dinner.

In the Congo, the secret society of "Leopard Men," whom the Belgians tried to suppress in the bad old days of colonialism, delighted in pouncing on victims chosen at random and ripping them apart with steel claws. In India, the Thugs, whom the British finally suppressed as part of their oppression of the Hindus, rejoiced whenever they lured a cozened victim into a place where he could be strangled and secretly buried. One prominent Thug, who confessed with impunity to crimes perpetrated before the British enacted a law to deny him exercise of his religion, boasted that there was no sport equal to that of hunting men by deceit, and that he experienced the most intense delight when he finally tightened his noose about the neck of one of his more than nine hundred victims.

It is a simple fact of the world in which we live that the pure joy of killing is probably the most intense and addictive of all pleasures for persons who are genetically equipped to enjoy it, and a pleasure in which many would indulge themselves, if they were not timorous and restrained by fear of the possible consequences in a "reactionary" society.

Kaganovich and Stalin felt a profound spiritual joy in ordering the murder of some twenty million persons, but they had attained a position in which they could freely indulge their personal ideals. We may be sure that they were envied by our great War Criminal, who doubtless dreamed not only of ruling his American dupes by open terror, but of gloating over mass graves packed with rotting corpses of fools who had voted for him; and this may in part have been the motive of the assiduous efforts by which he started a war in Europe to exalt his spiritual brethren.

Few, however, attain political power that enables them to indulge their blood-lust freely. Their less fortunate peers must contrive means of satisfying their homicidal yearnings under the cover of specious pretenses.

Everyone who has thought seriously about Communism knows that the superstition, as expounded by Bolsheviks and the "Liberal intellectuals" who, ignorantly or maliciously, propagate slightly diluted versions of Marx's gospel, is merely a crude means of enticing a simple-minded majority into a trap in which it can be made to appease the sadistic lusts of the promoters.

Everyone knows that the Jews used Communist verbiage and agitation to capture the Russian Empire in 1917-1918 and thus made that hapless land their own colony. Few, however, are willing to see that there were two primary motives: a lust for naked power over goyim and a lust to torture and kill their victims. It is bootless to speculate which of the two complementary but distinct motives was paramount or even the stronger.

No sooner were the Jews and their few goy colleagues in power in Russia than they embarked on wholesale torture and slaughter of the best and most intelligent of their captives. Their ferocious savagery was observed and reported by many unimpeachable sources, for example, in the report of the official U.S. Commission of Inquiry that was able to observe what had happened around Kiev in 1919, of which an extract is quoted in Paul Knudson's article in Liberty Bell, May 1984 (reprint available from Liberty Bell Publications, $3.50 + postage). For the report's description of the fiendish methods of torture and murder, see that article, pp. 16-17.

For a computation of the number of persons thus "liquidated" during only two years, 1921-1922, as officially reported by the Bureau of Statistics of the Soviet Secret Police, see pp. 18-19. The 1,695,909 murders are itemized by the occupation of the victims, and you may be sure that a large part of the total consisted of persons who had naïvely taken Marxism seriously as a philosophical, economic, or social doctrine. One may, for example, be certain that many of the 1215 Russian university and college professors[15] whose brains were scattered with crowbars or who were tortured to death in various ingenious ways had stupidly sympathized with the "downtrodden proletariat" or had not perceived the goal of yammering about "social justice" and "human rights." The befuddled professors doubtless learned how foolish they had been shortly before they experienced the consequences of such idealism. Similarly gullible persons today will have to learn in the same way during the last moments of their lives.

You should particularly perpend the fact that the Soviet Government officially stated in 1922 that the victims of the massacres were not guilty or suspected of any act of opposition to their new masters: they were "liquidated" solely because they had minds that did not think properly.

You may be sure that if the Soviet Secret Police thought it desirable to give a reason for their jollification when they filled deep pits and mass graves with corpses in 1937-1941,

15. When you consider that figure remember that it comes from a time when, in both Russia and the United States, a professorship was an honor that few attained. You should not compare that figure with the hordes of professors who now fill all the universities and colleges that thoughtless tax-payers have established wherever major highways intersect and at many ordinary crossroads.

that pretext was that their victims were likely to have improper thoughts. That is always a sufficient reason for "social engineering," in fact, the only primary reason.

Now the facts of the Jews' conquest of Russia and Ukrainia, including the continuous orgy of blood as they tortured and atrociously murdered goyim, were reported at the time and the undeniable facts were generally available in the United States in 1920 and following years. Those facts were undoubtedly known to the prating "Liberal intellectuals" who apologized for the atrocities by gabbling that "you have to crack eggs to make an omelet."

While many "Liberal intellectuals" have only parrot brains, their trainers certainly know what they are doing, and one cannot escape the conclusion that their idealistic inspiration came from the delightful aroma of the shed blood of their betters.

Among the blunders of American anti-Communists in the 1920s and 1930s was an obtuse determination not to recognize the true inspiration of the "subversives" whom they were opposing. They, for example, frequently reproduced a rather well-known photograph that shows a square in St. Petersburg when the Bolsheviks suddenly opened fire with machine guns. Some dead or dying Russians lie on the pavement, while the others flee or stand, staring in stupefied amazement. This was one of the photographs with which naïve patriots thought to shock the "Liberals" and undermine their faith in "social justice." They never watched closely enough to see the glint of blood-lust that usually appeared in a great idealist's eyes for a fraction of a second before he remembered to babble that the photograph was not authentic or to palliate the murders by alleging that the perpetrators were correcting "social wrongs."

If you want a preview of Bushy's New World Order, as it will eventually be imposed on the United States, you have only to investigate what happened when that social ideal was imposed on the Russians and Ukrainians after 1918 and until at least 1946.

In America's Decline I mentioned the firm opinion of a close friend of mine who, a colonel in Military Intelligence, was convinced, on the basis of information he had obtained within the C.I.A., that by 1970 bulldozers would be pushing into lime pits the piled-up corpses of Americans who showed symptoms of intelligence.

The predicted date was, of course, an error, made by the common foreshortening that vitiates so many efforts to extrapolate from present to future, usually by measuring only one of the vectors of force that will act on the object under consideration. There were reasons for less drastic evolution that he did not perceive at the end of 1959; for example, if the boobs had been put in their place in 1970, who would have squashed Saddam and Arab opposition to God's Race in 1991? The Colonel made an error of more than thirty years in his estimate; what he predicted for 1970 is unlikely to happen before 2000 and may not happen until 2010 or even some years later.

When the Colonel made his projection in 1960, he was convinced that the American dolts had so enslaved themselves and addled the minds of their children that any effort to preserve them from the inevitable consequences of their folly would be utterly futile. An American who sought to oppose the wave of the future and appeal to some supposed residue of prudence and manhood in the boobs was, to use his metaphor, like a fish taken up in a net and trying to resist by wiggling its tail.

The Colonel was better informed and more perspicacious than I, who did not believe him in 1960.

I now leave you to meditate on what Americans accomplished when their official master, Bushy, ordered them to kill Semites who were wickedly wiggling their tails in an attempt to escape the blessings of the New World Order ordained by Yahweh and his godly brood.

THE KOSHER KINGS

In a letter to the editor of Liberty Bell, a reader quotes from Alfred J. Kolatch's The Jewish Book of Why (Middle Village, New York; Johnathan David, 1981):

"In England, the Royal House has a long tradition requiring that all male children be circumcised by the Jewish mohel of London."

The book also extols the expertise of the Yiddish penis-clipper.

The reader was reluctant to believe a statement so disgraceful to British royalty, although it was publicly and even ostentatiously confirmed when a son was born to the present Prince of Wales, and he particularly questioned the "long tradition." He asks, "How long could that tradition be?"

The reference to a "long tradition" certainly implies that the obscene and disgusting practice[1] was established before the partly Jewish Battenbergs (who changed their name to Mountbatten) married into the Royal Family.

It is possible, of course, that the "long tradition"is just one of the vast number of hoaxes, big and little, with which the Master Race habitually confuses the minds of its stupid goyim. Assuming that it is not, I do not know the answer to the reader's question, and I do not have time for the necessary research, but, on the understanding that what I shall say is mere conjecture, I will hazard a guess that the "long tradition" of sexually mutilating royal children may have originated with Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, who became the Prince Consort of Queen Victoria in 1840.

Albert was officially the son of Ernest, Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha and Duchess Louise, but Ernest was noted for his antipathy to women, and it was rumored at the time that his treasurer, a Jew, had relieved the Duke of the distressing duty of engendering an heir. There was no suggestion of alternate parentage, for it was only after the birth of her two sons, at an interval of fourteen months, that Duchess Louise felt that she had discharged her duty, and no longer had to content herself with an ersatz husband, whom many gallant gentlemen gladly replaced.

Albert grew up to be a young man who seems odd to us. The year before he married Queen Victoria, Albert had a toothache so distressing that, according to his own avowal in an extant letter, he wanted to "sob out his pain in the arms" of his "beloved Thus [his old tutor, Florschütz]."

Despite his womanish longing for consolation in Florschütz's arms, Albert, almost as soon as his toothache was relieved, having ascertained that nothing better was open to him, manfully undertook the job for which he had been trained from childhood, that of fascinating and infatuating his first cousin, the girl who was Queen of England.

As we all know, Albert succeeded brilliantly, not only in captivating the girl, who was barely twenty, but in resolutely making her, of whom he was not even very fond, adore him throughout all the years of their life together.

Although Victoria imagined that she kept the rôles of wife and queen separate, and although there is record of a few rare instances when she and Albert disagreed about some policy for a few days, it is clear that Albert so tactfully and subtly used his conjugal ascendency over his passionately devoted wife that, for all practical purposes, he was in fact, though not in name, the King. So talented was Albert that Victoria's devotion never waned from the time, after they were engaged but before they were married, when she hated "the abominable, infamous Tories" because they were reluctant to give her dear Albert all the money he wanted and the royal precedence she wanted for him. Victoria doted on her "adored one," her "Angel," the "noblest of men," so long as he lived and even after his death, when a clever swindler enabled her to communicate with her darling's loving ghost.[2]

2. See Liberty Bell, May 1984, pp. 1 ff.

The rumor about Albert's parentage doubtless influenced the members of the British aristocracy who were reluctant to welcome him in 1840,[3] but he must have exhibited traits which seemed to confirm the belief that he was part Jew,[4] for more than half a century after his death the gossip was still so prevalent that Frank Harris had to disclaim an intent to confirm it when he reported that Albert's eldest son, the late King Edward VII, with whom Harris had been well acquainted, "spoke German like a Bavarian Jew."

If one were willing to descend to the intellectual level of our contemporary "intellectuals," one could loudly assert that Albert's Jewishness was indubitably proved by the "social reforms" and foreign policy[5] to which he discreetly lent the support of his great influence as an uncrowned king, most of which, in their later developments, served the Jewish purpose of undermining Great Britain and our race. Rational observers, however, will remember that many individuals who must have been Anglo-Saxon evinced similar sentimentality.

The best example would be the undisputed fact that it was Prince Albert who prevented Great Britain from consulting her own honor and interests when an act of piracy by a Northern warship gave Britain an ideal opportunity to help the Southern states defend themselves against the invasion and war of aggression that Lincoln had been elected to begin. The late Dr. Peter Peel, whose detailed study of anti-German propaganda in

3. They favored William, Prince of Orange, as a husband for Victoria, who seems to have wanted to emulate her great predecessor, the Virgin Queen—until Albert fascinated her.

4. By our standards. Even if Albert was the son of the Sheeny Treasurer, he would not have been a Jew by orthodox Jewish standards, according to which genuine Jews are produced only by Jewesses, regardless of the race of the father.

5. When he visited Germany in 1859 he was so distressed by "Prussian militarism" that he became ill! He undoubtedly did much to incite the British antagonism to the growing power of Germany with hypocritical denunciation of "militarism" by the nation which frankly (and properly) claimed for its navy absolute dominion over all the oceans of the world.

Britain you may remember,[6] commenting on the British failure to take advantage of the Trent affair, recognized that tergiversation as the first symptom of British decline: "There was where we missed the boat," he said. But even this instance proves nothing. Many an English lunkenhead was ready to sacrifice his nation's best interests to humanitarian sentimentality.

Prince Albert's character was abnormal. He was undoubtedly unbalanced; he was superstitious and Puritanic, and was psychotic on the subject of sex, evidently regarding sexual intercourse with women a stern duty that fell upon a husband (a duty that he must have known how to perform manfully), but a mortal sin in all other circumstances. He was Prince Consort and a father of nine children when he learned with horror that his eldest son, the Prince of Wales, then a young man of twenty, had actually had sexual relations with a woman! Albert became hysterical—no milder word is adequate—and, telling his depraved son that he must "hide himself from the sight of God," fell into such emotional convulsions that Victoria believed her son's "disgusting conduct" to have been the primary cause of her beloved "Angel's" death three months later.

Now if Albert was part Jew—remember that even strong suspicions are not proof—he would have had his sons circumcised for obvious reasons. If he was not, his psychosis about sex would have had the same effect, for one of the early arguments for circumcision was a claim that the barbarous operation impeded or prevented sexual desires. It is even possible that his horror that his son had had sexual intercourse with a woman, which so affected Albert that he could not sleep for a fortnight and agitated him for months thereafter, was shock at the discovery that the godly precaution had been ineffectual.

The Victorian Age had a moral climate that was propitious to the adoption of the barbarous practice by civilized people. The many Marranos, who were considered Englishmen, undoubtedly had performed on their sons the operation that Spinoza considered the only means of maintaining their racial unity, and the many undisguised Jews in England were constantly intriguing and whining for the right, eventually granted them, to enter the Parliament and even the House of Lords. They doubtless suborned propaganda to defend the savage rite that was considered the talisman of their race.

In this they were aided by the "British Israel" craze.[7] Begun in 1822 by a crackpot who was probably the first goy Zionist and declared himself to be the nephew (!) of Yahweh, miraculously born to lead all the Kikes back to Palestine, the hokum so whetted the appetites of British nincompoops that they bought 250,000 copies of just one of the many books devoted to such nonsense, making it the five-star best seller of the day. Fatuous Anglo-Saxons, instead of proudly tracing their ancestry to Hengest and Horsa, wanted to believe they were descendants of a scabrous tribe of freebooters who had invaded Palestine with the help of their ferocious god. I saw years ago a photograph of an elaborately illuminated parchment that set forth every step of a genealogy according to which Queen Victoria was a descendant of a bandit chief named David.

These are the considerations that underlie my guess—and remember that it is no more than a guess—that the sexual mutilation of males in the royal family of Britain began with Prince Albert.

HELPING GOD

You may have overlooked a despatch from the Associated Press that was reproduced as a fairly small and inconspicuous item in some newspapers, including the Chicago Tribune, 17 February 1991.

7. Cf. my 'Populism' and 'Elitism,' Part I, footnotes 45 and 46.

According to the press, a certain Paul H. Dunn, a man of 66, who is one of the ninety ranking Elders of the Mormon Church and one of that church's most popular speakers and authors, was wont to retail to his audiences edifying stories of his own personal experiences, which proved that his god was always on call to help deserving True Believers. His affiliation with the Church in Salt Lake City is not significant: he could have been a prominent authority in any other Christian church, from Free Methodist to Roman Catholic.

According to the press, his edifying reminiscences covered a wide range of activity, from playing baseball for a famous team to serving heroically in the Second World War, where his best friend died in his arms and was doubtless despatched to his god's heaven with suitable brio. A "freelance" journalist named Lynn Packer took it upon himself to investigate the edifying stories and discovered, it seems, that Dunn had never played professional baseball, had never served in the War,[1] and never had any of the other edifying experiences of God's mercy with which he was wont to regale and thrill his audiences.

After the Church failed to make Packer, who was a Mormon himself and so subject to discipline in both this and the next world, suppress his findings, Dunn, who holds from some university a doctor's degree in the brand of hokum called "science of education" and so doubtless had professional training in purveying sucker-bait, freely admitted that his edifying stories were fictions, i.e., lies.

1. You should note that this does not reduce Dunn to the level of old Ronnie, who had spent the War safely in Hollywood, but, while he was performing in the White House, loudly claimed he had served in Europe and had seen with his own eyes how the Germans had stuffed millions of sacred Sheenies into gas chambers. Ronnie was trying to help his masters put over their Holohoax, the swindle that is their chief means of extorting money and obedience from civilized men. Dunn, it appears, lied to support a moral code, and perhaps a religion, in which he had faith. That is an enormous difference.

He was not in the least abashed, however, since he lied for a noble purpose. His tales about what (in his opinion) could have happened were fabricated "to illustrate his theological and moral points," and he saw nothing wrong in inventing "stories that will better convey a [godly] message and capture an audience's interest."

That is what makes the news significant: it is a neat example of the inveterate religious technique of Lying for the Lord. One remembers, for example, the indignation of St. Jerome when a stupid Christian thought that it mattered that the holy martyrs celebrated in his edifying and tear-jerking tales of persecution by the wicked pagans, had never existed. His fictions (lies), he said, were sacrosanct and above criticism because he devised them to coax ignorant individuals into the True Faith.

In the absence of proof to the contrary, one must credit Dunn and Jerome with believing in the god they were peddling or, at least, in the moral code they foisted on that imaginary god. We thus give them a rank above most evangelists and ambitious dervishes, who are interested only in milking stupid cows and are probably atheists or, as a technician long associated with one of them said of his employer, "don't give a damn," and certainly have no inclination toward a moral code they constantly violate in their own lives and business.

Really enterprising Men of God, such as Zoroaster, Mahomet, et al., invent their own religion, probably on the basis of hallucinations engendered by drugs or overmastering emotions in their feverish minds. Reformers, such as Calvin or Tsong-khappa, who take an established cult and twist it into a shape they prefer, probably operate rationally, calculating what they can put over on True Believers.

All this raises a fundamental question. We must honor for his integrity the honest Lutheran clergyman who, around 1800, candidly told his congregation, "I declare every so-called revealed religion to be a lie."[2] He and his clerical colleagues doubtless considered it their function to recommend and dispense a system of ethics based on the 'natural religion' of Graeco-Roman philosophy, which was deduced from the moral values recognized by a consensus among civilized nations.

2. See Liberty Bell, May 1990, p. 18.

A comparable effort today is represented by the distinguished Professor Raymond B. Cattell's A New Morality from Science (London, Pergamon, 1972),[3] which proposes a moral code rationally based on the facts of anthropology, ethnology, and psychology.

The question, of course, is whether a rational ethic can establish a national ethos adequate to control and discipline the masses.

Many acute observers have concluded that the majority of the members of any nation have minds in which reason plays so feeble a part that it cannot influence their conduct in ways that are requisite for a cohesive society; it is necessary, therefore, to enforce what is rationally desirable by myths about supernatural beings and forces, i.e., a religion based on carefully contrived lies. The late James Burnham, one of the best minds of our time, believed that the masses can be governed only by myths, and recognized the great danger inherent in that fact, i.e., that the élite (the actual aristocracy, whether or not hereditary) administering the nation may come to believe their own lies, as has happened disastrously in Christianity, a bundle of haphazard fictions that had been disseminated by crackpots and mountebanks without concern for their social value, and which the élite of Western civilization had to adapt to their own purposes as best they could. See especially his The Machiavellians (New York, John Day, 1943; paperback reprint, Chicago, Regnery, s.a. [c. 1963]).

If, then, it is necessary that a nation be given a moral consensus, a nomos, that depends on supernatural (i.e., fictitious) sanctions, we must ponder the possibility of devising and propagating by calculated mendacity a rationally designed religion that will replace the patently absurd superstitions, such as Christianity and the various brands of similar hocus-pocus called New Age, that currently enthrall the members of our nation on whom must rest our only hope for the survival of our race and civilization, i.e., the descendants of the Aryans who once owned the United States and, maddened by poisonous superstitions, fatuously made of it a multi-racial jungle in which their race will, before long, become extinct.

3. An expanded and somewhat revised version was published in this country under the unfortunate title, Beyondism: Religion from Science (New York, Praeger, 1987).

This leads us, of course, to the paradoxical conclusion that the requisite ethical standards cannot be established by ethical means.

There would remain the further problem, how a superstition can acquire a reasonably absolute authority when it posits the existence of supernatural beings who, being fictitious, will be as powerless as all gods have been to enforce the sanctions proclaimed in their name. What undermined Christianity, even before it was recognized as historically and scientifically preposterous, was the observation by men not totally feeble-minded that old Jesus and his dad, supposed to be so powerful they had created the whole universe out of nothing, never were able to enforce their own laws and wishes, but had to rely on comparatively tiny, weak, fallible, and often corrupt mortals to do their work for them.

In the last half of the Nineteenth Century, Renan perceived that Christianity had evoked an "amazing moral effort" from our race of "good gorillas," and did not see what could replace the superstition that was no longer tenable, although it seemed that the stability of civilization depended on it. He saw the inescapable weakness of all religions: the power of holy men in India, for example, depended on the populace's belief that a ṛṣi had the power to blast, by an act of thought, anyone who offended him, but, as a matter of fact, no holy man had ever blasted anyone and the superstition was thus patently without confirmation.

Renan once hoped or dreamed that there was a possible escape from this dual dilemma, that our biological knowledge would permit us to create, by systematic eugenics, a race of supermen, whose mental and physical superiority would entitle them to be properly called dévas, and who would have at their disposal scientific equipment that would enable them ruthlessly to enforce their will on the masses and thus create a moral ethos that was sanctioned by irresistible force.

It is quite true that we are rapidly approaching the point at which electronic, chemical, and biological equipment will make it possible for rulers totally to enslave the masses under them by simply exterminating all opposition. But unfortunately, thanks to our own superstitious folly, that equipment is now in the hands of our implacable enemies.

We cannot blame the Parcae, we cannot even blame our enemies, for our own suicidal mania. In the meantime, however, we may pity poor old Dunn, who, so far as we know, meant well but was trapped in what may be a fatally insoluble moral dilemma. ❑

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?
SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. WITCH DOCTORS FOR CHRIST

by
Nicholas Carter

From Christianity to the next three largest religions, Hinduism, Buddhism, and Islam...from the classical worlds of ancient Persia, Mesopotamia, Egypt, Greece and Rome to the Celtic, Teutonic and Scandinavian lands...from Oriental Semites to the ancient American culture of the Mayas, Aztecs and Incas...from Australia to Zimbabwe...thousands of deities, transcendental tenets and ecstatic practices—including the ten Labours of Heracles, the ten Avatars of Hinduism, the four Noble Truths of Buddhism, the ten Gurus of the Sikhs, the five Classics of Confucianism, the five Pillars of Islam, the nine Enneads of Egypt, the eighteen blessings of Judaism, the myths of Marduk and Gilgamesh, the Bark Paintings of Australasia, and the ancestral Stools of Africa—have developed to shingle the metaphysical roofs of the human species. In the light of this knowledge, it should be abundantly clear to any thinking person that the true ruler of the human cosmos is the witch doctor.

The denigrative description "witch doctor" was coined by Europeans to be applied to the priests of primitive African congregations. The purpose: to demonstrate that, in principle, the tribal priest differs significantly from the "theologically sound" Christian priest, even though both the Christian and the African function as a similar bridge—agent or mouthpiece—between man and God.

The many witch doctors who rule tribalistic Africa are divided into two categories: the fetishman, and the true Priest. The fetishman deals with all gods and all spirits of every degree. The true priest devotes himself to one particular god, maintaining certain forms and ceremonies of worship. Clearly, the true priest is a fetishman, but the fetishman is not a true priest.

Essentially, the use of the term witch doctor to describe primitive religious practitioners enabled the Europeans to create the impression that tribal priests practiced a kind of witchcraft in which they were "in league with the Devil." Not necessarily so, of course. Not all fetishmen and true priests, by any means, can be said to work with their version of the Evil One—even though they may profess to hold communion with evil spirits, and to be able to frustrate their negative designs on human beings.

Few of today's Christ-folk are aware of the fact that, from the beginning, the paranoid Christian world was obsessed with demons. The imps from hell were believed to be everywhere—hiding under rocks, sitting on thrones, causing all diseases known to mankind, and concentrating their heaviest artillery on fresh-baptized Christians and newborn infants. Everywhere, the poor sinner's soul was, as Anatole France describes the phenomenon, "at the mercy of a lugubrious phantasmagoria of devils!" By the time of the Middle Ages—also known as the "Age of Singular Sweetness"—devotees of Christian righteousness had estimated that there were just 7,405,926 devils divided into companies, each under a captain. As that singularly sweet interlude unfolded, the Christian Establishment evolved into a vast cult of relics and holy places, martyrs and sacred symbols. It was an age in which monasteries bought milk purporting to come from the breasts of the Blessed Virgin. There were twelve prepuces of Jesus in European churches, with the one in the Abby Church of Coulombs believed to possess the miraculous power of rendering all sterile women fruitful. It was a time when every discovery of science, every invention of material benefit to man, was believed to have been secured with the Devil's help.

In our pseudo-sophisticated modern world, some Christians are more cautious about Satanic powers than others. Certain Evangelists and Charismatics, for instance, freely admit that they do not want to venture "too far out on that limb" because of the fear of ridicule from the outside and by more moderate church-goers. In particular, Catholics in the Western world take a very laid-back approach to demonic possession and crusades against Satanism. Listen to any televangelist, on the other hand, and you will learn in no uncertain terms that the Prince of Darkness will eat you for breakfast if you have not been purified by the magical prayers and ceremonies available only with the help of your local Christian practitioner of the mystical arts. Indeed, the fundamentalist priest often appears to be so well versed in evil presences and demonic hiding places that he might be presumed to have a tap on the Devil's phone.

In general, the modus operandi of tribal witch doctors involves the dispensing of charms and medicines, exorcising evil spirits and troublesome ghosts, treating the sick, making rain, and using music—usually drumming—to communicate with the spirit world. Frequently, they sacrifice animals (not unlike the sacrifices of the Old Testament); they communicate with the god, or gods, as the case may be; they sell charms and amulets that will prevent misfortune; and they roll cowrie shells to divine the future. With magical words, chants, signs, dances, ceremonies, and tricks, in other words, they mesmerize and control their congregations.

It is interesting to note that one tribal faith has developed over the centuries into a worldwide religion that now has an estimated 75 to 100 million followers. Santeria, meaning "worship of saints," was first developed among the West Africa Yoruba tribe in Nigeria. Carried by slaves to the New World between the 16th and 19th centuries, Santeria survived hundreds of years of isolation from Africa by harmonizing to a degree with Roman Catholicism. The practice known as syncretism enabled the Africans to secretly identify their orishes, or deities, with Catholic saints who represented similar virtues. Thus, they were able to preserve their religion while appearing to Spanish Catholic priests as converts. (If you can't lick them, pretend to join them.) A pretense of this curious nature could scarcely have been successful, however, without the witch doctors of both faiths being more or less synchronized in principle.

A further similarity is worth noting. When the Santeros sacrifice live animals, there is a transfer of body and blood which is offered up to the Father-God and then consumed by the worshipers. The same principle applies with the emphasis on the ultimate sacrifice of the Christ on the cross to the Father-God during the Catholic mass, which is followed by the symbolic ingestion of the body and blood of the Christ by the brethren.

Question: Exactly what, or where, are the differences in principle between the theological exercises of the tribal priest and those of the Christian who preaches that Satan is a real, active being in the world...who conducts "deliverance ministries" to exorcise personal demons...who claims that speaking in tongues, healing and other supernatural gifts were delivered to him personally by the Holy Spirit...and who, with magical scriptures, signs, and ritual formulas, removes the evil stain of original sin from the very soul of the believer, transforms mere bread and wine into "the body of Christ" and "the blood of Christ," and changes plain water into holy water?

One more question needs to be addressed: How does the witch doctor gain and maintain his awesome power?

The first step in the establishment of a religious cult is to attract the attention of the people—as many of them as possible. The engineers of Catholic Christianity achieved that all-important end by developing and introducing the concept of a NEW salvation-deity called the Christ, and they supported the divinity of their man-god with miraculous events (the virgin birth, the resurrection, the Ascension) and prophetic declarations (ancient writings purportedly predicting the future appearance of the Christ). Their uniquely Jewish "anointed one," supposedly a Savior—a divine Being who had descended from a higher world to rescue souls from their fallen condition—was born of a great miracle. After being murdered and entombed, he overcame sickness, sin and death by returning to life. Ergo—he could only be the representation of God Almighty on earth, the Son of God, God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten not made, cosubstantial with the Father.

The next step is to establish a place for the witch doctor in the theological scheme of things. Remember what happened when the Jesus (Savior) triumphantly ascended from the grave? Did he announce and prove to the whole world that he was truly God? No. According to the biblical scenario, he huddled with his buddies, Peter and the twelve disciples, and instructed THEM to carry the message to the multitudes that, through his Son, Jesus the Christ, God had given the human species eternal life. (After the basic text of the New Testament had been forged, a passage specifying that Jesus had appeared to "more than five hundred" other persons following the resurrection was added to counter the objection that a mere handful of people were not enough to adequately spread the message.) Significantly, the distinction purportedly bestowed upon the disciples by the very Son of God secured a place for the witch doctor in the new religion and paved the way for the development of the incredibly bloated hierarchies—Catholic, Protestant, Episcopalian, etc.—that were to follow.

The next step in this developmental journey is to establish an inexorable hold over the minds and souls of the people. This is invariably done by denigrating the flock, the "simple faithful"—relegating them in effect to worthlessness. They are poor, sinful wretches who cannot be saved or even begin to live reasonably decent lives from the cradle to the grave without the indispensable ministrations of the witch doctor.

The concept of original sin, the abstract contamination of the entire human species because of the mythical "fall of man" in the Garden of Eden ("In Adam, all die!"), has been the most effective weapon in the Christian arsenal. The power given to the Church by this one monstrous doctrine cannot be overestimated. ALL human beings who have ever been born, and who will ever be born, come into the world with a "disease inherited from their parents." The individual's greatest crime, therefore, is being born. He has not yet sinned on his own, but the seed of sin is within him because he has been conceived in sin. He brings his own damnation from the womb. Can the soul ever be liberated? Indeed, yes; but only through the sacrament of baptism, which can only be administered by the witch doctor.

What of the truly holy person, born from Above, full of grace? Can he or she conceive a child free of the disease of sin? No. In the entire history of the world, the Christian Establishment tells us, there has only been one Immaculately Conceived human being—Mary, the mother of Jesus the Christ. One can only speculate about when the subject of that conception first came up; but I suspect that, one day, during the early centuries of the Catholic experiment, one of the brighter members of the hierarchy suddenly stopped in his tracks, slapped his forehead, and muttered, "Holy Moses! The Virgin Mother wasn't baptized!" "Holy Moses!" echoed his startled colleagues. The reason for the consternation? Baptism wasn't a Christian sacrament when Mary was born. Ergo, she would have been branded with the stain of original sin when she gave birth to Jesus—a horrifying dilemma that simply could not be tolerated. So the "Mystical Body of Christ" (the Church) put their collective heads together and, in due time, solved the problem with the canonical declaration that the Virgin Mary had been born through the grace of God without the blemish of original sin on her soul. (This is a prime example of Christian voodoo at work.)

Once the brush of baptism has scrubbed the graffiti of the very first sin from our souls, are we then worthy of God's love? "NO!" thunders the Christian. "Man is still SINFUL and SEPARATED from God, so we cannot know him personally or experience his love. Man needs the BIBLE to speak to this need." And right there, with Bible in hand and the promise of God's Word and Love, stands the witch doctor, ready to bridge the gulf between the sinner and the invisible trinity.

Needless to say, one of the most important and jealously guarded duties of the witch doctor encompasses the interpretation and teaching of sacred writings. It was not given to "puny mankind" to understand "the deeper rhythms of holy writ." For this very reason, Pope Leo III once forbade laymen to read or even to touch the Christian Bible. Not that the Catholics were breaking new theological ground, as it were. They were merely walking in the moccasins of their ritual-intensive predecessors, the Jewish rabbis, who fervently held that "You should learn from teachers and not from books."

The final step in the formation of an "organized" religion is to increase the power of the witch doctor by the invention of additional mysterious rites, ceremonies, and rigid controls to be used as restraints upon the masses—"seeing that every multitude is fickle and full of lawless desires, unreasoning anger and violent passion."

Anybody who knows anything at all about Catholic Christianity is surely aware of the fact that the hierarchy of the Christ-cult spent hundreds of years developing a plethora of ceremonial laws that were then codified into canons of religious and ecclesiastical practices—baptism, the Eucharist, holy matrimony, communion feasts, fasts and Sunday laws, penance and unction, priesthood and confession, ecclesiastical regulations and privileges, tithes, pilgrimages and shrines, rituals, incense and vestments, and so on. They even prepared a series of "penitential books" for the purpose of exploring the subject of sex, enumerating the misdeeds, and prescribing penalties for sexual sins such as homosexuality, sexual intimacy with animals, and the greatest sin of all, masturbation. (So much for the attempt to build a Church on "pure faith.")

Nothing galls the Christ-folk more in our modern age than the fact that ever-increasing numbers of us refuse to see ourselves as inevitable evil-doers, sinners filled with guilt and shame and in need if not of a redeemer, then at least of the consciousness that we require redemption.

We refuse to toss reason, logic and science to the winds and accept as fact the story of a God who plants Himself as His only Son in the womb of an earthly female, with His third self, the Ghost, supervising the celestial impregnation, so that He can become human, perform great miracles, attract the multitudes, be tortured and murdered, and then ascend from the grave of death just to prove to the human species that He loved them so dearly, He was willing to sacrifice Himself as His only Son for their salvation.

We refuse to believe that the laws of the universe are fickle—that they can be suspended, reversed, or turned upside down, to provide a natural world with supernatural events such as a virgin birth, walking on water, and bringing the truly dead back to life. We refuse to believe that a great and good Creator would deliberately manipulate His "immutable" laws just to impress weak and sinful creatures who inhabit the universe.

And we fervently refuse to accept the arrogant assumption that the Gospel (counterfeited) and the Christ (fabricated) can reveal "the true end of life and the true nature of reality."

By rejecting the witch doctor's claims, we have "turned to false idols such as the flag, the marketplace, the universe, the laboratory," etc. thereby "creating our own transcendence and worshipping materialism."

Christians like to believe that the entire history of the world ran its course for the sake of the new religion that began to take root in the Graeco-Roman world around eighteen centuries ago. They are wrong. Christianity was neither a natural development nor a miraculous revelation vouchsafed after a long delay to a world that had been allowed to grow to the point where it was ripe and ready for the creed. Nor was it the one healthy influence in a completely evil world.

Christianity succeeded, not because it represented a great moral revolution or because it was divinely subsidized, but because (1) its promises of salvation—not by "justice" or wise and good conduct, but by some act of sacrifice or purification, intensified by adoration—appealed to the uneducated masses, and (2) the main articles of the faith, already latent in the existing savior-religions of the time, were familiar to the Gentiles of Western Asia.

Today, the rationalist stands on the shoulders of all the great thinkers of the ancient world from Aristotle to Epicurus to Seneca to Zeno. The Christian, on the other hand, stands on the shoulders of the poorest, the most ignorant, the most primitive-minded, and the most demon-ridden human creatures of that day and time.

The saddest era in the history of the Western World occurred when our people gave up the achievements of thinkers and scientists, of artists, philosophers, poets and statesmen, for the revelations of fanatical and wild-eyed prophets and a gospel of worldly renunciation—when they sold their minds and their metaphysical natures to parasitic witch doctors who spend their lives believing the unbelievable and defining the undefinable. ❑

AN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN AND BIBLICAL ORIGINS.

Nicholas Carter feels that it is time for us to sit down and do what many Christians rarely do: Study the Holy Bible. In doing so, we may discover whether or not the Bible is indeed "Holy" and the "Word of God." In strict biblical order, the author methodically, and scathingly, examines the various claims made in the "Holy Book" and shows how many of them bear no relationship to reality whatsoever. Friedrich P. Berg

. Before anyone else jumps onto the bandwagon of praise for Robert Frens and his discovery that Diesel exhaust can kill, they might read my article "The Diesel Gas Chambers: Myth Within a Myth" in the Spring 1984 issue of The Journal of Historical Review. They may be surprised to discover that I never claimed that Diesel exhaust could not kill. On the contrary, I certainly did concede that Diesels could have been adapted, albeit with a great deal of technical expertise, for mass-murder. Among the people who have been surprised to learn about my true position on this subject were Ernst Zündel and Douglas Christie. The night before I was to testify in the last Toronto trial, they learned that my position was quite different from what they had imagined—apparently they had never read my work either. Their answer was an ultimatum: either I had to "be flexible" and state in court that "it was categorically impossible to kill with Diesel exhaust," or else I could not testify. I left the next day without testifying.

Although a Diesel-murder-method can be contrived, my argument has always been that any such method would have been "absurd" and "idiotic" because of the difficulty in determining and imposing the proper load on the engine and, even more important, because of the readily available alternative sources of carbon monoxide. The most obvious alternative today would be a conventional gasoline engine. During World War II however, there was an additional alternative, far better even than the gasoline engine. That alternative was the producer gas or Holzgas generator which was attached to hundreds of thousands of vehicles in Germany and German-occupied Europe. The generators burned wood or coal with a restricted air supply so as to produce a combustible gas which could then be burned in modified gasoline or Diesel engines. The combustible gas was an alternative to liquid fuel which was desperately needed by the German military for combat vehicles. Wherever possible, liquid fuels were reserved for combat vehicles which needed for their very survival the higher performance that only liquid fuels could give. Nonetheless, by the end of the war, supplies of gasoline had been so reduced, particularly by the bombing of Germany's synthetic oil refineries, that even some of Germany's most formidable tanks, the Tiger tanks, were driven with producer gas.

Producer gas is poison gas. Each producer gas vehicle was a self-propelled, poison gas generator—each driver had to know that for his own safety. In producer gas the principal ingedient is carbon monoxide and the concentrations range from 18% to 35%—extremely lethal if blown into a space that is not even completely sealed such as a garage—and yet, it has never been claimed that producer gas was ever used by the Germans to murder anyone. Diesel exhaust, by contrast, contains less than 1/2% of carbon monoxide, and usually far less. A serious error which was put into my article at the last minute without my permission was the wording: "many thousands of drivers who drove these vehicles daily." The fact is that the number of such vehicles and drivers for most of the war was in the "hundreds of thousands."

I still regard the following as an important summation of my thesis:

> The abundance of the gaswagons throughout German-occupied Europe and the intensity with which the Germans were developing ever newer vehicles and applications of the producer gas technology undermine the holocaust story in general. Had the Germans ever intended to commit mass murder with carbon monoxide, they certainly would have used producer gas long before they would have ever used anything as idiotic as Diesel exhaust.

The Diesel-murder-method has its origin, as best as I have ever been able to tell, in the Soviet propaganda of mid-1943. Shortly before that, the Soviets had been badly stung by the German revelations about the Katyn massacre and the openness with which the Germans welcomed internationally renowned, forensic specialists to Katyn to make their own examinations of the victims. To counter the Katyn story, the Soviets staged show trials in Kharkov and Krasnodar a few months later with hapless German defendants making "confessions;" the Soviets refused, however, to allow non-Soviet experts to even visit the supposed massacre sites. From the very beginning of these trials, the Soviet claim was that the Germans drove civilians in trucks into the countryside, then parked the vehicles and directed the exhaust from the truck Diesels into the rear compartments where the victims died shortly thereafter. In these scenarios, the Diesels would have been operating, at the very worst, at a fast idle—those conditions would have produced barely enough carbon monoxide to cause a headache in half-an-hour. Some of the trucks were described as having been made by the Saurer company. After the war, a single document PS-501 appeared at Nuremberg, but of unknown origin, which implicated the Saurer company and Walter Rauff. The irony of these claims was that the Saurer company had established itself already before the war as the preeminent manufacturer in the entire world of producer-gas driven trucks. During the war, Saurer maintained an edge over all of its competitors—including Mercedes, Opel and Ford, all of whom also made producer gas trucks—with its own 4-1/2 ton truck designs, models BT4500 and 4BTDVS. More than 6,000 of these trucks were built during the war and most, if not all, used producer-gas-driven Diesels. How absurd then that anyone with any technical expertise would have employed the exhaust of Saurer Diesels for murder when the fuel itself was thousands of times more lethal.

For many reasons in addition to the above, PS-501 is a forgery, probably Soviet in origin. There are at least three different versions of the document. One version uses the wording "Fensterläden anbringen". Another version uses "Fensterle den anbringen" with "den" crossed out. A third version uses "Fensterlä anbringen."

In "Death by Diesel" in the December 1990 issue of Liberty Bell, Robert Frens takes the position that I am correct about carbon monoxide, but that I have failed to appreciate the highly toxic effects of carbon dioxide in Diesel exhaust. Frens has included a few kind words about my work in an apparent effort to counterbalance everything else he wrote. I have no kind words for Frens. Contrary to the impression he has given at least some people, Frens' arguments and method are far from "scientific."

Already in 1982, Frens was writing people about a newspaper story which claimed a VW Diesel had been used to commit suicide. Frens now claims that a Rochester, NY paper "mentioned" a Mercedes Diesel as the vehicle involved in a suicide and that a Los Angeles Times story from 1975 also reported a Diesel suicide. Frens has been talking about Diesel suicides for eight years and still cannot identify even one news story as a reference. One should remember that newspapers often report details incorrectly. Any Diesel suicide stories should be rejected as nonsense unless they are verified by thorough forensic examinations by competent specialists. Diesel engines in any likely suicide scenarios would operate at or near idle when their exhaust is especially harmless because of the abundance of excess air in the exhaust.

On page 19 of the Liberty Bell article, Frens quotes me as follows: "At idle, Diesels operate with air/fuel ratios of 200/1. (p.25, Berg)." The actual words on page 25 of my 1984 article are: "At idle, Diesels operate with air/fuel ratios as high as 200:1." This simply means that "some" but not necessarily all Diesels operate with such high air/fuel ratios. Frens left out "as high as" and substituted "of." In the process, he changed the meaning.

Also on page 19, Frens writes:

> The surveyed literature commonly refers to an air/fuel ratio of 40/1 as "very lean" and cites no performance data above this ratio. Ratios higher than 40/1 may be achieved by a decelerating engine under low pressure conditions but this transient state is not pertinent.

That reads as if Frens must know something about the subject but it is rubbish. Air/fuel ratios in excess of 100/1 at a steady and stable idle are common and the sources from the SAE which I cited in 1984 as well as other sources are proof. The SAE papers which Frens cited or "surveyed" are not, as one might imagine, the same ones to which I referred; they are simply papers which he happened to choose for reasons known only to him. The SAE routinely publishes a great deal of highly specialized research, much of which has nothing to do with fuel/air ratios. If Frens had simply looked at Figures 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of my article, he would have seen many performance data points at air/fuel ratios above 100 to 1 under stabilized conditions.

The fact is that although many Diesels, especially among the two-stroke types, never operate near to 200/1—many others, especially among the four-stroke type, certainly do. One of many sources is Diesel Engineering Handbook by Karl W. Stinson, M.E. Professor of Mech. Eng., Ohio State University. The revised 11th Edition, 1963 states on page 47:

> High-compression gas engines and diesel engines always operate with an excess of air over that required for theoretically-complete combustion of the fuel. In diesel engines the fuel/air ratios, by weight, may vary from 0.005 when idling to 0.06 for full power.

Air/fuel ratios are simply the reciprocals of fuel/air ratios. For example, a fuel/air ratio of 0.01 is just another of way saying air/fuel ratio of 100. A fuel/air ratio of 0.005 is the same as an air/fuel ratio of 200/1 or simply 200.

On page 22 of the Liberty Bell article, the following sentence appears:

> I take issue with Mr. Berg and dispute his claim that "...the Diesel engine is nothing more than an unusual kind of blower...".

That is not my claim; that is a deliberate misquote. Frens has conveniently left out an essential part of my sentence. The entire sentence from page 25 of my 1984 article is:

> As far as the excess air is concerned, the Diesel engine is nothing more than an unusual kind of blower or compressor.

The meaning of the complete sentence is totally different from the meaning suggested by my words taken out of context, and any sane person should know that. Excess air enters and leaves a Diesel engine without undergoing any chemical change whatsoever. It plays no rôle, chemically, in the combustion process. That is why it is called "excess air." Nonetheless, the excess air does do something rather important in the exhaust, and that is dilute the actual products of the combustion process, some of which could otherwise be extremely hazardous.

On the last page of his article, Frens writes:

> When was the last time you were trapped in traffic, following a Diesel powered bus? Did those invigorating smells conjure up an image of a harmless "blower" in action? Do you really believe that you could breathe that stuff undiluted, for an hour or so?

Aside from his recurring, false claim that I regard Diesels as harmless blowers, the rest of his arguments are also false. The smell of Diesel exhaust, as bad as it is, has nothing whatever to do with toxicity; the smell bears no relationship to the possible presence or absence of carbon monoxide or even carbon dioxide. Carbon monoxide is odorless and carbon dioxide is nearly so. A room with a terrible smell may be toxic or it may not be toxic; it may contain a great deal of CO or even carbon dioxide—but, one simply cannot tell from the smell. A room full of angry skunks might seem like a dangerous place to anyone trapped inside, but the air would probably be breathable just as a room full of Diesel exhaust from a Diesel operating at less than 3/4 of full load would allow most people to survive for half-an-hour. That is not to say it would be a pleasant experience or "harmless" or that the people trapped inside would not try to tear the walls apart—they probably would try to tear the walls apart which is, by the way, one more reason for why the Gerstein story is ridiculous.

How can anyone take Frens' lengthy dissertation on carbon dioxide seriously? The answer is that few people will bother to check any of the references—and of those who do some checking, few will read critically. Frens, for example, has apparently never read or found any of the references that I cited in 1984. He has ignored my references to the many therapeutic uses of carbon dioxide, some involving carbon dioxide concentrations as high as 50% in air, and to the fact that the US Navy used 3% carbon dioxide in US submarines for weeks at a time with the oxygen level reduced to only 15%.

Of the references which Frens did cite, the Merck Index (his Ref. D.) Section 23 of the Thirteenth Edition does indeed list carbon dioxide as a specific poison but gives no information as to toxic or harmful concentrations in air or any other information except that the symptoms are "dyspnea, weakness, tinnitus, and palpitations" and that the treatment consists of "respiratory support [and] oxygen." Among the substances included in this catch-all listing with minimum information are: aspirin, caffeine, fluorides, iron, moth balls, and tobacco.

Another Frens source (Ref. C) should be identified as the McGraw-Hill Encyclopedia of Science and Technology. The 6th edition, 1987, Vol. 3 says the following about carbon dioxide: "Under normal conditions, it is stable, inert and non-toxic." No information is given about any harmful effects at all. Why he even listed it as a source is anyone's guess. One can be sure, however, that more than one uncritical reader was deeply impressed to see such an authoritative reference cited.

The last source which Frens gives (Ref. E) as a possible medical handbook is Chemistry in Everyday Life. This appears to be intended strictly for laymen and high school kids. I could not even find it.

If one wants to be serious about carbon dioxide, one might consider the references which I cited in 1984. In Baker and Mossman, (East Rutherford, NJ: Matheson Gas Products, 1970), the following information is given on pages 12 and 33:

SIMPLE ASPHYXIANTS

Description

The following gases are classified as simple asphyxiants: carbon dioxide, deuterium, hydrogen, nitrogen, nitrous oxide and sulfur hexafluoride. These gases are colorless and odorless.

Major Hazards

The members of this group are nonflammable (excepting deuterium and hydrogen) and nontoxic but they can act as simple asphyxiants by diluting the air inspired to such an extent that an oxygen deficiency results.

. . . . . .

Effects in Man

The effects produced are the same as those produced by the helium-group gases. See section on Helium-Group Gases for description, see page 33.

. . . . . .

HELIUM-GROUP GASES

Description

The helium group gases consist of argon, helium, krypton, . . .

Major Hazards

The helium-group gases are nonflammable and nontoxic but they can act as simple asphyxiants by diluting the air inspired to such an extent that an oxygen deficiency results.

Effects in Man (1)

The coordinating capacity of the nervous system is impaired by even slight degrees of oxygen deficiency; the subject can not think clearly or control his limbs accurately. The development of symptoms depends on the degree and duration of the oxygen deficiency and also on the rapidity with which the deficiency is developed. In sudden and acute asphyxia, unconsciousness is immediate. . . . . .

(1) Y. Henderson and H. W. Haggard, Noxious Gases and the Principles of Respiration Influencing Their Action, 1943, pp. 142-147, Reinhold Publishing Corp. New York, NY.

Henderson and Haggard is a classic and well worth reading. I referred to it twice in 1984 and will quote from it later also.

The following discussion, also in Baker and Mossman, on the effects of carbon monoxide shows how differently a chemical asphyxiant works:

. . . . . .

Effects in Human Beings

Acute Effects

Carbon monoxide is classified as a chemical asphyxiant, producing a toxic action by combining with the hemoglobin of the blood to form a relatively stable carboxyhemoglobin. It thus prevents the hemoglobin from taking up oxygen to form oxyhemoglobin, and consequently the body is deprived of its needed oxygen. Since the affinity of carbon monoxide for hemoglobin is about 200-300 times that of oxygen, only small amounts of carbon monoxide in the air will consequently cause toxic reactions to occur.

Carbon dioxide is a simple asphyxiant and CO is a chemical asphyxiant. CO reacts chemically with the blood; carbon dioxide does not.

I did indeed write: "In general, if enough oxygen is available, a carbon dioxide level as high as 12% is not likely to cause death." Frens claims that that statement is ludicrous, but it is not ludicrous at all—it is more than reasonable. I must add, however, just as I did in 1984, that such a carbon dioxide level may cause cardiac irregularity and may, therefore, be dangerous—even fatal—for people with weak hearts.

Rather than attempt to explain in medical terms why my 12% claim is reasonable, which I would not feel competent to try anyway, let me quote from some genuine toxicological handbooks.

In Taylor's Principles and Practice of Medical Jurisprudence, Vol. II, edited by Smith, Simpson, Howard, Stafford-Clark and Nickolls (London: J. & A. Churchill Ltd., 1957), the following text appears on page 398 under the subheading "Poisoning by Carbon Dioxide:"

Degree of Toxicity and Fatal Dose. With regard to the fatal proportion of carbon dioxide in the air breathed, it is necessary to make a distinction between the contamination of air by the addition of carbon dioxide, and circumstances in which this gas is produced by combustion or respiration in a close apartment at the expense of the oxygen contained in the air. Every volume of carbon dioxide formed by combustion represents an approximately equal volume of oxygen removed.

When the gas is respired in its lowest lethal proportion—some 20-25 per cent—the symptoms come on slowly, and the transition from life to death is frequently tranquil except for terminal convulsive twitchings of muscle. . . .

. . . It is probable that no danger to life exists unless the proportion of carbon dioxide breathed is well over 25 per cent. At saturations of 60 per cent or more collapse and loss of consciousness may be sudden and develop without any warning.

In Poisoning: Toxicology-Symptoms-Treatments by Jay M. Arena, 4th ed., (Springfield, Illinois: Charles C. Thomas, 1979), on page 243:

Carbon Dioxide (Carbonic Acid Gas, Anhydride)

. . . . . .

The symptoms of poisoning depend on the concentration and the period of exposure. As a rule no symptoms of note are experienced until the concentration in the air reaches 3%, at which time dyspnea, headache, vertigo and nausea appear. Toxic concentrations are not reached until 10 vol% of the gas are present. At this level there are visual disturbances, tinnitus, tremors, hyperpnea, profuse perspiration, elevated blood pressure and loss of consciousness. With higher concentrations (above 25%), stimulation gives way to depression, leading to stupor, coma, convulsions and death.

In The Diagnosis and Treatment of Acute Poisoning by J.D.P. Graham (London: Oxford University Press, 1962), on page 216:

> An increase of carbon dioxide in inspired air from the usual 0.04 per cent. to 2 per cent. causes little disturbance but above that respiration deepens and then speeds up. Five per cent has a most powerful effect but above the concentration normally found in alveolar air (5.5 per cent.) it causes headache, dizziness, confusion and dyspnoea while continuing to stimulate. Higher concentrations overstimulate the nervous system and become intolerable, while inhalation of 20 to 30 per cent. carbon dioxide in air usually causes a sudden fall in respiratory minute volume due to the onset of inco-ordinated breathing or of convulsions. In anaesthetized persons in whom convulsions are less likely high concentrations of carbon dioxide deepen the coma. Somnolence as a complication of chronic respiratory disease has been attributed to retention of carbon dioxide. The paralysing central action of very high concentrations (40 to 50 per cent) is swift in onset. Amounts up to 10 per cent. cause vasoconstriction, stimulate the heart, speed the pulse, raise the blood pressure and greatly increase cerebral and coronary blood flow. Higher concentrations may cause cardiac irregularity which can bring about immediate collapse.

In Noxious Gases by Henderson & Haggard (New York, NY: Reinhold Publ. Corp., 1943), pages 149 and 150 give the following explanation as to how simple asphyxiants actually work.

> . . . The simple asphyxiants are numerous and may be further divided into two types. Those of one type are entirely inert physiologically; they are such gases as hydrogen and nitrogen. Those of the other type have some slight specific action, but when they are inhaled in high concentrations they cause asphyxia before this drug action is manifest. The second type of this subgroup includes the lighter hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series such as methane and ethane, and some of the gases which, when administered with oxygen, are now used as anesthetics.
> The simple asphyxiants of both types induce asphyxia entirely by excluding oxygen from the lungs; their effect is proportional to the extent to which their presence diminishes the percentage, or rather the partial pressure, of oxygen in the expired air. They all act identically, therefore, when present in equal molecular concentrations. Moreover, they must be present in considerable amounts before they exert any appreciable effect. They may decrease the oxygen of the air to two-thirds of its normal percentage—13 per cent of an atmosphere—before noticeable symptoms of anoxemia develop. A reduction of the oxygen to this degree necessitates the presence of the simple asphyxiants in a concentration of 33 per cent in the mixture of air and gas. When the gas is present to the extent of 50 per cent, and the oxygen is reduced by one-half, a man is soon rendered incapable of making a vigorous effort to escape. About 75 per cent is quickly fatal.

It should be obvious by now that my use of the 12% number in 1984 was quite reasonable. If there is any error on my part, it is that I may have been too conservative since any practical gas chamber would be expected to kill "all" of the people trapped inside, not just those with weak hearts or respiratory problems. I might have argued that the critical concentration of carbon dioxide should be 20%.

Although Diesel exhaust can be harmful, it is not "very harmful;" it is relatively harmless. Compared to any number of other kinds of pollution to which humans are exposed such as gasoline engine exhaust, Diesel exhaust is indeed relatively harmless.

As to Frens' challenge that I or anyone inhale Diesel exhaust, perhaps with a hose in the window of a car—my answer is that it is not a bad idea and that I have done it; it was a thoroughly boring experience. The important question for me has always been not whether a Diesel can kill at idle, but at what percentage of full load it will kill everyone in half-an-hour. A more reasonable but less dramatic test would be to take some laboratory mice and blow Diesel exhaust from an engine under varying loads into the mice cage. Something like this has actually been done by a revisionist medical doctor with no harm to the mice. The doctor, however, did not impose any load on the engine and, unfortunately, he does not want me to reveal his name either. Variations of the test can be performed, at least at idle, by anyone with a Diesel-powered vehicle who does not mind putting a stray cat or mice into the vehicle's cab or passenger compartment. A real test with humans and with significant loading of the engine could be an extremely unpleasant experience because of the smell and could move the experimentees to break-off the experiment quite early in the test. Anyone undergoing the test could be pulled out at the first sign of unconsciousness; at idle, however, they will probably be bored, even by the smell.

Without being too pious about it, let's remember that we are talking about life and death and heed some words of caution. All of my quotations from toxicological handbooks are based on thousands of tests on laboratory animals as well as many tests on humans and upon careful investigations of murders and suicides made throughout the past century. They are not just the result of abstract theorizing in ivory towers. It is precisely because the tests can be life threatening that one should first study the research of experts. Similar testing by amateurs may be disastrous and may prove nothing. Without realizing it, an important parameter may be changed by a reckless amateur. For an example of just how reckless one can be, consider Frens' own suggestion that someone take SCUBA gear filled with 12% carbon dioxide and dive under water. By itself, 12% carbon dioxide is not likely to cause death—but, common sense should tell us that the dizzines, vertigo and disorientation caused by 12% carbon dioxide certainly can cause disaster underwater—and it would prove nothing at all. No one has ever accused the Nazis of sending Jews into underwater gas chambers with SCUBA gear.

Long ago, when I was only a few years out of Columbia University and still wet behind my ears, I thought that one of the older, far more experienced engineers was making some serious errors in his analysis of a problem. I was openly enthusiastic about my discovery but it soon turned out that he was right and I was totally wrong. I was embarassed. Rather than pat me on the back to make me feel better, he rubbed in the fact that I had made a fool of myself by suggesting that I should "learn how to walk before I try to run." I have never forgotten those harsh words. Everyone makes mistakes—but, the shabbiness of Frens' work including his distortion of my words and meaning is extraordinary. My advice to Frens is that he not only learn how to walk before he tries to run; he should also do his homework and learn how to read. My advice to revisionists is that they should read much more carefully and much more critically.

John Demjanjuk's life is at stake today because of the Diesel gas chamber myth despite its utter absurdity. The enormous efforts which Demjanjuk, his family and friends have made for so many years deserve our deepest admiration and support. Inadvertently, Frens and his foolishness may have weakened the resolve and commitment of some of Demjanjuk's supporters. Inadvertently, Frens may have hurt an innocent man and his courageous family. ❑

What True Equality Would Really Mean

by
Allan Callahan

The Jewish-American regime in Washington is committed to equality, there is no doubt about that; the only doubt is in regard to the depth of the commitment. In spite of huge efforts, and the doing of enormous damage, we still don't have equality. And there is some question as to whether or not we will ever achieve it. Still, it is instructive to look into the "Promised Land" of the future, this new egalitarian society that is being built for us, and see what true equality would be like.

Socrates said: "Define your terms." So, to really achieve equality, we must first see what it means. and there is no better authority than the dictionary, which defines it as "balanced," "uniform" and "evenly proportioned." We can see right off that we are still a long way from the goal of equality, because people are far from fitting the dictionary description. To be truly equal they would all have to look alike, and act alike, according to age and sex. This will take very carefully controlled breeding, over a long period of time, but white Americans may eventually go along with it, because not to do so would be discrimination, and this offends the tribal god that the Jews created for them. Can you imagine a beautiful, fair-skinned, golden-haired white girl not wanting to bring muddy-looking offspring into the world? Egads! If there is anything which gets the Big Jew in the Sky into a towering rage, it is this, while nothing is more pleasing to him than seeing a black buck squiring his white wife and mulatto offspring around town.

Now, some will protest that Washington only wants to bring about "equality of opportunity," but this is only a half-way measure, which will not work. Innumerable examples could be brought forth, but one will suffice. Suppose a 110 lb man wants to play pro football. There is no law which says he can't, but no team would hire him; no coach would give him a second glance. He is way too small to compete; would get hurt out there on the field, or even killed. Yes, in a sense he has "equal opportunity," because he can go and apply at any team's office, but this is meaningless, because he can't make the grade; his size is against him.

However, if all males were the same height and weight, at a given age, and had the same abilities, any young man could play pro football. And look at the wondrous results that would obtain if all Homo sapiens were as alike as peas-in-a-pod. As they grew up, they would all develop in lock-step. Not one head would rise above another. In a math test of seventh graders, for instance, all scores would be exactly alike. In a foot-race between 15-year-old boys, all would cross the finish-line at exactly the same time. You name it. In any contest between true equals, there would be no deviation from the norm.

If there is one notion that Washington cannot abide, it is the idea of "white supremacy." The white man cannot be supreme anywhere. He must not live among his own kind, but must forever be bringing in non-whites to share his territory. The coloreds will see to it that whites are then both bred and squeezed out of existence. A new, dark mud-man will take their place. So, instead of "white supremacy," we will then have mud supremacy. The muds will control the U.S.; they being the only ones left. And they will all be equal, because they will all be physically and mentally alike.

Just think what this new society will bring about. There will be no more rivalries over race, because racial differences will not exist among the dark, peas-in-a-pod type Americans. There will be no more rivalries over mates, because all men and women will look alike. There will be no more rivalries over abilities, because all abilities will be the same. Truly, the Millenium will have arrived.

There is one thing wrong with this new society. It would be so boring, dull, uninteresting and stultifying that no one could stand it. ❑

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Mr. Dietz,

I've been reading the article "Physician Extraordinary" by Dr. Revilo P. Oliver. While I'm interested in the entire article, of particular interest is the discussion on pages 11 and 12, footnote #14 regarding Britain. I'm just a beginner at learning about historical issues. Wish I had even a small fraction of the knowledge and understanding that Dr. Oliver has. But if a beginner doesn't have opinions, how will she learn?

The question of why Hitler allowed Britain to survive is interesting. I believe he had a good opinion of them. To me, the incident raises my estimation of Hitler. I think it's Britain that is the disappointment. From my Irish background I've never viewed the British as being among my favorites. But in regard to Europe, I think Britain could have adjusted to a changing Europe. Could have seen the value of working with Germany to both countries' mutual benefit. Britain hasn't had a leader comparable to Hitler.

The following comments are a general response to the article "What is a Hate Crime?" by Dr. Charles E. Weber in the January 1991 issue of Liberty Bell. Someone such as Dr. Weber could better put into words what I'm trying to say, But I'll try.

Would that every White family in America could have a copy of the article. This quote is by Dr. Weber: "The wise, gentle, suffering non-Aryan contrasted to the evil, ignorant Aryan has become a standard plot in motion pictures and on television."

I believe there should be information and support groups and organizations readily available to all White people in the United States. There isn't anything in this letter that I am saying that is anti-black. I'm not saying against black people.

Recently I worked for an agency of the Federal government. My purpose in mentioning this experience is to call attention to the fact that there is a need among White people that must be remedied. At the agency where I worked there appeared to be continued overwhelming pressures put upon the White management employees by blacks and other minorities.

To deal with the situation, in desperation the management did what they could to appease blacks. They seemed to reason that it was government money and they would give as much as they could to blacks and do whatever they could to prevent blacks from filing a complaint against them. They seemed to be saying—I'll do what I can to keep my job. It's every White person for himself.

Whites need to find among themselves people who will show leadership in recognizing and solving the needs that Whites have throughout the United States.

Not long ago I joined the Ku Klux Klan. I'm at the beginning steps—a member at large. My main reason in doing so was not as an act against black people or any other race. Rather, my main reason for joining was to gain information and for moral support. And among other things I've become aware of since joining the KKK is what Dr. Weber refers to in his article about Aryans being portrayed negatively on television programs and the very real effect this propaganda has on White people.

In situations where it's a matter of "every White person for himself," and blacks are given preference because of alleged past discrimination, it's Whites who have no position of authority, power or influence who lose out. They are the ones who are sacrificed. These Whites especially need to have information and support to deal with their situation.

There doesn't seem to be any real sense of direction in the United States regarding the racial situation. But one thing is sure—there has to be a better strategy by the leaders in this country than simply one to single out White people in the population to be sacrificed to make up for alleged past discrimination.

Sincerely,
Mrs. M.S., Kansas

Dear George,

I hope this finds you and the Liberty Bell family well in mind and body. Liberty Bell is, as always, a highly valued publication; I particularly like Dr. Oliver's writings. Enclosed is a $15 contribution. My best wishes to you and the whole Liberty Bell family for 1991; I hope you can successfully overcome any enemy attempts to silence or harm you and that you can keep the Liberty Bell magazine coming.

For Truth and our Race, sincerely,

Dear Mr. Dietz,

Well, the year went so quick, and the first year's subscription was so good that I have to renew.

In April I'll be ordering a vast number of items. Take care, and remember that the whole of New Jersey is as bad as Asbury!

Yours sincerely,
D.T., New Jersey

Dear George:

Greetings to you and family. As you know, your work is still the best and most informative.

To discuss our cause with some of the younger generation is enough to blow your mind. I feel sorry for so many of our good people who work so diligently at researching and writing.

Sincerely yours,
J.L.L., Minnesota

Dear Mr Dietz:

...Liberty Bell is an excellent publication and one that should be in the hands of every U.S. citizen, To watch the Zionist/Fabian Socialist "complot" at work in the Persian Gulf area just as they did in Europe (in two wars), Japan, Korea, Vietnam, Grenada and Panama is truly frightening, with an outcome being highly predictable. Liberty Bell is one of the few publications that is telling us the truth on this side of the Atlantic.

With warmest personal regards, I remain,

Fraternally,
Dr. H.W., Maryland

Dear Mr. Dietz,

...It's highly depressing how Americans merely repeat what the media spit out daily—I mean what's going on in the Middle East. The New Jersey fools are going buts with flag displays and yellow ribbon fever! Are people as gullible in West Virginia? Well, I'm glad I'm not in my teens or twenties anymore.

Take care and know that a man in New Jersey is on the side of Liberty Bell!

Your Pal,
D.T., New Jersey

Dear George,

Enclosed is $100. for my 1st class renewal and for a 3rd class subscription for a friend. I would also like a copy of The Anti-Humans; please keep the change for expenses.

I just received a copy of The Best of Attack and National Vanguard. If I had only known that these kinds of publications existed, my life would have been different. I knew from personal experience in Berkeley, California that the Jews were devious but I had no idea of the extent of their onslaught against Western Civilization.

Trying to get the average American to read and think is, of course, frustrating. Most are so overwhelmed by the massive amount of evidence they refuse to examine it because to do so would be to admit to themselves that they had been suckered for the better part of their lives.

Thus they prefer to remain cowards rather than face up to the situation we all find ourselves in via the Jews. The wonder is that there is any one around at all who is willing to continue to try—day in and day out—to bring knowledge and understanding to a nation of fools and cowards.

But if there weren't there would be no hope at all as opposed to probably very little. Thank you so much for your efforts.

As I mentioned previously, I have just moved to the Medford-Grants Pass area of south-western Oregon. This are is beautiful, people are pretty sharp and independent—many having fled the urban centers of California. Should you find time to come out for a visit, George, I should very much like to visit with you. I think you would like this area. It is growing moderately, but will probably never be crowded because it is so spread out. The countryside looks quite a bit like Bavaria.

Sincerely,
M.B., Oregon

Dear Mr. Dietz,

Over the years you found some of my letters to you of interest to the readers of Liberty Bell and published them, but at the bottom you put only my initials to protect me from being detected by the Kikes and their agents. This precaution is not necessary in my case. I have never in my life let the Kikes think of me as a friend but, on the contrary, let them know exactly what my feelings were. In the future let my name be known, let the Kikes have it on their roster, although I am quite sure it is already there. I enclose a cheque for the renewal of my subscription.

Yours truly,
Gheorge Scurtu, Florida

Dear George:

For the life of me, I cannot understand the concern of those shortsighted people who are constantly bemoaning the imminent demise of the White Race from planet Earth. In geologic terms, the loss will be meaningless. So we go the way of the dinosaur, so what? In time, an entirely new race will emerge that will be vastly superior to anything that exists today. They will be more skilled and better educated than the haphazard mass of humanity that is currently occupying space and consuming valuable resources without contributing anything in return. The anthropological record that our race once passed this way will be summed up by some future, man-like archaeologist with the following admonition to his post-moronic graduating class:

> So that, my dear children, was all that remained of our White ancestors. They represented the high-water mark of humankind during the mid-20th Century. But they were a biological anomaly. It was their misfortune to have been unable to compete in the very society they created, for in it, they sowed the seeds of their own destruction. They were overrefined, you see. They were too specialized to compete in the antipodal jungle they so willingly encouraged to develop in their midst. They called this practice, Civilized Behavior.

Now let this be my lesson to you. Should you ever hope to attain that highwater mark again, see to it that your progeny never drink Pepsi for breakfast, that they never wiggle to the soulful beat of Rap, that they never allow sexual deviates to mingle among them, and that they never, never succumb to the lure of the Holocaustorians who, with tearful mirth, will besmirch them with the fable of Liberty, Fraternity, Equality!, as they shackle them to the chains of economic servitude.

And alas, dear brothers and sisters, always stay with you own kind. Your forefather have spent the past 2,000 years in a careful selective breeding program to bring you back up the point of memorizing the alphabet. Most of you can now read Little Red Riding Hood and some of you have been able to master Nancy Drew novels. With luck, in another thousand years or so, you may be able to understand the writings of Professor Oliver, Nicholas Carter, and William G. Simpson. But you must be patient for now. Remember, Rome wasn't built in a day. With history to guide us, we shall never again make the same mistakes our ancient ancestors made during those fateful, waning years of the 20th Century.

Oh yes, there is one more thing I must tell you. Remember the Holocaustorians I mentioned a moment ago? Well, they had a very strange influence on our early White ancestors. They made them pig-headed and turned them into sheep, figuratively speaking of course. Yes I know that sounds strange, but it is true. They became a people who, under the total domination of these genetically flawed egocentrics, lost only their nerve, but their will to survive as well. Their loss could have been averted had they not been so pig-headed that it was impossible to reach them with any semblance of reason or logic.

Believe me, those pig-headed, sheep-like people were so intimidated by the blusterings of the Holocaustorians that they accepted Hell on Earth as they prayed fervently to escape it's reality for the solace of Eternal Life in the Hereafter. Not that many of them had ever thought much about the consequences of a life of eternity, mind you, but they were constantly making plans to go there rather than concern themselves with the affairs of the world into which they were born. They had this thing they called faith in the unknown you see, something recent history has taught us to be very wary of lest we again fall victim to the ensnarements of capricious men.

And now, my precious little ones, I must not risk taxing your young, developing minds any further. Just remember all that I have taught you about that ancient civilization and continue to learn from their mistakes. The year is now 3991 and the earth is turning green again. By year 4991, which is a mere 1,000 years from now, our racial future should be very bright indeed. With that, I will leave you. Tomorrow you will be entering a new phase of your development so, be all that you can be! Thank you.

So you see, George, not to worry. Time has a way of solving everything and geologic time, as you know, is virtually endless. The moral? People will refuse to learn, see or hear until the price of slavery become so high as to be unbearable. And that time is well nigh at hand!

By the way, enclosed is my annual subscription fee for Liberty Bell plus an order for another book or two. Gosh I'm so glad I learned to read before "they" took total control of our educational system.

Most sincerely yours,
Jess Malcolm, West Virginia

KEEP THE LIBERTY BELL RINGING!

Please remember: Our Fight is Your fight! Donate whatever you can spare on a regular—monthly or quarterly—basis. Whether it is $2., $5., $20., or $100. or more, rest assured it is needed here and will be used in our common struggle. If you are a businessman, postage stamps in any denomination are a legitimate business expense—and we need and use many of these here every month—and will be gratefully accepted as donations .

Your donations will help us spread the Message of Liberty and White Survival throughout the land, by making available additional copies of our printed material to fellow Whites who do not yet know what is in store for them.

Order our pamphlets, booklets, and, most importantly, our reprints of revealing articles which are ideally suited for mass distribution at reasonable cost. Order extra copies of Liberty Bell for distribution to your circle of friends, neighbors, and relatives, urging them to subscribe to our unique publication. Our bulk prices are shown on the inside front cover of every issue of Liberty Bell.

Pass along your copy of Liberty Bell, and copies of reprints you obtained from us, to friends and acquaintances who may be on our "wave length," and urge them to contact us for more of the same.

Carry on the fight to free our White people from the shackles of alien domination, even if you can only join our ranks in spirit. You can provide for this by bequest. The following are suggested forms of bequests which you may include in your Last Will and Testament:

1. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the sum of $ . . . . . for general purposes.

2. I bequeath to Mr. George P. Dietz, as Trustee for Liberty Bell Publications, P.O. Box 21, Reedy WV 25270 USA, the following described property . . . . . for general purposes.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congolds unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH—FREEDOM OF THOUGHT
FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavour to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of the people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

THE STAR IN BUSHY'S CROWN

The article entitled "The New World Order," which appeared in the June issue of Liberty Bell, was written before Lord Bushy's war on Iraq was terminated by an armistice, which in that article was mentioned only as a device that might possibly be used to induce the Moslem nations to overlook the Russian betrayal of Iraq by Gorbachev, who both failed to warn Saddam of the trap set for him by the Jews' American servants with their wonted treachery, and to order his military technicians in Iraq to give Saddam the effective support that he had doubtless been promised.[1]

The article pointed out that Bushy's War was certain to end in the triumph of the Jews' janissaries,[2] the British and Americans with a population of 310,000,000 and masters of the terrible technology of modern war, over 14,000,000 Semites without a technology of their own and armed with long obsolete weapons, was inevitable, and would be as glorious as the exploit of a team of tough football players who beat up a ten-year-old boy.

1. Such a use of the armistice may possibly be indicated by current conjectures (reported in the Spotlight, 18 March) that the armistice was so hastily ordered by Bush because the Soviets had threatened to intervene in his war and use nuclear weapons to prevent an occupation of Iraq. No one seems to know whether these rumors are being circulated in the Middle East, where they would have the desired effect. We may be sure they are false, because Bush must have concerted the operation against Iraq with his colleague, Gorbachev, before he set the trap for Saddam.

2. It must be remembered that the Janissaries were Aryan children requisitioned by the Turks from Christians under their dominion and enslaved. They were raised as Moslems and given a rigorous military training, becoming the Turks' élite and most formidable troops. In later centuries, the fighting slaves sometimes mutinied, but never all at the same time.

Not only were the Iraqis outnumbered twenty-two to one and so awkward and poorly equipped that our bellicose technology would have destroyed them, even if the two populations had been evenly matched, but a considerable part of Iraq's small army had to be used to contain the nation's domestic enemies, especially the Kurds, who, as I said, were only awaiting an opportunity to revolt again and "stab the Iraqis in the back."

The suddenly concluded armistice was unexpected and greatly embarrassed the jewspapers, which had been howling for the blood of Saddam and the Semites in Iraq. The armistice also astonished the American commander, General Schwarzkopf, who had been under the impression that the attack on Iraq was a legitimate war and should naturally end in occupation of the conquered nation.

The General, who showed himself a master of technological warfare, had as a professional military man endured the humiliation of being made to seem the subordinate of a mulatto, who had been installed as a figurehead to advertise the degradation of the American people, and who had not even the simplest military sense, having, at the very beginning of the invasion, blabbed over the radio and television the strategy that General Schwarzkopf had devised for the coming campaign, thus stupidly doing the work of a highly competent enemy spy. But when Bushy aborted the American campaign under the thin pretext that he was conciliating the "United Nations," which, as everyone knows, is just our rulers' substitute for a ventriloquist's dummy, the General, as an honorable soldier, could endure no more and made his astonishment and indignation so evident that it could not be concealed by the press.

A major purpose of the armistice soon became apparent: it was to enable Saddam to turn upon the Kurds and try to exterminate them in the part of Kūrdistān that was in Iraq. In April the press was filled with stories of the plight of the Kurds and the hordes of refugees who were desperately seeking asylum in Turkey and Iran. There were, as one would expect, lurid stories of atrocities and charges that Saddam was using chemical and biological weapons against the Kurds, in keeping with the lies about the military power of Iraq that had been earlier manufactured to prepare the American serfs for Bushy's attack on that country.

If chemical and biological weapons were ever in Iraq, they were, as Lawrence Patterson suggested in recent issues of his Criminal Politics, in the custody of Soviet technicians, who refused to use them against the forces of Gorby's partner, but may now be gladly using them to exterminate the Kurds in Iraq. The jewspapers, naturally, exploit the plight of the Kurds to vilify Saddam, but sedulously conceal the real reason for his attack on a fairly large part (15%?) of the population of Iraq.

It is almost admitted that the Kurds were incited to revolt by agents of Bushy's old command, the auxiliary of the Jews' Mossad that is called the Central Intelligence Agency and directly financed by their American serfs. The C.I.A. probably promised to send the Kurds massive aid and military supplies by air, and, of course, betrayed them with the treachery for which Americans have become infamous throughout the world.

What the professional liars of the press conceal from their dupes is the fact that the Kurds are not Semites, and between them and the Semites there has always existed the racial hatred that is inevitable when two different races come into close contact and neither is willing to do obeisance and humbly serve the other.

The Kurds are an ancient people, remarkable for both the tenacity with which they have maintained their racial identity, although they seem always to have been divided into small, independent tribes, and for their fierce devotion to personal freedom, which they have always prized as some Americans did for a time after they obtained it in 1783.

Twenty-four centuries ago, the Kurds were the Καρδοῦχοι, whom my older readers will remember having met in the pages of the Anabasis, in which there is no more exciting episode than the one in which the retreating Greeks make their way through mountains held by tribes whose love of independence has maintained them as an unsubdued enclave in the midst of the Persian Empire.

They are credited with much greater, almost incredible, antiquity, for they are generally and plausibly identified with the Gūtī (Babylonian, Kūrdu), who often descended from their mountains to despoil whatever neighboring kingdom gave them an opportunity for plunder. In Sumerian times, they even occupied Babylon and held it for twenty or more years. A contemporary inscription at Lagash, c. 2220 B.C., describes them as "the enemies of the gods" who "carried off the kingship of Sumer to the mountains." It may be only a coincidence that Professor John R. Baker, in his monumental treatise, Race (London, Oxford University Press, 1974), identifies some modern Kurds as the living persons whose features most resemble the Sumerians depicted in profile on many reliefs. This comparison is the more remarkable because Professor Baker seems not to have known of the exploits of the Gūtī mentioned above.[3]

The very ancient Gūtī are usually described as a Turanian people, and the assumption that they were the ancestors of the modern Kurds is probably the source of the repeated claim, perpetuated in some works of reference, that the Kurds are Turanians (akin to the Turks and Turcomans), all evidence to the contrary being explained as the result of a large infusion of Aryan blood, perhaps by the assimilation

3. He cites as his authority for the Sumerians the work of Ernest Chantre, who wrote before the more recent discovery of the inscription I quoted above and of the other evidence for the relations between the Gūtī and the Sumerians. He adds that "a wide variety of types is found among the Kurdish population. A considerable proportion of the Kurdish people are fair, with blue eyes. The coloring of the Sumerians does not appear to be known." Given the variety he mentions, he does not accept the classification of the Kurds as "Proto-Nordic."

of many Medes in the time of the Persian Empire.[4] The error is compounded by the fact that a considerable number of Kurds[5] in Iraq and Iran speak a peculiar language called Górání and some dialects of Kurdish (in the group of dialects called Kirmánjí or Kermánjí) contain a very considerable number of words that are evidently Ural-Altaic (i.e., derived from what is presumably the native language of the Turanian race), and which some enthusiastic linguists trace back to the Gūtī of Babylonian and Sumerian times.

I have not investigated the question, but I know of no valid evidence that would prove that the Gūtī were not always of the race that is identified as Aryan, which certainly long antedates the Aryan invasion and conquest of India. In any event, if the Kurds persisted as a nation since the third millennium B.C., that is one of the most amazing phenomena of human history.

Whether or not the Gūtī have almost incredibly survived as a people for five millennia, we may be certain that at least by the beginning of the Christian era the Kurds, then called Γορδυαῖοι,[6] were an Aryan people, since they were observed by the Greek travelers who were the sources of Strabo (XVI.747) and Ptolemy (Geographia, VI.2.5) and by them regarded as Medes.

4. Hence the error in my hastily written and too hastily condensed note 10 on p. 7 of the issue for October 1990, for which I apologize.

5. They consider themselves Kurds and are so considered by other Kurds, although, according to G. J. Edmonds (see note 8 infra), they are in some places considered inferior and almost serfs of the others, who claim a superior ancestry. I know of no report which would indicate whether or not they show a racial difference, i.e., whether or not any or many of them have the fair hair and blue eyes found in so many Kurds. It is not impossible, therefore, that they may be of predominantly Turanian stock. Incidentally, the Iraqis, who are called 'Arabs' in the press because they speak dialects of Arabic, are a Semitic people with some, probably small, percentage of Arab ancestry, but have a large infusion of Turanian blood, which, however, does not mitigate the enmity which they and the Turks feel for each other.

6. Cf. the elder Pliny, VI.15.44: "Carduchi quondam dicti, nunc Gordueni." A little later he notes the presence in a nearly adjacent territory of tribes called Anariaci ('not Aryans').

The modern Kurds are essentially an Aryan people, although there doubtless is a considerable admixture of Turanian blood and, if you extrapolate from the resemblance noted by Baker, you may romantically see in some Kurds a survival of the ancient Sumerians, whatever their race may have been.

H. B. Isherwood, an eminent ethnologist who can maintain an objectively scientific attitude since he enjoys freedom from academic constraints,[7] writes, in his Racial Contours (Times Press, Douglas, Isle of Man; 1965):

> The Kurds are a specific Aryan people frequently bearing characteristics strongly suggestive of Nordics. They are lithe and active, square-shouldered but rarely of unusual stature. Many are fair-haired, with light-coloured skins, blue or grey eyes, firm chins, and thin-lipped mouths. By inclination they are essentially pastoral and do not as a rule make good urban material. Their remote ancestors may have been families left behind by those first Aryans who migrated eastward to enter India in the second millennium B.C. .... In spite of all efforts to assimilate them, the Kurds doggedly manage to preserve their racial identity, their exclusiveness, and their dignity.

The Kurds, furthermore, speak an Indo-European language, roughly similar to Persian, but derived from the language of the ancient Medes, rather than from Old Persian.[8]

7. But not with impunity. You may remember that some years ago a pack of Sheenies, disguised as police officers and flourishing forged warrants, invaded Mr. Isherwood's home and plundered his files to destroy his accumulation of scientific data. The impersonation of police officers for criminal purposes is a very serious offense under British law, but the British, like the Americans, have learned that it would be dangerously impious to impede with human laws the activities of their god's Master Race.

8. On the language and the Kurds generally, see C. J. Edmonds, Kurds, Turks, and Arabs (London, Oxford University Press, 1957). The language of the Medes, classified as 'Northwestern Iranian,' and thus distinct from Old Persian, which was 'Southwestern Iranian,' has left only the most exiguous remains. Old Persian, the language of the Persian Kings from Cyrus to Darius III Codomannus, principally preserved in a series of famous inscriptions written in a syllabic alphabet adapted from cuneiform, is a syntactically and inflexionally sound language, readily learned by anyone who is proficient in Greek. It differs markedly from Avestan, the language of the extant Scriptures of the Zoroastrian religion, including the Gāthas, which appear to be the utterances of Zarathustra himself. Avestan, which was apparently written in its own alphabet, a precursor of the Pahlavi script, thus became the sacred language, and therefore Pahlavi and eventually modern Persian were derived from it, not from Old Persian. Unfortunately for students of religion (including Christianity, a Judaized derivative of Zoroastrianism), the chronological and geographical relation of Avestan to Old Persian is still problematic.

Given the partition of Kurdistan between four nations (Turkey, Iraq, Iran, and Soviet Azerbaijan), it is not remarkable that the Kurdish language now has twelve or more dialects, which differ from one another even more than the epichoric dialects of ancient Greek differed from the Attic you learned in school.

The most memorable appearance of Kurds in history is also an example of the irony of human history. The Crusaders conquered Palestine and established the Kingdom of Jerusalem through Aryan valor, and they lost it through their Christian superstitions.[9] The seeds of decay were present from the first, but the first serious threat to the Kingdom of Jerusalem, and the beginning of its long agony, was administered by the famous Saladin, whose real name in Arabic was Yúsuf ibn-Ayyúb. Although the European Kingdom managed to retain a foothold in Palestine for another century, Saladin's capture of Jerusalem in 1187 was the beginning of the end.

A nephew of a warrior and general who became the grand vizir of Nur ad-Din, Saladin succeeded his uncle, and recovered Egypt, suppressing the heretical caliphate of the Fatimids and thus reuniting Egypt with Syria to form a strong Moslem state. On the death of Nur ad-Din, Saladin took over, and, disdaining the title of Caliph, proclaimed himself Sultan, and began a campaign against the Europeans. He was a cultivated man, learned in Arabic literature, as well as an able commander, and he is remembered in history, as well as celebrated in Sir Walter Scott's Talisman and many another work of Nineteenth-Century fiction, for the most un-Semitic qualities of chivalry and generosity that won him the respect of his great antagonist in the Fourth Crusade, Richard Cœur de Lion. He was a Moslem and almost everyone who is content with the superficial history once taught in high schools thinks of him as a Semite. He was a Kurd and surrounded himself with a contingent of fellow Kurds for both military and administrative tasks. So his success against the Crusaders' kingdom was just another example of a very common phenomenon in history: Aryans defeated by Aryans to the profit of an enemy race.

The career of Saladin in the Twelfth Century lends some plausibility to the Kurdish tradition that in the sixth century B.C., a Kurd, Roham, son of a Kurd whose historicity is guaranteed by an extant inscription, similarly attained power and became the King of Babylon known as Nebuchadnezzar and celebrated in the Christians' story-book for his earnest efforts to solve the Jewish problem.

There is no evidence to validate the tradition as historical, but the significant fact is that the Aryan Kurds, instead of groveling in an agony of guilt and remorse because a member of their race had actually harmed some of Yahweh's Yids, are proud of their Nebuchadnezzar. A well-trained American boob will immediately conclude that the Kurds are so wicked that they deserve to be exterminated.

The Kurds occupy a country that is known as Kūrdistān, although in recent centuries it has always been partitioned and under alien rule. Over the centuries, the Kurds have made very many efforts to attain independence and have a country of their own, but they are an essentially pastoral people, and while they have been able precariously to maintain themselves in their mountains, they have never been numerous enough to reclaim their valleys by defeating the often combined power of the Turks and Persians, who, although natural enemies, have always agreed on the need to prevent the independence of Kurdistan.

The Kurds once thought they had succeeded. As we all know, the Jews, in preparation for the First World War, installed in the White House a crackpot shyster named Woodrow Wilson, whose probably sincere gabble about the "self-determination of nations" served as a pretext for dismembering the Austro-Hungarian Empire and creating such foci of future trouble as Jugo-Slavia, which was certain to be as peaceful as a sack enclosing two or three tom cats. In conformity with Wilson's idiotic ideals, the Treaty of Sèvres in 1922, which dismembered the Turkish Empire to create such states as Iraq, Lebanon, Jordan, and Palestine, as guarantees of future trouble, recognized the independence of Kurdistan, but the Turkish Sultan, who had accepted the treaty and what amounted to European dominance, was overthrown by a revolution led by Kemel Ataturk, who was given decisive support by the Jews, including their newly acquired colony, the former Russian Empire.

Kemel proceeded to massacre the Greeks who resided in territory he had usurped in open violation of the Treaty—that wasn't 'genocide,' of course, because Greeks aren't sacred Sheenies—and embarked on a bloody repression and subjugation of the Kurds. Don't have a fit of moral indignation: the Turks, like all viable nations, regarded only their own interests. The decadent Europeans, their minds paralysed by Jewish hokum and too pavid to defend their own interests, eventually abrogated the Treaty of Sèvres and accepted the Treaty of Lausanne (1923), content with having kept from the Turks such sites of future trouble as Iraq, Palestine, etc.[10]

10. In 1919-1923, the British did make an effort to protect the Kurds. Mr. Edwards, who was one of the British officials who, using the British army and air force, expelled the Turks from Mosul (a few miles across the Tigris from the ruins of Nineveh) and the region about it, describes (op. cit.) his part in the negotiations and military operations. He was principally charged with visiting and guiding the very numerous tribes, somewhat similar to Scottish clans, into which all the Kurds were then, and many still are, divided. He gives a very full account of the almost bewildering multiplicity of tribes, who were then almost all in rural villages (shunning towns such as Mosul), and, since he was a cultivated man, he studied the antiquities of the region and added to what was known of the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian occupation of parts of Kurdistan. The British at least did make certain that the large part of Kurdistan under their control was incorporated into Iraq, which promised the Kurds a kind of 'home rule,' rather than given to Turkey, which would have proceeded to liquidate them.

The Kurds frequently rebelled—in 1923, 1925, 1944, several times in the 1960s, and in 1974—but lacking modern weapons and other equipment, such as railroads and real highways, and subject to three or four nations (Turkey, Iraq, Iran, and the Soviets), they were always defeated.

The Kurds in Persian territory have usually been tolerated and given a degree of local autonomy, although they are Sunnis and so damnable heretics in the eyes of the Shí'ites, who have always dominated Iran and recently, under the late Khomeini, attained total control of the nation.[11] In Turkish territory, the Kurds are grudgingly tolerated so long as they are submissive to the Turkish government, and violently repressed whenever they show symptoms of allegiance to their own nation. In Iraq, the inevitable hostility between two incompatible races has always produced abrasive friction.

In 1974, Saddam,[12] then the darling of the Americans, who were using him to impoverish and wreck Iran, loosed a good part of his army against the Kurds in Iraq, and was soon reported to be using poison gas and other chemical weapons (supplied by the Soviets) to slaughter them. Whether or not the reports in the press were true, they were believed by Americans, a very few of whom were sufficiently interested to say "he really hadn't oughter" before forgetting about it.

When Bushy's sudden armistice released what was left of his army from other duties, Saddam began systematically to exterminate the Kurds with Semitic enthusiasm, with or without chemical and biological weapons, and with or without the atrocious barbarism also reported in the press.[13]

11. The religious difference may be one reason why Iran now refuses to admit to its territory the million Kurdish refugees, who, according to reports in the press, are now in improvised camps on the Iran border, in which they are said to be dying of wounds, privation, and disease at the rate of two thousand a day.

12. It is best always to refer to this individual as Saddam tout court, since his claim to the historic name of Hussein is, at least, doubtful.

13. One instance, reported in the Spotlight (15 April) and, I am told, the Washington Times, is of some interest. The Iraqi soldiers are said to fire and advance behind a shielding screen of their own women, relying on the racial peculiarity of Aryans, which makes them unwilling to kill females. This device, which Winston Churchill, according to the Spotlight, identified as a tactic used by Communists everywhere, reminds one that when the Soviets' plan to launch a surprise attack on Germany was forestalled by Hitler, the Soviets protected their tanks and infantry with a screen of women, whom the Germans, being Aryans, could not bring themselves to slaughter. Such use of females is natural to Semites and in keeping with their Judaic religion, since strictly fundamentalist Moslems regard women as animals whose souls will be dissipated at death; in Heaven, they will be replaced by much improved models, specially created by Yahweh-Allah for the eternal delight of True Believers.

Saddam's cannon, machine guns, bombers, and armored helicopters gave him a superiority over the Kurds that was comparable to the Americans' enormous superiority over the Iraqis. The Kurds, whose mountains had been leveled by air power, and who had no weapons except a few ordinary and usually old rifles and revolvers, had no chance to save themselves, except by flight.

Toward the middle of April, the press reported that the Kurds[14] in the refugee camps on the Turkish border were dying from wounds, privation, and disease at the rate of one thousand per diem, but the State Department soothingly reduced that figure to 510. The "United Nation's" High Commissioner for Refugees officially reported that Kurds in the camps on the border of Iran were dying at the rate of two thousand a day.

Bushy's minions, with the War Lord's approval, opined that it would be "improper" to intervene in "Iraq's internal affairs"—after we had devastated many cities and ruthlessly slain thousands of civilians in that unhappy country. Saddam, once again America's darling, probably having promised henceforth to revere Sheenies,[15] was not to be restrained from butchering the Kurds and Semitic Shí'ites, whom his C.I.A.

14. Some liepapers exposed themselves by suppressing the national designation and calling the refugees "Iraqis." The pimps of the press have become over-confident and reckless.

15. The purpose and nature of the American victory is well illustrated by the conduct of the people of "liberated" Kuwait, who, according to Amnesty International, are joyfully torturing and murdering their fellow Semites, the Palestinians who had taken refuge in the Emirate. Whether the Jews give their dogs a few shekels for their good work is unknown.

had incited to revolt with lavish promises of American support and equipment: the fools should have known better than to trust Americans.

Near the end of the month, however, Bushy, perhaps to please some performers in the comedy called "United Nations," reluctantly agreed to send an American force of ten thousand troops into the part of Kurdistan that is in Iraq to take control of the region and invite the surviving Kurds to return to their devastated or annihilated homes. It remains to be seen whether the refugees are so destitute, desperate, and foolish that they will again trust Americans, return to their country, and await a new massacre after the Americans withdraw.

It is worthy of note that near the end of April, according to a friend who watches television, a woman reporter for the Columbia Broadcasting System visited the camps of the refugee Kurds and remarked with astonishment that so many of them had fair hair and blue eyes. She was at once denounced for "racism"—doubtless by the little boobies whose spongy minds are stuffed with 'One World' pus in the schools and colleges that American tax-payers suicidally finance to hasten the liquidation of their own race.

By the first of May it was obvious that Lord Bushy's principal goal had been triumphantly attained: the whole world was warned that any insubordination to Yahweh's Holy Race would be frightfully punished by the Jews' American janissaries with their truly terrible technological weapons. It seems likely that the Americans will withdraw and hand the Islamic nations over to their Judaeo-Communist confederates, either before or after the economic and social collapse and prostration of the United States has been consummated.

John de Courcy's very expensive Special Office Brief (Dublin, Ireland)[16] has always held to the theory that the Jews have lost control of Russia, and accordingly, in an undated photocopy sent to me, positively declares that Gorbachev's strategy, now that Bushy has made Americans and Europeans vehemently and irreconcilably hated by all Moslems, is to await the withdrawal of Bushy's bully boys from the Middle East and then to incite the Jews in Israel to launch an attack on some Islamic state, probably within the next three years. Russia will at last come to the assistance of the Moslems, and at a time when the Americans and Europeans will not be able to go to the rescue of the Holy Land and can only "dither," and thus Russia will acquire an absolute "hegemony over the Middle East."

Ivor Benson is an astute observer who believes that in all countries the masses, whatever their race, need superstitions about the supernatural, because religion provides a "value system" that is "intimately concerned with what human beings want and need for their fulfillment." He is therefore one of the very few writers who regard the revival of Islamic faith as a major force that will shape the future. Of the power of that faith—and remember that any faith must be fanatical to be efficacious—we had a recent demonstration in Khomeini's revolution in Iran, and it is a reasonable inference from Mr. Benson's discussion that the Jews' Washington-Moscow axis subsidized and equipped Saddam in his war against Iran to negate and nullify the force of that religious revival.[17]

In an article in the April issue of John Tyndall's Spearhead, Mr. Benson does suggest that one reason for salvaging Saddam and his secular "democratic" political party was to abort a revolution that would have transferred the government of Iraq to a religious régime, which, of course, like all theocracies, would necessarily be frankly and inflexibly authoritarian and would strive to check moral decline and the corruption that is requisite for financial plundering by the international usurers.

In his article Mr. Benson reaffirms his belief that we are now witnessing in the revival of Mohammedan fundamentalism in all Islamic countries the emergence of a great spiritual power, necessarily anti-Western, which will frustrate the establishment of the New World Order by our enemies. And he believes that Bushy's war has, ironically enough, contributed to the success of the spiritual movement it was planned to avert.

17. I know of no reliable information about the religious consequences of Iran's great losses and defeat in that war.

Mr. Benson cites evidence of the extent to which Americans and their British allies have made themselves hated even in countries remote from the Persian Gulf. In Pakistan, no American dared venture out on the streets without armed protection. In India, although Hinduism is bitterly antagonistic to Islam, the diplomats in the American Embassy, astounded by the reaction of the populace, hurriedly sent their wives and families and all non-essential employees to places of safety, while the British Embassy fortified its compound with sandbags and "razor wire."

Everyone knows, of course, that our race made itself contemptible in the eyes of Orientals when it retreated from its colonial possessions and treated other races as theoretically equal and in practice superior. Mr. Benson points out that in Oriental lands Bushy has now made the Americans and British the objects, not of mere contempt, but of a passionate detestation that will eliminate the last vestiges of respect for nations of our race and open the way for a great spiritual revival of non-Aryan religions.

That the religious revival of Islam, which will include hatred of our race, of our technology, and of our hypocritical "democracy," will arouse fanatical faith and violent emotions may be taken for granted. Whether it will have the drastic effect predicted by Mr. Benson is not certain. There are two impediments:

(1) Islam is split into two reciprocally antagonistic religions, the "orthodox" Sunnis and the Shí'a,[18] between which there can be no doctrinal compromise. Fundamentalism will necessarily exacerbate that antagonism, for in Islam, if it is a viable religion, there can be no analogue to the 'ecumenism' now popular among Christians, which is based on the perception that all religions are equally spurious and equally useful for bamboozling gullible votaries. It is only normal that the revival of Christian fundamentalism in the United States has revived and intensified the hostility between Protestant and Catholic fundamentalists. From the Protestants, for example, one hears with increasing frequency the affirmation that Catholicism is the work of the Antichrist. In Islam fundamentalist Sunnis must regard the Shí'a as the work of Iblis, and fundamentalist Shí'ites must regard the Sunnis as enemies of True Religion.

18. On the origin and basic doctrine of the Shí'a ('the Party [of Alí]'), see Liberty Bell, April 1986, pp. 11-15.

This, it seems to me, will present almost insuperable difficulties in most Islamic countries. Iraq, for example, is, like the United States, a typical "democracy," which means, of course, that the entire population is kept under rigorous control by the gang that has achieved political power and regards religion as only a device for manipulating boobs.[19] No doubt many Iraqis, including Saddam's followers, are nominally Moslem, just as many Americans let themselves be classified as Christians, although they regard religion as irrelevant to quotidian life, unless it provides opportunities for profit. I know of no way to estimate the number of such persons in Iraq, but we may assume that all sects are equally affected.

According to the available statistics, the entire population of Iraq is Moslem, with the exception of some small but troublesome Christian enclaves, chiefly Maronite[20] and Nestorian. Of the 19. One thinks of Bushy's loud affirmations that this is a Christian country, so that atheists should have no right to be considered citizens. On the histrionic lips of a former director of the C.I.A. and a zealous satellite of the Jews, such statements can only excite cynical laughter.

20. The Maronite Church is a sect of Christian Semites who are survivors of what was the established Byzantine Church until the Emperor Constantine IV, having made a deal with the Papacy in Rome with a view to uniting Christians against the Mohammedans, convened the Council of Constantinople in 680 to condemn as heresy the bizarre Monothelite theology which had theretofore been the official doctrine of the Byzantine Church. The Maronites refused to do a somersault and persisted in maintaining the theological fantasies that the Council repudiated, becoming an independent and sometimes persecuted church of their own, under the direction of pontifex maximus called the Patriarch of Antioch. In the last century they made a deal with the Pope and are officially a part of the Roman Church, although they retain their own priests, who are almost all married and beget children, and their own peculiar ritual in their dialect of Syriac. The Maronites now reside total population, 35% (including the Kurds) are listed as Sunnis, while 60% belong to the Shí'a.[21] Iraq is therefore unlike Iran, in which Khomeini could appeal to a population that was 97% Shí'ite.

If Islamic fundamentalists gain control of Iraq, one of the two great sects will have to intimidate or suppress the other. The resulting régime, it seems to me, will be necessarily unstable and therefore weak, and will furthermore encounter the bitter hostility of one or the other Islamic nation on its borders, Saudi Arabia[22] or Iran..

(2) Semites can resist Aryan nations only by using Occidental technology, from which they are temperamentally averse, and which they would have to buy from the hated Aryans and import. They will have no chance whatever of matching the military technology of the Jews' janissaries, which, as Mr. Benson admits, Bushy has now proved to be irresistible. After the easy and almost effortless defeat of Iraq by the Americans, who demonstrated their determination to terrorize and, if necessary, destroy any nation that arouses the displeasure of their masters, there is no reasonable hope for effective Moslem resistance to the Jews' World Order.

chiefly in Lebanon, and since the Jews are keeping that hapless land in bloody turmoil, many of them migrate to the country that belonged to the American boobs until they gave it away. It is noteworthy that the Religious Editor of Time, Michael P. Harris, who recently died of "AIDS" at the age of 46, was a Maronite. It follows, therefore, that although he used an Aryan name, he was a Semite. I do not know whether he was born in Lebanon or was born after his parents had migrated to the great Land of Boobery.

21. Do not overlook the obvious implication that the majority of Iraqis should have sympathized with Khomeini and Iran in the recent war, and have regarded Saddam as evil. If they did, Saddam's agencies of oppression must have been as effective as the means employed by the Jews to suppress significant dissent in this country.

22. Saudi Arabia, the Holy Land of Islam, is totally Sunni. The small band of Shí'ites who rioted in Mecca in 1979 were chiefly foreigners and are generally supposed, no doubt correctly, to have been hired by the C.I.A.

From this dilemma Mr. Benson escapes by assuming that non-violent, presumably spiritual, opposition can have a decisive effect: "Now that hi-tech violence has demonstrated its irresistibility, the great struggle will shift more decisively onto the battleground of the mind [his emphasis], with governments shaken and scared by non-violent mass-demonstrations like that of the 100,000 [as reported by the jewspapers] who swarmed into Red Square last month to protest against the policies of President Gorbachev."

I have my doubts. For one thing, you will note that Gorbachev is still in power and will remain in power so long as he has the support of the Army; for another, I am confident that the chattering of a single machine-gun would have sufficed to clear Red Square in short order—except, of course, for the bodies of demonstrators who were trampled to death by their panic-stricken fellows.

You must also remember that Bushy's World Order, as I indicated in my earlier article, contemplates rigorous and bloody repression of its victims for the spiritual satisfaction derived from torture and slaughter. It is essentially based on the Biblical doctrine of ḤRM, familiar to all Christians from numerous passages in their Holy Book and presumably approved by them, if they read it while awake. It is, briefly, the Jewish doctrine that holiness is exercised by the wholesale massacre of captive and helpless enemies (i.e., goyim), men, women, children, and even their domestic animals. And it is noteworthy that an accomplished and adroit scholar, Philip D. Stern, has tried to mitigate the revolting savagery of that doctrine of Jewish piety in his recent book, The Biblical Ḥerem (Brown University Press; available from Professional Book Distributors, 1650 Bluegrass Lakes Parkway, Alpharetta, Georgia (30201); $63.45 postpaid). Dr. Stern argues that the blood-thirsty doctrine was "mystical," because the Jews felt a religious obligation to massacre the captive*goyim*, who represented a "chaos"[!] that would disturb the World Order ordained by Yahweh.

Some unusually sensitive and compassionate Americans now feel a kind of condescending pity for the poor Kurds, who are really their victims, for they, by their arrant folly for more than a century, reduced themselves to the servitude that enabled Bushy to command them to wage and finance the war by which he pleased the Masters of the World. The Americans are cheerfully and thoughtlessly unaware that they are destined to suffer as did the Kurds—and suffer even more atrociously—when the New World Order, with its pious doctrine of HRM has been securely established, after they have been pauperized and reduced to penury by the coming economic collapse, and terrorized and murdered by the racial enemies whom they now cherish and who are even now threatening to make what we did to Iraq seem trivial in comparison with what they will do to the White swine, if those self-degraded creatures fail to provide them with everything they have a whim to want.

Whether Bushy will have the pleasure of presiding over our ruin is uncertain, even unlikely. It would be rushing things to complete the ruin by 1992, and a second term for Bushy probably could not be arranged by his masters. Some observers believe that the scenario for this country includes the proximate disappearance of Bushy, either through a resignation forced by sensational disclosure of some of the innumerable scandals thus far kept under cover or by assassination in a hospital or elsewhere. He would thus be succeeded by Quayle, who would appoint as Vice President the nigger half-breed "Chief of Staff" to whom the liepapers can attribute the "glorious" victory over Iraq. Quayle can then be expunged or directed to make the nigger his successor in 1992.

If that happens, many American half-wits will be pleased and feel righteous—until acute physical suffering reminds them of the doom they brought upon themselves.

SCALPING THE UNWARY

Jones-Cresson forged the "Holy Oak Pendant" to make himself prominent.[1] I do not know whether he also had a desire to exalt the aborigines.

Today, of course, hoaxes to exalt primitive races and denigrate Aryans and their civilization are a sure path to eminence and emoluments.

Of the concerted campaign to degrade our race and induce masochistic insanity in our people, no one can have remained ignorant after the United States Navy, once a service with high traditions of patriotism and personal honor, so prostituted itself that it buried in Arlington with highest military honors the corpse of a nigger whom it had the effrontery to call the "co-discoverer of the North Pole."

That was enough for the gangsters in the "education" racket, and, according to letters from parents that are sometimes published in the press, children who are sent to the public boob-hatcheries to have their minds crippled are now not even told that Commodore (later Admiral) Peary had gone along to black the nigger's boots and keep his clothes in order.

American Indians, as the aborigines of the Western Hemisphere are now called,[2] are naturally exploited in the campaign of mental sabotage, but imaginative exaltation of them is much older than the present lying about niggers and has a quite different tradition.

It goes back to the myth of the Noble Savage, which was formulated by a Swiss crackpot named Rousseau, who, perhaps at the suggestion of Diderot, put together antecedent tendencies in a rhetorical diatribe that fascinated sciolistic minds.

1. See Liberty Bell, March 1991, pp. 16-18.

2. Columbus's geographical error has embarrassed writers of English and other modern languages for centuries. The term 'Indian' should, of course, refer only to India. One is tempted to accept the improper and disagreeable neologism 'Amerind,' which was coined some decades ago and is used by some anthropologists. It would at least avoid ambiguity and misleading connotations. The aborigines (i.e., earliest inhabitants of the Western Hemisphere) were all Mongoloid, but, at least when

Rousseau did have one valid point: as is now obvious, scientific knowledge and technical ability do not in themselves ameliorate either personal or social morality. From this he leaped to the absurd claim that knowledge destroys morality and that ignorant savages are therefore superior to civilized men. The principal factors which made this notion acceptable to light-headed contemporaries were: (1) A residue of the Mediaeval Church's perception that knowledge diminishes or destroys faith in Christian fictions, which were said to be the basis and only source of morality. (2) The ancient traditions of Saturnia regna and a Golden Age when life was uncomplicated by the burden of civilization. On these, see the two volumes by Arthur Lovejoy and George Boas, Primitivism and Related Ideas (Baltimore, Johns Hopkins Press, 1935, 1948). (3) The exploration of remote and newly discovered lands in the Sixteenth to Eighteenth Centuries, and the mistakes, exaggerations, and fantasies of early travellers; for a summary account, see Percy G. Adams, Travellers and Travel Liars, 1660-1800 (New York, Dover, 1982). (4) Fiction disguised as reports of newly discovered lands almost invariably portrayed virtuous natives uncorrupted by civilization. (5) Imaginary discoveries of newfound lands provided a convenient setting for political essays about improved or perfect societies, such as More's Utopia and Bacon's New Atlantis, but you should include in this category the hundreds that are now forgotten, e.g., La terre australe inconnue, by Gabriel de Foigny (1676; often reprinted), who found in place of Australia an island where all inhabitants were content and happy because they were hermaphrodites and hence sexually equal. (6) In the Eighteenth Century there was a veritable deluge of romances and novels about remote lands; some exalted the supposed wisdom of the first observed, differed very markedly from Asian Mongoloids, and furthermore exhibited ethnic diversity among themselves. A recent study to determine the degree of racial homogeneity by mitochondrial heredity found that all tribes of aborigines had a common origin; another study, using the same technique, found there had been five ethnically distinct immigrations.

uniformly virtuous inhabitants; and others satirized contemporary society by viewing it through the eyes of a virtuous alien (e.g., Montesquieu's Lettres persanes).

Rousseau's animosity toward civilization fueled a vast literature. A good specimen is Chateaubriand, one of the great masters of French prose with poetic adornments, a supreme egotist, audacious liar,[3] and Christian apologist. In his long diatribe, Le génie du christianisme (1802), he imagined noble savages further ennobled by Christianity. One detached section of this, Atala, was commonly read in high schools when I was a boy. His "prose epic," Les Natchez, celebrating Indians he never saw in a part of America (Louisiana) he never visited, was once widely read; I got through it, but that took determination and fortitude.

The attitudes of the first Anglo-Saxons who colonized this continent are conveniently and aptly illustrated by two English clergymen who visited what is now New England in the Seventeenth Century and mentioned the aborigines in the first respectable Latin verse written in our territory.[4] One wanted to make the Indians just like Englishmen by dosing them with Jesus-juice and giving them our technology; the other had the common sense to see that the regions our people would colonize and inhabit must be cleared of savages.

The early colonists had to occupy and appropriate for their settlement some part of a wilderness that was claimed by some Indian tribe or over which two tribes were fighting. What happened to Sir Walter Raleigh's ill-fated colony is still in dispute, but it is obvious that the unfortunate White men and women were either exterminated by aborigines or genetically absorbed by them, thus providing White genes for, e.g., the Cherokee.

3. His Voyage en Amérique recounts travels that could have been made only by an angel, whose wings would presumably enable him to flit rapidly from place to place. Chateaubriand probably never saw an Indian, except tame specimens in the civilized part of North America. He concocted his travels from books by Americans, now readily identified, appropriating to himself their observations and experiences, revised to suit his taste or his rhetoric.

4. Cf. Liberty Bell, July 1989, pp. 29 f.

The settlers at Jamestown necessarily came into conflict with the aborigines, and almost succumbed to them, but were saved by the prudence of the famous John Smith and the enterprise of John Rolfe, who married the celebrated Pocahontas, daughter of the chief of the Powhatans, a 'confederation' formed by the Algonquin tribe that had beaten into submission the neighboring tribes.

Pocahontas was an intelligent and perhaps winsome young squaw, who readily adapted herself to the religion and manners of a society she cannot have really understood, and when her husband took her to England, she was the social sensation of the year. She was described as a "princess," daughter of a "king," and she was the heroine of a romantic story that was told and retold by John Smith, and which need not have been wholly fictitious. Before her premature death in England, she gave birth to a half-breed son, who grew up and became prosperous in Virginia, and whom some members of the First Families, including the eminent John Randolph,[5] were proud to number among their ancestors, thus inaugurating a curious snobbism that claimed distinction from a real or imaginary descent from an aboriginal "chief" or "princess"—never, of course, from one of the common herd of savages. This induced an odd ambivalence in attitude toward the aborigines and encouraged the proliferation of imagined or embellished tales about noble savages that would have gladdened the deformed mind of Jean Jacques Rousseau and comparable mattoids.

The aborigines could be brave and exhibit an almost heroic superiority to pain and hardship, and that encouraged sentimentalists to forget that they were also cowardly and treacherous, filthy and squalid, innately cruel and savage,

5. Randolph deserves great credit for having done his best to arrest the decline of the American Republic. A good study of his political principles, only slightly distorted by an attempt to read into Randolph the author's own predilections, is Russell Kirk's John Randolph of Roanoke (Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1978), which includes copious selections from Randolph's speeches and letters. Randolph's last years were embittered by the erosion of his country by "democracy," and that doubtless explains some inconsistency in his conduct and in the provisions of his will.

and incapable of the discipline that makes civilization possible. And deliberate disregard of their savagery was encouraged by the Christian hallucination about "conversion" and the efficacy of holy water in transforming hereditary character.

Even John Smith in his popular book had promoted colonization of Virginia by suggesting that miracles could be wrought by teaching the savages the Christian myths. And there were innumerable efforts to provide the Indians with an education for which they were innately unsuited, such as the college that bears the name of Lord Jeffrey Amherst, who, according to the ditty sung by its undergraduates, set out "to civilize the In-di-an, | with a Bible and a gun, | and five hundred gallons | of good New England rum." The uniform failure of these efforts[6] did not even dent the resolute incomprehension of persons who blindly refused to perpend even the indubitable fact that the aborigines were physiologically incapable of taking rum as White men can and normally do. Even at that early date, the Christian hokum about "all mankind" obfuscated biological facts.

FABULOUS FICTION

The first readable American novelist, Charles Brockden Brown (1771-1810), belonged to a generation that retained some vivid recollection of the savages, and the Indians that appear in his novels are described realistically.[7] The next generation of American literati lived along the Atlantic seaboard, many in Boston and New York, and saw only trained Indians exhibited by various promoters, unless, perhaps, they went sightseeing to a reservation in which subjugated and tamed Indians were corralled. So far as I can recall at the moment, none of them ever ventured to the western frontier,

6. A few Indians were trained to serve as showpieces when taken to Europe and exhibited to help wheedle money from uncritical 'philanthropists.'

7. His Edgar Huntley (1799), considered by many his best work, was handsomely reprinted, with an introduction by Professor D. L. Clark (New York, Macmillan, 1928). Wieland and Arthur Mervyn, the only two of his other novels that I have read, were reprinted in the late 1850s, and so, no doubt, were his other novels (Ormond, Clara Howard, and Jane Talbot—the last two should particularly interest literate feminists today).

where normal Indians could be observed. Most of them, furthermore, had minds filled with Christian fustian, Rousseau's rant, and romantic sentimentality.

Imagined Indians provided an inexhaustible subject for the ingenuity of writers who were manufacturing fiction for sale to persons who craved emotional entertainment and sentimental titillation.

Perhaps the most influential of these writers was James Fenimore Cooper (1789-1851), whose thirty-five or forty novels, which recounted implausible events in a turgid and pompous style that Mark Twain justly ridiculed,[8] were inexplicably popular. The Last of the Mohicans (1826), generally accounted his best work, was one in a series of tales that portrayed imaginary Indians. I read a number of those books when I was in high school, and I do not now recall which one I threw across the room when I was assured that two beauteous White girls, taken captive by savages, had been held prisoner for months in an Indian camp "without offense to their delicacy." That one detail, however, will suffice to show how absurdly mendacious were Cooper's tales about Indians, often enhanced by the appearance of an impossible frontiersman, a white prig who boasts he has never killed an Indian, although he kills deer, who are better entitled than savages to consideration as "God's creatures."

Cooper and his many imitators made the Indians seem romantic, and Aryan composers turned out sentimental songs and tunes they entitled "Indian Love Song" or something similar. The music, usually pathetic and sometimes lachrymose, was, of course, our racial music, which no savage could have understood or appreciated, much less composed. In various parts of the country suitable precipices were called "Lovers' Leap" and tales of star-crossed lovers were devised to match the name. (At the foot of one such precipice a number of skeletons were exhumed, all of males who had been killed with tomahawks or arrows.) And sentimental women wept over the spurious legends.

8. See his essay, "Fenimore Cooper's Literary Offenses," which is usually reprinted from the North American Review, in which it was first published. A few pages that were omitted from the magazine were found and edited by Bernard De Voto and included the collection, Letters from Earth, which was finally published by Harpers in 1962.

Imaginary Indians became fashionable. Merely typical of the vogue was George Lippard, a now forgotten author, once famous for his novel, The Quaker City, a Gothic romance about Philadelphia (!) in which he tried to surpass "Monk" Lewis and Mrs. Radcliff in accumulating supernatural horrors. When he was married, c. 1840, he dressed as an Indian warrior and was wedded to his presumably admiring bride in a nocturnal ceremony by moonlight amid the unspoiled nature of a romantic glade on the banks of the Wissahickon. Whether the bride's dress was consistent with the groom's costume is not recorded.

The greatest damage, however, was done by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, who published his Hiawatha in 1855, a long poem in which he sought to imitate the primitive vigor of "Ossian" in a novel meter, trochaic tetrameter, and which powerfully appealed to our race's love of undefiled nature and the sentimental primitivism that often goes with it.

> Ye who love the haunts of Nature,
> Love the sunshine of the meadow,
> Love the shadow of the forest,
> Love the wind among the branches,
> And the rain-shower and the snow-storm,
> And the rushing of great rivers
> Through their palisades of pine-trees.
> And the thunder in the mountains,
> Whose innumerable echoes
> Flap like eagles in their eyries;—
> Listen to these wild traditions,
> To this Song of Hiawatha!

The poem became immediately and immensely popular, eclipsing even Longfellow's finely-wrought and beautiful narrative, Evangeline, in stately dactylic hexameters that are a remarkable achievement in English verse. The artfully primitive structure of Hiawatha was childlike in its simplicity, and the narrative poem was recognized as especially suited to children. It is likely that during the remaining decades of the Nineteenth Century Hiawatha was read to, or read by, almost every American child who grew up in a literate home. And it inevitably formed their conception of the nature and life of the aborigines.

It must be clearly understood that such was not Longfellow's intention. He himself said that his poem was an "Indian Edda," i.e., as mythical and remote from quotidian reality as the compilation of Norse myths in the Poetic Edda.[9] The hero of his poem, he said, was "a kind of American Prometheus," a superhuman benefactor of his race.

He incorporated in his narrative Indian legends that had been elaborated by Henry Rowe Schoolcraft from tales told him by his half-White, half-Ojibwa wife, who had received some education and who helped him in his business relations with the Indians as a trader and Federal agent, 1822-1841.

The Song of Hiawatha was admired as a technical achievement by critics, including Bayard Taylor, who was a poet of distinction in his own right as well as the translator of Goethe's Faust. One of his comments on the poem contains a prophecy that was entirely reasonable when he wrote, which I have italicized here: "Hiawatha will be parodied, perhaps ridiculed, in many quarters, but it will live after the Indian race has vanished from our Continent." He could not foresee the present, when the Indians are more numerous than they were before our race came to North America.

When the savages had been subdued and slain or expelled, the inhabitants of the regions east of the Appalachians, living in civilized security and remote from the perils and not infrequent massacres of the frontier, began to develop an odd sense of gratuitous guilt for having taken from

9. He must have had in mind the Suomi (Finnish) analogue of the Elder Edda, the Kalevala, which was systematized by its editor, Lönnrot, in trochaic tetrameters, a meter that was reproduced in the English translation that was Longfellow's model. Longfellow probably referred to the Norse poem because it was better known than the recently published Kalevala, although less similar to his own work, in which he created a new and American mythology.

the savages the lands they now enjoyed. This perverse sentiment is the more remarkable since they all professed to believe the tales in the Jew-Book about the ruthless invasion of Palestine and slaughter of its inhabitants by a pack of freebooters, aided by the Christians' ferocious god, which was simply a paradigm of the right of a superior people to seize the country of an inferior people and exterminate them.

PIACULAR PLOYS

American writers imagined many stories, usually melancholy and sometimes lachrymose, about Indian Romeos and Juliets, but the climax of that kind of writing came with Helen Hunt Jackson's romantically pathetic novel, Ramona (1884). It is an ably written story, well worth reading, provided you understand that you are reading a romance clothed in an illusory verisemblance.[10] Its modest literary quality is somewhat astonishing, since the book was written, not as more or less artistic fiction, but to dramatize and popularize a diatribe, A Century of Dishonor, which its author had published three years before.[11]

That diatribe was the first of the breast-beating orgies of simulated remorse for our race's treatment of the Indians whose land we took. Like all of its innumerable successors, it is a rhetorical medley that inextricably confuses three quite distinct questions that are ethically unrelated to each other, viz: (i) good faith in observing treaties, (ii) the occupa-

10. The scene is California after that territory became part of the United States. Ramona is a mestiza who was raised and educated by a wealthy Spanish lady, whose son becomes enamored of her. She, however, having better sense than he, eloped with a full-blooded but Christianized Indian named Alessandro (!), and a large part of the novel describes the Federal government's persistent and cruel oppression of the Indian couple until the story reaches its tragic dénouement.

11. Helen Hunt Jackson (1830-1885) is in the popular mind so exclusively associated with California, where she spent the last part of her life, that it may be well to note that she had Puritan ancestry. She was Helen Fiske, born in Amherst, Massachusetts. (Fiske is an Anglo-Saxon name, the equivalent of 'Fisher.') Hunt and Jackson are the tion of North America by our race, and (iii) our treatment of the Indians after they were conquered and subdued.

I. It is quite true that on several occasions Americans did violate treaties they had solemnly made with Indian tribes, although in most of the cited cases there is a question which side violated the treaty first.

The clearest and most flagrant example of our perfidy is the expulsion of the Cherokee from Georgia and adjacent territory in 1835-1838. The Cherokee were a most extraordinary tribe that exhibited a capacity for civilization that was unique among the Indians of North America. Whether they had received any considerable infusion of White blood must remain conjectural; if they had not, their character makes them an anthropological puzzle.

When our race first came into contact with them, they were, by all accounts, a settled and chiefly agricultural people, although constantly exposed to raids and incursions by the Iroquois. After Americans had shattered the Iroquois, the Cherokee, delivered from the need constantly to apprehend and frequently to resist attacks by their hereditary enemies, readily adapted themselves to our way of life, especially after they were made literate by the famous Sequoyah (in whose honor the sequoia trees were named), who was the son of an Irish trader by a Cherokee woman who may have had some White blood. They formed a settled and virtually independent state of their own, the Cherokee Nation, and prospered, purchasing many negro slaves for both agricultural and domestic service. They had productive farms, well-built houses (some of which were large and even luxurious), schools, newspapers, and all of the other appurtenances of civilized life. They governed themselves well under their names of her successive husbands. (At that time, it was socially proper and even obligatory for a widow or divorcée to retain the name of her former husband—she became 'Mrs. Mary Jones' instead of 'Mrs. John Jones'—and if she married again, the name of her former husband was necessarily retained, replacing her maiden name in her full legal name. Resumption of a maiden name after marriage was considered fraudulent and, in most states, was illegal.)

own laws, and they were not guilty of any aggression against our people.

In what is a shameful episode in our history, we plundered their property, confiscated their negro slaves, and drove them, with only the few chattels they could carry with them, to land west of the Mississippi over what they called "The Trail of Tears," on which a large part of them perished. That the tribe survived at all must be credited to the prudent leadership of their chief, John Ross, who, by the way, was a Scot, having only one-eighth of Indian blood.[12]

We may and should be ashamed of what was done to the Cherokee, but even here, however, there is the overriding question whether a viable race can prudently tolerate an enclave of aliens, however innocuous, in its own territory.

The issue here is so clearly joined that we should consider it and thus dispose of all the more doubtful instances of our race's unfairness to the aborigines. The Cherokee, as I have said, were unique among their race, and, having confidence in the validity of the treaty by which their Nation was established, they appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which affirmed their rights under the treaty. That was the occasion for President Jackson's cynical comment, "Mr. Marshall has made his decision; now let him enforce it." Jackson, working largely through the state government of Georgia, nullified the verdict of the Supreme Count and must bear the greater responsibility for the expulsion of the Cherokee.

If Jackson had been asked to explain his conduct and had deigned to reply, he would have said that the American Constitution had been formed by Aryans for an Aryan nation and so did not apply to other races. He might have acknowledged the Cherokee's unique capacity for civilization, but he would have observed that they were, after all, Indians, and cited the aphorism, "The only good Indian is a dead Indian."[13]

12. He was thus like William Weatherford, the chief of the Creek Indians, whose intelligence, dignity, and eloquence in defeat are often admired by writers who elect to suppress the fact that he was seven-eighths a Scot.

If you disapprove of Andrew Jackson's policy in this instance, you must balance your censure against his many and great services to our nation, ranging from the military ability that enabled him to win brilliant victories over many Indian tribes and a British army, to the act by which he emancipated our nation from servitude to alien bankers. Less well known is his service in acquiring Florida for our country. You may regret his injustice to the Cherokee, and regret even more strongly his bullying of South Carolina in 1832,[14] and you may think it unfortunate that the crude and even vulgar Mrs. Jackson was no ornament to the White House, but you must approve and acknowledge with gratitude what he accomplished for our nation. And finally, is it not obvious that the presence of an alien race's virtually independent state in a large part of what is now Georgia, North Carolina, and Tennessee would have been an intolerable hole in the fabric of our nation? You may regret the means, but you must emphatically approve the result.

Pride in our own race is a valid reason for regretting that some Aryans were unscrupulous and even dishonorable in their dealings with the Indians, but remember they were

13. The phrase is generally attributed to General Sherman, because he is recorded as having used it, but it is only what was thought, and doubtless said, for a century before him, by innumerable Americans who had been victims of Indian raids or had to protect our people from the savages. When Sherman used the words, he was only quoting a widespread conviction, not making an original observation.

14. Jackson's invasion of Florida in an undeclared war resulted in the capture and occupation of Spanish towns and forts, which determined the Spanish government to sell the territory to the United States rather than undertake an enormously expensive war to drive the Americans from it. His action against South Carolina was, of course, a political device to force a reasonable compromise and partly frustrate the greed of New England merchants, but while it left the principle of Nullification undecided, it provided an illogical pretext for the fiction about an indissoluble Union that was invoked to make the war of aggression against the Southern states seem less obviously treason to our nation as well as to our race.

part of our race and their actions greatly benefited it. You should have only contempt for the squawking twerps whose ostentatiously paraded morality assumes that Aryans should be without human weakness, and whose hypocrisy is made glaringly obvious when they yowl about the hardships inflicted on Indians and purr with delight when they remember the ghastly slaughter of much of the best part of our race in 1861-1865 to please our enemies and ignorant Americans who had been crazed with Judaic righteousness.

We should also note in passing that while our treatment of the Cherokee was dishonorable by our standards, it was not by the standards of most Indian tribes, whose normal procedure was to conclude a treaty when defeated and then begin preparations treacherously to break it as soon as they deemed it expedient to do so. A typical instance is provided by Metacomet ("King Philip"), chief of the Wampanoags, who signed treaties with Whites while secretly organizing an Indian federation to exterminate them. This is admitted even by the Indians' advocate, John Tebbel, in his Compact History of the Indian Wars (New York, Hawthorne Books, 1966; paperback reprint, Tower Publications, s.a. [1970?]).[15]

II. Recent writers on Indians, profiting from the confusion in Western thought that followed the Platonic haggling about an abstraction called 'justice,' which is meaningless out of a specific context,[16] refuse, through either muddled thinking or eristic trickery, to face the very simple question before them.

15. This is a very useful book, the only one of which I know that contains the essential history of all of our Indian wars in one convenient volume. — Needless to say, the moving orations that several prominent American writers devised for "King Philip" to exercise their rhetorical powers are merely what an Aryan might have said in comparable circumstances, and should not be mistaken for indications of his mentality and attitude.

16. E.g., is it just for us to enslave cows, force them to produce milk for us each day, and slaughter their offspring to make veal cutlets and Porterhouse steaks? Can we justly usurp for ourselves a right to life that we deny to other mammals?

Honesty would require such advocates frankly to choose between the obvious alternatives. Either:
(a) No nation has a moral right to invade the territory of another nation and occupy it. Our occupation of North America was, therefore, a criminal offense against some universal law, decreed by some god or other supernatural power, and by living in the United States we are enjoying the fruits of an inexpiable crime against "humanity," and therefore guilty of complicity in it. That is what the breast-beaters imply, but avoid stating explicitly. I have never heard of one who proved that he sincerely believed in our collective guilt by freeing himself from complicity in the crime, as he could do by going home, killing his wife and children, and committing suicide after executing a will by which he devised all his property to the nearest Indian tribe. On the contrary, the tender consciences of persons who wax indignant over our treatment of Indians never inhibit their enjoyment of all our comforts and luxuries while they wail about our injustice to Indians in books that net them very handsome incomes; or
(b) A superior race has a moral right, perhaps even a moral imperative, to displace an inferior race in desirable territory. Aryans were obviously greatly superior to Indians and therefore had a natural right to take North America for themselves. I do not say that our race's superiority to the Indians was shown by our greater intelligence and our unique culture, for that would be only a tautology. Our superiority was conclusively demonstrated by the fact that we subjugated the Indians and conquered the country that was ours until we discarded it.

This alternative, needless to say, is the only one that rationally recognizes the real world, a universe that was not made for man and is totally devoid of moral values. Morality is a code that each nation must devise for itself, and the morality that is highest for that nation is the one that most conduces to its survival and to its expansion at the expense of inferior peoples.

III. When Indians had been defeated and subdued, it was obviously necessary to provide against a resumption of hostilities and renewed massacres of Americans. There were only two possible solutions of that problem, either:
(a) The surviving Indians could be disarmed, confined to reservations, and there protected against themselves, especially by preventing them from obtaining whisky and similar liquors, which they were physiologically incapable of using without becoming insane; or
(b) The survivors could be killed and the inferior race exterminated.

Which of the only feasible alternatives was morally preferable may be left to your decision.[17]

THE REWARDS OF FOLLY

We could not expect the Americans to be rational after 1861-1865. Ignorant plebeians in the Northern states, excited by envy and Judaeo-Christian righteousness to fratricidal hatred, had drenched many battlefields with the best blood of their nation. And they spent the following decades in trying to wash the blood from their hands by lying to themselves about what they had done and viciously oppressing the survivors of their homicidal mania.

Had Americans been rational, they would have honestly confronted the alternatives I have stated above and taken pride in their possession of their country and realized that any failure to show Indians such compassion as they would never have accorded to us was merely inevitable and nugatory when considered as an incident in our obedience to the imprescriptible law of nature, that the strong survive and the weak perish. They would not have made Ramona a "best seller" and snivelled hypocritically when they read A Century of Dishonor or were told what was in that book.

They would not have permitted their factitious sense of guilt to go so far that even anthropologists, who professed to portray the society of Indians, censored their accounts to eliminate repulsive details that would depreciate the subject of their writing and alienate the readers' sympathies. In Liberty Bell, February 1987, p. 7, I noticed a book which was most unusual in that it told the full truth about the Mayas, dissipating the common notion that they were a peaceful and relatively civilized people, as their massive architecture suggested and as anthropologists with impressive academic credentials had affirmed.[18]

17. You may wish to remember that William Weatherford, in his much admired and indeed admirable speech when he met Andrew Jackson, rationally recognized that the vanquished Indians had no rights.

The Indians naturally took advantage of a professed guilt they could not understand, but it was only after they had for decades seen the Jews with impunity excite the niggers against white men that they concluded that the crazed Pale Faces were on the run. And they began to assume extravagant pretensions and make equally baseless demands, encouraged, of course, by our domestic enemies and the American mutineers whom they have trained.

How far our imbecility has gone may be seen from a recent instance in the state of New York, where the gang of racketeers who call themselves "educators" are ramming into the minds of their child victims the lie that the American Constitution was imitated from a confederation formed by savages.

The New York Post claims to have been founded by Alexander Hamilton, but if you look at the editorial staff listed on its masthead, you will find only one name (Cotter) that could have been borne by one of Hamilton's contemporaries, and, needless to say, the newspaper conforms to the "Liberal" hokum that must be endorsed by any newspaper that hopes to survive as a business. But even so, the outrage perpetrated by the gangsters of the National Education Association was too much for the editors to stomach. On 13 April 1990 they published an editorial entitled "Rewriting History, N.Y.-Style."

18. E.g., Charles Gallenkamp in his Maya (New York, David McKay, 1959).

After reviewing the Soviets' practice of forcing populations to believe what they by their own experience know to be false, as exemplified in an official lie about the "liberation" of the town of Pilsen by Soviet troops,[19] and noting an obviously mendacious claim by the state's Commissioner of Education, who bears the significant name, Thomas Sobol,[20] that he does not intend to "rewrite history," the editors discuss the "curriculum now in place":

> At this moment, New York's 11th-grade history syllabus tells teachers that the two major influences on the U.S. Constitution were the European Enlightenment of the 17th and 18th centuries and the political system of the Haudenosauncee Indians—a New York tribe. Yet the latter claim is sheer nonsense.
>
> The Founding Fathers wrote a lot about the intellectual influences that informed their drafting of the Constitution. And there is no evidence that they were influenced by an Indian tribe. Indeed, the notion has about as much historical validity as the legend that Soviet troops liberated Pilsen.

The editors charitably assume that Sobol himself was not the author of the lie, and identify the motive as the "educators'" normal indifference to truth, rather than malicious sabotage of children's minds:

> It seems that the present-day members of the tribe in question sent a delegation to meet with the educational commissioner's staff, and Sobol's aides thought it wise to accommodate them.

Incidentally, there never was a tribe of "Haudenosaunee Indians." The name, of which the correct spelling, I suppose, is 'Hodenosaunee,' since that is the form which was used (with hyphens to separate the syllables) by Lewis Morgan in the first real book about them, was the Indian name of the Iroquois[21] federation of five (eventually six) Indian tribes, formed to resist white settlers and to carry on continual 19. For an even more striking instance, see Liberty Bell, June 1991, p. 11.

20. The name is Yiddish; see the Oxford Dictionary of Surnames (1989). s.v

21. 'Iroquois' is the name by which the tribes or some of them were collectively designated by the French who first came into contact with them. It has been suggested that the French word may have come from an Indian word meaning 'adders,' but that is a mere guess based on a slight phonetic similarity.

raids on Algonquin Indians, other neighboring tribes, and even the Cherokee, far to the south.

Lewis Morgan was an American lawyer and promoter of railroads who, around 1850, decided to form a secret "fraternal" society like the Masons, and, wanting to create a ritual that would contain no nonsense about Solomon and Jewish myths, thought he might find in the rituals of the Iroquois a useful model for an American ritual. He was influenced, no doubt, by the vogue of mythical Indians that I have described above.

He investigated the several Iroquois tribes and became so interested that he was the first to describe systematically the federation and the tribes that composed it. He was somewhat credulous, and believed some of the tall tales told him by the survivors of the tribes, which by that time had been conquered and put on reservations.

The federation of the tribes was supposedly inspired by a Savior, who, needless to say, was miraculously born of a virgin, and, Morgan was told, was formed by an Indian prophet who may have actually existed, named Hiawatha.[22]

Like their kinsmen, the Cherokee, with whom they were almost constantly at war, the tribes of the federation practiced agriculture and had more or less permanent settlements, villages. There are several indications, far from probative, that the tribes contained some White blood. The Iroquois confederacy is now dear to anthropologists because its tribes are one of the very rare instances of an effective gynaecocracy and strictly matrilinear society.[23]

22. Longfellow thought the name euphonious and so bestowed it on the hero of his highly imaginative mythology, whom he described as belonging to an entirely different Indian tribe, the Ojibwa, who were constantly at war with the Iroquois and, indeed, had driven some of the tribes out of what is now Canada.

23. All property was really owned by women, who selected and could remove the male sachems who governed each tribe. That is a reasonable arrangement in a society in which the identity of a child's mother is usually certain, whereas the identity of the father may not be known even to the mother herself.

Of course, the notion that the authors of the Constitution would have taken into consideration a league of savages, about which they knew little and of which the best known tribe was the Mohawks (whose name means 'the cannibals'), is simply preposterous and shows only the total dishonesty of the racketeers who operate the public boob-hatcheries.

By the way, the hogwash about the Constitution was obviously derived, not from the presumptuous Indians, but directly from Communist doctrine. Morgan's book about the Hodenosaunee came to the attention of Marx while he was looking for sources he could plausibly cite in apparent support of his Marxian Reformation of Christianity, and it was used as a major source by Marx's employer and accomplice, Engels, when he compounded Bolshevik hokum for his Origin of the Family, Private Property, and the State, which became the fundamental textbook of the Judaeo-Communist conspiracy, much more important than Das Kapital. Needless to say, Engels ignored all the parts of Morgan's book that did not fit the weapon he was manufacturing to attack civilization.

The editors of the Post observe that Sobol, not content with the lie about the Constitution, is planning further sabotage of children's minds:

> As for the [announced] "Curriculum of Inclusion," it represents a larger plan to rework the history curriculum in order to accommodate various political pressure groups. The goal, as Sobol's task force makes clear, is to reduce the "arrogance" of "European American" (i.e., white) students.

In other words, our enemy is proposing to take American children by the nape of the neck and rub their faces in Yiddish excrement.

The editorial concludes with a discreet hint that in the state of New York White men still form a majority, and if they were sufficiently interested to form a political party of their own, they could prevent such degradation and perversion of their offspring. If you are indefatigably optimistic, you may entertain a wild hope that the hint will be taken.

The educational gangsters are not alone in their zeal for the demolition of civilization. The shamans naturally want to participate in the dirty work. Human Events, in an item in the issue dated 22 September 1990, under the title, "The National Council of Churches' Assault on Western Civilization," reported that the two hundred members of the General Board of the National Council of Churches, at their semi-annual conference, solemnly declared that > Chistropher Columbus did not "discover" the Western Hemipshere, he "invaded" it. His voyage of exploration [opened] this region of the world to..."church-supported racism," "genocide," "exploitation," "moral decadence," "enslavement of Indians," and terrible injustice to "African(s)" and the "peoples of Asia."....Not only were the "indigenous peoples" throughout this hemisphere slaughtered and enslaved, but the white population—descendants of the "European Conquerors"—have continued to perpetuate the legacy of "paternalism and racism" until the present day.

Such frenzied raving is only to be expected from the sleazy shysters who swindle their ovine congregations with verbal slop that appeals to low superstitious. But a filthy pack of enemy aliens and zombies tried to go them one better in spewing out vemon. According to Christian News, 8 October 1990:

> The World Student [!] Christian Federation has issued a resolution decrying the oppression associated with the arrival of Christopher Columbus in the Americas, echoing the sentiments expressed by a number of other religious bodies.... The resolution says that the "invasion" of Columbus was motivated by "expansionism and hegemonic aspirations." It also contends that the arrival of Europeams resulted in "expropriation, conquest, violence, ethnocide, racism, sexism [sic], and multiple forms of oppression" against the indigenous population and Africans brought to the hemisphere later as slaves.

Reading the foregoing, you must not suppose that the "students" really believe that the innocent aborigines in the Western Hemisphere multiplied by fission in those happy days before the wicked Whites taught them about sex. When "Liberal intellectuals" are programmed, their little minds will hold only a limited number of collocations of words that they will regurgitate at given signals, thus avoiding the mental strain of thought, which would doubtless lead to nervous breakdowns. The word 'sexist' was just part of the programmed vomit, and one cannot expect the homunculi to notice whether it is applicable everytime they react to an applied stimulus.

The anthropoid garbage collected in Chantilly naturally endorsed the Council of Churches of Christ's assault on civilization:

> The resolution calls for ecumenical bodies to recognize "the sin of Christian participation in the spiritual conquest of the indigenous and African American peoples" and points to the necessity of joining in "popular struggles opposing new forms of invasion, conquest, and recolonization."[24]

Emboldened by pusillanimity of White men, the Indians are having sport, devising ways further to harass the Pale Faces. They seem to have adopted a game initiated by the aborigines in Australia, who belong to the lowest of extant races and seem to have somehow reached Australia from India, where little enclaves of them still exist. They suddenly took an interest in the bones of their ancestors and demanded that anthropological museums return the specimens that had been collected for scientific research. The half-witted Australians complied with the insolent demand!

Indians in the United States are now imitating the Australoids. They suddenly developed a religious veneration for the skeletons of Indians whose relatives had never taken the trouble to bury them if they died away from camp and in a wilderness in which carnivores were efficient undertakers. An account of the preposterous demands and the silly respect with which White nincompoops yielded to them may be found in an article by Professor Clement W. Meighan, "Bury My Bones at Wounded Knee," published in National Review, 27 May 1991, pp. 34-38.

California, as usual, takes the lead in asininity, and its state government has embarked, at the expense of dim-witted taxpayers, on cuddling savages and persecuting anthropologists whom the sacred Indian trash want to harass. The legal vermin employed by the state have the effrontery to argue that anthropologists "have no legal right to remove or study any human remains" and are "guilty of a felony" when they do so. The scabrous government of that mongrel state has looted state museums and piously buried bones, pottery, stones, and the like, only to be sued by the grinning Indians and forced to rebury the refuse according to a silly ritual the savages devised for the purpose. Rampant idiocy and racial degeneration can go no farther.

24. The Indians do have a few justified complaints. I heard a tribe in Canada complain that their children are forced to go to schools, and this is certainly unjust to them as well as folly on the part of the White boobs, but I am sure that plaint would be rejected by the "Student" scum, who would insist on enforced attendance at schools at which the aborigines would be taught how further to intimidate the cringing Aryans.

Even the once venerable and respected Smithsonian Institute has pavidly provided fun for Indians who enjoy kicking the hamstrung Aryan jackasses. For further instances, see Professor Meighan's article or watch your local newspapers; in all likelihood, there is near you, perhaps in your own town, some museum that is now being, or soon will be, harassed and plundered by insolent savages—for savages they remain in mind and soul, unchanged by wearing shirts and trousers or by having learned to speak English. And, thanks to our insensate folly, they are now far more numerous than ever they were in all the centuries before Columbus.

It remains only to inquire why American men, who, though sometimes brutal and misguided, still had manhood a century ago, have now been replaced by anatomically male wimps and punks. How did it happen the our people have lost the will to live—have lost even a velleity to spare their children the horrors to which they are condemning them?

The cannibals' disease, kuru, which rots what brains they have, is similar to, if not identical with, the African Plague, commonly called "AIDS," and caused by an enterprising virus which seems to have an unlimited power to accommodate itself to its victims by suitable mutations. It thus differs in some respects from the menticidal disease with which a clever Sheeny, who called himself Paulus, infected the decaying Roman Empire, which in turn transmitted the deadly epidemic to our barbarous ancestors. It took fifteen centuries for the Judaeo-Christian revolt against nature and reality to destroy utterly the Aryans' rationality and will to live. The two diseases have the same effects, although one works more rapidly than the other, and, from present indications, it appears that both are incurable. If there is any hope for us, it must depend on the tiny minority of Aryans who have a spiritual immune-system that resists the hallucinatory virus.

WHICH WAY, WESTERN MAN?

SURVIVAL MANUAL FOR THE WHITE RACE

William Gayley Simpson has spent a lifetime of keen observation, careful analysis, and deep reflection developing the principal thesis of his book: that the single, undying purpose of all human activity should be the ennobling of man. In support of this thesis he looks at the foundations of Western Society, at the structure of our government, at the effect of technology and industrialization on man, at the roles of the sexes, at economics, and at race. The book goes to the roots of the problems facing the White Race today, and it shows the ways in which White society must be changed if the race is to survive. Which Way Western Man? is an encyclopedic work whose conclusions can be ignored by no one with a sense of responsibility to the future. For your copy of Which Way Western Man? send $17.50 (which includes $2.50 for postage and handling for the softback edition (Order No. 22003).

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?

That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and ever more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980—except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. For your copy (Order No. 00014) send $10.00 (which includes $1.50 for postage and handling). WHO HATES WHOM?

by

Major Donald Vincent Clerkin

When I had graduated from high school (1956), I enrolled in the old Chicago Teachers College. This school was racially integrated even back in the 1950s. One day in a biology class, an overweight Negress, who was always smiling at everybody, happened to get stuck on an oral quiz question. jokingly, I said to her: "Come on, Annie!" Her response was immediate: "Shut your mouth, you dirty white dog!"

In 1966 I worked as a weight training instructor for the Job Corps at the facility in Edinburgh, Indiana, just thirty miles south of Indianapolis. The Job Corps, as you may know, was very, very integrated. I was thrown in with blacks on the staff every day. Many nights were spent listening to them talk. Blacks speak a different dialect of English. This was made plain to me by the older black staff members, who got a great kick out of talking amongst themselves, then asking me whether I understood any of it. I didn't understand very much of it.

One particular black staff member took great pleasure in reminding me that blacks and whites are two fundamentally different peoples, a lesson I have never forgotten. One day, while sitting in an office building at Camp Atterbury, the Job Corps center, I attempted—in jest—to mimic the black dialect that I had been hearing. A light-skinned negro who had spent twenty years in the Army, jumped down my throat, berating me for allegedly mocking blacks. The point was made: I would be tolerated by these blacks, but only if I kept a low profile—if I kept my place.

I was the racial minority at the Job Corps center. They treated me like an outsider, as the Japanese had viewed me during the years I lived there. To the Japanese I was a Gaijin, a racial alien, as well as a foreigner. Most theoretical integrationists of the white race never get this close to the colored races they champion so strongly. Though I must admit in fairness that the civilized Japanese made my years with them for the most part enjoyable. They were interested in me, and I was interested in them and their history and culture. When a non-white people shows so much that is of the high level, together with racial honesty, they should be taken seriously, as it seems everybody is taking Japan seriously today. Even the Jews are impressed.

In my first year at the University of Illinois at Urbana (1962), after coming out of the Marine Corps, I knew a Jewish student who seemed friendly enough. One day he introduced me to a group of his friends, sort of a Jewish afternoon club on campus. The whispering began almost immediately. I was made to feel like a Martian. The Jewish society that I had come upon didn't approve of Aryans. And the friendly Jewish student kept his distance from me after that.

Through experience I learned that race matters—it counts; and if it doesn't begin to count with a majority of American whites, then the white is dead. I have seen much more anti-white hatred than I have seen hatred amongst our people for other races. Back in the 1960s, black male intimidation of white females was a constant wherever the races were in proximity to one another. Blacks could cajole—"Unless you're a racist, you'll sleep with me." Liberal white girls went along. Today, blacks just go ahead and rape white girls, not bothering to rationalize what they want. Oh, there are still the congenital race traitors, the blanko miscegenators who are bound and determined to get AIDS from interracial sex, or produce a mulatto child—or both. They have no future either way.

The average white is not a race hater. But the average colored or Jew is. I have seen whites end over backward not to offend some mean black or a snide Jew. This is sickening conduct in a race such as the Aryans, a race that has carried the cause of culture and civilization for so many generations. Without the white race the world would not only be racially worthless, it would be a place fit only for viruses and bacteria. We have been the light of the world—and every other race either envies us or hates us. The Jews are the masters of deceit in this. They moan about how they are despised, yet they continue to preach Talmudic hatred of all that is Aryan. That of our high culture which they cannot steal, they revile and debase. See how Hollywood constantly mocks Aryan culture. The Jewish comedian's idea of mirth is to discuss body functions and sex. Every perversion is fair game for the Jewish idea of comedy. Notice that Jews do not mock perversions—they promote them. This is an assault on Aryan culture via the medium of satire. The Irish drunkard, the German martinet, the British stick-in-the-mud, the Aryan-American sex fiend; haven't we seen these stereotypes in Jewish Hollywood films and broadway plays? But have we ever seen anything but reverence when Jewish culture is presented? No. We will never see a balance of mockery as long as Jews control popular expression of culture. They are the culture distorters.

It is all right to mock white males. See also that the Japanese are coming for their share of Jewish mockery. Arabs have suffered this for many years. When the Jews were angered by the French during the 1970s, because France sold Mirage jet fighters to the Arabs, an advertisement for Renault cars appeared on TV depicting a frog wearing a skimmer straw hat and carrying a cane, a takeoff on Maurice Chevalier. The frog sang—with a thick French accent—"Thank heaven for little cars." During the uproar over the Polish Catholic convent at Auschwitz, the Jews issued a steady stream of Polish jokes over radio and TV. Again, it is the white male who is the favorite target of Jewish 'humor.' He is the target of every non-white racial group, as well as the feminists.

We white racialists are realists. We know it is our whiteness that is hated, our culture that is distorted, our children the targets of miseducation and indoctrination; and our future that is in doubt. Race is not supposed to exist for you. We can't even discuss demographics, immigration, statistics and birth rates, without some yapping bastard of a Jew screaming "Hitler!" But Ben Wattenberg is the "American" spokesman for the browning of America, a policy he welcomes. Washington, that toy of the Jews, has ordered whites to be race neutral, or pro-colored and Jew. Every other people on earth is racist. Whites are the only people for whom a support group is practically a criminal conspiracy—not to be condoned—and a conspiracy that must be suppressed using every means at government's hand.

Just being aware of this, and any white with half his brain should be aware of it by now, must give us pause to think that someone—some group(s)—wants to destroy us as a people. Why, then, is not more of a white stink being raised in this country every day? WHO HATES WHOM? Look about you, white man and woman; all the fingers of hate are pointed at YOU—no matter what the TV tells you, or the lasted Jew Hollywood film. You are the target of universal animosity and hatred. "Minorities" are not being persecuted in America. Whites are being deprived of an entire country! Jews are not the victims of overt anti-Semitism. Jews are the bloody victimizers. They tell only their tales of woe. You are being gulled, you whites. If you don't look this reality squarely in the face, you will have no future worth living. Remember that the hate crimes are the acts committed against whites every day by coloreds. These laws are passed to get you for thinking out loud.

FOR MY LEGIONARIES

The Legionary Movement in Romania, commonly known as the Iron Guard, —perhaps the oldest anti-Communist movement in the world, still alive—was founded by Corneliu Z. Codreanu in 1927. For My Legionaries (353 pp., pb., $10.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling), Codreanu's stirring work, is a complete and authoritative account of the ideals and principles of the Legionary Movement which shaped the character of young Romanians before WWII. Control over the communications media and the normal channels of book distribution by our international enemies makes it impossible to reach the broad market this unique book deserves. We are certain that For My Legionaries will soon become a collector's item. This book also provides the 'missing pieces' of the drastically censored The Suicide of Europe by Prince D. Sturdza; the identity of those who masterminded Romania's takeover and who are now engaged in carrying out the same program in the U.S. will no longer be unknown to you. ("Solzhenitsyn would appear to have not the slightest inkling of who conquered HIS country!"—B.C.) FOR MY LEGIONARIES, Order #06003, single copy $10.00, 3 copies $25.00, 5 copies $35.00

For postage and handling add: On domestic orders, $1.50 for orders under $10.00, 15% of order total for orders over $10.00. On orders from abroad, $2.00 or 20% respectively. HOW DO WE (JEWS) DESTROY DANGEROUS POLITICAL OPPONENTS?

As Discussed in the Hebrew School and Outlined in Twelve Paragraphs

The following excerpts were reprinted in the Vienna newspaper Der Telegraf of November 1st, 1920, and were taken from the book Deutscher Geist—oder Judentum! / Der Weg der Befreiung (German Spirit—Or Jewry! / The Way of Liberation) as depicted by Arthur Trebitsch.

1

Nothing could be more erosive and damaging to the well-being of our people than delaying the destruction of an opponent until he achieves recognition among our enemies and becomes famous enough that they heed his words and follow him when he addresses them. We must consequently keep a sharp watch on the maturing youth of our enemies, and if we notice a nucleus of insurrection and resistance to our power, then it must be destroyed before it can pose a threat to our people.

2

Since we dominate the Press and exert power over public issues, so it is our most important task that dangerous people are not permitted access to positions from which they could speak with authority and in the printed word in order to win influence among our enemies. Thus, silence must prevail and complete unawareness, when a dangerous mind arises in the midst of our enemies. Most will be restrained by a lack of success in early youth from further efforts and must eventually devote themselves to an occupation to win their daily bread, which then distracts them from dangerous thoughts and deeds against the Chosen People.

Yet, if one such individual still persists with harmful doings despite silence and deficient recognition, then the time is come for influencing him more sharply to thwart his plans and hinder his dangerous work. Now, we will offer him employment at high salary within our circles, if he simply ceases with his false endeavors and allows his energies to be diverted to Our Cause. And, if he was lonely for a long while and had to suffer and starve, then the sudden gold and beautiful words which we give him will dissuade him from his incorrect ideas and guide him to our path. And, when he suddenly sees success and riches, glory and honor, he will forget his enmity and learn to graze on the fat pasture which we keep ready for all who go our way and submit themselves to the rule of the Chosen People.

If this is to no avail and an individual continues in stubborn mutiny against our command, then we will see to it through our people that evil will be spoken about him everywhere, and those for whom he wants to fight and is willing to sacrifice himself to counter us, will reject him in animosity and contempt. Then, he will become truly lonely and see thusly the impotence of his acts and will despair and perish in the impossible struggle against our people.

5

If that does not work, and he should be strong enough to endure and to continue to believe in his hostile aims against us, then we have an even more certain means to paralyze his power and destroy his plans. Did not Esther win the King of Persia to our side and did not Judith chop off the head of that enemy of our people? And, are there not daughters of Israel enough, who are seductive and clever enough to entice them from the path of our enemies, to win their hears and to overhear their thoughts so that no word can be spoken and no plan ripen without being known at the proper time by our people? And, if a dangerous foe has attained a reputation and position and the trust of his friends and the following of an entire people; and we send a daughter of Israel onto his path , so his plan shall be delivered to our hands and his resolve broken and his energy lamed and his power made useless. Then, wherever the daughter of our people reign as wives of our enemies, their plans are checked at the right stage and their actions are frustrated before they can be carried out.

However, if he should see through our actions and avoid our snares and his recalcitrant spirit finds further support and belief among our enemies, then he must disappear from this life in such a manner that our goals are not endangered. "Death is the unavoidable end of all humanity. For this reason it is better to accelerate this end for those who injure our cause than to wait until it befalls us, the initiators of the undertaking. In the Freemasonic lodges, we inflict the punishment in such a way that no one, except the brothers of the confession, can derive the slightest suspicion... not even death's victim himself: they all die—when it is necessary—of an apparent natural cause. Although it is known to the lodge brothers, they dare not raise any objections. With such inexorable punishment, we have suffocated all contradictions with the lodges against our orders at the embryonic stage. While we preach enlightenment to the Gentiles, we simultaneously keep our own people and our confidants in strictest obedience." (Quoted from the Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, p. 114).

Since we live in uncertain times and the country is made unsafe everywhere by murder and mayhem, through looting and robbery, so it occurs easily for our brothers to eliminate the dangerous enemy by a coincidental surprise attack. Then, do we not have an army of hired thugs of the nationality of our enemies, who are always prepared to do what we want for good gold and protected secrets? And, if we want to remove the opponent, then we spread rumors wherever he is traveling and where he resides to increase the danger and insecurity and to make the threat to his life a daily occurrence. And, if we want to destroy him, then we prepare the deed, through robbery or looting at the place of his residence or scatter the rumors of danger and personal attacks in his vicinity. And, when the day arrives when he is to disappear, the people we pay will work together in perfect harmony; and when he has been killed, they will take the money and plunder the corpse, and the culprits will never be apprehended. And, the whole world will believe that he was a victim of robbery and manslaughter, as the people will be accustomed to this at the appropriate time. And, never will the enemies learn that he has vanished through the will of our brothers in order that the name of our god not be desecrated.*

So that the name of God shall not be descrated, the wisest of our people have taken precautions for centuries. Namely, our brothers in Russia have discovered means and researched the sciences to destroy our enemies without their noticing it. Have they not discovered a gas which immediately kills the enemy and found a second gas which is emitted after the first one, combining with it to eliminate all traces of the former? And, do we not know the qualities of wireless current which destroys the mental faculties of the dangerous foe and ruins his brain power and ability to concentrate and think? And, have not our doctors researched the effects of undetectable poisons with the microscope and know how to smuggle the poison into the wash of the enemy, whereby it climbs to his brain and infests the frontal lobes, annihilating his mind? And, can we not ourselves staff the autopsy clinics with our own people so that no one learns of the cause of his death? And, have we not learned to get close to him through the maid who serves him, through the neighbor across the fence, and the guest in his house? And, are we not all-present and omnipotent in covert collaboration with one another in secret accord until the destruction of the opponent? And, when we come with friendly words and harmless conversation, has it yet been achieved by any nation on Earth that our plans have been penetrated and our purposes defeated?

If, however, one should still succeed in avoiding all traps of secret death and all the cunning of our brothers and should thwart the work of destruction, you should not despair and tremble in fear of the bright glance of this single dangerous one! Then, if he dares to speak to his unsuspecting fellow-citizens of our covert activities and menacing destruction, is it not our ancient art to recognize and watch over all persons with whom he speaks and to predict his plans in advance, if he should escape our snares? And, even before he speaks to our enemies, we ourselves will speak through our people, with those who are entrusted of him and will war of the imbalance of his mind and the unfortunate confusion of his senses. And, when he comes to tell of his troubles and to portray the surmounted dangers, these people will hear him with doubting smiles and distrustful contempt and will be convinced of his mental disorder and emotional decay. And, we will work together step by step, until the gates of the insane asylum close behind him, and should he come out again and want to take further action and warn of our power, we will have taken from him the credibility of his beliefs; and, he will be outcast and outlawed. The words will be in vain that he speaks, just as the thoughts he thinks. And, so the Chosen People will remain victor over yet another harmful adversary.

*Translated into Aryan: "so that we won't be nabbed"—Ed.

Yet, if this should not be effective and the enemy, against the will of our god, wrestles himself free from all these dangers, then, still do not despair you Children of Israel, since one man is powerless, and our agents are everywhere alert to destroy his evil assault and prevent the Goyim from throwing off the yoke, which was attached to them by our god.

Do we not have the means at hand to observe every step of the enemy and to make the very breath from his mouth ineffective? And, as his people begin to believe in him, do we not know how to hinder this approachment and cut the threads which could bind the dangerous enemy with the external world? And, the letters which will be written to him should be checked and read by our people so that encouragement and approval will be withheld from him and that only false friendship and malicious contacts flow to him, behind which the children of the Chosen People stand concealed. And, when he wants to use public communications, which enable the human word to be carried widely abroad, so we shall overhear his words and his plans; and, if the enemies should want to speak to him, we will interfere with the context of baffle the meaning, since we keep the enemy so encircled that no trace of his soul can penetrate into the outward world without our eavesdropping. And, he will want to defend himself and will believe that he is effective, but his actions will be like the pacing of an animal behind the bars of his cage.

And, if the belief in the dangerous enemy by the few of intelligence should grow in spite of these measures, then we will still know how to prevent that his power advances and that his ideas influence the greater multitude of our enemies. And, if his name achieves a good reputation, so we shall send out one of our people and give him the same name of the dangerous foe and deliberately expose him as the enemy of our enemies, as a traitor and deceiver, and when the hated name is merely mentioned, we shall say that it is he, our foe, who is the traitor; and then people will believe our words, and his words will fade away into emptiness, and his ideas will become cursed through the omnipotence of our god. And, we will make his lifestyle subject to suspicions and shall take the filth of the gutter to smear his reputation and his fellow men will see the dirtied cloak and perceive the filth on his clothing and will turn from him, not evaluating his character and noting his voice. And, he will become perplexed and give up hope in his own people, which appears to him to be so shabby and thankless; and he will cease his activities in bitterness and despair as Israel laughs mockingly and the power of our god triumphs.

It is nevertheless, prophesied that men will repeatedly arise in our folk who are not of our blood and will not think with out spirit. And, they will be more dangerous to the victory of our people than ll the others, since they understand the trickery of our folk and avoid our nets and escape all dangers. But, do not fear, ye Brothers, in the face of these cursed ones, since, if they appear today, it is already too late and power over the entire Earth too far given over to our hands. Where can our enemies sit down with one another to deliberate over us without at least one of our people within their ranks or one of their race who has become ours through the glitter of our gold, the charm of our women, or the convincingness of our agents?? And, if the renegade wants to speak with our enemies, so shall our emissary in their ranks rise up and utter words of indignation against him, which will find endearment and trust, sowing rejection of him among the enemies' ranks, and angrily labeling him the secret enemy of their people! And, wherever he shall come with love and self-sacrifice and would desire to save the enemies from the power of our people, his words will encounter mistrust, they will reject, they will reject him, and all his activities will ineffectively rebound from this distrust and disbelief, which our emissary knows how to provoke within the enemies' ranks.

And, so it shall be our talent and greatest mission to prevent that many hear the words recognition and enlightenment concerning our most secret goals. Thus, if many were to hear the voice of truth against our power, then all our counterespionage measures would be thwarted and the danger would be near that the peoples of the Earth might throw off our yoke. Therefore, keep up the watch, ye Brothers, and act omnipresent, delude the enemies, confuse their senses, close their ears, and make their eyes unseeing, so that the day will never come when the World Empire of Zion collapses, which we have built up to such towering heights and perfection and which shall soon project visibly to its late but inevitable victory and ultimate revenge upon the slave peoples of the entire planet!

MR. WIESENTHAL DOES NOT ANSWER...
An Open Letter To

Simon Wiesenthal Center
Rabbi Abraham Cooper
9760 West Pico Boulevard
Los Angeles, CA 90035

I received your "Fund-Raiser" letter on behalf of the blacks, homosexuals, for the defense of immigrants and the fight against anti-Semitism. You are hereby requested to remove my name from your mailing list as I do not wish to contribute to organizations which create anti-Semitism to justify their existence! It is also clear from your letter that you intend to search and find those who disturb the harmony among races, religions and peoples among the non-homosexual White Christians.

I do not believe that the Blacks need your defense and support! As far as the homosexuals, who organize their despicable "Gay Pride Parades" and proudly declare what they are, are concerned—I am unable to understand what they can be proud of—they should be allowed to die as disgusting and incurable sick people, thus achieving a healthy society! With the parades they are recruiting young people into their midst, thus depriving them of having a decent family life. One can understand also the outcry against the immigrants as during the last decade hardly any non-Jew could settle in the United States!

Anti-Semitism has a lot of real and imagined causes to which you and your brethren constantly add new one. An example at hand is the New York Post's editorial, "Hungary Cowed." This was an unwarranted attack against Hungary with an obvious aim: Unless Hungary succumbs to the Jewish or Israel's policy, Hungary cannot be a "honorable" member of the community of free nations. What arrogance! I am attaching a copy of "Hungary Cowed" and my rebuttal to it, which was never published. IS IT THE POLICY OF THE NEW YORK POST OR OF THE JEWS TO KEEP SILENT WHEN CORNERED WITH THE TRUTH?!! I don't think that you care to intercede for its publication either.

The editorial greatly disturbed the harmony between Hungarians and Jews. It created anti-Hungarian sentiment in the Jews, and anti-Jewish sentiment in the Hungarians. Bear in mind: Hungary received nothing from the West or Israel, and is under no moral obligation to fulfill the dictates of the West or Israel! There is no anti-Semitism in my letter, only the expression of the truth about the Hungarians and the rejection of the slander of the New York Post or of a Jew.

As a firm believer in the equality of races, religions and peoples, I would like to impress upon you to meditate about the causes of anti-Semitism and ponder why there is no anti-Dutch, anti-Scandinavian, anti-Polish, anti-Hungarian sentiment. Since the causes of anti-Semitism were created largely by the Jews themselves, they have to find the solution to this problem. If you fail to do so, anti-Semitism will always prevail regardless of your fight, will pick up in the United States also and—THEN WHERE TO DO YOU IMMIGRATE?!! WHERE???

All I can say: Stop scolding, lecturing and controlling the mind of the Christian nations which permitted you to have a home, freedom and prosperity! Do not shove in their faces constantly their real or fabricated crimes. We heard them more than enough times. Don't try the patience of the host nations. It has limits. Stop setting up "observation stations." There are already twenty B'nai B'rith offices in Hungary. What for?

It is understandable that Wiesenthal wanted to bring to justice those who hurt the Jews, to receiver proper penalties. We had no objections against it. A criminal must pay for his or her crime. However, after 45 years he defames more innocent people than real criminals. Most of the defendants are declared innocent than guilty. He is a lonely head-hunter now.

As Wiesenthal runs out of criminals, it would be more appropriate for him to deal with the causes of anti-Semitism, or bring to justice those Americans and Russians who committed crimes against humanity after the war. A lot of them deserve the bullet or the gallows.

One can read in Alfred de Zaya's book, Nemesis at Potsdam, that the Russians in Nemmersdorf crucified the women on barn walls, raped every girl over 8 years old and executed every man.

A ghost town was created. Wiesenthal did not pursue these criminals. Why? THEY DID NOT KILL JEWS! In Katyn 16,000 Poles were executed by the Russians. Wiesenthal did not pursue or prosecute them. Why? THEY DID NOT KILL JEWS!

20 to 25 thousand German refugees were driven into the Baltic Sea and 7,000 more drowned in the sinking of the Goya. Wiesenthal did not pursue the Russian criminals. Why? NO JEWS WERE DROWNED! The ALLIES—headed by the United States—drove out 16 million Germans from their ancestral lands—East-Prussia, etc. In Berlin only the dead bodies of children and raped women were retrieved...the roads scattered with dead Germans. Wiesenthal did not pursue these criminals. Why? THE VICTIMS WERE NOT JEWS! The Czechs expelled 3 million Germans from the Sudeten, in the Lamsdorf Camp, out of 8064 Germans 6488 died, among them 628 children. More than 2 million Germans have fallen victim of the post-war atrocities of the Allies! Nobody was tried for these inhuman acts. Wiesenthal did not pursue the Czechs. Why? NOT JEWS PERISHED! In cold winter the Czechoslovak authorities drove out several hundred-thousand Hungarians from their ancient land. The brutality, lack of food and shelter claimed thousands of victims. Wiesenthal did not pursue these Czech criminals. Why? NOT JEWS WERE UPROOTED AND VICTIMIZED! In South-Hungary the Jugoslavs trampled in the blood of Hungarians. Wiesenthal did not pursue the criminals. Why? NOT JEWS WERE EXTERMINATED!

Wiesenthal placed not only those Germans and Hungarians on the scaffold who may or may not have committed a crime, but the WHOLE HUNGARIAN AND GERMAN NATIONS. He saw justice every time a Hungarian or a German was executed—guilty or not!

As you can see, there are not only "War Criminals," but also "Peace Criminals," maybe many more than of the first kind. It is worthwhile to remember also that the Americans shot the guards of every camp without any inquiry. There were more innocents among them than criminals. They were ordered to their posts. They had to obey. The mass-murderer American soldier in Vietnam—Mai-Lai—was not executed. He spent his short "prison-term" at the barracks of his company. Wiesenthal never requested the punishment of these criminals. Their names are not listed in his crime-register. Well! THEY DID NOT KILL JEWS!

I sincerely believe that it should be the duty of Wiesenthal to bring to JUSTICE the commanders and soldiers of the Allied Powers, the Czechoslovaks and Jugoslavs who committed crimes against "humanity!" Wiesenthal did nothing in the interest of universal justice. In his mind, crimes could have been committed only against the Jews.

Wiesenthal did not do anything to foster and promote the harmony between non-Jews and Jews either. This should have been his main duty and responsibility in the past and also in the present.

I do not find any reason to contribute to your institute or Wiesenthal.

THE ANTI-HUMANS

by D. Bacu (307 pp., hb. $7.00 + $1.50 for postage & handling) describes what was done to the young men whom Corneliu Z. Codreanu, the founder of the Legionary Movement in Romania, inspired, when seven years after his brutal murder, Romania was delivered to the Bolsheviks. They were subjected to what is the most fully documented Pavlovian experiment' on a large number of human beings. It is likely that the same techniques were used on many American prisoners in Korea and Vietnam. The Anti Humans is a well-written document of great historical and psychological importance. Reading it will be an emotional experience you will not forget. "A sequel to Orwell's 1984" —R.S.H. "A searing exposé of Red bestiality!" —Dr. A.J. App). THE ANTI-HUMANS, Order #01013. DIVIDED LOYALTIES

by

Wodenson

Most would probably agree that we have long been searching for a motivational concept that would overcome the system's propaganda, terror, blackmail, and other destructive powers.

The tactic employed by so-called "Right Wingers," over the last few decades, has been to cloak themselves in national and religious patriotism. There may be what appears to be benefits in this strategy, but always the bottom line is success or failure. Obviously, this strategy has been total failure, so it's time to examine not only reasons for failure, but what is necessary for future success.

Human nature being what it is, one can understand why the "Right Wing" traveled the road it did. The brutal truth is, they didn't have the courage to face either reality or the enemy. They knew there was an attack on our racial existence, and many of them knew who was behind it. They also knew of the treachery from what they persist in calling "their" government, and from the Judaeo-Christian establishment.

But it was safer to attack enemies "over there." They were afraid of being called "Racist." They were afraid of not conforming. Like the tale of the Emperor who wore no clothes, they pretended to see only what was approved by the authorities and the masses. Many drew retirement checks or other benefits from the beast and so had dual loyalties. Others, particularly former military, did not want to see tarnish on their medals, or face the results of the actions of America's military. And, of course, a few were simply so filled with blind national and religious patriotism that they could see nothing of reality.

But, whatever the reason, they were neutralized by divided loyalties. They worshiped their executioner. (Let me insert here, there is nothing wrong with our people getting every cent and every check possible from the ZOG). Bleeding the beast is necessary, but loyalty to the beast is treason.)

It is simply impossible to build a dynamic steamrolling movement with divided loyalties. If the primary goal of the American political entity is the mixing and extermination of the White Race (and it is), and we continue to honor and support that entity, then we are doomed. It is "double-think" from top to bottom.

If you entertain the fiction that America is "Your" country, then by every sense of fair play, you must give honor to all who serve in the American military, regardless of race. If a negro serves in "Your" army, can you deny him access to your church? If he attends your church, and worships your God, how will you deny him your daughter or sister? If he served your country, can you deny him your schools, neighborhoods, organizations, etc.?

You simply can not share a nation, a life-view, a religion, a culture, a territory, a God, a holy book, a flag, or anything else, with another race. It is suicide. If your God created negroes, then why shouldn't your daughter create more of them? If your God worries over every little sparrow, surely your daughter should worry over negroes, Mexicans, and Asiatics.

How about a flag? There is good reason why the world's rulers have always used symbols such as flags and martyrs to motivate the masses. Symbols represent emotions and instincts as deep and strong as territory, reproduction, specie preservation, Gods, and maybe even stir genetic memory. But, you can not share symbols with other races any more than you can share territory, women, or Gods. It is a division of motivational forces. I am reminded of racial activists who participate in Judaeo-Christian anti-abortion rallies. They try to share an issue. They know full well that thousands of White women are raped by negroes every years. Would they condemn these women to birthing a negro baby? You see, sharing anything with your executioner is, at best, a two-edged sword, and more often a suicidal pursuit.

Another example is the racist who joins conservatives in condemning bi-lingual education. Apparently, they want "Hispanics" to become fluent in English so they can blend into White society, take White men's jobs, and pursue White women. They should realize that a language barrier is good from a racial standpoint; but they join forces with the conservative who sees the "Hispanic" as an economic pawn to be exploited, and to hell with his race or culture.

What is ZOG's is theirs, not ours. We have to get our minds in order, identify our executioners, name them, and divorce ourselves from everything that brought us to this sorry state of affairs.

We can not fly our executioners flag, worship his Gods, support his government, fight in his courts, play by his rules, obey his laws, listen to his propaganda, send our children to his schools, honor his armies and police, vote for his puppets, share his causes, or escape reality. Divided loyalties are neutralizing and suicidal.

We do not need complicated political or theological dissertations to justify our cause. There is a higher Law, the highest Law. The first Law of Nature is the preservation of our own kind.

It does not matter whether you believe Nature's Laws are the work of God, or of Gods, or are an accident. They exist. We are subject to them. If they are the work of God, then they are God's laws. Natural Law is total justification.

If we cannot find the minimal courage to say, I am White; I am proud of my heritage; I intend to preserve the existence of my Race, then we are finished. Why is that so hard to say? Have we become so cowardly, so submissive, so brain-polluted, that we feel guilt or fear in even stating who we are? It is both ludicrous and tragic to see so-called patriotic publications afraid to say the word White. How our forefathers must despise us.

Let us make the 14 words a test. No one who will not repeat them is worthy of our friendship or support. These 14 words are:

WE MUST SECURE THE EXISTENCE OF OUR PEOPLE AND A FUTURE FOR WHITE CHILDREN.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR: Dr. Revilo Pendleton Oliver, Professor of the Classics at the University of Illinois for 32 years, is a scholar of international distinction who has written articles in four languages for the most prestigous academic publications in the United States and Europe.

During World War II, Dr. Oliver was Director of Research in a highly secret agency of the War Department, and was cited for outstanding service to his country.

One of the very few academicians who has been outspoken in his opposition to the progressive defacement of our civilization, Dr. Oliver has long insisted that the fate of his countrymen hangs on their willingness to subordinate their doctrinal differences to the tough but idealistic solidarity which is the prerequisite of a Majority resurgence.

SOME QUOTABLE QUOTES FROM AMERICA'S DECLINE:

On the 18th Amendment (Prohibition): "Very few Americans were sufficiently sane to perceive that they had repudiated the American conception of government and had replaced it with the legal principle of the 'dictatorship of the proletariat,' which was the theoretical justification of the Jews' revolution in Russia."

On Race: "We must further understand that all races naturally regard themselves as superior to all others. We think Congoids unintelligent, but they feel only contempt for a race so stupid or craven that it fawns on them, gives them votes, lavishly subsidizes them with its own earnings, and even oppresses its own people to curry their favor. We are a race as are the others. If we attribute to Ourselves a superiority, intellectual, moral, or other, in terms of our own standards, we are simply indulging in a tautology. The only objective criterion of superiority, among human races as among all other species, is biological: the strong survive, the weak perish. The superior race of mankind today is the one that will emerge victorious—whether by its technology or its fecundity—from the proximate struggle for life on an overcrowded planet."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH FREEDOM OF THOUGHT FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

The editor/publisher of Liberty Bell does not necessarily agree with each and every article in this magazine, nor does he subscribe to all conclusions arrived at by various writers; however, he does endeavor to permit the exposure of ideas suppressed by the controlled news media of this country.

It is, therefore, in the best tradition of America and of free men everywhere that Liberty Bell strives to give free reign to ideas, for ultimately it is ideas which rule the world and determine both the content and structure of our Western culture.

We believe that we can and will change our society for the better. We declare our long-held view that no institution or government created by men, for men, is inviolable, incorruptible, and not subject to evolution, change, or replacement by the will of an informed people.

To this we dedicate our lives and our work. No effort will be spared and no idea will be allowed to go unexpressed if we think it will benefit the Thinking People, not only of America, but the entire world.

Taxpayers Demand:
No $10 Billion Bond Guarantee for Israel!

The government of Israel expects to resettle approximately a million Soviet Jews in Israel and the Israeli-occupied Arab territories during the next four years. These Soviet Jews are not penniless refugees; most of them held privileged positions in the Soviet Union, but with the collapse of communism and the resurgence of Russian nationalism they realize that their era of privilege is finished there. The Israelis say they must raise at least $10 billion by issuing bonds to cover the resettlement expenses for these new immigrants. They want American taxpayers to put up the money to cover those bonds. Americans, by an overwhelming majority, don't want to do it. The U.S. Congress, on the other hand, usually will do whatever the Jewish lobby tells it to do, and the American taxpayers be damned.

Unlike most cases in the past where Israel has demanded U.S. money, the current demand for Americans to back $10 billion in new Israeli bonds has become a matter of public debate. Usually Jewish control of the news media and the Congress results in the money being handed over quietly, with the taxpayers not having a chance to raise an objection. In this case, however, the Bush administration has asked Israel to hold off any more cash demands on the United States until after a Middle East peace conference next year. This request for a delay has so angered Israeli officials that they have accused President Bush of being "anti-Semitic." One Israeli cabinet minister, Rehavam Zeevi, whines that Bush is "conducting a political fight on the back of millions of Jews." Jewish leaders in America also have tried to evoke sympathy for Israel's monetary demands by reviving half-century-old gas-chamber tales: "Weren't six million enough?" they ask mournfully, referring to their long-discredited claim that six million Jews were gassed to death during the Second World War.

Such antics would be laughable, if it weren't for the fact that they have worked so well in the past to get the Jews whatever they demanded. The September 30 issue of Time magazine points out that nearly all politicians are so frightened of Jewish control of public opinion that they are afraid to oppose the Jews on any issue. "We don't want to be accused of anti-Semitism," one diplomat is quoted. This fear of Jewish power has resulted in $46 billion being taken from American taxpayers and given to Israel since 1973. At this time, as President Bush pointed out in his September 12 speech to the nation, the American taxpayers already are being forced to support every Jew in Israel with an ongoing subsidy of $1,000 a year. Enough is enough, he said, in arguing for holding off on the additional money Israel is demanding.

The average American would say that's not only enough, it's far too much. Why should any money be taken from our pockets and put into the pockets of Israelis? Why should we ever be forced to cover their bonds with our earnings? It's time for Americans who resent this ongoing theft of their hard-earned money to stand up and speak against more subsidies for Israel.

Remember, Mr. Busch only wants to delay for a few months the coverage of $10 billion in Israeli bonds with our money. He was bold enough to stand up to the accusations of "anti-Semitism" made against him only because he had just finished using the U.S. armed forces to destroy Iraq, which was the most powerful opponent of further Israeli territorial expansion in the Middle East. Now he wants to preside at a Middle East peace conference aimed at keeping things calm for a while in that part of the world. He knows that if he gives the Israelis more of our money before the conference he won't have any leverage over them to get them to make peace with the Arabs.

Unfortunately, Mr. Bush is, after all, a politician, and a brief delay in meeting Israel's monetary demands is all he is bold enough to ask for. He dares not tell the Jews that there will be no more American money for Israel, now or later. No politician in America is that brave. If we want the Israeli monkey off our backs we must shake it off ourselves. We must let the politicians know that if they vote for even one more dollar of our money to go to Israel, we'll vote them out of office.

Israel's $10 Billion Loan Guarantee Request: MYTHS and FACTS

This is not a $10-billion Housing loan guarantee as originally set forth, but rather a $10-billion-plus-interest "infrastructure gift." The Israeli government has recently changed the ground rules to specify that only 20% of the money borrowed will be used to meet the immediate need of housing for the Soviet Jewish immigrants. Another 20% will be used for job creation. The remaining 60% will be allocated to infrastructure rebuilding. This amounts to a virtual rebuilding of Israel, not simply absorption of the immigrants.

The flood of Soviet Jewish immigrants for which the loans are requested has in fact slowed to a trickle. Israeli predictions of 1 million Soviet Jews resettling in the Zionist nation over five years have proven to be tremendously overstated. At present there are about 350,000 Soviet Jews in Israel. The Ministry of Absorption estimates that half are still unemployed. Many of them view Israel as merely a stopping point, their final destination being the U.S. in most cases. And surely recent events in the Soviet Union do not point to a further "flood" of Soviet Jews to Israel.

Israeli Deputy Foreign Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has declared that it is our "humanitarian responsibility" to "save" the Soviet Jews and provide housing for them in Israel. But Israeli policy is to resettle as many of these immigrants as possible in the occupied territories, thereby tightening the Zionist hold on these areas and displacing the native Palestinian population. Is this "humanitarian"? Israel has also agitated to have other countries–the U.S. and Germany, in particular–to strictly limit the immigration of Soviet Jews, leaving Israel as the only possible destination. In fact, Israeli officials have even appealed to Moscow to prohibit these Jews from going anyplace except Israel. Is this out of "humanitarian concern" for these people?

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir has stated that linkage of the loan guarantees to either his government's policy of creating Jewish settlements in the occupied territories or to the pursuit of peace negotiations is "unconscionable" and has "no justification." The Bush administration has called these Jewish settlements "illegal," and views them as the biggest obstacle to peace in the Middle East. The newspaper Ha'aretz quoted sources close to Shamir, who has vowed never to withdraw from occupied Arab land, as saying he would abandon Loan guarantees before halting settlement. Shamir's priorities are obvious.

AIPAC President Mayer Mitchell told supporters in a recent fund raising letter that "we were not asking the U.S. for one red cent in grant aid. We stressed that a loan guarantee will not take one penny away from domestic programs." Preliminary estimates, however, place the cost of simply administering $10 billion in loan guarantees over 30 years at between $40 and $140 million each year over the life of the loans. This fact does not even address Israel's credit risk or the cost if the Jewish state defaults.

The pro-Israeli lobby claims that the Zionist state has always repaid all loans in full and on time. How can they say this? The fact is, Israel has never defaulted because the vast majority of its loans have been either forgiven, rescheduled at favorable interest rates or aid paid back out of increases in U.S. aid directed for that purpose.

In fact, Congress passed a resolution in 1986 promising that total economic aid to Israel will never be less than the total of its loan commitments.

As a credit risk, Israel has been ranked by the U.S. Export-Import Bank as deserving a D rating on a scale of A to F. Israel's long-term government debt not backed by U.S. pledges has received a "triple-B." the lowest rating, by Standard and Poor's investment index. The likelihood of default on a loan of such magnitude as the one under consideration, then, is greater than ever. Based on an average interest rate of 8.6% for 30-year loan, the cost of default to the American taxpayer would range from $112 to $117 billion.

And this may be just the beginning. Israeli economists estimate this loan to be only a portion of what the Jewish state requires to "absorb" the Soviet Jewish "exodus." Israeli leaders say they need $40 billion to do the job, of which half is provided in the form of contributions from American and other diaspora Jews. The remaining $10 billion will be borrowed from other governments, they say. Conveniently ignored in this scenario is the recent downward trend in Jewish American philanthropic giving and the likelihood of getting loans from other financially-strained governments.

The current federal deficit is conservatively estimated at an astronomical $348.3 billion. If the loan guarantees requested by Israel are authorized or implemented after September 30, 1991, the Credit Reform Act, passed last year to reduce the federal deficit, requires that they be included in the federal budget. What domestic programs Congress would cut to be able to accommodate these loan guarantees to Israel in the budget is anyone's guess.

Even the Washington Post and Wall Street Journal have noted the mockery of U.S. consideration of these loan guarantees to Israel. The Post, in fact, called Israel's bankrupt socialist-welfare system "one of the world's most state-controlled economies outside of the dwindling Communist world." Yet the U.S. has steadfastly refused to consider similar assistance for the Soviet government because it does not wish to support or perpetuate a socialist economy.

NEW AMERICAN VIEW ACTION ALERT

September 1991

At this moment, the pro-Israeli forces are lobbying as never before for the introduction and approval of U.S. Absorption Loan Guarantees to Israel. This legislation would authorize the U.S. government to co-sign Israel's application for private U.S. bank loans amounting to $10 billion, in $2 billion installments over the next five years.

No matter how you approach it, approval of the loan guarantees amounts to a massive outlay of U.S. taxpayer money. We must speak out now against this giveaway!

Israel Has Never Repaid a Cent to U.S.

Dallas, Texas
September 29, 1991

Zionists' Letters supporting U.S. taxpayers' loan guarantees of TEN BILLION DOLLARS for Israel is a classic example that Zionists can make untrue statements and the people are so uninformed they go unchallenged!

TRUTH IS: Israel has never repaid a cent to U.S. with its own money! From 1974 when Israeli payments became due to U.S., Congress passed "Bills of Forgiveness." Before 1978 the U.S. would just increase aid and subtract the payments due and MARK PAID. In 1978 Congress passed a Bill which Sen. Charles Percy (WSJ story) said, "Will make the U.S. responsible for ALL of Israel's foreign debts (not just US) in perpetuity."

In 1985 Congress passed an even neater, for Israel, bill: All economic and military aid to Israel would henceforth be ALL IN GRANTS, NEVER TO BE REPAID! Not even interest, except by US taxsuckers because the US had to borrow the $3.2 BILLION each year to GIVE to Israel. In 1988 the Cranston Bill passed which guarantees that U.S. aid to Israel will never be less than the interest payments on Israel's foreign debt.

In FY 1991, US will pay more than $13 BILLION in interest alone on past aid and interest (compounded annually), and we still owe $130 BILLION as our cost of aid to Israel. And growing each year as new GRANTS AND INTEREST COMPOUND.

Since 1985 Israel has received ALL of its US aid 'up front,' not quarterly as do all other recipients, and no strings attached as to how Israel spends. (There were strings of no new settlements on Arab land on the supplemental $400 MILLION, but Israel ignored.) That 'up front' on the annual $3.2 BILLION ups the interest US taxsuckers must pay by $60 to $70 MILLION more than quarterly aid installments. Both NYT and WSJ (and others) have written that Israel buys short term US Govt. notes or bills with funds not needed immediately, and the US taxsuckers pay Israel interest on our own money. A double whammy!

Zionist Hyman Bookbinder said that Zionists should HELP Americans think what Zionists wanted them to think. These Letter writers do just that.

ACT NOW!

Here's what you can do:

Call Sen. Patrick Leahy (202-224-4242) and Rep. David Obey (202-225-3365). These men are the heads of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on foreign aid and the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations respectively. They are in the position to either shove through or delay indefinitely the consideration of the $10 billion loan guarantee legislation.

Leahy has recently demonstrated his willingness to at least postpone consideration of the loan guarantee legislation, although he said he would support the loan request at a later date. Tell these men at the very least to delay consideration of the loan guarantees at this time. Follow up your brief conversation with a short letter reiterating your message and include a copy of the above fact sheet for background information.

Call your senators and your representative. State your name and where you are from, and urge them to vote against the approval of loan guarantees to Israel. (To phone your congressman, call the Capitol switchboard at 202-224-3121 or 225-3121, or consult a handbook on Congress for specific office numbers.)

Immediately follow up your call with a brief letter. Restate your position. Refer to your call and the copy of our arguments which you will enclose, and remind them that their position on this issue will determine your vote the next time they run for office. (You may write to your senators in care of the U.S. Senate, Washington DC 20515.)

Call your local radio talk shows when the opportunity presents itself, and give a brief rundown on why approval of the loan guarantees would be against the best interests of the U.S.

Write letters to the editors of your local papers outlining the same message.

Monitor the local press. If they are not covering the matter, let them know that you consider it important. Contact the proper people if you find their coverage to be one-sided. Likewise, praise them when you can.

Keep on top of congressional activities on this matter. If deliberations are at a critical point, call. A deluge of well-timed phone calls may make the difference.

Copy and distribute this $10 Billion: Myths and Facts sheet to friends and associates, and urge them to follow the suggestions too. Remember, we can make a difference!

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear George,

Please send me 10 copies of Vol. 19, No. 1 (September 1991). Joe Stano's piece ought to have the widest possible circulation. Incidentally, all the Gentiles I ask what they think about the $10 billion to Israel bristle with fury–except the few (only one) who are so ignorant they never heard of it.

With Best Wishes,
Dr. A.B., New York State

Dear George:

I'm hoping you can spare 10 issues of August 1991 Liberty Bell. Also hoping the check enclosed will cover shipping too. If not put note in package. Some good prospects for your marvelous magazine which has no equal anywhere. Some really outstanding information, even from "Letters to the Editor" and always the incomparable Dr. Oliver.

New subscribers have really no idea how superior Liberty Bell is–they have a great treat coming.

All the Best to the Best.

Mrs. K.N., California

Dear Mr. Dietz,

Enclosed find order for books, check, plus a donation. We find your Liberty Bell a welcome relief in contrast to all the other propaganda that passes for news, literature, drama, etc. However I wonder if our people shall ever awake...

Sincerely yours,
Mr. & Mrs. S.W.K., Oregon

Dear Landsmann;

I have an update on the AIDS situation. Things are moving even faster than I thought in my July letter. The new data comes from the South African financial press. They are concerned about the effect of AIDS on black labor and they obviously quote from the epidemological curve of AIDS which is still being kept secret from the public. Their statistics say that the black population of S.A. will peak at 40 million in 1996 and collapse thereafter. By 2007, despite new births and immigration, the black population is projected to be a dwindling remnant of 13.6 million and those will be nearly all old or young and nearly useless for labor.

AIDS in South Africa has been even more concealed than in America but one datum allows comparison. In S.A. too more than 50% of new cases are now heterosexual. This shows that the U.S.A. and S.A. are at the same stage in the epidemic. This means the data for S.A. applies to American blacks as well. By 1995-6 the black population will peak and then crash. By 2007 it will be a third of the 1996 figure. Something to look forward to! I recently spoke to a worker at a largely black hospital in the Bronx. Over 50% of the emergency admissions now are AIDS carriers.

We had a very instructive set of comedies in New York City just now. First, a black racist professor dated to mention that the Jews control Hollywood and that they were the operators of the slave trade, both true, of course. The Jews set up their usual filthy howling demanding he be punished for un-kosher thoughts, but amazingly, the blacks refused to grovel and obey like white slaves. While the Jews were still reeling about that, came the Crown Heights incident where a speeding Jews ran a red light and ran up on the sidewalk crushing the nigger kids. This led to an anti-Jewish race riot. What set the blacks off was the special treatment and privileges given to the Jews by the police who literally acted as their servants. The police did not arrest the reckless Jew driver. The special Jew ambulance ignored the crushed children and drove off with the slightly injured Jew. Thousands of police immediately arrived to protect the Jews and only blacks were arrested despite Jews throwing rocks and bottles at negro marchers. In Bensonhurst whites were arrested for daring to shout at negro marchers!

Where the comedy comes in is in the actions of the black racist major of Jew York. He didn't dare offend his Jewish owners but he also didn't dare offend his black racist power base. Thus he dithered and ran around like a chicken with its head cut off. Thousands of police were called out but were not allowed to take any action against the black rioters, merely standing as human shields in front of the Jews. Thus, more police were injured than either blacks or Jews. Dinkins then made a big show of visiting the injured black child at the hospital and an injured Jew who was stabbed but totally ignored 5 cops who were in the emergency room after being hit by bricks. Just as funny were the ditherings of the Jews who tried to go into their usual whining act without offending their pet blacks. Meanwhile, all sorts of stories reached the press about the special privileges accorded the Jews. For instance, the main rabbi has a 24-hour-per-day police guard provided him and his family wherever they go. During the riots police captains and officials were ordered around as lackies by the rabbis. During an earlier incident a mob of Jews broke into a police station, injured about 20 cops and destroyed the interior of the building without single arrest being made. All this showed the "poor, persecuted Jews" in a light which, like cockroaches, they prefer to avoid.

Yours truly,
S.R., New York State

Dear Staff:

I have a special problem I need some help with. I am in prison and have come across a very unusual movement. It is led by Pastors Butler and Franklin at the Church of Jesus Christ Christian in Hayden Lake, Idaho. You may condone what this Church is teaching in the name of white unity, I don't know. What is happening that quite a few young white men are being taught complete falsehoods about–Western Civilization, the Whites' origins, the Jews' origins, and the origins of the Bible.

The Church is saying that the Old Testament is the White Man's origin. Now quite a few prisoners are running around like fools saying that they are the true Israelites or Semites that the Bible refers to as God's chosen people. The Bible, as we know it, is one giant misinterpretation, they say. They say Christ was Aryan and all of the Jews of the Old Testament were Aryan. I've read a lot of their literature and I still have not found them calling themselves Hebrews, but to be a Semite and Israelite is to be a Hebrew. The word Jews wasn't used until the mid-point of the Old Testament. I can show them many places proving Christ was a Rabbi (e.g., Matthew 26:49) and a Jew (Matthew 27:11). Or that the Israelite tribes of Judah and Benjamin were Jewish (Jeremiah 52:28, 34:8-14, Esther 2:5). There are many places I could find if I wanted to waste my time proving common knowledge.

A letter from a Nazi member of some rank should put an end to these guys saying things like "Israel is our homeland". If you could maybe offer some "spiritual" advise, that too would be helpful. I'm an agnostic–I don't believe in things that can't be proven or disproven. I like studying about the Vikings and their Gods, Odin, Thor, etc. I'd like to buy your magazine and books but I should save my money. The police may not let me have it anyway. I'd like to join the Nazis of the Klan or both. The Church gets their anti-Semitic literature in because of its religious cover. The letter I hope you will send need not be long. It could just say that the Nazi Party recognizes all people that call themselves Israelite or Semites as Jews. That should shut them up. You could also say that the Bible is not a misinterpretation on this point. I really doubt if they will try and call you a Jewish sympathizer; that is their favorite tactic if you disagree. Thank you.

Sincerely,

THE USA:
WORLD JUDGE?
A Contemporary Study of Past and Present US-Imperialism

Translation of an eight-part series "Die USA als Richter der Welt? Neue Serie zur Geschichte und Gegenwart des US-Imperialismus," published September 14, 1990 - November 2, 1990, by Deutsche National-Zeitung, DZS-Verlag, W-8000 München 60, Federal Republic of Germany.

On their way to standing as world power, none of the nations on Earth have caused a bloodbath comparable to that of the United States of America. The contrast between this and any other nation is so great that it is even immaterial to consider which estimate—the conservative one of 50 million, or the high one of 100 million—most accurately represents the bodies that line the path followed by the North American Empire in the two centuries of its existence. At the same time, no empire in recorded history has concealed its incessant raids with quite as cunning a flood of propaganda as the USA. Beginning with the first extermination campaigns directed at the native Indians in the 18th century, through the so-called crusades against Germany in 1917-18 and 1941-1945, to the now imminent armed encounter with Iraq, it has allegedly always been only 'just' wars which the American Empire has waged. Today, more than half the world must obey the orders of the White House and Wall Street. But the zenith seems to have been passed. There are increasing signs of decline, especially of internal decay, as is typical of empires that deteriorate to infirmity. But there is still enough strength left to do great damage.

Anti-Americanism?

As a relative majority of American citizens are of German descent, the Germans themselves have particular cause to differentiate carefully between, on the one hand, the war and Holocaust policies and the aggressive dollar-imperialism pursued by small power cliques, and the great majority of the American population on the other hand. Anti-Americanism directed against the American population would be not only an injustice itself, as the assignment of collective guilt is immoral. Brought to bear by the Germans, it would also be a national, masochistic perversion.

It was not the 'ordinary settlers' (who in a great, admirable feat opened up and made arable the great American vastness, and of whom a great many came from Germany) who were to blame for the extermination of the American Indians. The great country would have been large enough by far for the long-established native peoples as well as the new arrivals. Rather, it was the ruthless, unconditional claim to power of the small so-called elites that brought about the annihilation of the Red Man's nations.

The War-Mongers

It was not the ordinary American—the farmer of German descent in the Mid West or the Irish barkeeper in Boston or the shopkeeper of Chinese extraction in San Francisco—that longed for America's involvement in both the World Wars to Germany's detriment. Quite the contrary—in both cases, the vast majority of the American people were fundamentally opposed to the involvement of the American armed forces. It required colossal deceptions, and propaganda to the value of a few billions, to put a substantial part of the American population into a warring mood. Cue words: the provocation of the Lusitania and Pearl Harbour incidents. What ever prominent person nevertheless opposed the course towards war pursued by Presidents Wilson and F.D. Roosevelt was often ruined economically—which, due to the inadequate social network of the States, meant the end—or sometimes simply shot by persons unknown (of course). When it was a question of resistance by ordinary citizens—'the man in the street'—such as, for example, the dock workers of the Second World War—the leadership of the 'model country of democracy' even allied itself unscrupulously with the world's most despicable villains, the Mafia, in order to tread out the embers. The Roosevelt Administration's co-operation with the Mafia during the Second World War ranks among the greatest blots on the not-so-very-clean slate of the White House bosses.

The ruling elites in the USA have perfected the art of mass propaganda. Anyone who is capable of convincing the people of a profound difference between Pepsi and Coke is no less a master of his art than those who led the masses to believe in the visions they evoked of a threat to America by the German Wehrmacht in World War Two (Hitler never even achieved the crossing of the narrow English Channel to the end of defeating Great Britain), or those who succeed in persuading public opinion that Panama's Noriega needed to be crushed because of the drug threat he posed (whereas the real overlords of drug traffic are established in New York, etc.), or those who now make their audiences believe that Iraq, a military dwarf compared to the US with its arsenals cram-packed with ABC-weapons[1], also represents a threat to Mr. and Mrs. Brown in Alabama.

Political naivety may well be helpful to the propagandists of war. Is that the reasons why the Germans make up the relatively largest sector of the American population? As the satirist Shaw put it: "The Germans are a well-organized nation. They have the smartest men of science and most simple-minded of politics." So it is perhaps due to the large German component of the population that it is said of the Americans that already in infancy they have a 12-year-old's grasp of politics, but then that's the way it stays for the rest of their lives.

No-one can say for certain how many Indians lived in the territory of the present-day United States when American imperialism began with its Holocaust on the Red Man. There were perhaps 30 million. If they could have developed relatively undisturbed, as a people have a right to do, there would have been 80 to 100 million of them by the end of the 19th century. But in fact, only 100,000 to 200,000 of them were left. The 'deficit' is the gruesome sum total of the American giga-Holocaust.

Because of their campaigns against the Indians, the Spaniards are portrayed as the Bad Boys of History—a propaganda charge which, in the late 19th century, was pervertedly brought against the Iberians by the United States so that the latter could take their last overseas possessions in America away from them with 'moral justification.'

It is indisputable that the Spanish Empire was also guilty of terrible crimes against Indian nations. But today, umpteen times more people of Indian extraction live in Mexico, formerly colonized by the Spanish, than live in the United States. For each inhabitant with at least one Indian parent, there is one White person in Mexico, but 50 Whites in Canada, and 400 Whites in the USA.

Efficient Killing

The American Final Solution of the Indian Question was carried out under the motto of 'civilizing the savage West,' and that perversion turned into the slogan, 'the only good Indian is a dead Indian.' And in order to increase the number of good Indians, as many as possible had to be dispatched to the happy hunting-grounds. The head-hunt was one of the most efficient means to this end. High rewards were offered and publicly paid. Finally, it proved too laborious, and thus inefficient—un-American, in other words—to collect and count severed Indian heads. From the time of this realization on, it sufficed to produce the head skin—the 'scalp.' Scalping was by no means an Indian invention, but rather an innovation of the American killers trained for efficient murder.

The North American 'Indian Wars' (= extermination campaigns) lasted almost two-and-a-half centuries, with varying degrees of intensity. The American Empire did not even shy away from bacteriological warfare—as well-known cases of blankets infected with deadly pathogens prove. And just as the Western Values Community today is inundated with drugs of all kinds, originating in the United States, and just as British Imperialism in the 19th century overcame the Chinese with drugs in the Opium Wars, so did the cheapest kind of hooch finish off the militarily defeated, demoralized Red Nations.

100 Years Ago...

Exactly 100 years ago, in 1890, Washington waged the last 'Indian War,' against the Sioux. This fight saw a battle at Wounded Knee in South Dakota. About the slaughter there of 'two-hundred fleeing women, children and infants' by soldiers of the American army, a contemporary report of the 'Bureau of Ethnology' states self-critically: "For the researcher into human nature, it is interesting to observe how we condemn the cruelty of other nations and how completely we overlook that which we ourselves are guilty of."

In the last phase of their defence, the American Indians still brought forth good leaders. On orders from Washington, these were killed without exception:

- Sitting Bull was shot for blood money by a traitor from his own ranks;
- Big Snake was clubbed to death with rifle butts in the course of a 'peaceful negotiation';
- Big Foot was left lying wounded in the snow following a slaughter of his unarmed warriors, women and children, and froze to death;
- Little Wolf was imprisoned in a fort and ruined with whisky;
- Captain Jack was hung;
- Chief Joseph died in an American concentration camp.

Faked Pangs of Conscience

An American schoolbook from the 19th century contains the statement: "Germany, England, France, etc.—civilized; The Balkans and eastern Europe—half-civilized; the United States of America—enlightened." But even Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the American Democratic Party, ideologist of that which he considered liberalism, and President from 1801 to 1809, suffered from a guilty conscience: "I tremble for my people when I think of the injustices it has made itself guilty of against the natives." And even this was a lie, in that the man passed all the blame on to 'the people.'

Manifestation of the New Rome

In the Capitol in Washington, the nation's capital city named for its first President, General Washington, the imperial claim of the United States found architectural expression: New Rome! It was left to a German, Thomas Mann, to remark about one of the most significant augmenters of the American Empire, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt: "He had the winning charm of Caesar." And Mann added: "He saw the Western cultural conception realized in a world civilization."

World civilization is a key word to the understanding of American imperialism. It knows no national boundaries, and the immigration nation USA does after all unite, so to speak, all of mankind on its territory. Internationalism as 'national identity.' The catch phrase 'melting pot' is taken from the title of a theater production which the Jewish immigrant to the United States, Israel Zangwill, dedicated to President Theodore ('Teddy') Roosevelt at the start of the 20th century. The play was considered a 'manifestation of Americanism.' However, the frenzy of enthusiasm completely obscured the fact that very soon after, Zangwill 'corrected a misunderstanding': he protested most decidedly against the claim that he also wanted to solve the Jewish problem through amalgamation in the 'melting pot.' Besides, Zangwill wrote many little-known ghetto novels, such as Ghetto Tragedies and The King of the Schnorrers. In 1922, his work Chosen Peoples: the Hebraic Ideal versus the Teutonic appeared in German.

'The Greatest Race.'

Despite the lack of a common popular basis, a strange form of racism with radical claims of elitism took root in the USA. It is the conviction of belonging to the 'greatest race' that 'ever the sun shone on', as the American poet Walt Whitman (1819-1892) put it in one of his poems. Added to this was an unconditional American patriotism which by far eclipsed the much-condemned, flag-waving patriotism of European days largely past. Just recently, a so-called pop-star from Europe was given stage ban in the USA because he wanted to forego the playing of the national anthem before the start of the concert, as it is usual on such occasions (and even at boxing and wrestling matches). US Commodore Decatur (1779-1820) gave expression to this unconditional States-patriotism with the phrase, "Right or Wrong—my country!"

Imperial Doctrines

It is in accordance with American politics emulating the Roman example that Mr. President, the 'Caesar' in the White House, is accustomed to promulgating 'doctrines' with virtually popish claim to infallibility. Two of these doctrines became the basis for American imperialism. One was the Monroe Doctrine, proclaimed in 1823 by President Monroe. The slogan 'America for the Americans' cloaked the intent to exercise complete control over North, Central and South America. The other was the doctrine of President F.D. Roosevelt (in power from 1933 to 1945), which gave Washington the right to intervene anywhere in the entire world, should it be 'necessary.' Roosevelt had the doctrine proclaimed in March of 1941 by his aide and Minister of Justice, Robert Houghwout Jackson: in the 20th century, there could be no question of wars waged in the tradition of times past. Rather, one had to assume a 'universal civil war' which permitted the United States to take sides at their discretion in any conflict occurring anywhere in the world, and to 'adapt their behavior accordingly.' Jackson later served as American Chief Prosecutor at the Nuremberg Tribunal against the German political and military leadership, which he charged with imperialism, among other things, and whose members were hung by the American executioner Woods.

How Mexico was robbed.

Within the century, the United States had managed to expand from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Each and any obstacle was mercilessly removed: more than one hundred Indian tribes, British, French, Spanish, Russian and Mexican rule. 'Punching our opponents to the ground' could be a leitmotif for the American expansion.

An example of US-imperialism is the way in which the southern neighbor, Mexico, was robbed of areas umpteen times the size of Germany. The method used to get Texas from Mexico was two-fold: in the frontier territories, fights were picked with Indians, who then 'had to be' persecuted to the point of complete annihilation on Mexican-Texan soil. In this way, American troops seeped in. Then Mr. Samuel Houston, a close friend of then American President Jackson, appeared on the scene in the Mexican province and placed himself at the head of a so-called 'independence movement.' This movement created an 'independent Texan state,' separated from Mexico, which was then soon swallowed by the United States. A major city in Texas is named for Houston.

The American President Polk—who was so devout as to not only keep Sunday holy, but also to observe the Sabbath (though he was not an Israelite), and whom the Encyclopedia Americana ranks as the 'most imperialistic of all American leaders'—then set to work snatching further territory from Mexico. He had American troops march in there, which met up with Mexican resistance. As "American blood had been shed on the American soil," Polk pushed in Congress for the formation of a punitive expedition of 50,000 heavily armed men. This expedition attacked the militarily weak Mexico and advanced right to the capital city of America's southern neighbor. 1848 saw the Treaty (= dictate) of Guadalupe Hidalgo: besides Texas, Mexico also had to cede to the imperialists in Washington California and the territories of the later American states of Nevada, Utah, Arizona and New Mexico. For Polk, the annexation of all of Mexico was already in the planning stage, but it was finally agreed upon in Washington to, for the time being, just digest the giant spoils of their exploits. Self-denial as virtue.

'Peaceful Purchase of Land'?

The expansion of the American Empire by means of 'purchase' is a study all to itself: considerable parts of today's US territory were acquired for dollars. This may sound extremely Capitalist, but not as bad as military aggression. In American historiography, however, barely the space of a footnote is granted to the fact that these purchases were preceded by massive pressure.

Example: Louisiana. Napoleon wanted to purchase this Spanish-owned province, which at the time was populated (aside from Indians) almost exclusively by French settlers. In the Treaty of 1763, Lousiana had been granted to France. President Jefferson hastened to threaten France with war. Napoleon, who was involved in numerous conflicts anyhow, backed down. Without the French settlers even being asked (and neither the Indians, of course), Louisiana was purchased from France for $15 million—'in blatantly imperialist and undemocratic fashion,' as the American historian Kohn, otherwise an admirer of Jefferson, notes.

Example: Florida. This area was Spanish property. In the same way as Texas later (see previous), the conquest of Florida began with provoked Indian wars. American troops were 'forced' to advance into Spanish territory in pursuit of the 'barbarians.' The Spanish Governor was exiled to Cuba, several Spaniards—who allegedly had collaborated with the Indians—were executed, and by 1817 the area had in actual fact, if not on paper, been taken possession of. The Spanish Crown could consider itself 'lucky' that, afterwards, Washington still paid $5 million in order to cloak its imperialistic act as 'purchase of land.'

Example: Alaska. As early as the American-British War of 1812, Washington considered taking possession of the entire northern part of America. However, because Britain was among the victorious powers of the Napoleonic Wars in Europe, this plan was rejected, and the interest of the United States was henceforth directed at the Russian possessions along the Pacific coast and in Alaska. One waited for a favorable opportunity. This came when Czarist Russia was weakened by the Crimean War. Realizing that his North American territories could not be defended against the impetuous advance of the United States anyhow, the Czar in 1867 declared himself willing to sell Alaska for $7.2 million.

One-Way Street into the 'Union.'

From 1861 to 1865, one of the most dreadful wars in the history of the world raged on North American soil. It claimed half a million lives according to low estimates, more than a million to others. The event went down in history as the 'War of Secession,' or the 'American Civil War.'

Its cause was that the American Southern States took the loudly proclaimed slogans of self-determination seriously and took their leave of the 'Union' in order to attain nationhood of their own. At that point, the joke turned serious. In a brutal four-year war, Washington defeated the Confederate States, which were by far outnumbered in manpower and materiel. Scorched earth, concentration camps, unconditional surrender—all these concepts were terrible reality even then.

It is one of the legends of American historiography that this war was one for the liberation of the Negro slaves. Slavery, which stands as one of the darkest chapters of American history and which claimed the lives of millions of Black men, women and children, played a secondary role, and the Negro Question essentially functioned only as propaganda during the war. In reality, 18671 to 1865 saw a clash over the question over whether, once having belonged to the Union, one could ever again escape the clutches of the American Empire. The result, as Sündermann has aptly phrased it, was "that the United States of America are a republic which a state may join but not leave again."

After the conclusion of hostilities, and after the fatal gunshots at Lincoln—who had been cold and hard-hearted as War President but then was inclined to a conciliatory peace—the hatred against the underdogs found vent. Whoever did not submit absolutely was destroyed economically, and often physically as well. A giant reeducation of the Southern States began. The 'liberated' Negroes were channeled into the industrial North, where a large part of them sank into a new kind of hidden slavery.

American imperialism became ever more greedy, This did not remain without consequences for Europe. Bismarck recognized the dangerous storm front brewing in the USA. On December 2, 1897, half a year before his death, the Iron Chancellor stated: "It is a political necessity to oppose American presumptuousness often and emphatically." Said at a time when most of the persons in power in the Old World had not yet perceived the hissing from the transatlantic nest of vipers.

Twenty years later, in 1917, an American army of millions flooded into Europe. Washington's troops gave the second German Reich, created by Bismarck, its deathblow. And another three decades later, Europe was finished as world political factor. Thanks to the United States.

Following Russia's elimination from the anti-American front in the First World War, the situation looked like a draw, with which the Western world would certainly have been better off. But the American armies under General Pershing, who had beaten down Mexico just shortly before, were the deciding factor against Germany in this struggle of nations. Through its interference in the First World War, the United States, one of the greatest debtor nations of the world, became one of its foremost creditors. In the First World War, the US-bosses made a killing, in the truest sense of the word.

During his term as Chancellor, Bismarck had been deliberately kindly disposed toward the USA. One can assume that the great statesman did not let himself be led by sentimental consideration in this matter, but rather by the realization that it is dangerous to awaken a sleeping lion. The latter, however, in fact had no intention of sleeping at all. In the Franco-Prussian War, 1870-1871, Washington already had flagrantly contravened its proclaimed neutrality. The United States had cheaply sold considerable amounts of old weapons to Paris. The Prussian ambassador in the American capital protested in vain.

Trying to smooth things over, Bismarck continued to be pro-America. As late as 1890 he declared, almost imploringly, on the occasion of a reception of German-Americans: "Germany and North America number among those nations that are lucky enough not to envy one another anything in their Mutual relations." In fact, however, the dollar-imperialists regarded with passionate envy the world markets of the 'economic miracle nation', the German Reich.

Moses Showed the Way.

Between 1790 and 1890, the powers-that-be in Washington had swept aside with force and extortion anything and everything that had crossed their path from 'sea to shining sea', from the Atlantic to the Pacific: the Indians and the Mexicans, the Spanish and the French, the British and the Russians, as well as the Southern States that had had the gall to take the slogans about the right to self-determination literally.

US imperialism manifested itself with an open arrogance that dwarfed even the presumptuousness of the ancient Imperium Romanum and the arrogance of the British Empire. As early as 1765, John Adams, one of the Founding Fathers of the United States, had written: "I have always regarded the colonization of America with reverence and admiration, as a great beginning and a grand plan of Providence for the enlightenment of the ignorant." In 1783, Ezra Stiles brought up the Bible: "Gods's Covenant with the Israelites at the time of Moses was a prophecy of the future prosperity and grandeur of the United States of America." Two years later, Jefferson fell into ecstasy: "Oh God! How little my fellow countrymen realize that they have been blessed with the good things in life like no other people on Earth!" Three years after the Confederate States had been destroyed with fire and sword, a message from President Johnson to Congress stated that the principles of the American form of government would "prove to be strong enough to draw all civilized nations of the world into their sphere of influence." And in his work of principle, published in New York in 1886 and bearing the significant title, Triumphant Democracy, the American Steel King, Andrew Carnegie prophesied the American people:

"The world will soon lie at our feet."

At that time, the Big Money had entered into the pact with American imperialism. Never before had the powers-that-be of business and finance had such enormous influence as in the United States at the close of the 19th century. Shortly before the turn of the century, the future President Theodore Roosevelt noted: "In no other nation on Earth had such immense fortunes been accumulated, in no other nation on Earth did the men that had acquired these fortunes wield such power."

Business tycoons bought politicians and officials as they pleased. There developed an incredible concentration of capital in the hands of a few. Trusts came into being, each of which had more power all by itself than entire nations had elsewhere. A dollarcracy headed the United States. It was the Carnegies and the Goulds, the Morgans, Rockefellers and Vanderbilts who determined the course of political events. Joachim Fernau has described the process as the 'Take-over of Power by High Finance'.

Into the Wide, Wide World.

After the last of the Indian resistance had been wiped out in 'the Interior' (by shooting 15 million buffalo, the Prairie Indians' means of living had been eliminated) and the remainders of the Indians Nations had been crammed into concentration camps (elegantly termed 'reserves'), it was off into the wide, wide world.

The United States subjugated Central America: Puerto Rico and Cuba were appropriated after an arbitrarily initiated war against Spain. Colombia was chopped up, the northern half became an American quasi-colony named Panama. In 1907, the Dominican island republic fell under American control. Haiti was occupied by American troops in 1915, and Nicaragua was subjugated in 1916. Mexico was brought to its knees in the course of several invasions.

South America fared no better. Partly through military attacks (e.g. in Chile in 1891-1892 and Venezuela in 1902-1903 respectively) and partly through economic penetration, the half-continent was turned into a half-colony.

Attempts were made on the Pacific-Asiatic regions as well. As early as 1854, Japan had been forced to open itself to US trade. The Hawaiian Island became an American colony in 1893, followed in 1898 by Guam and in 1899 by Samoa as well as the Philippines. Washington participated actively even in the division of China into 'spheres of influence' of foreign powers. The African nation of Liberia came under 'American supervision' in 1919. American intervention troops tried to rake in parts of the 'bankruptcy estate' of the collapsing Czarist Empire, half a century after Washington had acquired Russia's North American possessions cheaply by means of a purchase taking advantage of the Czar's weakness following the Crimean War.

At the beginning of the 1930s, the sphere of influence of dollar-imperialism comprised an area many times that of the USA. Now the colonial powers of France and Britain were the primary obstacles in Washington's path to being the center of a world superpower. And Japan as well as the again-powerful German Reich suddenly appeared as unwelcome competitors. It was necessary to find a way to kill several birds with one stone: destruction of the European empire abroad as well as the suppression of Germany and Japan. Those in power in the USA put a man into the White House who was capable of this: Franklin Delano Roosevelt, on whose death in 1945 the inimitable German writer Thomas Mann praised: "He had the winning charm of Caesar."

Smokescreen of Propaganda.

Behind a smokescreen of slogans such as 'democracy' and 'right to self-determination', the United States, through its intervention in the First World War, rose from a nation ruling the American double continent to an ocean-spanning Great Power. The United States also turned from a nation deeply in debt into the world's greatest creditor, virtually 'overnight'. Thirdly, some thousands of American bosses had earned their laurels through the suffering of Europe.

Behind a smokescreen of slogans such as 'democracy' and 'right to self-determination', the United States, through its intervention in the Second World War, rose from the status of a Great Power to that of a Superpower. Beside the unwelcome economic competitors, Germany and Japan, the world empires of Britain and France—such a hindrance to dollar-imperialism—were also practically finished in 1945. Again, some thousands of American bosses had earned their laurels through the suffering of peoples and nations.

The Master

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Lord of the White House from 1933 to 1945, proved to be master of every kind of propaganda. Never since Gaius Julius Caesar had a potentate known as well as he how to wrap brutal imperialistic goals in velvety-soft slogans. Mr. President FDR was the most outstanding PR-man whom the clique of high finance and big business had ever placed at the top.

He declared that it was necessary to bring Germany and Japan down in order to create a 'Just World Order'. It is well known what this Just World Order then looked like: an enormous Holocaust committed against the vanquished, division and subjugation of numerous peoples, some 200 wars since may 8, 1945, in at least half of which the United States were directly or indirectly involved. The overall balance of the Just World Order: between 40 and 60 million casualties, far more than 100 million injured and maimed, a quarter billion displaced persons. Not included in this balance is the most terrible product of the spirit that prevailed in 1945: 40,000 children starving to death every day in the Third World (earlier, Africa, for example, could easily feed itself and was even an exporter of agricultural products), as well as some 10,000 children who are killed in the womb every day in the so-called First World. These 50,000 children dying every day are no 'regrettable accident' or 'coincidence', but rather first and foremost the result of the Just World Order promised by Mr. Roosevelt.

Considerable Dramatic Talent

On April 13, 1940, Roosevelt proclaimed "the right of small nations to independence and territorial inviolability and unhindered self-government." The President's theatrical achievement, not to blush red as a beet or to burst out laughing at such hypocrisy during the declaration of this slogan, which is exactly the opposite of what the USA do in practice, remarkable.

On January 6, 1941, Roosevelt vowed that America would implement the 'four freedoms': "The freedom of speech and expression of opinion—everywhere in the world. The freedom of everyone to serve God in his own way—everywhere in the world. The freedom from poverty—everywhere in the world. The freedom from fear." Soon afterwards, Roosevelt unscrupulously entered into agreements with some of the most evil dictators mankind has ever brought fourth—such as Stalin and the terrible Trujillo, tyrant of the Dominican island republic, and even with the Mafia-bosses whom Mussolini had thrown out of Italy—in order to implement the 'Just World Order' in a 'crusade for democracy'. The issue was that of winning a 'moral order', FDR continued in his statement of January 6, 1941.

God's Own President

"We believe that every nation, no matter how small, has the innate right to its own national traditions," Roosevelt declaimed on March 15, 1941. A slogan issued by the command center of the Holocaust committed against more than 100 Indian nations and tribes! In this speech in March 1941, Roosevelt charged Germany with an insane claim of status as Chosen Nation; he then exhibited delusions of Chosen status of his own: "We again profess loyalty to our democratic republic, an eternal home of freedom, tolerance and dedication to the Word of God."

This matches Roosevelt's message, broadcast on December 9, 1941: "We are determined to devote our energies to the future good of mankind as well as to the present Evil." References to God and divine powers have always been a proven means of cloaking egoistic goals, for God does not deny them. At least not immediately, and not audibly, in words.

On January 6, 1942, the President stated: "To us, victory means the victory of democracy, of the concept of family, of the simple principles of decency and humanity. It means, to us, the victory of religion." And in the same breath, he defended his coalition with the multi-mass-murderer and destroyer of religions, Stalin: "We fight side by side with the Russian nation which has with almost superhuman strength of wlll and courage forced the Nazi hordes to retreat." Mr. President continued: "We fight to cleanse the world of old evils and old illnesses. We are filled with a belief which goes back through all the centuries right to the first chapter of the story of Creation: 'God created man in his own image.' We strive to be worthy of this divine inheritance." The head of the American Empire, built on mountains of corpses, as archangel! Compared to that, even the not-exactly-restrained Dr. Goebbels and his slogans shrink to the proportions of a shy little propaganda-schoolboy.

A Global Chicago

On October 12, 1942, Roosevelt vowed that the Allies did not want to "exercise mass retaliation against the populations of Germany, Italy and Japan." At the same time, Los Alamos was the site of feverish work on atom bombs that were to be dedicated to Germany's cities, but which were then instead dropped on Japan, which had long been willing to capitulate.

"The forces of freedom are on their way!" Roosevelt cried on November 11, 1942. And on February 12, 1943, he declared that the first and foremost requirement was the restoration of the sacred rights of the subjugated nations," to which end it was allegedly necessary to wage a "total war" (!). On July 28, 1943, the Boss of the White House proclaimed: "The united forces of outraged humanity are on their way."

On August 25, 1943, Roosevelt portrayed himself as Police Chief of the entire world: a 'crew of gangsters', he said, were threatening the foundations of decent human behavior. "We have been forced to call the police in order to take care of this gang and thus purge the community of nations of such mobsters." At this same time, Roosevelt already availed himself of the Mafia to put down strikes by exploited American workers.

Two years earlier, in March of 1941, Minister of Justice, Jackson—who was later to be the American Chief Prosecutor at the Nuremberg Tribunal—had already proclaimed the doctrine that the United States, in the role of global policeman, could interfere in any conflict on Earth. The armed conflicts of modern times were not, he said, wars in accordance with the traditional model, but rather world civil wars, for which reason the United States could intervene wherever they deemed such action appropriate.

"We have tried most conscientiously, often even under considerable sacrifices, to spare religious and cultural monuments, and we will continue to do so in the future," Roosevelt declared on March 14, 1944. At the same time, American and British Holocaust-bombers reduced German and other European as well as Japanese Houses of God to rubble.

One day before his death, on April 11, 1945, Franklin Delano Roosevelt drew up an address in which he stated: "We prepare to give the world the greatest gift that one generation of mankind can give it—a lasting peace."

Which leaves the ambiguous question: was the world freed of its bandits and gangsters in 1945?

Miracle Doctor or Rasputin?

Roosevelt's unscrupulous war-time politics are documented by numerous reports by competent contemporaries and by research done by honest historians. Some topical quotations follow: On December 18, 1940, John G. Alexander, the Representative of Minnesota, said: "The American people are to be subordinated to a small group of foreign leaders whose goal it is to plunge us into war." The American historian, Thomas A. Bailey, an admirer of Roosevelt, noted: "Franklin D. Roosevelt repeatedly deceived the American people... he was like a doctor who tells his patient lies for his own good." The American historian, Professor Harry Elmer Barnes: "From the captured Polish and French archives, the Germans compiled no less than five volumes of material containing almost exclusively Roosevelt's war-mongering encouragements to the European nations, primarily Poland and France... The materials on Roosevelt's urging in England would most likely fill more than five volumes." The German historian and publicist, Dirk Bavendamm, who, as writer for Der Spiegel and author of works against 'neo-Fascists', most certainly ought to be exempt from suspicions of patriotically blinded revisionism, writes that following his years of researches, he had attained certainty that in 1938-1939 it was not Hitler who dominated international events, but rather "that Roosevelt imposed the rules of action and that this is exactly where the deeper reason for the early outbreak of the war and eventually also for Germany's defeat is to be found." Bavendamm continues: "America's liberal-democratic internationalism, which Roosevelt unleashed, proved to be the most powerful force of this century... The rise of the United States to the status of nuclear superpower is the chief reason for the crisis of the international system since the turn of the century."

On June 21, 1941, the American archbishop, Francis J.L. Beckmann, raised serious accusations against war-mongers in Washington: "The mendacious tongues of hypocrites won out. They have maneuvered us diabolically to the brink of war... The present conflict is not a 'holy war' but a war of one imperialism against another, in which godlessness is present on both sides. It is no crusade for Christianity or democracy, despite all the high-sounding phrases."

Vogel's Vision

Dr. Karl Otto Braun, German diplomat in the Second World War and contemporary historian ever since, commented as follows on 'Roosevelt-glorification': "For more than forty years now, a particularly bellicose regime has been perfumed to best appeal. The conviction that what we are faced with is a gigantic game of camouflage whose aim it is to distract us from the shocking truth grows ever stronger. We know today that Roosevelt wanted to kill two birds with one stone: the two birds were Hitler and Churchill, for Roosevelt's course was set for a shared American-Soviet world government, for a 'Coca-Cola-Vodka World Government, so to speak. As early as December 10, 1940, the American industrialist Virgil Vogel had stated in an address in Hollywood, before the 'Union of Investment Banks', that at any rate, the short-term goal would be to get one's hands on the scepter of the British Empire. A prophetic prediction."

"Talent for War-Mongering Propaganda"

After the war, Benjamin Colby, who had been the editor of the pro-Roosevelt New York Times during the 1930s, became a severe critic of the American intervention in WWII. He noted: "Whatever Hitler's intentions may have been, conquering England was not one of them, and attacking the United States even less so. That the Americans could be talked into believing in a threat posed to them, to the extent that they could be driven into war, shows the President's talent for war-mongering propaganda. Not only did he think up our war propaganda but also—and this is even more serious—brought about the situation which made war inevitable... The Americans had no idea that less than two weeks before Pearl Harbor, President Roosevelt and his aides had discussed the problem of 'how to manoeuvre Japan into firing the first shot.' And neither did they know that Roosevelt had stated to Churchill that the United States would go to war against Japan even if they were not attacked. As far as Germany was concerned, the American people did not know that at the Atlantic Conference in August 1941, the President had issued orders to American ships to provoke incidents on the Atlantic which would justify war. The German declaration of war was essentially just a long-postponed acknowledgement that the United States were already at war."

The American publicist, Colonel Curtis B. Dall, former son-in-law to President Roosevelt, wrote in his book American War-Time Policy[2] that there is no doubt that "the world financial powers in New York, London and Paris wished primarily to use the Second World War to throttle Hitler's flourishing barter system before it could affect the world market." He continued: "For a long time I believed that Roosevelt developed many ideas on his own and for the good of his people. But that was not the case. The greatest part of his thoughts, his political 'ammunition', so to speak, was carefully prepared for him by the CFR One-World Financial Power Group. Brilliantly and with great zest, he then eagerly carried this 'ammunition' to an unsuspecting target, the American people." The CFR (Council on Foreign Relations) was a committee of influential financiers and politicians with headquarters in New York.

"I Take it Back"

The American politician, Hamilton Fish, for 25 years a member of the U.S. Congress Committee for External Affairs, wrote: "On December 8, 1941, I gave the first radio speech that was broadcast directly from the Congress, and stood up decidedly for the war against Japan. Today, I publicly take back this my speech due to historical proof which became known only later. I am convinced that not only the American people, but everyone who is interested in historical truth, has the right to find out the naked truth, which is that Roosevelt incited Japan to war by provoking that country 10 days before Pearl Harbour with a war ultimatum which was kept strictly secret. In violation of the American Constitution, he had kept this secret from the American people and even from Congress... Representative Clara Boothe Luce was right when she said that President Roosevelt lied us into the war via the Japanese back-door in order to take up arms against Germany."

In his work, The crime of Our Age, the American Pastor L.A. Fritsch wrote: "Did our nation, with its 'free' press, know that for more than six months, Roosevelt waged a provocative war of aggression against Germany and Italy, without any declaration of war? Did our people know that Roosevelt and his collaborators consciously and deliberately caused the catastrophe of Pearl Harbour so as then to be able to face his nation and demand revenge for this so-called 'treacherous attack'? Was America sufficiently informed that it was not an issue of an 'ideological' war, but rather of pure egoism, greed and power politics on the part of the Roosevelt Administration?"

"The Whore and The Imperialist"

The historian, Professor H. Gordon of Great Britain, sees an historical continuity in American imperial politics: "From the Roman Empire through the British Empire to the rising Empire of the American, to whom the entire world would ultimately be subject." Since 1937, Roosevelt had actively fanned the flames of war in Europe. The American public did not suspect "that in the fall and winter months of 1939, the President had caused several European attempts to achieve a peace compromise to fail." Gordon: "Even before the first full session of the UN could beheld, Roosevelt died of a stroke on April 12, 1945. And this 'Christian soldier' died in the arms of his mistress, Lucy Winthrop, née Mercer, with whom he had an intimate relationship since the 1920s. The whore and the imperialist are a significant and united symbol of the work of a man who would have been able like none other to play the role of a true mediator in the world."

Even the contemporary historian, Lothar Gruchmann, though bound by reeducation doctrines, cannot help realizing: "Neither the Nuremberg Trials nor the captured political and military documents of the Axis Powers brought any proof of a military threat to the American continent between 1939 and 1945... On the contrary, Hitler strove to keep the United States out of the European War."

The American diplomat, Tyler Kent, wrote: "Roosevelt was looking for a cynical way out. He realized that for the United States, which were protected on either side by vast oceans, an expensive war in which the fighting ad the dying were to be left up to foreigners would be the ideal means to give the economy a boost. Consequently, as early as the 1930s he secretly supported just those forces in Europe that were for an open war against National-Socialist Germany... Even before the start of the war, it was decided in the Council on Foreign Relations that war would be waged against Germany.

The American flying ace, Colonel Lindbergh, who later was promoted to General, wrote in 1941: "We have been led towards war by a minority of our people. this minority has power. It has influence. It has a loud voice. But it does not represent the American people."

"Powers That Make Fools of Us"

When President Roosevelt began heading for war, numerous other public figures of the United States beside Lindbergh urged that Washington ought to worry about the injustices cluttering up its own back yard rather than involve itself in far-away Europe. the American journalist and author, Henry Louis Mencken, wrote: "If it is absolutely necessary to crush totalitarianism, then for Heaven's sake let us begin in Cuba, in Brazil, Mexico, Santa Domingo and In Mississippi." On August 5, 1946, Mencken noted in the magazine, Life: "The British would never have devised the Second World War if they had not been certain of Roosevelt's help."

On April 27, 1941, Senator Gerald P. Nye—who since 1934 had headed the investigating committee for American participation in the First World War— stated: "We are being made fools of by the same powers that made fools of us in the world war. Through deception, we are made to believe that we can bring order into the chaos of Europe... If ever we become involved in this war, it will be described by future historians only with the title 'The President's War'."

On April 4, 1941, the American cardinal, William O'Connor, said: "I know the people want to keep out, but the government seems to ignore their wishes—while still speaking of democracy. Certain secret manoeuvres are taking us ever closer to war. It is not fair of a government which calls itself democratic to act like this."

Did Germany want to attack the United States? The following is the opinion of the American Professor of International Law, Frederic A. Sanborn: "Tons and tons of German archives, their most secret plans, memoranda and correspondence fell into the hands of the victors at war's end! These documents were examined and studied painstakingly for months by dozens of investigating officials, in the search for any trace of proof that could be presented to the Nuremberg Tribunal. After long and meticulous searching it became evident that nowhere in those papers proof of any sort of German plans for an attack on the United States was to be found. Quite on the contrary, examinations of these secret papers revealed the embarrassing fact that many months before Pearl Harbour, Hitler had done everything in his power to avoid a conflict with the United States.

Roosevelt's Symphony of Death

The American historian, Charles Callan Ransill wrote: "The leitmotif of carrying the ideals of the United States out into the world became fashionable again after 1933, and with Roosevelt acting as maestro, the old, macabre rhythms made their way into the homes of the people. In 1941, his orchestra of death waited with bated breath for the sign to begin the new symphony. He had hoped that Germany would supply him with his motive, but Hitler refused to help him with a few introductory aggressions."

Evidence for Roosevelt's shared guilt for the catastrophe of Pearl Harbour, which was, after all, the trigger of the war, has been compiled by the American Rear Admiral, Robert A. Theobald, who was at that time Chief of the 1st Fleet of destroyers of the Pacific American forces. He wrote: "Since the American people were so opposed to participation in the war, one of the Axis Powers had to be forced to draw the United States into the fray, and this in such a way that the people would be roused to unanimous conviction of the necessity of battle."

And finally, the testimony of the American general, Albert C.

Wedemeyer, the Commander of the American troops in China during the Second World War: the Roosevelt Administration had been determined "to get us into the war through the back door." The soldiers in Pearl Harbour, he stated, were sacrificed to this end. Roosevelt "maneuvered America into the war with his openly no longer neutral actions against Germany and with his decisive ultimatum to Japan." With that, the United States became involved in a war "whose consequences could not but have been the spread of totalitarian tyranny over greater parts of the world than Hitler could ever have dreamed of conquering."

The moral of the story finally became clear in August of 1945, when the Powers-that-be in the United States dropped the atom bombs on a Japan that had long declared itself willing to surrender—and those bombs were not by any means dropped on uninhabited areas, which would have been quite sufficient as a demonstration of new atomic might, but on two major cities, an act which brought gruesome death to hundreds of thousand of innocent civilians, mostly women and children. A short time later, at the tribunals in Nuremberg and Tokyo, the United States once again set themselves up as World Judge...

Uncle Sam's Cane

In the Middle East, Washington has now amassed the mightiest attack force since the landing of the Western Allies in Normandy in 1944. That the United States do not dare to go up against Saddam Hussein on their own and also need to enlist their former chief enemies, Germany and Japan, to aid in financing their adventure, shows first of all the inadequacy of the American ground troops which became apparent especially in the Vietnam War, and, second, the more than precarious American budget situation. The all-powerful Uncle Sam needs a cane to walk. His limp is an unmistakable sign of the fact that so far anyone who wished to devour the world has choked on it.

Most of the nations which presently 'help' the United States in the Middle East by supplying troops are not doing this voluntarily, but under the sometimes gentle, sometimes brutal pressure exerted on them by Washington. This was already the case in the Second World War, when the United States pummelled dozens of countries, especially those of Latin America, into the war against Germany.

Other nations that send troops into the Middle East do not do so because they like the (not all that pleasant) looks of the Wall Street bosses, but rather because they do not want to leave the field entirely to the USA—they want to have their say as well. This is another parallel to the Second World War, where many nations joined the so-called Anti-Hitler Coalition only after the fortunes of war begun not to favour Germany and after it had become clear that a refusal to participate in the war against Germany would be avenged with painful 'punishment'. The classic example for this is Turkey, which did not join the ranks of Germany's opponents until the very end, because Ankara had been threatened openly with Stalin's theft of the Dardanelles, and because Turkey wanted a voice in the then newborn United Nations, which one could at that time join only as Germany's opponent in the war.

In this light, it is complete and utter nonsense to say that the United States now stand at the head of a 'voluntary coalition' of the nations of the world in their fight against the evil Saddam Hussein.

General Schwarzkopf and the Middle East

The name of the Commander-in-Chief of the American armed forces in the Middle East, Norman Schwarzkopf, Jr., is like a synonym for Washington's imperialism. Some sources claim that the General is of German extraction, some say he is Jewish.

Since 1942, his father, Norman Schwarzkopf, Sr., was in command of the police forces of the regime of the Shah of Iran. To give some historical background: Reza Pahlewi, the Shah of Iran since 1925, was pronouncedly pro-German and did not want his country to enter into the war against Germany. In August of 1941, Soviet and British troops invaded Iran and divided the country amongst themselves—a war of aggression and a breach of international law for which there was never a Tribunal à la Nuremberg. The pro-German Shah was forcibly deposed and driven out of his country, into South Africa. In his stead, his 22-year-old son, Mohammed Reza Pahlewi, was placed on the throne. He was the Shah who was overthrown by the Ayatollah in 1979. In the further cause of the Second World War, Iran was abused as one of the most important avenues for the American supply of arms to Stalin. In order to keep the upper hand over the Iranian population, which suffered badly under the foreign occupation, President Roosevelt sent a legion of CIA agents as well as specialists for 'internal security' to Persia. These 'troops for the preservation of order' were headed by the father of today's Commander-in-Chief of the American troops in the Middle East.

In 1941, shortly before the attack on Iran, Iraq had also fallen victim to Allied aggression. The Head of State, Prime Minister Rashid el-Gailani—also pro-German, and the leader of the patriotic Arabian-Nationalist Brotherhood—was forcibly deposed, and replaced with a puppet government directed by British bayonets. For this further flagrant violation of international law and the right to self-determination, which was supported partly by the American policy, there was also no Tribunal to bring the chief war-criminals to justice. The family of today's Iraqi President Hussein, actively supported the pro-German el-Gailani.

The third Middle East country which became a victim of Allied aggression in World War Two was Egypt. The king there, King Faruk I, who had been in power since 1937, strove for friendship with Germany and Italy, against the British colonial power. The later Egyptian Head of State, Anwar el Sadat, who as an Arabian nationalist worked with Rommel, reports in his memoirs how that situation developed. "On February 4, 1942, the British Ambassador had the royal palace surrounded by British tanks and gave Faruk an ultimatum under whose terms he either had to accept the demands of the British, or to abdicate." Faruk yielded to brute force. Sadat: "That was a humiliation of Egypt, of the army and the people—and through the colonial power!" The Egyptians still refused for a long time to sign the declaration of war against Germany. But following further British and American pressure, the goal was finally achieved in February of 1945.

These were the methods of Germany's oh-so-moral opponents in the War—here described using the example of the Middle East. One could paradigmatically also draw on other regions of the world for comparison.

CIA-Managed Coup

Back to Norman Schwarzkopf, Sr. In 1948 he left the American-subordinated police forces of the Shah and became Commander of the American military mission in Teheran. Barely had the stranglehold of the Western imperialists relaxed a little before nationalist forces arose in Iran which wanted to shake off the foreign influence. Mohammed Mossadegh gained power in 1951 in the capacity of Prime Minister. Mossadegh put the British- and American-dominated oil reserves under State control and set an independent course for his government. The experiment met its end in 1953, in a coup stage-managed by the CIA—and carried out with the participation of the American military mission led by Schwarzkopf, Sr. –

Mossadegh was imprisoned and afterwards was kept constantly under police surveillance.

Horror in Indochina

Norman Schwarzkopf, Jr. won his spurs as Major in the Vietnam War. For one-and-a-half decades, the American military machinery raged in Indochina. The man chiefly responsible for this imperial adventure, which brought death for not only 58,000 brave GIs but also for millions of civillans, was the glorious John F. Kennedy. Originating in an Irish family which had been rather insubordinate to the Wall Street warmongers (his father, Joe, who at the outbreak of war in 1939 was the American Ambassador to England, urged neutrality), John F. Kennedy served as compliant White House Helper towards the fulfillment of the goals of dollar-imperialism. Under Kennedy's rule, the CIA arranged a bloody coup in South Vietnam, which had as its victim the ruler Diem there, who admittedly had been anything but democratic in the Western sense but who definitely had brought a certain degree of stability to the region following the end of French colonial rule. On the orders of Kennedy and his successors, hundreds of thousands of American soldiers flooded into Indochina, allegedly for purposes of defence of the Western Values Community. Gradually, Vietnam's neighboring states were also drawn into the massacre, finally even Cambodia, by virtue of the American invasion of 1975. the soundness of America's sublime goals was revealed in 1975, when the GIs unceremoniously left Vietnam—a Vietnam bleeding from thousands of wounds, and a Saigon which under American rule had degenerated into a gigantic brothel and drug hell. To this day, the Vietnamese, Cambodian and Laotian people suffer severely under the American 'defense of the Western Values Community'. Not only were hundreds of thousands of children crippled by the American terror-bombing (even though the Second World War had already proven the military senselessness of such Holocaust-bombing), but further thousands of children were born severely deformed because the United State had employed chemical weapons on a gigantic scale. By the way, when Washington withdrew from Vietnam in 1975, it took with it the results of the oil explorations in the South China Sea along the Vietnam coast; however, they left behind the list of names of the South Vietnamese collaborators so that the victorious Communists should not have any trouble in 'disposing' of one after the other—tens of thousands altogether. Whoever can call the United States their friend needs no...

Stars Upon Stars...

In the meantime, our friend Norman Schwarzkopf added stars upon stars to his epaulette. In October of 1983, when Washington initiated 'Operation Urgent Fury' (that was the code name for the attack on Grenada), Schwarzkopf advanced to the position of Deputy Commander of all units taking part in the attack on the Caribbean island republic. It goes without saying that the invasion of Grenada was, of course, only a just American war for purposes of defending the Western Values Community, in order to protect, Dallas, Denver and New York from the menacing threat of ..., ..., and ... (the reader is welcome to fill in the blanks with the usual propaganda phrases).

So now Mr. Schwarzkopf is Chief of the American troops encircling Iraq. The show must go on...

"Chosen by Good to Rule the World"

In comparison to the extreme, all too often downright insane presumptions of selectedness and being chosen to rule the world that are exhibited by leading Americans, even the shrillest claims of Old World chauvinists sound like a kitten's contented purring. One could compile a Britannica-sized encyclopedia of statements of the American 'élite' with respect to America's status as 'God's Chosen', about its alleged divine mission to rule the world, and about the 'inferiority' of other nations and countries. What follows are just a few examples of thousands:

Dean Acheson, American Secretary of State from 1949 to 1953, responsible for America's enormous relief shipments ('Lend-Lease') to Stalin during the Second World War, presumed to declare: "The United States enthusiastically don the cloak of a global leader."

John Adams, the second President of the United States, perceived "the founding of the American nation" as "a glorious plan of Providence for the enlightenment of the rest of mankind." Also, "I have always regarded the colonization of America with reverence and admiration, as a great beginning and a grand plan of Providence for the enlightenment of the ignorant."

Albert Jeremiah Beveridge, Senator from Indiana and for decades an important figure in the US Congress, proclaimed near the end of the 19th century: "Not in vain has God for an entire millennium raised the Teutonic and English-speaking people to conceited and lazy self-admiration. He has made us the highest organizations on Earth so that we will bring order wherever chaos reigns. He has enabled us to rule so that we may lead the barbaric and senile peoples. Without such a force, this our world would sink back into barbarism. From amongst all the races, God has made the American people his Chosen people." Beveridge also pointed out the dovetailing of economics and politics. "With our merchant ships we will ply all the oceans, and we will create a combat marine that corresponds to our greatness. The American law, the American order, the American civilization will take root on these shores that to this day were bloodstained and lived in the darkness of ignorance, yet they will be blessed and happy under the influence of this power that issues from God." And because it is so deliciously spine-chilling, one more quote from Beveridge: "Fellow Americans! We are God's Chosen People. His hand held us. Abraham Lincoln was His servant, and His was the altar of freedom which the Boys in Blue erected on a hundred smoking battlefields. His great goals are revealed in the advance of our flag. We cannot withdraw from any piece of land where Providence has unfurled our banner. It is up to us to save freedom and civilization."

"The World Will Lie at Your Feet"

Andrew Carnegie, the American 'Steel King', proclaimed to his people in 1886: "The world will soon lie at your feet; the American Constitution will be regarded more and more as model which new nations will adopt and old nations will try to attain."

Mr. Creveccor, American preacher and publicist at the end of the 18th century, phrased the American credo as follows: "Wherever one looks, mankind is oppressed by tyrants, absurd laws and misguided Churches. But here we have restored the dignity of man. Here, a new race is being born. Here, man is free."

Stephen A. Douglas, Senator from Illinois, proclaimed in the mid-1800s: "Extend, increase and expand—that is the law according to which our nation is set up. We cannot permit that this great Republic be confined by borders."

Thomas Jefferson, one of the 'Fathers' of the American Constitution, third President of the United States, was not exactly modest either: "We are summoned to act as a bulwark against ignorance and barbarism. The old Europe will lean on our shoulders and, shackled as it is to clerics and kings, hobble along beside us the best it can." Mr. Jefferson continued: "The world has entrusted us with the keeping of the sacred flame. And the sparks that fly from it will ever serve to kindle it in other regions of the Earth." In 1785, Jefferson waxed ecstatic: "Oh God! How little my fellow countrymen realize that they have been blessed with the good things in life like no other people on Earth!"

Andrew Johnson, 17th President of the USA, who was responsible for the vile treatment of the defeated Southern States, was of the conviction—expressed in 1868 in a message to Congress—that "the principles of the American form of government will prove to be strong enough to draw all civilized nations of the world into their sphere of influence."

Lyndon B. Johnson, that President who further deepened the involvement of his country in the Indochina conflict, where it was already mired knee-deep, dispatched the GIs to Vietnam with the words: "The hopes of many peoples and nations accompany you to the field of battle." And, apparently considering his office to be synonymous with that of High Priest, he added: "God Bless you!"

"The Right to Moral Leadership of the Planet"

John F. Kennedy, whose propagandists even enabled him to become the stylite of the Left, saw "the bright beacon of hope for all the world" shining in his country. It was thus only logical that he claimed "the right to moral leadership of this planet" for the United States.

William L. Langer, historian at Harvard University and supplier of propagandistic key-words for Kennedy, noted in 1960: "The United States must at all times exert their influence in the name of a world order concurrent with American ideals, interests and security. The Americans can do this without egotism because they are convinced that such a world order is the hope of all mankind."

Henry Luce, one of the most powerful of American media bosses, in the 1930s proclaimed his nation as the "good Samaritan of the world." Also, "In 1919 we were offered a golden opportunity, as it has not occurred before in recorded history, to assume the leadership of the world. With out concerted help, we must succeed under Roosevelt [F.D. Roosevelt, President from 1933-1945; ed.] where we failed under Wilson [Woodrow Wilson, President from 1913-1921; ed.]. Within the vision of America as chief guarantor of the freedom of the seas, as the leader of world trade, is contained the potential for such giant human progress that it makes one giddy. Each and every single one of us is called upon to create the first American century." The news magazine Time, from which Luce's media empire had grown, stated in 1961: "To maintain order, and to be able to trade profitably in a free world, the United States must control the seas and serve as the nations' coast-guard."

"Noah's Ark of Freedom"

Captain Mahan, President Theodore Roosevelt's closest advisor, wrote at the turn of the 19th century: "In our childhood, we only bordered on the Atlantic; in our youth, we extended our border to the Gulf of Mexico; our maturity, today, finds us at the Pacific. Do we not have a right, even a calling, to further progress into every direction?"

Herman Melville, the 100th anniversary of whose death was celebrated in a big way in the United States, the man who is considered the epitome of the American novelist, proclaimed: "We, the Americans, represent a unique people, the nation of Israel in our time; we carry the Ark of Freedom of this world."

Richard M. Nixon, President from 1969 to 1974, showed himself convinced that his nation, "led by God", could give the world more than any other: "We can give the world spiritual leadership." It was also a given for him that the peoples of the Earth yearn for the American 'way of life': "Whether we like it or not: we were entrusted with the responsibility of leadership. National pride without the impulse to share that of which we are proud, is selfish." An altruist in the White House!

Ronald Reagan, on the occasion of his inauguration, proclaimed that "God, who showers his blessings upon this nation, has always watched us and led us as the Promised Land." The USA, he said, are the "especially chosen" nation, as well as that "which is the last great hope for that kind of man who has never meant to be second-best, but rather a golden hope for all of mankind." Reagan knew why the United States had been able to rise to the status of as superpower: "Because Americans are far more religious than the people in any other country." On the 100th anniversary of the erection of the Statue of Liberty in New York, in 1986, Mr. Reagan recalled to his nation how it all began: "A small group of Puritans huddled on board, and then John Winthrop, who later became the first Governor of Massachusetts, reminded his brethren that they must hold fast to their faith and stand by God, that the eyes of the world were on them and that they must never give up the mission God had assigned to them, and that they must be a light for all the nations on Earth—a shining city on the hill."

"As in the Time of Moses"

Adlai Stevenson, American politician, co-founder of the UN and NATO, saw the role of the United States as follows: "God has entrusted us with nothing less than the leadership of the free world."

Ezra Styles, American publicist and preacher, proclaimed, following the end of the War of Independence against Britain: "God's covenant with the Israelites at the time of Moses was a prophecy of the future prosperity and grandeur of the United States of America."

Harry S. Truman, who in his capacity as President issued the order to wipe out two defenseless Japanese cities with atom bombs, in 1952 expressed happiness "that America has assumed that role of leadership with which the Almighty God has entrusted us."

Robert Walker, Minister of Finance, had declared 105 years earlier: "Divine power has guided America's expansion, and watches over us and leads us on to our goal, drives us on and has chosen our great and happy nation as model for all the nations on Earth."

Aside from President F.D. Roosevelt, who governed in the White House from 1933 to 1945 "with the winning charm of Caesar" (Thomas Mann), no other American ruler was as much an expert at unctuous talk of world power as Woodrow Wilson, who, with his troops, saw to it that a draw in Europe was prevented and that the order of the Old World (with a stable Germany at the center) was smashed. He challenged American entrepreneurs: "Go out into the world, sell goods with which the world can become happier, and convert the world to American principles." According to Wilson, the interpreter of fate, "Providence has chosen the United States to be the sole idealistic nation on Earth and granted her the prerogative to save the world." Besides, on assuming the office of Governor of New Jersey (a position which he regarded as springboard to the Presidency), Wilson had referred his grousing election assistant, McCombs, to direct connections to the very top: "Don't forget that it was God who has chosen me as the next President of the United States." It is ironic that Woodrow Wilson went down even in European history as the 'Peace President', even though he not only broke the neck of the European continent through his military interference in 1917 but also sent his soldiers off on attacks on Mexico, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Panama, Nicaragua, Cuba, Haiti and Honduras.

"Double Standard With a Clear Conscience"

Finally, a quotation from the American historian Henry Steele Commager of Columbia University of New York: "It is the idea of the moral superiority of the United States and the superiority of her institutions and way of life which enables us to uphold the moral double standard of our international relations with a frank face and a clear conscience." A truly elegant paraphrase of revolting hypocrisy!

The Verdict of the Tormented

When the great American poet, Ezra Pound, who had been committed to US insane asylums for 13 years for having expressed his support for Mussolini, was finally freed in 1958 and moved to Italy, he declared on his arrival in Europe: "Finally I have escaped from a madhouse inhabited by 180 million inmates."

Understandable though the harsh verdict of that tormented man may be from a human point view, it is objectively unjust. Not only numerous peoples all over the world, but also the Americans themselves, have become victims of the policies of those cliques in power in the United States.

The Murder Capital of the World

Externally, the United States exhibit gruesome statistics of violence; internally, no less so. In 1990, some 23,000 murders will take place between New York and San Francisco; a new, sad record. A high-ranking police official in Los Angeles has stated: "We have lost the battle for the city."

The American capital city of Washington is not only the political metropolis of the United States, it is also the murder capital of the world. Relative to its population, 25 times as many people are killed there each year as in Berlin. Particularly the drug scene defies description. Sixty percent of all murders in Washington result from drug trafficking.

In San Francisco alone, the number of heroin addicts has risen from some 5,000 in the early 1980s to now more than 10,000. Robert Matano, drug counsellor at Stanford University: "Drug abuse has become so rooted in our society that even heroin is becoming acceptable again. It's frightening."

A study recently commissioned by the UN estimates that large-scale drug dealers earn some $125 billion annually from the America drug market alone. The drug business has in the meantime become part of established Big Business in the United States. From there, organized gangs with the best of connections to the highest political and economic levels see to the drug supply of the entire so-called Western Values Community. Barely had the GIs attacked Noriega's Panama, allegedly in order to eliminate the drug-dealing Panamanian dictator, before the drug market in that Central American nation flourished all the more. If the Bush Administration thinks that it can combat the drug trade with soldiers and bomber planes, then the leathernecks would have to march into New York and detonate their bombs there! The dealers that have launched a major offensive against the youth of the world, that bring death and misery to millions, and make millions in the process, are largely to be found in the United States of America!

Plague Spots of Decadence

The plague spots of decadence are breaking open everywhere in the United States. Nowhere else on Earth are so many children already killed in the womb as in the USA. Reliable estimates conjecture that of every 100 pregnancies in the US, 40 are 'broken off'. Reports such as the following, from the news agency dpa, are commonplace: "NEW YORK. A not quite four-hour-old baby has been thrown into a garbage compacter of a subsidized housing complex in New York City. That the baby survived is thanks only to the keen sense of hearing of the landlord, who at that time was operating the garbage compacter in the building's basement." The abandoning of children and killing of newborns are the order of the day in the slums of New York and other major American cities.

Another typical press report from the Land of Endless Opportunity: "The fourth toddler in nine days sustained fatal injuries in New York on Monday. Nine-month-old Rayon Jamison was hit by two bullets fired through the apartment door."

According to Louis F. Freech, State Attorney in the district of New York South, far more than 1,000 babies are born each year in New York alone which, as result of the flood of drugs, are addicted to 'crack' at birth.

AIDS-Epidemic

At the present time, the United States suffer from a wave of tuberculosis. Last year alone, the number of newly diagnosed cases in New York rose by 10 percent, by 35 percent in neighboring Newark. AIDS, drug and alcohol abuse, and homelessness are cited as causative factors.

The New York area has the greatest concentration of AIDS cases in the world. An investigation by the Federal Department of Health indicated that 8 percent of all patients tested in New York clinics were HIV-positive. At 24 percent, men between 25 and 44 years of age exhibited the highest rate of infection. The AIDS rate determined in New York thus lies above any reported from Africa.

Almost 100,000 Americans have already succumbed to the fatal immune deficiency disease. That is one-and-a-half times the numbers of soldiers who died in the almost ten years of the Vietnam War. At least 600,00, but perhaps as many as 3 million, persons are already infected with the AIDS virus in the United States. The relatively low estimate was given by the Hoover Institute of Stanford University, the high estimate stems from the Hudson Institute in Indianapolis. Washington officially conjectures 800,0000 to 1.3 million infected persons nation-wide.

If the estimate of the Hoover Institute applies, 50,000 acute AIDS cases can be forecast in the USA for 1991. Medical costs will then run to some $4 billion. If up to 3 million are in fact infected, there will be more than 150,000 acute cases in 1991. Costs then rise to some $12 billion.

In New York there are already thousands upon thousands of AIDS orphans—children who have lost at least one parent to the epidemic. According to American press reports, 3 percent of newborns in New York are infected with AIDS. The figures are no less terrible in some other large cities. AIDS is the most common cause of death among New York women aged 25 to 35. In American major cities, in the 18 - 21 age brackets, at least every 30th inhabitant carries the deadly virus.

According to an American military physician, AIDS will also become the most common cause of death among the US armed forces in the coming years. Dr. Redfield states that presently more than 5,000 HIV-positive men are known to be in active service in the military.

Moral Rock-Bottom

Not only the American national debt, which has in the meantime resulted in a barely still functional bureaucracy, and not only the balance of trade, which is chronically on the deficit side and signals the decline of the American economy, but also the collapse of the American health care system testifies unmistakably to the fact that the Empire is standing on the threshold of infirmity in the truest sense of the word. The news magazine US News & World Report, writes that "37 million American are without any health insurance." These people, who gather primarily in the major cities, are not admitted by private clinics, so that they are dependent on the inadequate and totally overcrowded public hospitals, where the patients 'pile up'.

The Bush Administration has commissioned Senator John Rockefeller to investigate the dreadful state of health service and to propose suggestions to its rescue. Rockefeller estimates that health care costs resulting from, among other things, drug addiction, AIDS and criminality will rise from $600 billion at the present time to $600 trillion in the course of the next decade. The Senator foresees a "disaster". Professor Reinhardt, of Princeton University: "The United States have sunk to moral depths such as no other nation in the industrialized world has plumbed. This is a nation that holds mothers and children in contempt and leaves them without any insurance." The scales even fell from the eyes of Augstein's Der Spiegel: "The American century draws inexorably to a close."

The Shine has Come Off

Economically as well, the shine has come off. The dollar is dropping to unprecedented lows. US banks crash by the dozens and leave behind them tens of thousands cheated out of all their savings. The construction industry is shattered. The budget deficit will son rise to $250 to $300 billion. American historian Paul Kennedy: "The consequences of overextension."

Tremendous sums of money must be raised to get even a partial grip on the debts. Social services, as far as they are provided at all, are grinding to a halt. Through its meddling in two world wars, the USA became the world's greatest creditor nation. An illusory boom. Now they are the greatest debtor.

Less and less actually works in this country where two million children leave public school each year without mastering the fundamental cultural requisites, reading and writing. The best example for this dreadful state is the project which has been America's Number One pride and joy: space flight. Since the rocket experts that were shipped over from Germany have passed away or retired, the USA are no longer on the moon—just in the dark.

May God Have Mercy

Consumed by internal decadence, pock-marked by the most severe social and economic ills, the American giant staggers toward his collapse. He can still hold out for the time being only because the USA are a country richly blessed with mineral resources and because in those areas where decadence has not yet completely devoured honor, soul and society, hard-working and industrious people, often of German descent, give their utmost.

History shows quite clearly that tottering Empires tend to military adventures. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan fell into this category. It is quite likely that the USA are presently thrashing wildly about in the death throes of their Empire.

May God have mercy on those peoples and nations that join their fate with that of the rotting American colossus!

DOES THE WEST HAVE THE WILL TO SURVIVE?
That is the obvious question posed by Jean Raspail's terrifying novel of the swamping of the White world by an unlimited flood of non-White "refugees." But there is also a less obvious and even more fundamental question: Must Whites find their way to a new Morality and a new spirituality in order to face the moral challenges of the present and overcome them? THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS is the most frightening book you will ever read. It is frightening because it is utterly believable. The armada of refugee ships in Raspail's story is exactly like the one that dumped 150,000 Cubans from Fidel Castro's prisons and insane asylums on our shores in 1980 — except this time the armada is from India, with more than 70 times as large a population. And it is only the first armada of many. If any book will awaken White Americans to the danger they face from uncontrolled immigration, it is THE CAMP OF THE SAINTS. 'ANTI-SEMITISM':
How to Get Rid of it

Suggestions for a New Approach to An Ancient Problem

by
John Tyndall

A FEW WEEKS AGO I watched a television programme on a subject that everyone would probably agree has had an ample airing over the years, sometimes to the point at which it has appeared that the TV people have an obsession about it. Yes, the programme was about 'anti-Semitism,' an area of human study perhaps aptly misnamed because so much else about it is false and misleading. Anthropologically speaking, Semites are Arabs plus that section of Jewry descended from the original Israelites who inhabited the Middle Eastern region alongside them but who are now heavily outnumbered within their own nation by the descendants of the Khazars, a Turco-Mongoloid people whose roots are in Central Asia.

There may be some who would regard this quest for accuracy of nomenclature as 'nit-picking.' It sometimes is, but not in this instance; the choice of the terms 'Semitic' and 'anti-Semitic' to describe things which do not correspond to those appellations is symbolic of the whole atmosphere in which the subject of 'anti-Semitism' is customarily debated in these times. However, having made this point I will oblige the Jews from here on by using their own terminology, if only because such a phrase as 'anti-Jewishism' sounds clumsy, unfamiliar and distracting.

During the programme to which I have referred, one after another representative of the Jewish and pro-Jewish point of view was shown giving his, or her, definition of the psychology of the 'anti-Semite.' At times the viewer might almost have been led into believing that all this amounted to a genuine exchange of views, in as much as not every explanation of what makes 'anti-Semites' tick was the same. Each had a theory as to the roots of the problem, and the theories varied considerably—thus contributing to the image of an actual 'debate.' The impression of debate was heightened by the fact that non-Jews, as well as Jews, were invited to offer their opinions. But at the end of the programme the rational observer could not help but be struck by the thought that something had been missing from it all. What could that something be?

Barely a half a minute's thought sufficed to reveal what it was. Not in one single case had the producers permitted a contribution to the discussion by one of those maligned persons whom the programme was supposed to be all about: the 'anti-Semites'—or, more accurately, those people who adhered to the theory that the Jewish presence in world affairs was not an unmixed blessing for which all mankind should be thankful.

Surely, in the name of reason, in the name of fairness and objectivity—above all in the name of that procedure for handling human affairs to which the Jews, more than anyone, are supposed to be dedicated, namely 'democracy'—a discussion about 'anti-Semitism' should feature, among others, the 'anti-Semitic' point of view. But no! Not a single word was permitted to be said in support of this.

That very fact, more than any of the opinions aired on the programme, ought to tell us something.

BLISSFUL IGNORANCE

Perhaps I can contribute something to this discussion be speaking as one of the missing people on the said programme, one of the considerable number of speakers and writers around the world whom no doubt this TV feature had in mind when referring to 'anti-Semites' but who are almost never allowed to come on television before a large audience and explain the basis for their attitudes on this question.

As a youngster growing up in the South Eastern part of the outer London suburbs in the early aftermath of World War II, I saw very little of Jews. They were not numerous in my area, and the pursuits in which I engaged myself were not such as to be likely to bring me into contact with the few who did live locally.

When I started to take an interest in politics in my late teens I had no views whatever about Jews or 'anti-Semitism.' I had of course heard about such things in Germany during the Hitler period, but I simply didn't understand what it was all about.

If anyone, however, had suggested to me that a particular race of people, or the members of a particular religion, should be especially ostracised, ill-treated or persecuted merely because of what they were, I would have rejected the idea without a moment's hesitation.

My interest in politics at the time derived from my sense of duty towards my own people, the British people. I felt that the British people were on the way down as a nation. I wanted to lift them up. I wanted them to prosper and recover their former greatness; I had no thought of wishing to do harm to any other people, only to do some good for my people.

As this interest in, and concern for, the future of the British people developed, I came to the point eventually at which I was driven by a compulsion to seek some outlet for political action. This happened in my early twenties, not a very long time after I had left the army, during which I spent long hours reading and thinking about British and world affairs and becoming more and more discontented with the direction in which Britain was heading. Had I known of an organisation which represented my opinions I would have joined it sooner. At last, however, when I was 22 I did find one, and I enlisted in it and started to become active.

Up to this time, my motives were those of pure patriotism. I did not hate any race in particular; if I had any feelings of hate they were reserved for members of my own race who seemed to be happy to commit acts of treason against Britain if it were to their personal advantage to do so.

But as I started to meet people in, or in some way allied with, the organisation I had just joined, I began to come into contact with the theories of 'anti-Semitism.' People would tell me: "If you want to understand what's going wrong with this country, you've got to study the activities of the Jews." Some books were recommended, and in one or two cases freely given, to me which purported to explain the 'Jewish Question.'

AVOIDANCE OF THE NETTLE

My first reaction was one of doubt and, just a little, of revulsion. I wanted to do something, as I have said, to lift up my own people, not to down others. Probably, some little subconscious voice inside me was telling me that by embracing these theories I was embracing something that had been universally damned, excoriated as the ultimate evil, the doctrine that led to the 'gas chambers'. Every normal human being prompting inside me was such as to counsel me not to touch these ideas with a barge-pole, if only for the fact that it would invite bitter hostility and opposition and deflect attention from the task of promoting ideas that would contribute to the regeneration of Britain.

My study of the subject was not helped, moreover, by the obvious eccentricity of some of the people who were peddling it. That had the look, and they spoke in the language, of cranks. They blamed the Jews for just about every conceivable human catastrophe, including catastrophes which by no stretch of the imagination could possibly be attributed to the members of that race.

It was not an encouraging start to my quest to understand what lay behind 'anti-Semitism'.

But not all of the literature on the subject was so wildly exaggerated and unbalanced. I had come by this time greatly to admire the writings of A.K. Chesterton, my first real political mentor. Chesterton appealed to me above all because of his blazing British patriotism, not because of his opinions on the Jews. There was no doubt, however, that he had very firm views about the latter subject. Because I believed in his patriotic ideals, and also because I respected his fine intellect and balanced judgement, I felt I owed it to him to study his writing on the Jewish question in a spirit of objective enquiry.

In these writing there were none of the wild rantings of the lunatic fringe of 'anti-Semites'. Chesterton gave the facts about Jewish Power and influence as he saw them, backing these up with ample documentary references. His dominating theme was that of a worldwide Jewish conspiracy to obtain overlordship of the earth. This was rather too much for me to digest all in one gulp, even from such a respected author. But as I had come by that time to know Chesterton personally, and to be sure that he would not take up the cudgels in support of a particular doctrine without sound reasons for doing so, it seemed only right for me to give some careful examination to this idea before rejecting it out of hand.

At about the same time, four other books came my way, which I read carefully and upon which I pondered deeply. They all had in common the fact that, like the writings of A.K. Chesterton, they strongly condemned certain Jewish interests and advanced the theory of a Jewish conspiracy for world conquest.

One of these was The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, of which all Jews and all 'anti-Semites' will be aware. This book is purported to consist of the minutes of a series of meetings of leading Jews at which the speaker (or speakers) outline the alleged Jewish strategy for obtaining control of the nations of the globe. Since its first appearance in Russia early in the present century, the book has been condemned by the Jews as a forgery, probably concocted by the Czarist state security police in order to justify that régime's measures against the Jews. Having given careful study to the contents of this book over many years, I am inclined to the opinion that this Jewish claim is most likely correct–if only for the reason that the language used by the alleged Jewish elders in their lectures is far too outspoken and explicit to be credible; my knowledge of the semantics of that race leads me to feel that, if such a strategy was being outlined as claimed, it would be shrouded in the customary words of double-meaning, innuendo, euphemism and altruism generally employed by internationalists, both Jewish and non-Jewish, rather than stated as baldly and crudely as is the case in The Protocols. This aside, the question must obviously be asked: would such plans be announced and recorded at a meeting of Jews anyway, let alone then allowed to be leaked to Gentile sources.

However, even assuming that some functionary of the Czarist Government conceived the idea for authoring The Protocols by drawing on the realms of his own imagination, this invites the contrary question: would he have composed the document as he did unless its revelations corresponded closely with the picture of the activities of Russian Jewry held by a great many people in the Czarist Empire at the time? Supposing, for instance, I were to write and publish a book purporting to be a blueprint for world domination by, say, the Italians. The absurdity of such a theory would be so manifest that the book would not have the remotest credibility anywhere, and therefore there would not be the slightest point in producing it. If I wanted to 'get at' Italian people, it would be common sense to attribute to them racial vices and racial goals that to a reasonable number of people were believable, not to make allegations against that nation that were liable to be laughed out of court by almost everyone.

I therefore have come to the opinion that, though The Protocols were most probably fiction there is much reason to credit the idea that they correspond to fact, as perceived by a very intelligent person observing events from a Russian perspective sometime around the turn of the century.

SIMILAR SCENARIOS

Another of the books that I obtained at about the same time as my first introduction to The Protocols was The World Conquerors, by Louis Marschalko. Marschalko was a Hungarian and had produced his book something like half a century after the appearance of The Protocols. What was uncanny was the similarity in the scenarios depicted in these two books—just as these in turn were uncannily similar to that depicted in The International Jew, another book I obtained and studied during this formative period. The International Jew was the work of the motor magnate Henry Ford, and consisted of a selection of articles that Ford had written in The Dearborn Independent, a paper he had founded in the 1920s after he had seen first-hand some of the practices of certain Jewish interests in the American business world, and the way in which Jewish financial and commercial power was employed to wield political influence. Ford's paper was brought into existence to expose and oppose these Jewish practices, but eventually Jewish pressures on his company forced him to cease publication of the paper and even go so far as to make a public apology to the Jews for the 'distress' he had caused them. This true story, which no Jewish sources have even tried to deny, may tell us something about the famous car-producer's moral fibre. But it also tells us a great deal more about the power and leverage of the forces he tried to fight.

The final book that is worthy of mention among my early readings on the Jewish Question needs no introduction. It was Hitler's Mein Kampf. Here again, this time as seen from a German standpoint, was a reiteration of the now familiar themes concerning the workings of Jewry and the alleged Jewish plan for world conquest.
